Englishmen are proverbially slow to move, but when once fairly aroused, they accomplish business. For too long a time they have allowed themselves to be ensnared in two directions, by irreligion, and by a false religion. The issue of either of these will be fatal. Now in God's name let us awake and face our duty. Let Christians, disdaining all the seductions of the foe, re-affirm the grand Evangel which alone can make free; and as for the others, may God in his mercy so revive his Church, that through her the hearts of the disobedient may be turned to the wisdom of the just, and a nation be once more born in a day.

The Cross.

In bitter agony
His quivering flesh was torn,
His wearied feet were worn,
Even the cross was borne
Most patiently.

Through depths of human ill,
Temptation, care, and woe,
That try our hearts below,
The Christ did sinless go—
And loving still;
Yea, kind and meek. And I?
I murmur and complain,
I deem my cross a bane,
I chafe against its pain,
And question why.

Christian Unity.—A true spectacle of Christian unity was afforded at the funeral of the late Mr. John James Fanning, of Queen's Park, W., at Kensal Green Cemetery, on the 3rd inst. The deceased had been a prominent Christian worker in the locality for many years past, and had been largely instrumental in preventing the licensing of public-houses in the vicinity. Mr. Fanning had been a Wesleyan, but at the graveside there stood together ministers of the Church of England, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Free Church denominations, and addresses were given by a Church clergyman and two Baptist ministers.

ON the fifth of February next Mr. Moody attains his sixtieth year. His life has been spent without stint in the service of Christ and for the expansion of his Kingdom; it would be difficult to match his labours or to conceive of a career more abundantly fruitful in blessing to the Church and the world.

In the last twenty-five years he has been the honoured leader in repeated crusades against the sin and indifference of our time; the results of his devoted efforts have been neither ephemeral nor transitory, but are living to day in the quickened life of the Church, in the many evangelistic and philanthropic agencies to which his example or impulse have given rise, and in the buildings which, in several of our large cities, commemorate his far-sighted sagacity.

It would be impossible to number the multitudes of souls which have been brought to God by his spoken and written words; or to enumerate all the workers at home and in the Foreign Mission Field, whose lives of consecrated zeal originated to a greater or less degree in his initiative. There must also be a large contingent in the home of the redeemed who remember with gratitude the moment when he brought to them the tidings of salvation.

In his own country he is greatly honoured and beloved; and his fellow-countrymen have watched with vast interest and appreciation the rise and growth of the Student Volunteer Movement, cradled at Northfield, of the New Colportage Society, which is circulating tens of thousands of good books in the States of the West; and of the noble buildings which have arisen in answer to his faith and prayer at Northfield, his native place and home, for the training of some 700 young men and women of all nationalities for the practical business of life and for missionary work.

It is with these that this appeal is specially concerned. For some years it has been Mr. Moody's cherished desire to erect at Mount Hermon (the site of the Young Men's Seminary) a place of worship, to be used not only for Divine service but for other great gatherings of the students. Hitherto, however, no one has come forward to furnish it.

It has seemed, therefore, to those whose names appear on this sheet, and to others, that it would be a very pleasant and suitable tribute of the love and esteem in which Christians on both sides of the Atlantic, and throughout the world, hold Mr. Moody, to present him with the amount necessary to defray the entire cost of this much desired and useful building.

The total expenditure for building and fittings will be about £5000. Of this it is proposed that about £2500 should be raised in the United States, and two or three of Mr. Moody's friends there are taking up the movement with warm enthusiasm. It remains, therefore, for us to raise our £2500, and it surely will not be difficult if all of those who have benefited by his words, or hold him in arm esteem, will contribute according to their means.

"It has occurred to me," writes Mr. A. A. Head, "that there must be a number of these who were converted at his various missions throughout the kingdom, who would be only too glad to give a thank-offering of, say 10s., or £1 apiece to form a brick in [613] the new building. If this were widely known, the response I should think would be very spontaneous. It would be a very blessed testimony to the solidarity of the work which he was enabled to accomplish, and a very convincing reply to the question often asked as to the result of his preaching."

We need hardly add that this movement is entirely spontaneous, and we are anxious that nothing may be said or done in connection with it that may hinder it being a free and natural outburst of affection to one who is extremely sensitive about anything which might attract attention to himself, and who, in the vast sums he has raised for others, has never asked sumpence for himself.

Contributions for whatever amount will be gladly received by any of the undersigned, who have all seen Mr. Moody's work at Northfield, and can testify to its value and the need of this building.

Mission in Dunfermline.

IN spite of tempestuous weather throughout the week, the attendance at Major Whittle's meetings has been good. There have been afternoon Bible-readings on the Book of Ruth, a fitting subject for an expositor with a poetic gift like the Major's. There have been delightful half-hours of prayer, when individual burdens for the unsaved were brought before God. Evening meetings were held in Queen Anne Church, and after-meetings in the hall adjoining the church. Looking over the audience in the evening meeting one is struck by the number of middle-aged couples, not professing Christians, who attend night after night, and from the first night onwards we have been cheered by seeing young people wait to seek the Lord. One cannot doubt, looking on the rows of faces deeply solemnized, that not only in the after-meeting, but during the singing and addresses, souls have passed from death to life and decisions been made for eternity. The after-meetings have been times of special blessing to the workers and Christian friends.

Beautiful solos and duets, sung by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins out of The Christian Choir (revised and enlarged), have added greatly to the charm of the gatherings. Each night local ministers have been present. The members of the choir attended faithfully, and, led by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, sang very well.

The evangelists had an interesting close to mission, and many professed to receive blessing through the week. Major Whittle and his companions made an encouraging start at Alloa on Sabbath; they continue there this week.

Soldiers in Gibraltar.—For many years Mrs. Todd Osborne has been doing an excellent work among our soldiers at Gibraltar. She has secured a valuable helper in Miss Burns, formerly of Harley College, and for the last twelve years rescue deaconess of the Manchester City Mission. A valedictory meeting for Miss Burns was held Saturday, October 3, in Ardwick, Manchester, presided over by Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill, addressed by Rev. Hugh Stowell Phillips, Mrs. H. S. Phillips (of China), Miss Lucy Guinness, and Mrs. Todd Osborne. Mr. James Boyd presented Miss Burns with a token of high appreciation of her devoted services among the outcasts of the city. Miss Burns purposes, if the Lord will, to spend three years among our soldiers at Gibraltar, and, after learning Spanish, pass to some Spanish-speaking people as a missionary.

A Zenana Farewell.

A MEETING to take leave of some of the missionaries of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, about to leave England for their respective fields of labour, was held at Exeter Hall on Friday, October 2. Earl Compton, who presided, spoke strongly of the vast importance of woman's work. He urged upon the meeting their duty of helping to extend the blessings of Christian home-life to the women of heathen lands. Prof. Samuel Saththianadhan, of Madras, spoke with much feeling in seconding the noble chairman's plea for Christian home-life for the women of the East, especially in India. He stood before the meeting as one who had himself received a Christian training in such a home, and spoke of the instruction he, too, had received from his mother, of the saintly example she had set before her children. He returned grateful thanks to this society, which was the first to enter upon work among his countrywomen, and referring to the vastly increasing amount of missionary zeal, which has greatly struck him on revisiting this country, he expressed his earnest hope that the committee may be able to send out many more workers. Mr. Saththianadhan was listened to with deep interest, as the son of the late Rev. T. W. Saththianadhan, C.M.S., of Madras, and the Female Education Society have had his late mother, and subsequently his sister, Mrs. Hensman, among their honorary Zenana missionaries. Another sister, he stated, has also taken up the same work.

Rev. H. E. Fox referred to the harmonious working together of the Church Missionary and Female Education Societies, and to the fact of the latter having been the pioneer in the important work of evangelising the women of the East.

The secretary then read the list of those for whom the meeting had been arranged. Mrs. Aidinyantz, whose return to her station, Julfa, Persia, is unavoidably delayed, was absent. Of those present it was stated that Miss Oxlad had been connected with the society for thirty-three years. In 1863 the committee sent her to China, and in 1877 they transferred her to Japan. Now, after some years occupied in pressing duties at home, she is returning to Japan, to take up evangelistic work among the women in Hokkaido. Miss Andrews is returning, after furlough, to Ludhiana, where she has been labouring for twenty-seven years. Mrs. Rait, after furlough, is returning to Agra, where she has been a valued helper to Miss Bland for eleven years; and Miss Lambert to Foochow, where she has been labouring with much blessing for nearly six years. Miss Patten, appointed to assist Miss Lee in their Galilee Village Mission, was absent on medical certificate, suffering, however, from a cause which was likely to be but temporary. The farewell address was given by Rev. H. E. Perkins, formerly commissioner in the Punjab, and late honorary C.M.S. missionary.

Robert Browning Hall.

The first report of the Social Settlement which centres in Robert Browning Hall says:—"We little expected when we were told off to this work that, within a twelvemonth of beginning it, we should be in regular, helpful touch with more than a thousand human beings, or that we should have been able to minister to them on so many sides of life, or that we should have seen such encouraging results in conduct and character. Difficulties indeed are part of the recognised order of the day in work like ours. But our chief disappointment has been that, out of the myriads of well-to-do Christian families in suburban London who could live where they liked, so few have responded to our appeal and come to live among the poor. We number only six permanent residents. Nevertheless we have tried to turn our small number to the best account. The lack has been in some measure made up by the thirty helpers or more who come regularly every week from the suburbs, and by the enthusiastic activity of the working men who have gathered around us. Thus an immense amount of work has been done."

Details follow of diverse agencies in connection with the P.S.A., the P.T.A. for women, the adult school, open-air and Sunday evening meetings, and a vast variety of helpful operations now in full and useful activity. The warden is Mr. F. H. Stead, 82, Camberwell-road, S.E.

Claims of Romish Priests.

ON the occasion of the "month's mind" of Father Bernard Walker, of Burton Port, Ireland, Rev. H. Gildea, C.C., delivered a somewhat remarkable address on the priesthood. We extract from a local paper some of his utterances, from which our readers will gather that the claims made to-day in Ireland are equal in extravagance with those that have, in the darkest times and countries, been made in regard to sacerdotal status and authority. Comparing the Christian and Mosaic dispensations, the speaker said:—"The priests of the new law are empowered not alone to offer sacrifices, but to remit directly the sins of all men. Thus in the new dispensation a two-fold power is imparted to the priest—power over the natural body of Christ and power over the members of the church. Such are the powers which Christ confided, first to his apostles, and then to their successors in the ministry. The rulers of this earth issue commands, and thousands obey; but a far greater power is given to the priest of God. Every day, in the sacrifice of the mass, he can say to the Son of God, 'Come down from heaven,' and immediately Christ obeys. At the bidding of a mere creature the great King of heaven and earth, He whose majesty fills all places, leaves his throne at the right hand of God, and comes and meekly rests on our altars, within the little chalice, or in the cold ciborium. What earthly power can vie with this, or, might I add, what heavenly power either? The angels, indeed, see our Lord face to face, but then they are not permitted to hold Him in their hands, or to control his movements.

"Besides the power which the priest has over the body of our Lord, he possesses another, if possible, a greater power still, and one which almost seems to make him omnipotent. The rulers of this world have power to open and close the prison gates of earth, but the priest can open and close the gates of heaven and hell. An earthly judge can restore the innocent alone to freedom, but the priest can give that blessing even to the guilty. Take a poor sinner, whose soul is weighed down with the accumulated sins of many years, and see to whom must he have recourse if he seeks for mercy. Is it to the angels in heaven? Is it to his guardian angel, to St. Michael, the prince of the heavenly hosts, to Mary, the mother of God? The angels, indeed, may keep away the evil spirits which surround this poor child of Adam. Mary may pray for him. But neither the angels nor Mary can remove one single sin from off his soul. Who can do this for him? The priest of God. He can rescue the sinner from hell and make him worthy to be received into heaven. Go, therefore, where you will, to heaven or through this earth, you will find only one created being who can forgive the sinner, and that being is the Catholic priest. Thus we see that the priest is raised beyond the brightest spirits which God has created, or ever will create, and that to him are given powers which have been denied to the mother of God and to the angels in heaven.

"To the priest, next to God, we are indebted for our spiritual life. It is through his ministry we become members of the church in the sacrament of Baptism. Through his ministry we are healed of our spiritual maladies in the Sacrament of Penance, fed with the bread of eternal life of the Blessed Eucharist, and finally comforted and prepared for death by Extreme Unction. It is from him we learn the first lesson of religion, and whatever else prompts us to honour God in this life, and leads us to his eternal enjoyment in the next. In one word, he is, as it were, the great channel through which all the helps and means of salvation are conveyed to our souls. He stands in your midst—not merely to preach the Gospel, to administer the sacraments, and to offer sacrifice—but he stands in your midst to guard your interests, to defend your rights, and to give you consolation in all your sorrows. Need we then be astounded that Almighty God commands us to honour and obey his priests, and that He should say to them, 'He who hears you hears Me'?"

The reader will observe that the priest is here represented—not as the servant of Christ Jesus the Lord—but rather as having Him within his power, in fact, under his control. It is not Christ who saves, but the priest. At length, it seems, the priest, whose function it is to save the people, is himself only saved with difficulty. For, referring to the lamented Father Walker, the speaker said:—"We sincerely hope he is happy, but our hope must always be seasoned with a salutary fear. It may be possible that he, whose loss we mourn to-day, may for a venial imperfection, or some temporal punishment, be suffering in the flames of purgatory. It may be that at this very moment he is crying aloud to you, 'Have pity on me; have pity on me, at least you, my friends, because the hand of the Lord hath touched me.' In your charity, in gratitude for his past services, I ask you to pray for the happy repose of his soul."

Fifteen Added Years.

ONE very cold but fine afternoon in the autumn of 187—I was returning home after my day's employment, a few miles from M———. At a bend in the road I unexpectedly came upon an old man holding on to a footstool by the wayside, during a violent fit of coughing. Having rendered him the little assistance the occasion seemed to require, I expressed surprise that he should venture out in his state of health in such cold weather.

"Bless you, sir, what you have now seen is as nothing compared to my condition fourteen years ago. But, bless the Lord, I have lived—ay, and worked too, all that time, and I have just one more year to live to make the fifteen I asked of the Lord, to enable me to bring up and apprentice my infant son. Then I fully trust I shall depart in peace, my work being done."

My curiosity was aroused by what I had learned of the old man's story, so as he willingly accepted my offer to see him to his cottage, which could be seen from where we stood, nestling among the trees, I placed his arm on mine and led the way for his home. On the way he took up the broken thread of his story in nearly the following words:—

"As I said just now, it is fourteen years ago since I was so bad. My wife died, leaving me a baby boy a few weeks old, and our only child. These troubles nearly broke me down, and to make matters worse my cough took an asthmatic turn. The neighbours often thought I should die in one of the terrible fits. I had to go out every day to my employment until late in the evening.

"At last matters grew so bad that I did not know what to do. I had read of King Hezekiah being sick unto death, and how he prayed and the Lord healed him and added fifteen years to his life. Why that's just the time I want to bring up my son and apprentice him, and the Lord is no respecter of persons. So I took my troubles to the Lord, and asked Him to grant me fifteen years of life to bring up my son and to apprentice him. That was fourteen years ago; that was why I said I had one more year to live. I know it, believing the promise that 'whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive' (Matt. xxi. 22). Every year since I have put away a portion of my earnings towards the lad's premium, and this year's savings will enable me to pay his full premium.

"My health soon got better, a lady having obtained for me a most excellent remedy. For the sake of the boy I married again, but my marriage has proved an unhappy one. For years, though living under the same roof, my wife and I never spoke to one another unless obliged to on household matters."

We had now arrived at the cottage gate where we shook hands, and promising to look in occasionally as I passed by, we parted. The man I found was the oldest hand in the firm where I was employed in the office. After calling a few times my visits were altogether discontinued, and a long time had elapsed since I even passed by the cottage. It was, therefore, with something like a twinge of conscience that I received the announcement from my wife as I sat down to tea one evening that there had been a message from "Old John," who was very ill a-bed, asking me to call and see him as soon as I came home.

"Yes, it's quite clear to me now," said I, "'Old John' was right; the twelvemonth is about expiring, the fifteen years are up."

Without loss of time I hastened to the old man's bedside, greeting him with a few words of vain comfort, and saying I hoped to see him out and about again. He smiled an incredulous smile and said, "I have asked to see you before I die, for I am hastening home. You remember meeting me at the stile a year ago, and how I told you I had only another year to live. Well, sir, the Lord has been very good to me. He has fulfilled all my desire. I have been sustained by his goodness during all these fifteen years I asked of Him, scarcely losing any time. I have saved the full premium out of my earnings, and brought up and apprenticed my son to a Christian man and excellent master. The Lord has done all things well. My strength at length has failed me, and I am now laid for death. I have a favour to ask you. Will you kindly see my wife, and say I desire to be reconciled to her before I die?"

This reconciliation was happily effected at the eleventh hour. The next morning a message came again to say "Old John" had passed peacefully away during the night.

There is nothing wonderful in the Lord fulfilling his promise. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but his word will never fail. But "Old John's" faith was a remarkable instance of faith tried during fifteen years, yet never faltering. His life's lease was not worth an hour's purchase, yet day by day he sallied forth in full faith of earning daily bread for himself and his son. Year by year he laid by the portion towards the full premium for the apprenticeship of the lad, and when the fifteen years had struck the hour of noon, his boy apprenticed, his long domestic estrangement removed, he laid him down to his final earthly rest as to his ordinary nightly slumbers after a day of toil. The son of so much toil and care is at this date a prosperous master builder and working Christian.

Amongst the Gonds.

MR. J. LAMPARD, of Baihir, Balaghat, C.P. India, gives in his latest "Missionary Letter" an account of itineration in small and scattered villages. His magic lantern has proved of the greatest possible assistance. As to the results he writes:—"For nearly the first five months of the year we had no baptisms; several candidates presented themselves, but before their time of probation was fulfilled they proved themselves either altogether unworthy or not sufficiently satisfactory. On the 24th of May, however, four persons, having been duly brought before the panchayat and approved by it, were baptized in the river Jamunia amidst demonstrations of much joy on the part of the older Christians.

"Then on July 26 I baptized twelve persons, of whom three were Gonds. Thus God has at length given me the oft-prayed-for desire of my heart—a definite beginning in this district of soul-saving work among this aboriginal people, for whose conversion, more especially, I selected and settled in this particular field. These three Gonds (man, wife, and mother) have been believers in Christ for over a year, but the caste-breaking question has been the one obstacle to an open confession."

"THE KING OF TERRORS."—Job xviii. 14.

SO the ancients spoke of death. They were constantly pursued by the dread of the unknown. Every unpeopled or distant spot was the haunt and dwelling-place of evil and dreadful objects. But the grave, and the world beyond, was above all terrible, and death the King of Terrors. It is difficult for us, who inherit centuries of Christian teaching, to realise how dark and fearsome was all the realm that lay under the dominion of death and the grave. What a shiver in those words, King of Terrors!

But for us how vast the contrast! Jesus has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light. He has gone through the grave, and come again to assure us that it is the back door into our Father's house, with its many mansions. At his girdle hang the keys of death and Hades; none can shut the door when He opens it, and none open when He keeps it shut. He was Himself dead, but He lives for evermore, and comes to the side of each dying saint to escort him to his own bright abode.

There is something better. In the case of immense numbers, who shall be alive and remain when He comes again, death will be entirely evaded. "He that liveth and believeth in Him shall never die." They shall be caught away to meet the Lord in the air. Suddenly, in the twinkling of an eye, this mortal shall put on immortality, this corruptible incorruption. At his coming the grave shall be despoiled of its treasures, and death shall miss its expected prey.

O death, where is thy sting?
O grave, where is thy victory?

MONDAY, October 19.

"I KNOW THAT MY REDEEMER LIVETH."—Job. xix. 25.

Those words express the deepest and most radiant conviction of believing hearts. "He lives, the great Redeemer lives." Man did his worst; the nail, the cross, the spear were bitter, but He liveth! Death stood over Him as a vanquished foe, but He liveth! Captain Sepulchre and his henchman Corruption held earnest colloquy together about the best method of detaining Him, but He liveth! He ever liveth, and because He continueth ever He hath an unchangeable priesthood.

Jesus lives! And well we know,
Nought from us his love can sever;
Life, nor death, nor powers of hell,
Tear us from his keeping ever.

But it is not probable that his words meant all this to Job. The word translated "Redeemer" is Goel—the nearest kinsman, sworn to avenge the wrongs of blood relations. This conception of the kinsman avenger has been always in vogue in the East, where the populations are scattered and migratory, and our system of law impossible. Beyond the heavens Job thought there lived a kinsman, who saw all his sufferings, and pitied, and would one day appear on earth to vindicate his innocence and avenge his wrongs. He was content to leave the case with Him, sure that He would not fail, as his friends had done. And beyond the sorrows and anguish of time he should yet see God; nor had he any dread of meeting Him, since his Redeemer lived to intercede.

"THIS IS THE PORTION OF A WICKED MAN FROM GOD."—Job. xx. 29.

Repeatedly in reading this book we are reminded of the strong convictions entertained by thoughtful men among these Eastern peoples, of the sure connection between wrong doing and its bitter penalty. The friends of the sufferer express their opinions in cold-blooded and unfeeling words, but we can detect their intense convictions beneath all—that special suffering indicates the presence of special sin, and that all wickedness is sooner or later brought to light and punished.

We are less able to follow the track of God's providences in these crowded, hurrying days, but there can be little doubt that the latter conviction is as inevitable now as ever. The mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small. The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the godless but for a moment. He shall disgorge his wealth, he shall suck the poison of asps in the remorse and bitterness of his soul, the heavens shall reveal his iniquity, and his descendants shall seek favour of the poor. These things are still to be seen among us, in the rise and fall of proud men and their families.

Let us go into the sanctuary of God, and consider their latter end; and as we contrast it with that of the poorest of his children, we shall find no reason to envy them. Even though no human tribunal sentence them, they carry the harpoon in their heart, and sooner or later it will bring them to a certain and awful doom. It cannot be otherwise whilst God is God.

WEDNESDAY, October 21.

"SHALL ANY TEACH GOD KNOWLEDGE?"—Job xxi. 22.

We cannot tell God anything He does not know already. The most fervent and full of our prayers simply unfold in word all that had been patent to his loving, pitying eye. This does not make prayer needless; on the contrary, it incites to prayer, since it is pleasant to talk with one who knows the whole case perfectly; and it is a relief to feel that God's answers depend—not on the information we bring Him, or even on the specific requests we make—but on his infinite and perfect acquaintance with circumstances and conditions of which we are ignorant.

"Your Father knoweth." Quicker than lightning is his notice of every transition in your inner life, of your downittings and your uprisings, of every thought in your heart, every word on your tongue, of the fretting of that inward cross, the anguish of that stake in your flesh, the enemy that, like a sword in your bones, reproaches you with the derisive challenge. He knows it all, and loves you better than you know.

Do not presume to dictate to Him; do not dare to say that some other way would be better, some other lot more likely to develop your best self. He knows every track by which to bring sons to glory; and that He has chosen this one is a positive proof that it is the best, the one most adapted to your idiosyncrasies and needs. His ways are higher than your ways, and his thoughts than your thoughts. Trust his perfect knowledge, his perfect love.

THURSDAY, October 22.

"IF THOU RETURN TO THE ALMIGHTY."—

Job xxii. 23.

These words introduce a most lovely picture of the blessings consequent on return to God. They do not fit the case of Job, to whom they were addressed, because he had not left God; and they sound strange as coming from the mouth of Eliphaz. Still they are full of sublime truth.

There are three conditions. We must retrace the steps of our backsliding and wandering lives. We must put away unrighteousness from our home life and business engagements, so that the tent may be free from idols. We must be content to lay our most treasured possessions in the dust at God's feet for Him to deal with as He pleases.

There are four consequences. Whatever we give up for God, we shall find again in Him: He shall become our treasure. Prayer shall have new zest, new success: full of delight; the interchange of face-to-face fellowship. There shall be more certainty and permanence in our decisions and achievements. Our decrees shall stand, our work shall last, our path shall be illumined with light. Trouble and trial shall depress us for only a brief space, like the passing of an Atlantic breaker over a lighthouse rock, and always a glad relief shall follow close on disaster.

Let us ask for all this in our daily prayer. O God, be my precious silver, give me delight in Thee, hear my prayers, may I decree what Thou canst establish, let Thy light shine on my ways, lift me up above all my depressions and fears, that I may stretch out a strong hand to those who are in trouble.

FRIDAY, October 23.

"OH THAT I KNEW WHERE I MIGHT FIND HIM, THAT I MIGHT COME EVEN TO HIS SEAT!"—Job xxiii. 3.

Poor tempest-driven man, he knew not that God was intimately near, nearer than breathing. There was no need for him to go forward and backward, on the right hand or the left. The Lord his God was nigh him, even in his heart; for his throne was pitched there on the sands of the desert, between Job and his pitiless accusers.

Thou needest not speak like this. Thou knowest where to find Him, thou canst find the way to his seat. He is to be found in Jesus, seated on the mercy-seat; in that room where thou sittest reading these words; in that railway train or store. No need to ascend into heaven, or descend into the abyss. Thou couldst not be nearer God, if thou wert in heaven. True, the obscuring veil shall be then removed, "and without a screen, at one burst shall be seen, the Presence in which we have ever been," but the dropping of the scales from our eyes will not make us nearer God than we are at this moment.

Now go to his seat, just in front of thee. Order thy cause before Him, and argue it. Wait to know the words with which He shall answer thee, and understand his reply. Only be sure that He will not contend against thee with his great power. Sometimes we are so bewildered and perplexed that we lose the realising sense of God's presence, but there is no real difference. God is not really farther away; and nothing glorifies and pleases Him more than for us to go on speaking with Him as though we could see his face.

SATURDAY, October 24.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THEY ARE GONE."—Job xxiv. 24 (R.V.).

Job here describes the insecurity of the wicked. He may have raged against the poor and innocent, but in a moment he comes down to Sheol, is hurried to stand before his Maker to receive his sentence. As he had treated the poor, so he is treated. As he had devoured the houses of the innocent, so he is devoured. "How are they become a desolation in a moment. They are utterly consumed with terrors. As a dream when Thou awakest, O Lord, thou shalt despise their image."

For those who fear God there is a greatly contrasted lot. They receive a kingdom that cannot be moved. Zion may be a desolation, and Jerusalem a wilderness; the holy and beautiful institutions in which their early religious impressions were made may crumble; but they are come to the heavenly Jerusalem. The removing of those things that can be shaken only makes more apparent those which cannot be shaken.

Where do you build your nest? In the trees of this world, that sway in the tempest, or may be hewn down by the woodman's axe; or have you learnt to build in the clefts of the Rock of Ages? Is your treasure in human friendships, which may change, or may be cut in twain by the sharp shears of death; or is it in the love of God, the unchangeable and everlasting Lover of souls? Oh, that you may realise earth's little while, and look not at the things which are seen, but at those which are not seen; for the things which are seen are transient, but those which are not seen are satisfying, permanent, and eternal.

Shadows.

LITTLE children are often afraid of shadows. When I was a little girl I was very much afraid of the shadows which danced on my bedroom window at night. They were merely the shadows cast by the branches of a tree, shaken by the wind, but I did not know this, and to me they looked like men's fingers moving to and fro. If I had asked anyone it would all have been explained to me, but I did not like to do this, so, like a silly child, I went on fearing the shadows until I grew old enough to find out for myself what they really were.

But there are many shadows which are pretty and pleasant to look at. I wonder if you have ever sat upon a hillside, as I have done, and watched the cloud-shadows sweep over the hills. They are so beautiful to watch, and they move so quickly. One moment the green hillside looks quite dark and gloomy, the next it is bright with sunshine again. On a sunny day I daresay you have often laughed at your own shadow as it lay before you or behind you on the ground. Such a funny shape, sometimes very short, sometimes very tall, and never very much like yourself. Or you have sat at the window and watched the shadows cast by the horses and carts as they went by, and perhaps tried to draw them. Or you have walked in the meadows in the evening, and have seen the tree shadows grow longer and longer until they reached almost across the fields.

I remember once being very glad of a shadow. It was on a scorching day in July. A party of us were out on a picnic, and as we left the shade of the woods in the afternoon, and began our walk of three miles along a hot dusty road towards the railway station, we felt the heat very much indeed. We toiled on for a mile or so without finding any shade at all. We were very, very hot, and very, very thirsty, but there was nothing to be done but plod on until we reached some shelter. At last we came to an old barn, and in its shadow we sat down to rest. I have been able since then to understand a little better what the prophet Isaiah meant when he said that the Lord Jesus was like "a shadow from the heat" (Isaiah xiv. 4).

There is a great deal in the Bible about shadows. Job tells us that all men are like shadows, because they only live a little time in the world, and then leave it (Job xiv.). He says our life is like a shadow, because it is so quickly gone (Job viii.). Have you ever seen a sundial? They are sometimes found on old churches. Last summer I was staying in a country house, and there was a sundial on the lawn in front of the house. A sundial is very much like a clock. It answers the same purpose as a clock. Sundials told the time long before clocks were invented.

A sundial has a round face like a clock, and has all the figures from one to twelve marked upon it. But instead of having two hands which move around the face of the clock, it has only one hand, and this never moves at all. How then can it tell the time? you ask. I will try to explain, or rather, you shall explain it to yourselves. Cut a round of white paper; mark the clock figures on it, and run a knitting-needle or pencil through the centre. Now light a candle, putting out at the same time all the other lights in the room. Hold your paper clock by that part of the needle or pencil which projects below it, and turn it slowly round in your hand, holding it at a little distance from the candle.

Watch the shadow of the pencil. You will see it moving round the face of the dial from figure to figure. Now, do you understand? Your candle is the sun; your paper is a sundial standing on the earth. It looks to us, does it not, as if the sun went round the earth? But it is really our earth which turns round every day just as you turned the dial round in front of the candle. So you see that a sundial would not be of much use on the mantelpiece, where the clock stands; it needs to be out in the open air, where the light is strong enough to cast a shadow.

There is a story about a sundial in Isaiah xxxviii. I should like you to find it and read it for yourselves. When the men who made the sundials watched the sun go down, they spoke of the shadow going down also. Then when the sun set the shadow disappeared, and the day was gone (Psalm cii., cix.). David said when he was getting old that he was like "the shadow that declineth" (goes down). He felt that the day of his life was nearly over. Then Job says that "a servant earnestly desireth the shadow" (Job vii.). He means that working men are glad to see the evening approaching, because they know that their time for rest is drawing near.

There is one shadow mentioned in the Bible which has frightened a good many people: I wonder if it has ever frightened you. It is the "shadow of death" (Job iii. 5; x. 21, 22; xxiv. 17). But do you not know that a shadow always means that there is a light somewhere? When have you seen the most shadows, and the darkest shadows? Either on a very sunny day, or on a very bright moonlight night, was it not? So if death has a shadow, there must be a very bright light beyond.

That light comes from the Lord Jesus, who is the Light of the world. He always comes at death to fetch his little children, so we need not be afraid, but may say, quite happily, with David, "though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil" (Psa. xliii.). Hiding under the shadow of his wings, we shall be safe, and free from fear (Psa. xxxvi., lvii.).

Third Prize Competition.

This week I lay before my young friends the results of the Prize Competition. I am glad to think that the majority have done so well that they will read the lists with satisfaction; but I always feel very sorry for those whose names have to be left out, because I remember that once or twice in my younger days I had that unhappy experience myself.

The number of the competitors in the second division was so large that I have had to make a fifth class of those who received nearly but not quite enough marks for a certificate. In Division III. more would have been right if they had followed the instructions set, to make the buried names with consecutive letters. Always read the questions very carefully. I am glad to find so many boys sent in papers, and that not a few of them have done well.

The prizes and certificates will be received next week. Now let all stick to the weekly questions this quarter, so as to appear the "nine times" necessary to be eligible for the next Prize Competition in December.

From a parent who values THE CHRISTIAN:—"The children's part, too, is most useful. I like to find the answers myself. And I have succeeded in finding two new 'nieces' for 'Uncle Tom.' One of them is my own little girl, and the other a Scotch girl in England."—I am very glad to find that I have a number of new nephews and nieces this quarter, and was very pleased with their letters. ELSIE McPHERSON.—The rules were given in THE CHRISTIAN for Oct. 1. WALTER PERRYMAN.—Thank you for your letter; unfortunately, you made a mistake in one of the answers. WALTER CARTER.—I hope your eyes will soon be better. HILDA BASSETT.—Although you have made a mistake this week, try to get a star next time. RILL LA BROOY.—Thank you for your note; I hope you will be successful at Christmas. J. A. CHAMBERLAIN.—I would rather you wrote your answers in longhand, but hope you will succeed with shorthand. RUTH and MAUD NORRIS.—I am pleased you have joined the "Searcher." You will see the rules Oct. 1. You were not correct last week, but hope you will be next time. EDITH BADHAM.—I have many nieces older than you. JULIET HAINES.—The Scripture enigma was not included in the "Searcher," though I was pleased when the answers was given.

UNCLE TOM.

"My Son, give Me thine Heart." Prov. xxiii. 26.

THIS is the gift I want you chiefly to think about, because it is the gift on our side which God thinks most about. I really believe that if it were some other thing God had asked for, nearly everyone would bring it or try to bring it.

If He had said, "My son, give me five pounds," would not a great many persons, who have very little money indeed, do their very utmost to save up the needed sum? I think they would. But the salvation of God is for those who come "without money and without price." He does not sell his salvation, but gives it as a free gift.

There is one thing God asks in return, "Give Me thine heart." Have you given yours to Him? In answer to this inquiry a dear little girl told me one day, "I want to, but I can't seem to manage it." Do not laugh at her, for there are many who feel something like little M— did.

The reason is that our hearts are naturally at enmity with God. We are not born into this world with hearts friendly to God, but just the opposite. And so it is only when the Spirit of God changes our hearts that we have hearts which love Him. The Holy Spirit changes them by showing us the love of God to us, and then "we love Him because He first loved us" (1 John iv. 19).

If you are one of those who want to love Him it is because the holy and loving Spirit has begun the good work of attraction to Christ Jesus. If you are amongst those who feel that you "don't seem able to manage it," will you make your own a little prayer written by that gifted lady, the late Miss Rossetti:—

"Give Me thy heart"—I would not say thee nay,
But have no power to keep or give away
My heart: stoop, Lord, and take it to thyself to-day.

"Stoop, Lord, as once before, now once anew,
Stoop, Lord, and hearken, hearken, Lord, and do,
And take my will, and take my heart, and take me too."

Or, in the simpler words which we all love, let us pray the same prayer—

"My only plea, Christ died for me, Lord take me as I am."

Native Bible-women for China.—We noticed in our last the help sent by the Queen of Sweden, after reading the life of Robert and Louisa Stewart. We are asked to add that Mrs. John Watson, Hurstwood, Woodford Green, Essex, would be glad if many are led to undertake the support of a Bible-woman—£6 per annum. This small amount provides food, clothing, and travelling expenses of a Bible-woman in China.

THE LATE Archbishop of Canterbury.

THE sudden and lamented death of the Archbishop of Canterbury in Hawarden Church, on Sunday last, came as a shock to the whole country. Dr. Benson was spending a few days with Mr. Gladstone on his way home from Ireland, and seemed in vigorous health and spirits. During morning service he suddenly fell forward and shortly afterwards expired. Death is attributed to failure of the heart's action, probably brought on by the overstrain of the hard work the Archbishop had recently been doing. He was only sixty-seven years of age, and had been Primate since 1882.

Dr. Benson was universally respected, and by his friends greatly beloved. His fine presence and social gifts made him a popular figure wherever he went. As a clergyman and bishop he was a very hard worker, and showed great tact and organising ability. His elevation to the See of Canterbury was the direct outcome of his extraordinary activity and success as Bishop of Truro. His genius lay in the direction of comprehension and breadth of sympathy rather than of initiative. Though a "Moderate High Churchman," he used his influence for tolerance and mutual regard among the various parties in the Church. Dr. Benson comes in the succession of several strong and good men as Archbishops, and it will not be easy to match his tireless activity and earnest devotion to his duties. As Mr. Gladstone said when made acquainted with the sad event, "He died like a soldier." Some particulars as to his official career are appended:—

Born near Birmingham in 1829, the late Archbishop was the son of Mr. E. W. Benson, manager of lead works near that city. After being educated at the King Edward VI. Grammar School and Trinity College, Cambridge, Mr. Benson filled for a time the post of assistant master at Rugby. In 1859, he was elected head master of the newly-founded Wellington College, which under his management became a flourishing educational centre. In 1872 he became a residentiary Canon of Lincoln, and Chancellor of the Cathedral. Four years later, on the founding of the new bishopric of Truro, Dr. Benson was selected to be the first occupant of that see. His powers of organisation and of conciliation here found ample scope, and he impressed Nonconformists, as well as those of his own communion, with his devotion and zeal.

On the death of Archbishop Tait in 1882, the choice of a successor to that eminent prelate fell on Bishop Benson. The fact that he was appointed on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, though of the opposing school of politics, was a tribute to his character and ability as a cleric, and to his power in dealing with men. He took up the reins of supreme office in the Church of England at a somewhat critical period in her history, when the rising tide of Ritual threatened to disrupt the organisation. Whether his rule has advanced the true interests of his Church it is hardly possible as yet to say. There are those who regard him as too much of an opportunist and a compromiser; while others will recognise in his conciliatory policy the only possible method of governing and preserving intact an institution in which there are such antagonistic schools of theological view as the evangelical, the ritualistic, and the latitudinarian. The Archbishop's action in the course of the trial of Bishop King for extreme ritualistic practices, revealed at once his sympathy with High Churchism and his love of ecclesiastical peace at almost any price. His high personal character to a large extent disarmed criticism. There are many who have felt in these stirring times that the deceased Primate should have taken a stronger lead in ranging the Church of England on the side of oppressed classes and nationalities. Of course, allowance must be made for the hampering restrictions to free and spontaneous action that come from the Church's official relation to the State, but a more courageous man might have overcome these difficulties. Now that Dr. Benson is removed from his high post, his loss will be widely felt, and the appointment of a suitable successor will not be an easy task.

Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago.

THIS Mission continues with vigour its efforts among the godless, the indifferent and the vicious. It is recorded that "not a meeting has been held during all these years without some professed conversion." At the converts' meetings remarkable testimony is constantly borne. The attendance during the past year has far exceeded in numbers any previous year, more than 200,000 persons having heard the Gospel.

The details of prison and hospital work abound in striking incidents. Here is one:—"My life for forty years was crooked. It seemed there was no place for me on earth, being driven out of three cities in one day—Davenport, Rock Island, and Muscatine, and when I landed in Chicago, fearing I might be picked up again, I went to the central station to get permission to stay in the city. The chief of detectives shook his head and said 'You have been such a hard case, I don't think you had better try to stay here.' So I sought protection from an influential man, through whom I obtained employment. One night shortly after, while passing the Mission, I heard the singing and came in, and who should I hear testify from the platform but an old-time prison friend. And it struck me, if the Lord could do so much for him there, was hope for me, and that night I gave my heart to God, and since then I have lived a square life, working hard every day. Why, this thing is such a surprise to me; I can't believe I am the same man. I used to hate work. An old friend told me I was the laziest man he ever saw. When I was in prison I used to shift around until I got a soft snap. Now, I love to work, and have the confidence of my employer and a multitude of friends, but the best friend is Jesus."

This important Mission, founded by the late Col. G. R. Clarke, is now under the superintendence of Mrs. G. R. Clarke.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian.

A PATHETIC interest attaches to everything Armenian at the present time, particularly to the story of the religious life and fortitude of the Armenian Christians. Mentioned in the Old Testament (Isai. xxxvii. 38; Jer. li. 27), and included in the region from which devout Jews and proselytes came to Jerusalem for the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 9), Armenia is emphatically a Bible-land, alike with an ancient history and a modern record. For centuries the Turk has held tyrant sway over the country, and many a time the people have been given the choice of Islam or death, and thousands, as we know, have sealed their faith in Christ with their blood.

From time to time we have given accounts of these sad proceedings of recent years. We are now pleased to introduce to our readers an Armenian, who, adopting the language of the Apostle Paul, might say "I am a man of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city." Rev. Krikor Behesnilian has the "go" that characterizes the most vigorous of his race, is a man of wide information and excellent judgment, and above all is a Christian of conviction and experience. These are qualities which should make a useful evangelist, and it is in such work that our friend has been engaged for a number of years past. His life story, with its light and shadow, its tale of work for Christ and suffering for the sake of his name, is lucidly told in his little book "IN BONDS; an Armenian's Experiences." (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

The province of Cilicia has made remarkable progress in Protestant Christianity during the last half century, and it was into this section of the community that Mr. Behesnilian was born in 1863. His parents gave conscientious attention to his training and education, and their highest hopes as to his spiritual advancement were at length realised. At an early age young Krikor commenced Christian work by teaching and preaching in Tarsus and other parts of the province, under the auspices of the American Mission. Under God's blessing many young men were, through his efforts, brought to know Christ, some of them being led to leave the Gregorian Church with its unscriptural doctrines, and to join the Protestant assembly. Although he had been through Marash Academy and Aintab College, Mr. Behesnilian was not disposed to regard as at an end his course of training for his life-work. He resolved to study in England, and 1888 found him in London.

The object of his visit to Great Britain was two-fold: first, to study, secondly, to acquaint Western Christians of his country and the evangelistic work to which he had put his hand. Through the generosity of friends and the help afforded by the College authorities, he was enabled to enter New College, Hampstead, and at the end of three years he was officially declared "an approved student of theology, who had won the esteem of his fellows by his high character and perseverance." Having been solemnly set apart for the work of the ministry in Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road, in October, 1892, he returned to Cilicia, to undertake evangelistic work as the first missionary sent by English Christians to Armenia. He was received with joy by his people, and entered upon his itinerating work with great zeal and promise, his influence being increased by his marriage to an Armenian lady who had been educated in the Girls' College at Marash, and who was in full sympathy with his Mission —the Tarsus Evangelistic Society—alike in its aims and methods.

During his preaching tours in and around Tarsus, Mr. Behesnilian went among all classes of Armenians—Gregorians and others knowing but little of the Bible, as well as Protestants who professed a more exclusive regard for its teachings. He made a special point of promoting Bible study, and at all his meetings endeavoured to lead sinners to Christ. His work was one of peculiar difficulty, as he aimed at helping those who already thought themselves fully instructed, and who did not realise their need for purely Gospel teaching. From time to time he was greatly encouraged by hearing of those who had come to feel their need of a Saviour, and had yielded their hearts to the Lord Jesus. He distributed thousands of Bibles and New Testaments, and these will assuredly do their work of spiritual enlightenment. From time to time also he gave medical assistance to the poor of his people. Social and political conditions in Armenia made it needful to exercise great care in evangelistic work, for sometimes, on the most flimsy pretents, Christian workers have been thrown into prison and otherwise treated in a barbarous manner.

In his book Mr. Behesnilian describes the life and customs of his people, and also gives a detailed account of his work. One of the most striking chapters relates to his arrest and imprisonment while on a preaching tour in 1894. He was at Osmanie with his wife, accompanied by some students, and all were on their way to Tarsus. The arrest was officially justified by a suspicion that Mr. Behesnilian had in his possession seditious communications from England, and publications bearing on Armenian affairs. His books and papers were duly put into a box and forwarded under seal to Adana, the capital, to be examined, whither also he was sent, under an escort of Turkish soldiers, and lodged with criminals in a filthy prison. Mrs. Behesnilian, thinking that the imprisonment would only last a few days, made for Tarsus, carrying with her the baby Paul, then about six months old. Our friend was day by day examined by the police, but somehow or other they could not find him guilty of anything wrong. His letters included some which he had written to his fiancée some years before, but they were by no means incul-pating. His books were mainly theological, and they did not help the prosecution. A sermon on the text "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world" did not get into the hands of the lynx-eyed officials, or they might have found, in cryptogram at least, some references to current troubles and future political hopes, although, in fact, it was purely a spiritual exhortation. At length, after bearing many indignities for upwards of two months, the prisoner was set at liberty, the governor being influenced in this act by the intervention of the British Consul at Aleppo, in answer to an appeal by the London Committee of the Mission to the British Foreign Office.

Returning to his work, Mr. Behesnilian helped the native churches in many of the towns and villages of Cilicia, and at length, just over a year ago, came to London to consult his committee. Expecting to be absent only a short time, and as the district was moderately quiet, he left his wife and children at Marash with her father, who was shortly afterwards killed by a Moslem. Since then many other of his relatives and acquaintances have shared a like fate. Churches have been desecrated, vineyards devastated, and houses destroyed. Worst of all, as the newspapers have informed us, many thousands of lives have been sacrificed to fanatical attacks and massacres. Meantime, Mr. Behesnilian has addressed a large number of meetings in this country, telling the story of his nation's woe, and describing his evangelistic work. By the kindness of friends he has been enabled to send substantial sums of money to his father and wife for distribution among the distressed. His wife has opened a Christian Home for Fatherless Armenian Girls, at Marash; and it is hoped that this undertaking will have the support of British Christians, and that the children thus gathered and cared for will be among those who in a future generation shall emulate the example of their parents in faithful testimony for Christ.

The Evangelical Alliance has taken a great interest in Mr. Behesnilian's work. We trust that during his present visit to London he will make many new friends, so that on returning to his beloved country and labours he may be enabled to put all his strength into his teaching and preaching, and have the joy of seeing blessed results among young and old of the Armenian remnant.

Evangelical Preachers' Association.

The third annual meeting of this Association was held at Upper Holloway Chapel on Tuesday, 6th inst. Professor W. H. Golding occupied the chair. The report maintained that "the time is coming when lay preaching will be recognised as an important item in church work." Details followed of the year's work, of branches at Wood Green, Tollington Park, Islington, Stoke Newington, and West Sussex; also of various auxiliary operations, and of the new "Lay Preachers' Guide," which is welcomed as the joint work of friends of the association. The report concludes by declaring the object of the work to be "To promote a rousing movement in the churches, a movement which shall, above everything else, aim at the salvation of souls by energetic aggressive methods." The office of the Association is 17, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Requests for Prayer.—For a special eight-day mission at Corfe Mullen, Dorset, 18th to 25th inst., conducted by Sister Rose Elton.—A teacher in a Board school, on behalf of her scholars, also for herself, that she may have grace and wisdom in the discharge of her duties.—For blessing on mission services, October 18-29, by Rev. F. E. Heape in Church-street Chapel, Luton.

Clifton Conference.

THIS annual gathering met last week for three days in the capacious Victoria Rooms. The elements were anything but propitious; but, as one speaker aptly observed, they showed how the love of Christ constrains even weak and infirm people to brave the storms, that they may hear words concerning Himself which would gladden their hearts.

The selected subject was "Christ and the Church" (Eph. v. 32), treated in the threefold figure of "The Bridegroom," "The Bride," and "The Marriage of the Lamb," each of these aspects occupying a day's consideration. There was a good array of speakers from far and near, Rev. JAS. ORMISTON being the convener and chairman, and concerning whom a personal word may not be out of place. It was feared a few years back that he would never occupy that position again, a painful seizure having paralysed his speech. But little by little he has been restored by the good hand of God upon him, and the clearness of his utterance came as a cause of deep thankfulness to his many friends. For thirty-four years this Conference has met, and has been convened during half of that period by Mr. Ormiston, following as he did the steps of the late Rev. S. A. Walker, who also issued the invitation for just seventeen years in succession. Mr. Ormiston being a strong Protestant had gathered around him several speakers of like mind. But their testimony was spoken in love and without personal bitterness, as they exposed the error of those who were endeavouring to re-establish priestcraft in our midst. The subject chosen lent itself readily to such allusions.

It was interesting to note how some of the speakers imparted the distinctive colouring of their own habitual line of thought to their addresses. Several, for instance, showed that the relation of Christ to his people is such as to leave no room for the intervention of man as mediator or intercessor. Then honoured and venerable GEORGE MULLER—a man of faith—now past his ninety-first birthday, spoke of the Bridegroom as he had found Him—ever faithful to his promises—during the years of his pilgrimage; and, passing from the consideration of Christ as the "altogether lovely" One, Mr. ARNOLD, of the Evangelical Alliance, lamented the unloveliness of many Christians, as shown in their strife and disunion with each other.

Besides those named, the chief speakers were Revs. Talbot Greaves, J. F. Horsfield, Henry Denning, H. B. Doherty, A. A. Isaacs (Bath), W. Elliott (Plymouth), J. W. Dance (Leamington) E. N. Thwaites (Salisbury), Dr. Spence (Belfast), L. B. A. Roberts, R.N., Fuller Gooch, W. Frith, Mr. J. Jewell Penstone (these from London), and Mr. James Wright and Colonel Molesworth. In the afternoon some very interesting reports of practical Christian effort were given by Mr. Arnold (Evangelical Alliance), Mr. J. R. Mackenzie (Monthly Tract Society), Rev. J. M. Eppstein (Jews), Mr. H. T. Woods (Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society), Mr. W. Forbes (Theatrical Employés), Rev. L. B. A. Roberts (Protestant Reformation Society), Dr. Elder (Bristol Medical Mission), Rev. Dr. Spence (Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland), and Rev. E. N. Thwaites (Winter Missions in India).

A pleasing feature of the Conference was the frequency with which speakers of various denominations expressed satisfaction at such an opportunity of putting aside ecclesiastical differences, and meeting on the common ground of faith in and love to the Lord Jesus—"a union," as one put it, "not of darkness or of death, but a union of light." Space forbids a detailed report, but some of the leading thoughts are reproduced below.

THE BRIDEGROOM.

"Altogether Lovely" (S. Sol. v. 16) was the aspect chiefly under consideration. First, the soul must itself enter the presence of the Lord in worship and praise, before, like Eliezer seeking a wife for Isaac, the messenger of God can go forth to set before the world the glory of his Master—his riches, his power, his infinite tenderness, his compassion, so that he may win and woo for Him. Only as God's people look to Him can they grow like Him, and faith is the golden wedding-ring to unite them to the heavenly Bridegroom. Christ is "altogether lovely" in his person, in his practices, and in his promises. When we consider Christ as the "altogether lovely" One, we feel like a little child—for it is impossible fully to portray his beauties. The life of Christ has never been written, nor never can be, for it can never be fathomed. How inadequate our ideas are of Him in all his glory—the express image of his Father, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see. Yet, though we cannot describe his glory, we may all work for his praise.

"He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom," said John the Baptist, indicating that the possession is entire, complete, absolute; and this it is that constitutes the everlasting safety of the Bride. How faithfully did John give all honour to Christ. His disciples were jealous for their master's ministry, when his popularity declined in consequence of the superior attraction of the ministry of Christ—one of those sad examples of littleness and party spirit seen sometimes when the popularity of one minister is injured by the greater popularity of another. Some seem to care more for the increase of their own party than that of Christianity, and others are so purblind as to think that no good can be done outside their own communion or congregation. Ministers are the friends of Christ, their office is to unite souls to the Bridegroom; and when they see the Bridegroom's suit prospering, then their work is done. This is a very important aspect of a minister's work—to be the friend of the Bridegroom, to promote the union of souls with Christ—and he must rigidly adhere to his office. He must never take to himself that which does not belong to him, nor allow honour to be given to himself which really belongs to his Master. A minister who exalts his own office into that of mediator and lord over God's heritage usurps a position which is not his, but his Master's. The people also who treat their ministers as mediators, priests, and lords over God's heritage are dishonouring Christ, by giving to the friends of the Bridegroom the honour and the glory which belong exclusively to the Bridegroom Himself.

THE BRIDE.

Less inspiring, if more searching, than the study of the Bridegroom, is that of the Bride. It is, said Mr. Isaacs, "like descending from a higher platform to a lower, from heaven to earth, from the Creator to the creature, from the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity to poor, worthless sinners whom He graciously regards with loving kindness and tender mercy." Not "altogether lovely," but "black but comely" (S. Sol. i. 5) was the prevailing thought which constituted the keynote of the addresses of the day, illustrated further by such familiar stanzas as—

Oh, to grace how great a debtor
Daily I'm constrained to be,

or,

I'm a poor sinner and nothing at all
But Jesus Christ is my All in all.

It is only in union with the Lord Jesus Christ and seen through Him that God can regard a sinner people—"children of wrath"—as "comely" in his sight. The comeliness of the Bride is not her own; it is not hereditary, or the fruit of human instrumentality, but only of grace. "Perfect through my comeliness, saith the Lord."

Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for her; for no merit of her own—even as a nobleman may wed a poor and lovely maiden—and his love will never grow dim.

A profitable study may be made of (1) The marriage covenant (Ezek. xvi. 8); (2) The betrothal (Hosea ii. 19, 20); (3) The preparation (Eph. v. 21, 26); and (4) The culmination (Rev. xix. 7, 8); these passages beautifully bringing out the fidelity and love of God, and the duty of his people.

The glory of the Lord invests the Bride as well as the Bridegroom. "Ye are complete in Him," and his Bride includes not merely baptized persons—many of whom have no perception of, nor interest in, the things of God—but "the blessed company of all believers"—an invisible church, their hearts being known and open only to Him who knoweth all things.

This Church is called in the Scriptures by different names, such as a city, temple, branches, body, vineyard, garden, family, as well as the Bride. As a city she is built upon the foundation of God's purposes, promises, and power; and the enemy must destroy God before he can destroy his Church, for she is built on Him. She was black; through Christ she is comely; and she will be glorified, without spot—quarrels, jealousies, divisions, hatred, all to be found no more in her; her toil will be past, her rest is to come.

THE MARRIAGE SUPPER OF THE LAMB.

The very description as given in Rev. xix. 9 indicates the essential pre-eminence of Christ, since it is not the supper "of the Church," or "of the Bride," but "of the Lamb." There is a danger lest the Church be occupied too much with thoughts of herself. Rather should it be,

The Bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear Bridegroom's face;
I will not gaze on glory
But on the King of grace.

Other feasts are mentioned in the New Testament, e.g., the Gospel Supper (Luke xiv. 16-23) and "the supper of the great God" (Rev. xix. 17, 18), so that we have those of love, of union, and of judgment. Only those share the second who have partaken of the first, who are the united members of the body of Christ. These may cherish the certain hope which must be realised when the period of espousal is complete. This assurance may fill with hope all who are in the midst of conflict and the reverses of life, for they will then enter fully into the presence of God and the fellowship of his dear Son. Well, then, may the inspired writer couch his invitation in the words, "Let us be glad and rejoice" (Rev. xix. 7)—"for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready!"

"A Little While."

John xiv. 19.

ONLY a little while
Of lifting weary feet;
Only a little while,
My journey is complete.
Only a little while,
Till burdens are laid down;
Only a little while,
Then cross exchanged for crown.
Only a little while,
Mid shadows drear and dim;
Only a little while—
I sing the heavenly hymn.
Only a little while,
Till day succeeds the night;
Only a little while,
Till faith is lost in sight.
Only a little while—
Then patient let me wait;
Only a little while—
Within the Golden Gate.

JEAN H. WATSON.

The Church Congress.

THE sermon with which the Congress opened on Tuesday last week was preached by the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, who, referring to the recently-issued Papal bull on Anglican orders, maintained that it was full of errors and inconsistencies, and would soon be forgotten. With regard to Romanism, the Archbishop said that, according to statistics, it is making no headway in England, while according to the admissions of some of its own officials, the system is actually losing ground.

The address of the President, the BISHOP OF LICHFIELD, was largely historical, dealing with the rise of the Church in Shropshire, and its progress throughout the world. At length he asked: How should the Church justify herself to the people? He replied: She must free herself from the fetters of mere conformity to the religious fashion of the day; she must shun any approach to compromise with the world; she must countenance no trust in passing feelings, nor in the sentiments aroused by the appeal to the imagination which colour so much of her teaching and her worship at the present time; she must manifest faith as a vital force in itself and in her members—faith which was so far more than belief, or even trust, in a person external to themselves, faith which was rather the identification of their life with the life of Him in whom all lived, and moved, and had their being, which revealed and sealed their fellowship with God and man. She must exhibit herself, not as a machine for manufacturing a few characters after a model accepted and approved as saintly by human ecclesiastical judges, but as an instrument of spiritual energy, elevating, sanctifying the common life of men, producing everywhere the fruits of the Spirit of Christ, by leading men and nations to conform to the royal law. The Church which made the greatest sacrifices was the most fully possessed by the Spirit of Christ.

The BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH discussed the idea of a national church, the policy of which should be to persuade rather than command, with influence and not power for a weapon. In the evening the causes and cure of intemperance were dwelt upon by several speakers. Canon Hicks pointed to the enormity of the drink traffic and to the legislation which had taken place with a view to its restriction. But restriction, he insisted, was not enough. The liquor traffic had hardly been hurt at all, still less was it scotched or killed. It had simply organised other methods of influence, and had found its way into every branch of public life and recreation. The liquor ring would soon master the nation, if the nation did not master the liquor ring. He pleaded, therefore, for prohibition. Not for imperial prohibition—the country was not ready for it, but for permissive prohibition. Examples of successful prohibition abounded. The North Sea Fisheries were a prohibitory area. So were practically all our hospitals, and our great works with their myriads of workpeople. They could point to Toxteth Park, Liverpool, with a population of 60,000; to the Shaftesbury Park estate, to Queen's Park, Noel Park, Leigham Court, and other properties of the Artisans', Labourers', and General Dwellings Company, with a total population of nearly 29,000; to a similar area in Greenheys, Manchester, population 2000; to Roe Green, a mining village of 650 people; to Bessbrook, in Ireland, population 4000; to the Coppice Estate, Oldham, population 8000; and to at least 1000 villages in England uncursed by a liquor shop. They desired legislation to enable them to multiply experiments like that by popular vote. The people would use the power if they had it. The question for the Church was, on which side was she to be? On the side of the weak or of the strong? of the tempter or the tempted? of the capitalist brewer or the sober and struggling working man?

On Wednesday there were discussions on Evolution, Elementary Education, and Church Reform. On the last-named subject, Rev. J. J. LIAS, Chancellor of Llandaff Cathedral, maintained that the cardinal point of Church Reform was the restitution of the laity to their true place in the Church of God. The Church of England and Wales could not continue to be the only body in which the principle of popular representation was set at naught. In every non established church of the Anglican communion there was popular representation, and if the repression of the voice of the laity of the Church came to be identified with establishment, some day a reaction would take place which the virtues, attainments, and labours of the clergy would not avail to check. In these days there was no control over the incumbent, and often changes were made by an incoming clergyman who threw back the progress of Church work for a decade or two. Hostility was evoked by the claim on the part of the clergy to act independently of lay wishes and opinion. The spirit of resistance to clerical ascendancy was to be found in every country in Europe, and it was certain that the freest and most spiritual people in the world would not continue without protest to accept the subordinate position in the councils of the Church to which they were at present confined.

In the course of a discussion on Foreign Missions on Thursday, Mr. EUGENE STOCK, of the C.M.S., held that the work of the Church was nothing short of the evangelisation of the world. Missions meant something more than getting men to exchange one doxy for another doxy. They meant informing men of a tremendous fact which closely concerned them, and which they had a right to know. The Church had covered Christendom with splendid buildings for Divine worship; it had cared for the young, the sick, the poor; it had taught the world to build schools and hospitals. But the one great commission its Lord gave it to fulfil, was the very thing it was neglecting. It was a melancholy fact that after nearly nineteen centuries of the Christian era one-half the present population of the globe had never heard of Christ at all. A "Foreign Service" order was desiderated by Bishop SELWYN. Rev. BERNARD WILSON remarked that a "to and fro movement" had arisen in the Church, and more men volunteered for temporary foreign service. There were, too, forty junior clergy associations throughout the country, all of them pledged to interest themselves in foreign missionary work.

Mr. D. M. THORNTON described the Student Volunteer Movement and the World's Student Christian Federation. He traced the origin of the former to the outburst of missionary enthusiasm consequent upon the visits of Messrs. Stanley Smith and C. T. Studd to some of the British Universities. This, and the going forth of "the Cambridge Seven" to China in 1885, stirred the hearts of many British students. Another source might be found in the prayers of an American student and his sister, which were abundantly answered in the summer of 1886. For at Mount Hermon, Massachusetts, Mr. Moody called a conference of 250 students for a month's prayer and Bible study, and a wonderful missionary revival took place, during which 100 students signed the declaration, "I am willing and desirous, God permitting, to become a foreign missionary." This stream flowed through the American colleges under the name of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, and after ten years' course had touched upwards of 500 colleges, in which 4000 volunteers had been enrolled, of whom nearly 1000 had already reached their fields. And then the river flowed into British channels, gathering many tributaries in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, which early in 1892 joined into one called the Student Volunteer Missionary Union. Dr. C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSEY, of the Livingstone College, dealt with the subject of the training of missionaries in medicine.

On Friday, among many subjects, "International Relations in the Light of the Gospel" was discussed. The BISHOP OF HEREFORD, in an outspoken paper, condemned the principle of selfish greed. He said: "Men have learnt to apply the Divine Author's principles of conduct to their individual and their family life, and also, in a certain rudimentary fashion, to their social relationships and obligations; but they seem to leave those principles behind them when they pass out into the field of international politics. Such object-lessons as have recently been furnished for us by European politics abroad, and by what we euphemistically designate as colonial expansion in our own Empire, bring it home to us very forcibly that one of the special duties of the Church is to give more serious and thoughtful attention than has hitherto been given to those neglected or unoccupied fields—in other words, to preach with more insistence the doctrine of national and international righteousness, and to apply it without fear or favour to high and low."

The Baptist Union.

THE Autumn Assembly of the Baptist Union was held at Bristol last week. Rev. T. Vincent Tymms, the president, opened the proceedings with an extension of his message offered in the Spring on True and False Authority. The deliverance was rich in thought, and weighty for its faith in the Gospel. The Union sermon was preached by Dr. MONRO GIBSON, from 1 Pet. ii. 9, "Ye are ... a royal priesthood."

At the Home Mission and Church Extension meeting, Dr. C. A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, in the course of a stirring address, asked if there are not in the Free Churches young men of means who are willing to assume the pastorate of village congregations while living on their incomes. He appealed to such, whether this is not a vocation worthy of all that they possess. In Wolverhampton district, as in Bristol, there is a growth of lay pastors, of churches of which men in business or professional men are pastors, preaching themselves or providing a supply, and fulfilling all the office of the Christian ministry. A Congregational church I know (said Dr. Berry) has been built four or five times in the last fifty years. It is built over a colliery, and the ground has a habit of sinking down. There is a beautiful church there to-day, largely built by its own members. They did the carpentering work, they built up a great mound to set it on so that it should take a long time to sink; and the minister for the last five-and-twenty years has been a working-man who earns his own livelihood. The church could not otherwise have had a trained leader; and this man is trained in a fine school. It never knows what it is to be in debt, but it knows what it is to be filled with the floodtide of the Spirit.

An enthusiastic meeting was held to take leave of missionaries about to return to their spheres of labour, or to go out for the first time. Dr. Landels delivered a hearty farewell address, saying in conclusion: "It is yours to occupy the high and dangerous places of the field, and to bear the brunt of the battle. Like David before the hosts of Israel, you go forth with your sling and stone against the Goliath of heathendom. We watch your movements with keen interest, eager to know how it fares with you. But we shall not fear for you while we know that God's power nerves your arm, and God's wisdom guides your aim, and God's presence secures your victory. The banner that floats over you hath this inscription, on which you have only to fix your eyes when your hearts are like to fail and you are tempted to falter or turn back: 'Lo, I am with you alway.' 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life.'"

At the meeting of the Assembly on Thursday, elementary education was discussed, and a resolution passed emphatically declaring that no settlement of the controversy would be accepted as final until an unsectarian school under public control was placed within the reach of every child in the kingdom, and the teaching profession in State-aided schools made as open to Nonconformists as to adherents of the Established Church. After passing a resolution condemning the Turkish atrocities, the Union considered the subject of temperance legislation. In the evening Rev. J. HIRST HOLLOWELL spoke on "Why we will not surrender England to the priests." One reason was that it was not theirs to give away, for they had inherited far more than they had made. A second was that they knew what the priests made of England when they had it. A third, that English freedom sprang from the defeat of the priests. Further, they abhorred a paganised Christianity, and it was a paganised travesty of Christianity which the priest party was trying to establish. Lastly, they dared not surrender their children to the priests in State-aided education.

The National Refuges.—The admission committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, at a meeting held at the Society's Headquarters, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, had some exceptionally sad cases of destitution brought to their notice, the result being that the most urgent ones, about a dozen in number, were ordered to be received immediately. The youngsters were distributed among the Homes in London, Twickenham, Bisleigh, Sudbury, and Ealing. The children admitted will not be sent out of the country, but will remain in the Homes until sufficiently trained to earn their own living.

The Princess Mary Village Homes.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—I want to tell you my troubles. I'm sure you will read them with Christian sympathy and love. Of the pity of mothers I am assured, but the young may read my description with some sense of its disagreeability and bother. Well, then, many of the children of the P.M.V.H. are very young and tender, some actual babies. They require carrying and feeding, and are soon strong and healthy, but this result is only attained by skilful medical and motherly treatment. They come as victims of crime, and show all its signs. They are fostered by mothers; none else would give what they want—kissing and hugging, and feeding with bottle and spoon. Happily we have real mothers, who desire to have them, and even compete for them, openly disputing for the possession of them.

The two last were respectively aged fourteen and six months. The eldest was a bright little thing, with a pretty face, scarcely any legs to speak of, a big body, and a strong mind. The youngest was a heavy, dull baby, and both bore marks of dirt and ill-treatment. Starvation is not always of food. They had had neither washing nor good manners. Now they live among a family of girls, who all love baby and attend to its wants. "They are better than we sometimes get," said a mother, "though they were bad enough. We have had them so bad that we were afraid to take their clothes off, lest an arm might come with them."

We want more room for such cases—in fact a nursery. We also greatly want a playground, where their perambulators may not be in the way of the other girls' play, which must be respected. A playground is what we are now seeking. We know it will be given us by the Heavenly Father of the little ones. There is a place adjoining the Village Homes to be sold advantageously now. If we do not buy it the builders will soon crowd it with cottages that will be very injurious to us physically and morally. Surely some help will be sent us to get this.

We are also in deep waters of poverty as to funds for the work generally; in fact, we are penniless, and have no provision for winter's hard needs. If you will tell friends how much we want money for food and clothes I should be very glad.

We find the Y.W.C.A. very helpful to our young people, and are very glad to find friends among the associates for those who are separated from their relatives, and whom it is difficult to provide with substitutes for the ties of kindred. We endeavour to retain, by many agencies, the bonds of life and fellowship, and are thankful that great success attends this labour. The girls whom we have brought up rarely lose sight of us. They write from the ends of the earth, and surround us when they live anywhere near. Many are holding responsible situations in society, and we have much pleasure in the fruit of our labour. Nor are they uninterested in our missionary work. Some are preparing goods for sale for the benefit of missions to which their "ladies" have gone. One in Sierra Leone is cheered by their remembrance. Prayer is offered heartily at our meetings for those serving in distant lands with warm hearts and loving words, because they knew her as their "Miss." Thus round the earth runs the electric chain of Christian love, and zeal for the Lord is encouraged in the community at home.

We have many evidences of fruit from the good seed sown in our field. Alas, there are some signs that the enemy has sowed tares. But, thanks be to God, they are very few. Out of all our children we can only count four per cent. of apparent failures. We want to receive a larger number for the Lord Jesus to bless. Will not believers pity our infant applicants, and enable us to take in some more babies? They cry to Christians against the world. Please bear in mind that we chiefly take the children of prisoners, who are left without proper natural guardians.

I seldom write in your columns, but I am induced to let readers see that I am unchanged by age in my feelings about the little ones, and can still work for them.

Yours in the Lord,

SUSANNA MEREDITH.

Wesleyan East-End Mission.

THE twelfth anniversary of the Wesleyan East-End Mission was celebrated on Wednesday last, when several meetings were held in Stepney Temple, Commercial-road. After a devotional gathering, luncheon was provided, with Rev. Walford Green in the chair. Outlining the story of the Mission since its beginning at St. George's, Rev. PETER THOMPSON said that the roll had steadily grown until now there were 1140 in full membership, notwithstanding that 1600 had gone to other neighbourhoods during that period. Though the Mission had extended, they had had to exercise the greatest economy. There were no more workers on the ground than before Stepney Temple and the Lycett Memorial Chapels were taken over—indeed, the staff was less by six ladies. They were over-worked; indeed, three were at that time away for that unfortunate reason. He asked for the prayers and sympathy of the friends present. In money they wanted close upon £7000—£2000 for the purchase of leaseholds, £1400 for the work of renovation and certain compulsory sanitary improvements, about £850 for debts on current account, and the balance for the ordinary work of the year.

The meetings in the afternoon and evening were attended by sympathetic audiences. At the former meeting Mrs. RATHBONE EDGE, formerly a worker in the Mission, occupied the chair, and opened the proceedings with a hearty address.

Miss WILSON, a worker at the Old Mahogany Bar, who followed, told the story of a sailor who, when fallen and friendless, found good fellowship and salvation at the Mission. In August last year this man visited the place in company with others, and seemed disinclined to go away when the meetings came to an end. He was sad in appearance, and arrested attention. When spoken to, he said that he left home when quite a child, with a desire for adventure and to see the world. In seafaring life he forgot all he had learned at home, and became practically an infidel, ceasing to think of spiritual things. At length he became very tired of life. One evening, during a storm, the captain sent him to the top of the mast, and while it was thundering and the lightning played around him, he cried out, "If there be a God, let Him strike me dead." He thereupon lost his footing and fell, sustaining such injuries that he had to be taken to a hospital. After weeks of treatment he was discharged, and, being without money, he drifted to Whitechapel, where, in desperation, he determined to commit suicide. The Mission workers helped him a little, and in a providential manner he secured work in a provincial town. He is now foreman in a factory, and getting 35s. a week; and he says that the Old Mahogany Bar has been his salvation.

Dr. LEETE dwelt upon the social condition of East London—the homelessness of the people, the precocity of vice on the part of the young, due to overcrowding. Social effort is a necessity, and this includes medical and educational agencies. Thus the physical miseries of the people are relieved, and a sense of self-respect promoted. All this, of course, is but palliation; spiritual forces must also be brought to bear if spiritual results are to be realised.

Miss BUDGETT, referring to the way in which visitors are repelled by the dreary aspect of long streets and narrow courts, with attendant squalor and misery, said that the workers had no such feelings, because they knew the people who lived in the streets and who were on the look-out for their occasional calls. As illustrating the fact that many of the women of the district, toiling indoors from morning till night, never hear a word about religion excepting when visited by the Mission workers, Miss Budgett told a story of a woman whom she has seen now and then for eighteen months, but whom she has not yet succeeded in getting out to a public meeting. With their home duties these poor folk have little time, and then it is very difficult to induce them to break their settled customs. On the other hand, the speaker told of instances in which, after patient continuance in visitation, she had led women to attend week night and Sunday meetings, greatly to their spiritual help and profit.

Rev. JOHN HOWARD spoke of the heroic endeavours of some of the poor to reduce the debt on the Mission property. This was instanced as a reason why well-to-do people should be generous. The evening meeting was large and enthusiastic.

Discipleship.

BIBLE READINGS BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

ON the four Wednesday afternoons in October, in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing-cross, Rev. Hubert Brooke is giving Bible talks on Christian discipleship, its nature and conditions. The lectures will afterwards be published in book form; the information will be welcome to the many friends throughout the country who may have heard Mr. Brooke expound this subject the last two years at Keswick. At the opening lecture on Wednesday, week the attendance was large, though at the hour of assembling the rain fell heavily. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who presided, prefaced the exposition by some explanations as to the nature and object of "Keswick" teaching.

This lecture was, in a measure, introductory. The words "disciple" and "Christian," said Mr. Brooke, were synonymous in the early days of the Church. A disciple was simply a learner in the school of Christ. In our time the word "Christian" generally bears a very different meaning; it has mostly a national, ecclesiastical, functional or formal signification. Discipleship in the real and primitive sense must be marked by three elementary principles. The first is continuance in Christ's word. "If ye continue in my Word, then are ye my disciples. And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John viii. 31, 32). There is no short cut to discipleship, and our dependence on the Master's teaching must be abiding. To the end of life we are learners in Christ's school. Who can doubt or deny the need in our day for the spiritual liberty which Christ bestows on his true disciples?

A second element is obedience to the Master's command, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples; if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 34, 35). What a sad thing it is that theological hatreds are the bitterest of all hatreds. When this essential element of love to others, like unto Christ's love to us, becomes a real thing in our lives, then the world will have an undeniable proof of our Christian discipleship. A third mark of discipleship is fruit-bearing to the glory of God. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples" (John xv. 8). We each need to face the question, whether these three primal elements characterise our daily life.

Passing from this, Mr. Brooke said that in Christ's school there are rules to be observed and conditions to be fulfilled. The exposition of the first of these took up the rest of the time. It is laid down in Luke xiv. 26, "If any man come to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." At first sight this condition may seem hard and harsh. Whatever the words mean, the "hate" spoken of cannot be construed in any bad sense. A parallel passage in Matt. x. 37 teaches that what is really meant is that Christ must have the primary place in our heart's affection; that his claims are paramount. As a familiar illustration Mr. Brooke cited the case of one who might desire to give himself or herself to the work of foreign missions, in obedience to the call of Christ. If parents are not willing that a son, or more probably a daughter, should thus dedicate life, what are the children to do? If Christ's command has come clearly and unmistakably to the heart, of course there must be obedience to it. "Honour thy father and mother" is also a divine command, however, and there may well be patient prayer that the hearts of parents may be turned, so that their free consent may be given.

Other conditions of discipleship will be reviewed in the succeeding addresses.

"Captain" A. E. V. Nicholls-Barnes, described as a Plymouth evangelist, has been sentenced to three months' hard labour for stealing a tent, the property of Miss M. Snowdon, of Regent's Park, London. He borrowed the tent, and then sold it. He had been previously convicted of embezzlement and theft. The Western Morning News says of the case: "Honest men who are endeavouring to accomplish evangelistic work of great intrinsic value are discredited by the acts of such impostors."

Jews in East London.

FOR nearly a quarter of a century Mr. Colin Young, a well-known London-Scotsman, has taken a deep and practical interest in the condition of the Jews in our great city. For many years he has visited Petticoat-lane and the districts around Houndsditch on the Lord's day, testifying of the Messiah to all the sons of Abraham who would listen to him. Since he began these efforts, great changes have taken place in the outward aspects of that part of East London. "The Lane" is now a wide street and occupied mostly by foreign Jews. Thousands of Testaments and Gospels have been circulated in Hebrew and English, and the word backed up with personal appeal.

Some nine years ago Mr. Young opened a shelter for Jews at 4, Vine-street, Minorities, and through the kindness of sympathising friends he has continued to maintain this place of temporary retreat for destitute Israelites. Many thousands of sleepers have been received. Bible classes are held twice a week, and conversations on the greatest of all themes go on constantly in the kitchen at Vine-street. Clothing and other useful articles, the gifts of friends, have been distributed among the specially necessitous at the shelter or in their own homes. The work is designated by Mr. Young the "Wild Olive Graft" Mission, and he issues every quarter a little serial with the same title, describing its operations, and giving other matter bearing on Jewish life and custom.

In working among this class many are of course found who are in a low bodily condition, and need something beyond spiritual advice or comfort. Hospital letters are found as far as possible, and some have been sent to different convalescent Homes. It has been found, however, that at these institutions Jews and Gentiles do not always coalesce in habits and ways of thought. It has been greatly on Mr. Young's mind to secure some place of the sort which would be exclusively at the disposal of Jews needing such help towards renewed health. Several months ago, by a train of marked providential circumstances, his attention was directed to a quiet and lovely spot near the Essex coast, and about a mile and a half from Shoeburyness. "Friends' Farm," as the place is called, was for sale; after careful investigation Mr. Young entered into treaty for the purchase of the farm buildings, with adjacent garden, orchard, etc., to be adapted for the purposes of a Jews' Convalescent Home. The houses are in an excellent state of preservation, and with skilful adaptation seem admirably fitted for providing a cheerful and healthy place of temporary resort, well within the restorative influences of the sea breezes from the German Ocean, and in a spot of delightful rural seclusion. A representative who recently visited the place was strongly impressed by its charms and its suitability for the end in view.

The first necessary step, of course, is to remodel the buildings, so as to provide sleeping, feeding, and recreative accommodation for the companies of men, women, and children who will be drawn to it in large and continuous relays. Mr. Young's genius for planning, and his large practical business experience, will enable him to have these changes effected on a scale of economy and efficiency that would be impossible in other circumstances. An appeal is made to those who still look on the Jew as beloved for the fathers' sake, to further this most excellent and desirable project. The purchase price of the property is £400 (which is much under its intrinsic value), and £200 more will probably be needed to make the "Friends' Farm" ready for occupation. It is hoped that all this will be consummated by the close of the spring months. There are many East End missions that will supply the patients; it is for Christian folk to help in preparing the place for them, and thus to add one more practical proof of gratitude to the kinsmen of our Lord after the flesh for the benefits they have conferred on the world in ages that are past. Mr. Young's address, as stated, is 4, Vine-street, Minorities, E.C.

The Bible Learners' Union provides a simple yet effectual plan for daily Bible study, which those who are anxious to obtain a fuller knowledge of the Word can scarcely fail to find really helpful. Members agree to commit to memory one verse each day. The secretary, Miss Brine, Claremont, High Barnet, will gladly supply cards of membership to any address on receiving fourpence in stamps as annual subscription.

National Vigilance Association.

THE eleventh annual report of the National Vigilance Association gives an account of work from the London headquarters and from the various provincial branches. For details we must refer our readers to the pamphlet itself, confining this notice to the more general facts and indications of progress.

"The prosecution work has been somewhat lighter than before. The fact is that the improved tone of public opinion has roused the police and magistrates and others to much more energetic action. If the committee have not had quite so much to do, it is because there has not been quite so much left to them.

"In regard to obscene books and pictures, a marked improvement is seen. It is much more difficult to obtain these things than it was, and if the Association had done nothing but bring about this new state of things it would have amply justified its foundation. Not only by interfering with internal trade in these mischievous things is their action effective, but the Association have succeeded in giving to preventive law an international character. In the course of the year a catalogue of indecencies circulated in England has been tracked home to Holland by an officer of the Association, sent over on purpose, and the Dutch authorities arrested the offender and seized and destroyed his stock. In a remarkable case, the anonymous owner of a quantity of indecent literature, after communicating with the Society by advertisement, placed his collection in the hands of the Society for destruction, subscribing £20 as an acknowledgment of this assistance to clear his conscience of a mass of perilous stuff."

The Association is always on the alert to bring to justice those inhuman traders whose wares are deceived and decoyed girls, and whose bourse is the market of vice. The private work of the Association is yet more varied in its ramifications than the public section. Its office and the ear of its secretary are repertoires for the secrets of those who are troubled and perplexed and need the advice and help of a friend. A poor but pure servant finds herself in a situation where purity is not wanted. She insists on leaving, and is thereupon unjustly treated, and perhaps robbed, by her employer. Then the Association steps in, gets the wrong righted, and protects the girl from future molestation on the part of those who have been trying to compass her ruin.

In this private section, moral and spiritual counsel is sympathetically given; legal advice is provided free; immediate practical help is given in urgent cases. A medical home opens its doors to those whose maladies need it; to girls and women who desire shelter and training, and who can work, a laundry home is provided, and in each individual case the cardinal point of Christian sympathy and religious instruction is kept in view. Wayward souls in their extremity of trouble not infrequently turn in genuine contrition toward the Saviour they learned to know in younger and more innocent days, and even in those inmates who do not afford this amount of encouragement to the matrons there is good ground for hoping that the seed of true life has been sown, and may fructify to a manifestly spiritual life.

This Association is much in need of funds, being £1200 in debt at the close of its financial year. The offices are at 267, Strand, W.C., the secretary being Mr. W. A. Coote, who is ever on the alert to render service in the cause of morality and purity.

The Sunbeam Mission.—The report of the fifth year's work states that during the past year the Sunbeam Mission has again made rapid progress. The special object of the mission is to draw out the sympathies of upper and middle class children towards the very poor, or suffering, paralysed, and crippled children in our large towns. Members are asked to send by post a magazine monthly to one such poor child, and it is further suggested that with the consent of their parents they might occasionally write friendly letters, and send toys, flowers, garments, etc. By this simple means a kindly feeling is being established between classes who, hitherto, have too often been separated by what in many cases has seemed an insuperable barrier, and a good influence is being exercised in some of the darkest homes in our large cities. About 20,000 individuals have now been brought into connection with the Sunbeam Mission. The hon. treasurer and secretaries of the Central branch are Admiral, Mrs., and Miss Mabel Battiscombe Eastwood, Weston-super-Mare.

Young Men in London.

A TEN days' Gospel mission at Exeter Hall, for young men, by Mr. Frank L. Smith, was closed on Friday evening. There have been good attendances and encouraging results. The conductors of the Y.M.C.A. have long since found out the value of the social element in furthering their work; a conversational tea meeting will attract many who would not be drawn by the bare announcement of a Gospel exhortation. In the course of this Mission there were several such gatherings, and the results justified the plan adopted. Mr. Smith's method of address is largely anecdotal, so that the interest and attention of the young men were secured. A considerable number professed conversion during the Mission.

One feature of the meetings was the presence of a considerable sprinkling of soldiers from different regiments quartered in London. Two special meetings were held for the members respectively of the junior and senior branches of the Civil Service. There were goodly gatherings on both occasions, and as one result some twenty-five additions were made to the membership of the Civil Service Prayer Union. At a crowded meeting on the Saturday evening of the mission the evangelist gave an address on gambling.

One or two incidents of somewhat special interest may be noted. A young fellow engaged in a West End house attended one of the earliest meetings and professed conversion. He gave solid proof of the reality of the change by bringing four or five comrades in the same place of business almost to every succeeding meeting. Some of these also confessed Christ. On the Sunday evening the general secretary encountered a man going out of the hall, and had a lengthy talk with him. He said he wanted to be a Christian, but could not. The reason given, in response to questioning, was that he was the manager of a boot shop that was kept open on Sunday mornings. After conversation the man finally yielded himself to Christ very definitely. He pathetically observed on leaving that his boy would be pleased to hear the news, as he had persuaded him very hard to come to the meeting.

The Exeter Hall Mission is to be followed by a similar effort at the Cornhill centre from October 19 to 23. The missionary will be Rev. E. Weeks, of St. James' Church, Hatcham. Arrangements have also been made for a mission in November at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, specially for young men in the West End business houses; Mr. W. R. Lane will be the evangelist. A series of lectures on "Methods of Bible Study" are to be given at Exeter Hall on Monday evenings by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of Portman Chapel. A series of addresses on "The Life of Faith" will be given by Pastor Fuller Gooch, in the same place, on alternate Mondays. We observe that at the Aldersgate-street centre Rev. F. B. Meyer will resume, next Saturday afternoon, those Bible Talks which have in the past proved so attractive to city young fellows. These and other arrangements indicate that our friends of the Y.M.C.A. are devising large efforts for the benefit of London's young men throughout the coming winter season.

Peterboro' Fair.

MESSRS. FRANK COCKREM, Grey, Back, and Barry Wake, of the Open-air Mission, visited this great Midland fair on October 7 and 8. Despite the storms of wind and rain the Gospel trumpet was sounded in the pleasure fair, amid all manner of other shows, and at the bridge, to numbers of attentive listeners. Of the thousands who entered the city on the fair days, it was estimated that not over fifteen per cent. refused acceptance of the leaflets, etc., which were liberally offered. Encouraging instances proving the word spoken to be the power of God were not wanting. The Colman family and other friends hailed the visit of the evangelists with Christian welcome and kind hospitality.

Nottingham, Leicester, Hull, Gainsboro', etc., are included in the October campaign of the Open-air Mission, which is ever thankful for the prayers and co-operation of the Christian public.

Young Abstinents.—At a recent meeting of the Suffolk Band of Hope Union, the secretary stated that there were 2,813,000 young abstainers connected with the Band of Hope movement.

Story of a Village Mission.

IN August, 1895, we took lodgings in a lovely Derbyshire village (population about 1000) for three weeks' holiday. It was in a colliery district, but the natural beauties were none the less on that account. The first Sunday morning we attended the only service in the village, that held in the parish church, a small ancient edifice of great interest. The clergyman was of the most advanced ritualistic type, and he favoured us with a discourse on St. Lawrence, to whom the church was dedicated. Nothing could have been more lifeless than the service, and there was a miserable attendance, consisting of about twelve adults, a surpliced choir, and school children.

In the evening we found there was service at two little chapels, and to one of them, the United Free Church, we went, hoping for better things. The attendance, however, was only equal to that of the morning, and just as the sermon commenced five drunken colliers walked in to upset the service. On my intervention order was restored, four of the men expressing regret for their conduct.

The drunkenness being so abundant in the village, especially during "feast week," I made up my mind, on returning to London and thinking it all over, to hold a Gospel Temperance Mission, and with a view to this I wrote to the clergyman asking him if it could be arranged and if the meetings could be held in the schoolroom. To my astonishment he replied as follows:—"When I tell you that I am a sworn officer of a Divine society, commissioned to enclose the whole world, the constitution of which cuts off from membership all drunkards (habitual) till reconciled; which provides for absolution and strengthening and refreshing for souls that they may be freed from this and other sins, you will see yourself that what you have proposed is an impossibility for me."

Further on in the same letter he states, in so many words, that everything done outside "the Church" is "a snare." Consequently the Mission was dropped until holiday time this year, when we decided to take the same rooms, and in spite of all obstacles to hold a Gospel Temperance Mission. In order to gain the hearts of the people, we gave two social evenings in a large schoolroom attached to our lodgings; nearly every house was visited by my wife, and invitations personally given, with a very gratifying result. After securing the services of Sister Jeanie Banks, Wesley Deaconess, we issued announcements of a mission from September 6 to September 13. The trustees of the United Methodists and the Primitive Methodists lent us their chapels, and the services were divided between the two, with a success beyond our most sanguine expectations.

The whole village was awakened, and crowds attended, the result being 149 pledges, and, better still, several conversions and many cases of persons being deeply impressed. Many members of the churches declared that they had themselves received blessing. So much interest was aroused that the people petitioned for one more meeting on the 14th, and I think it was the most impressive of all. Finally, a temperance society has been formed.

It grieves me that the place should be left with no one to shepherd the flock. The Methodist minister can only visit the village about once a month. I should like to place a deaconess or some other suitable person here for six months. I have too many obligations to undertake this single handed.

Dissent in Russia.—The Odessa correspondent of the Daily News states that according to official data there is a steady growth of dissent in Russia, in spite of all the severe measures devised for its suppression during recent years. It is estimated that in the aggregate the sectarians number two and a-half millions, not reckoning the nonconformist Old Believers, who number something like eighteen millions in European Russia. The correspondent says: "When M. Pobiedonostzeff assumed the moderatorship of the Holy Synod, it was confidently predicted that the days of Russian sectarianism were numbered; but the result of all the drastic measures of that fanatic administrator only goes to prove that in Russia, as all the world over, intolerant oppression only strengthens and consolidates the various sectarian propaganda which it seeks to destroy."

Children's Special Service Mission.

CROWDED gatherings took place in St. Martin's Town-hall, Charing Cross, on Thursday last, to receive from the various workers in connection with this organisation the reports of the services held at numerous seaside resorts around our coast during the summer months. There were three meetings in all, two held respectively in the afternoon and evening, and an overflow from the latter.

Mr. T. B. BISHOP (hon. sec.) reported upon the work of the past season generally. Mr. Bishop said he had been at sixteen different seaside places this summer, and he had been encouraged to see so many earnest helpers engaging in the work of the Mission there. He was thankful to be able to speak of God's great blessing upon the efforts put forth. As to the future of the work, one thing they needed was more workers specially adapted to children, and to that end he urged them to study more the thoughts and phrases common to young people. He felt more and more the very great importance of individual work. In some of the larger places, such as Scarborough and Bournemouth, there were thousands of children who never came near the services; helpers were wanted to distribute literature amongst such and invite them to the services. Specially for that purpose an army of lady workers was required.

The PRESIDENT, Rev. E. A. STUART, followed with an address. He said he had never had a year in which he received so many letters from clergymen and ministers of all denominations expressing thanks to God for what they had heard and seen of the work of the Children's Special Service Mission. It is matter for great thankfulness that as one generation of workers succeeds another, men and women are found to work in connection with the seaside services.

CANON TAYLOR SMITH, who presided in the evening, said he believed there was no society which had helped to feed the Church of Christ at home and abroad so much as the Children's Special Service Mission. The Canon based his subsequent remarks on the narrative of the spies who brought back with them from the land of Canaan the grapes and pomegranates and figs.

Several other addresses were given by those who took an active part in the seaside services. All spoke with encouragement and thankfulness regarding the services that they had been privileged to conduct. The meetings generally had been well attended, in one case about a thousand children and adults having gathered to listen to the simple Gospel message. Many striking instances of spiritual revival among Christians and of souls converted to God were cited.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

On Thursday last, October 8, 214 trained emigrants (127 boys and 87 girls) left Dr. Barnardo's Homes on their way to Canada. These, added to the 8511 previously sent, bring up the grand total of emigrants placed out in Canada to this date to 8725. Of those previously placed out, it is well again to affirm the fact that rather more than 98 per cent. are now successfully fighting in Canada the battle of life, respectable and respected, many of them God-fearing men and women, some of them ministers of Christ, and the great majority of them in households where family prayer is part of the daily life, and where there is reverential respect for the Lord's Day, and where total abstinence is the rule.

A few gifts of £10 each are still needed to cover the whole cost of the emigration during the present year, which included 676 children, of whom 488 were boys and 188 girls. Late though it is, it is probable that a few more special cases will yet go this year—cases for whom there are already homes awaiting them on the other side.

Field Lane Ragged Schools.—The fields here are white unto harvest, but the labourers are few. Last week the total attendances at the twenty-four different meetings held amounted to 2516, but the workers numbered only 94. Could any of our readers help, and encourage our brethren at Field Lane, by throwing in their lot amongst them. Special need exists on Sunday, Tuesday and Friday evenings. The secretary of the Institution is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, who would gladly welcome a call for further information, or would be pleased to answer any letters.

Homes for Working Girls.

THE report for last year shows that the Homes for Working Girls in London are now ten in number. They are carried on with encouragement, although not maintained without anxiety. We make some extracts from the new report:—

"The year 1895 has been no exception to the former years, either in the success which has attended its efforts, or in the blessing that has followed the labours of those interested in pursuing those efforts. The good hand of God has been upon us, and it may reasonably be said that the harvest of the future is but the golden ripening of to-day's sowing. The Homes were never more needed than they now are, sheltering as they do large numbers of the poorest, but respectable, working girls and young women of England's vast metropolis; and so highly are they appreciated that 2051 have availed themselves of their comforts and privileges during the year.

"The tone of the various Homes is excellent, thus reflecting much credit, not only on the superintendents, but also on the inmates themselves. Everything in prudence and reason is done to elevate home life, to make all happy, and to afford them strength and cheer in their daily struggles; and it is no exaggeration to state that the privileges enjoyed in the Homes have been, and are largely instrumental in moulding the characters and lives of many hundreds of upright and honourable girls and young women, who have been able to fit themselves for the warfare of life under the influence of bright Christian surroundings.

"It has always been a joy to the founder of the Homes that the Divine favour has rested on them since they were first established. Their scope and aim is not simply to afford young people a lodging, but to provide them with a Christian home, and because God has in this been honoured it is believed that they have proved their success. There never has been other than a judicious desire to make the Homes bright and happy, combined with the exercise of religious influences, and thus far has that end been attained. Religion, however, is not forced upon any; indeed, it is in no way compulsory for a girl to attend family prayers or any of the religious meetings, and as a consequence it is found that a large majority in each household most willingly and gladly avail themselves of such a privilege."

The work has exceptional liabilities at the present time. The hon. director is Mr. John Shrimpton, 3, Victoria street, Westminster, S.W.

Encouragement in Barcelona.

We have recently had the pleasure of seeing three persons confess their faith in Christ by being baptized into his name. One is the wife of one of the railway men, who has been in fellowship with us two years. Another is the young girl who helps us in the school and house. Her sister is also one of our number, and is now in my sister's service at Barcelona. The third is the man who had been a blasphemous, and whose wife was baptized nearly two years ago.

In the last case, neither the man nor his wife can read, so that we cannot expect them to make so much progress in the Christian life as others who are able to study the Scriptures, but their two children have learned to read a little, and will doubtless be a help to their parents by and by. The elder girl recently went into her mother's room, and finding a crucifix which had been laid aside, but not destroyed, she broke it into pieces. Then, frightened at her own act, she hid it away, and afterwards told her mother what she had done. The mother remarked that she need not have destroyed it, as her aunt had wished to have it; but the child said at once: "No; do you not remember what we were told, that it would be even more sinful to give it away to someone else?" We are hopeful of several other persons who attend the meetings.

Caldas de Montbui, Barcelona.

Hereford.—Mr. Thos. M. Wintle (Pontynole) conducted special services in connection with the ninth anniversary of the Hereford City and County Mission on Sunday, October 4. Large congregations attended each service, and God blessed the Word to his own people and the unsaved. On Monday, October 5, Mr. W. H. Godwin, of Withington, presided over a very interesting meeting, which was addressed by Rev. E. Ball, Mr. R. Cross, hon. secretary of the mission, Mr. J. J. Cox, the treasurer, Messrs. Thos. M. Wintle, W. Watts, and William Nobbs. This mission is doing a good work in Hereford.

The Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.

IT is with great disappointment and deep regret I have to announce that the good work carried on here for nearly twenty years is finally closed, and the magnificent premises must be sold forthwith. Two years ago articles appeared in the newspapers stating that a great Livery Company in the City had arranged to take over the Institute and carry on the work. After numerous delays and difficulties the contract for transfer was approved by the Charity Commissioners, and signed by the representatives of the Company and the Trustees of the Working Lads' Institute.

We hoped then that our troubles were over, but the contract has not been fulfilled, and the sad result of it all is that the income of the Institute has been practically stopped, and the work itself amongst the poor but industrious lads of East London is at an end. Still sadder is it to think of what may be the future of the buildings so long dedicated to the service of God. I suppose they will either be devoted to trade or possibly become a music-hall or theatre. I have used every endeavour to prevent such a perversion, and have maintained that when sold there ought to be restrictions against liquor, theatrical, and music-hall licences; but the property is mortgaged and the debt has increased during these two years.

If put up to auction, I fear that legally I shall have no power to enforce restrictions or prevent sale to the highest bidder, and he will be able to use them for any purpose he chooses. The adjoining house is licensed. This evil might be averted, and a great good accomplished if the Institute buildings were acquired for some religious, philanthropic, or educational purposes. Is there not some institution or individual who will, in God's name, come to the rescue? The premises are very extensive, and are freehold. They cover an area of over 6000 square feet. The situation is the finest in Whitechapel, in the main road, opposite London Hospital, and adjoining the railway station.

The building is admirably adapted for a Christian Institute and Home, a church, college, library, or hospital. The property has cost about £18,000, but if taken for such a purpose might now be secured for about half that amount. Here is an opportunity for doing good and preventing evil, which, if embraced, may lead to untold blessing for East London.

I shall be pleased to give further particulars and orders to view, but if the Institute is to be saved some action must be taken immediately.

Soldiers' Christian Association.

THE new report states that the secretary "has visited most of the garrisons in the United Kingdom, and held meetings among the men, thus placing the council in touch with the work at over 150 centres. Upwards of 500 men have been admitted as members during the year, and this only after satisfactory evidence by their life in the barrack-room of their conversion to God, and of their willingness to unite with their Christian comrades in work among the unsaved. In visiting the outward-bound troops at Southampton, Mr. Wheeler has found many opportunities of giving a parting word of Christian counsel to those leaving for foreign service, and the way the men gather in groups, and the earnest manner in which they listen to what is said, give evidence of the interest they take in the message. Not the least valuable of the opportunities afforded of direct dealing with the men are the facilities given for visiting the prisoners on board. The home-coming troops are visited also on arrival at Southampton."

Special mention is also made of the development of the work at Malta and at the Cape. In India remarkable progress has been made, and the report gives a review of the story of the movement since 1887, and of the Soldiers' "Prayer Rooms." Funds are much needed to support the work. The secretary is Mr. A. H. Wheeler, 65, St. Thomas's-street, Portsmouth.

Work at Port Said.

DEAR SIR,—At Mrs. Robertson's monthly prayer meeting in connection with the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, Mr. Eöhl, the Swedish missionary so many years located at Port Said, gave a short account of his labours at that place. He told that 4000 great steamers pass through the Canal every year. The population when he first began his work there was 15,000; it is now 36,000. It is composed of many nationalities, amongst others Arabs, Jews, Germans, English, French, Spanish, Italians, Russians, Swedes, Norwegians, Dutch, Danes, Greeks, Austrians, and many others. Mr. Eöhl is a great linguist, and can discourse with most of these nationalities.

He gave in round numbers the different people inhabiting Port Said. The Arabs take the first place, and number 9000. Next come the Greeks, 8000; then French, 4000; Maltese, 2000. The remaining 13,000 are a mixture of all the other nations already mentioned. His work as a missionary is to board the steamers and other ships, and give them the Word of God in their own tongues. Many large Russian men-of-war come there, and they receive more Bibles than any other.

Mr. Eöhl has been disappointed at seeing little fruit from his long labours. This last year it pleased the Lord to lay him on a bed of sickness, from which at one time it was thought he would never rise. Prayers were made without ceasing unto God for him, and he was restored to health. During his convalescence the house was besieged by enquirers after his health, and this principally by Arabs. The first day he was able to cross his threshold, their greetings were so numerous and his strength so small, that he had to beat a hasty retreat within doors to save himself from their manifestations of delight. A few days after this he went to the landing-stage and made his appearance among them, but their affectionate demonstrations were such that they insisted on kissing him; it was only by getting the policemen to see him out of the crowd that he got to a place of safety.

Mr. Eöhl is a lover of men. He used to plunge into the untidy dwellings of these poor Arabs, and help them and comfort them as far as his means allowed. By this means the number of Arab Scriptures that he was enabled to give them results in their love abounding towards him, and comforts his heart by seeing that his labours at Port Said have not been in vain. He hopes to get back to his work in December. During his stay in England he expects to raise the necessary money to furnish a new hall in course of erection at Port Said. The money for the 1,300,000 Scriptures, circulated by him there, is partly furnished by the Association for the free distribution of the Word of God, of which Mrs. Robertson, of The Chesils, Christ Church-road, Hampstead, is the secretary and main-spring. Mr. Geo. Müller, of Bristol, helps Mr. Eöhl in this grand work. W. G.

Dartford Memorial Hall.

THE tenth anniversary of the Dartford Young Men's Bible-class, connected with this hall, was held last week. On Sunday week Rev. R. C. Fillingham spoke afternoon and evening, on the true Church of Christ and the Reformation. At the public meeting on Wednesday, the president, Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, presided. The report showed that during the past year the Dartford Young Men's Bible-class has made rapid strides, and as we close our year the number on the register stands at 292, with an average attendance on Sunday afternoon of 132. The Dartford Lads' Bible-class has given considerable anxiety during the past year. There is a decrease of 14, its membership now being 79. The Protestant Sunday-school has had a considerable increase, and numbers 292. The Sunday evening service has shown a large increase.

Sympathetic addresses followed by Col. Alves, Messrs. Stanley Ward, M.P., Running, and others.

Pirbright.—Last July the Primitive Methodists of Aldershot pitched a good-sized tent at Pirbright, Surrey. The tent, which cost about £17, was paid for by private friends in Aldershot. The services have been well attended. We were all rejoicing together at the success of our work, when, during the recent gale, the tent blew over, snapping some of the supports and otherwise damaging it. We are anxious to put up a permanent building. GEO. MUSSELWHITE.

"IS MY INFANT SAVED?"

DEAR SIR,—I am a very busy mother now, nursing number ten, and have suffered all the tormenting thoughts of your questioner, in the like bereavements. I have, however, been enabled to cast them all away as Satan's buffeting. My little ones are taught to love Jesus, and to know his name from their earliest days.

Have you ever noticed how early in life our babies clasp their pretty hands, as if in prayer, and how they try to imitate the little toddling brother or sister at prayer time? Can parents do more than this—give them to Jesus, train them for Him, and that diligently, and then trust Him to do his part? Shall we be more tender than their Shepherd and Saviour?

And then, for those parents who are mourning for their carelessness in this all-important matter, I would say, Redeem the time, and hope to see thine own again. I have made special prayers for infants, and I have wondered at times if in this cause I have not been wearisome to the Hearer of prayer.

Let parents do for God their best,
Leave Him for us to do the rest.

Many a button-hole bouquet for Jesus has been twined,
But never costlier than these have his royal pathway lined.
Let us not mournfully ponder, but believe that they were his choice,
When for us these bright buds shall reopen, O will not our hearts rejoice!

DEAR SIR,—Another proof, if further proof is needed, as to the salvation of little ones, may be obtained from Leviticus iv., which deals with the sin of "ignorance." This sin was to be forgiven as soon as the sacrifice had been made. Obviously the sins of infants until they attain an age to discern between right and wrong are sins of "ignorance," and consequently have been atoned for in the one great sacrifice offered at Calvary, of which the Levitical sacrifice was merely a prefigurement. Thus, out of the awful sacrifice of child life in heathen and, alas! too, in many civilised lands, God is gathering myriads of precious little souls. In this light our Lord's words, "of such is the kingdom of heaven," has a literal numerical application, as well as a figurative one, to child-like spirit, which the believer ought to possess. We are often apt to imagine that Satan is obtaining by far the greatest share of the human race, but when we meet all these little ones in glory we shall probably see that Christ has yet triumphed.—Yours truly,

E. A. R.

Christian Institute for Lads.—At the "Red White, and Blue" Institute, Pentonville, the winter work is being re-started. Last Saturday the gymnasium was re-opened with a tea to 120 lads, some of them very rough. In November it is hoped to have a few consecutive nights of services only, for which prayer is asked. On Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays Bible teaching and prayer meetings are held for the elder lads, girls, and younger boys. Help is much needed for this work. The secretaries are Misses E. W. Dresser and M. A. Jay, the "Red, White, and Blue" Institute, Cumming-street, Pentonville, N.

Italian Soldiers.—The military church in Rome is doing a grand work in Italy in evangelising so many young men who are drawn from all ranks of society, as military service is compulsory there. But it is greatly in need of help; as the work increases, so do the needs. So many friends of the mission are dead, and others do not arise. An urgent appeal is made to Christians to assist as much as possible this mission which has been blessed of God. The pastor of the church is Signor Cav. Capellini, 14, Pozzo delle Cornacchie, Rome. The twenty-third anniversary of the opening of the church has recently been held.

The Duchess of Albany visited Stratford on Thursday in order to open a work show and to found a women's settlement in connection with the Trinity College Mission at Tenby-road, Stratford. The mission is under the charge of Rev. W. J. Roxburgh, whose work has attracted the hearty sympathies of the employees of the Great Eastern Railway works, which are close by. Dr. Woods, Principal of Trinity College, Oxford, referred to the progress made in the work of the Mission. The Misses Harrington and Burrows conveyed an idea of the necessity for the settlement and the means to be adopted to deal with social perplexities.

Scottish Notes.

A TRAINING Home for Christian workers has been established in connection with the U.P. Presbytery of Edinburgh.

A project is on foot to erect a new and more convenient Christian Institute in Aberdeen for the work of the Y.M.C.A.

Principal Douglas, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, has received six months' leave of absence, as the state of his health necessitates a winter sojourn on the Continent.

We regret to learn that Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, has for some weeks been confined to his house in much pain and suffering. The latest accounts speak of a large measure of recovery. Mr. Quarrier is now in the last month of twenty-five years' service in connection with his rescue work.

A public meeting, under the auspices of the Free Church Women's Foreign Missionary Society, was held last week in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, in connection with the departure of five lady missionaries to India. Dr. J. H. Wilson presided, and Rev. Dr. Whyte, Rev. R. S. Simpson, Mr. William Stevenson, the secretary of the Society, and others took part in the proceedings. The following are the names of the ladies:—Miss Paxton, Miss Jane Small, Miss Smart, who are returning to India; and Miss Steen and Miss Douglas, who are going out to the mission field for the first time.

The Christian Conference at Dumfries this year (the eighth of the series) took the form of evangelistic meetings. Addresses were delivered by Rev. George Wilson, Edinburgh, on "Our need of a Saviour," and "Christ manifesting Himself to his own," by Canon McCormick, of Highbury, on "Christ seeking and finding the sinner," and "Coming to Christ and its difficulties," by Rev. T. C. Kirkwood, Kelso, on "Following Christ and its difficulties"; and by Rev. Dr. Wells, Pollokshields, on "Christ sanctifying His own through the Holy Spirit," and "Serving Christ and overcoming the world."

The annual conference of the Dumbartonshire Y.W.C.A. was recently held in the hall of the Over-toun Reading Rooms at Milton. Lady Overtoun presided. There was a very large attendance, districts so remote as Kirkintilloch and Helensburgh being largely represented. After the transaction of ordinary business, addresses were given by Lady Overtoun, Mrs. Oatts, Mrs. Stott from China, and others. At seven o'clock there was a consecration meeting, conducted by Rev. William Ross, Cowcaddens, Glasgow, who gave an earnest address, and concluded the services by special prayer, at which a large number stood up, to signify their dedication of themselves to the Lord and his service.

The annual social meeting in connection with the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. was held in Queen-street Hall last week. Dr. J. Carment, chairman, said he did not know that matters had ever been in a better condition with them than they were now. They were not only a Young Men's Christian Association, they were, to a large extent, an evangelistic association. They trained up their young men to be Christian workers. They did a large amount of evangelistic work, and hitherto that work had been a great means of blessing. Their membership, however, ought to be four or five times as great as it was. They suffered in Edinburgh from sectarianism, but their Association was thoroughly catholic and they knew nothing of sectarianism.

The fifteenth annual conference of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild was held in Stirling last week, the proceedings extending over four days. The guild's general aim is to unite all societies, Bible classes, and other associated bodies connected with the Church of Scotland, which have for their object to serve the Lord Jesus Christ, by promoting the spiritual and intellectual life of young men, and by encouraging them to undertake works of Christian usefulness. Each parochial branch is free to adopt the form best suited to its local requirements. Hence the guild includes fellowship associations, Bible-classes, literary societies, psalmody associations, Sabbath-school associations, with various sub-sections for specific purposes, such as evangelistic, temperance, purity, athletics, etc. The membership of the guild is now over 25,000, enrolled in 670 different branches. The delegates to the conference numbered 381, of whom 271 were lay, and 110 clerical members.

The annual public meeting and conversazione in connection with the Glasgow Sabbath-school Union was held last week in St. Andrew's Hall, which was crowded in every part. Mr. Thomas Binnie, the chairman, said that the report of the work of the Union for the past year was again a record of progress. They could tell of a substantial addition to the numbers of both teachers and scholars, and this was doubly gratifying when they recollected that during the previous year their progress was exceptionally great. In Glasgow and its suburbs they had now upon the roll 115,731 scholars and 10,766 teachers. The work of the Sabbath-school teacher was two-fold—partly educational and partly evangelistic, and the earnest Sabbath-school teacher would ever keep before him this aim—to bring his scholars to know Christ. Addresses were delivered by Rev. T. Morcom Taylor on "The teacher as an inspirer of thought," by Rev. Dr. Whyte on "The use of imagination to Sabbath-school teachers," and by Rev. A. F. Forrest on "The mission school."

Irish Notes.

A UNITED temperance council has been formed in Cork for Munster, and a similar council is about to be organised in Belfast for the North of Ireland.

Much regret is felt in co. Antrim by the death of Mr. W. P. Holmes, aged seventy. He had been for many years an active Christian and temperance worker in Belfast and subsequently in Larne.

A convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Assembly Rooms, Cork, Mr. Robert Wilson presiding. Several well-known Keswick speakers addressed the convention, which was largely attended.

The Archbishop of Canterbury in his address in Derry Cathedral stated that he had no intention of abandoning the word "Protestant," or of letting go the principles of the Reformation. These words, in view of his sudden decease, have now a melancholy interest.

A very largely attended meeting was held in Rosemary-street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, to bid farewell to a party of nine missionaries going out to the mission field. Rev. Dr. Williamson presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Wm. Park and several of the outgoing missionaries.

A series of meetings for the promotion of holiness was held last week in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, under the presidency of Dr. Crawford Johnson. Addresses were delivered by Rev. S. Chadwick, of Leeds; Dr. Wood, of Southampton; and Miss Wakefield, of Portadown; and many were greatly refreshed.

Rev. Dr. Clark, of Boston, preached to large congregations in the Methodist church, Portadown, on Sunday week. At the evening service he sketched the rise and progress of the Christian Endeavour movement. At the close a consecration meeting was held, for which nearly the whole of the very large congregation present remained.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE fine new buildings of the Belfast Association are rapidly nearing completion, and will be opened early in January.

The Winchester Association has recently acquired new premises well adapted to its work and in a central part of the town.

The Chicago Association is doing a remarkable work, not only along spiritual lines, but in providing adequate means for almost every kind of useful instruction. During the past season 823 young men availed themselves of these educational privileges.

The Finsbury Park Bulletin this month devotes its front page to an "Open Letter" to young men on the advantages of the Association. On Tuesday, 20th, Mr. Henry Conder, of Bombay, holds a social reception at the Association Rooms in Stroud Green-road.

The East Grinstead Association has entered new premises of its own, opened by Dr. Gatty, the president, and a very warm and generous friend of the work. A former member of Norwich Y.M.C.A., now connected with the Cape Town Association, was the means of starting the work a few years ago at East Grinstead.

A successful autumn conference of the Southern District Union was held at Southampton on the 8th inst. The business session in the morning was presided over by Mr. R. C. Hankinson, J.P., president of the local work. At the afternoon conference, Mr. George Page presiding, a paper was read by Mr. Frank Howe on "Strong and Weak Points in Y.M.C.A. Work." There was a public meeting in the evening, over which Dr. Aldridge presided.

Mr. Samuel Millar, secretary of the Mount-pottinger Association, has concluded a very successful mission at Sheffield. During each day he spoke to postmen in their sorting-room, policemen at their headquarters, and railway men at their depôts. On Saturday and Sunday three large meetings were addressed at the same Association by General Sir Robert Phayre. Sixty-five sermons to young men are already promised in Sheffield in connection with the observance there of the Y.M.C.A. week of prayer.

The South of Ireland District Union held its annual conference at Limerick on the 6th and 7th inst. The Bishop of Killaloe welcomed the conference at his residence, and in the course of an earnest address upon the importance of reality in regard to Christian profession spoke in terms of warm appreciation of efforts for the moral and spiritual uplifting of young men. Large public meetings were held on the succeeding evenings at the Haverghal Hall, Limerick, presided over by Canon Gregg. These meetings were of a most inspiring character.

The annual distribution of prizes to the members of the various clubs and societies in connection with the Association was made by Sir W. H. Houldsworth, M.P., who said he was convinced that the institution was doing a remarkably good work amongst the young men of the city. Although in membership it did not progress as he should like it to do, he certainly thought that its benefits, moral, intellectual and physical, were as great as at any period of its history. Other institutions had been started since it was founded in 1846, and it therefore had not now the field entirely to itself. Still, he was certain that its usefulness was as great as ever.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE annual tea in connection with the Broughty Ferry branch was held on the 2nd inst.

At the invitation of Mrs. Betts, of East Hill, Ashford, the members of the local Y.W.C.A., to the number of 100, were entertained at a social tea and conversazione.

The opening Saturday afternoon work meeting of the Longforgan branch was held on the 3rd inst., under the presidency of Mrs. Armitstead, when a large number of members was enrolled.

The Lady Havelock branch of the Y.W.C.A., which holds its meetings at the West-end Lecture Hall, celebrated the commencement of its eleventh season by a public meeting, held on the 7th inst., presided over by Mr. Clement B. Broad.

A series of weekly mission services will commence October 15, at 8.30, at the Central Institute, 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square. The meeting this week will be conducted by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, and next week, October 22, by Rev. E. A. Stuart.

The speakers at the "Quiet Days" this year were Colonel Oldham and Mrs. Penn Lewis. At the evening meetings the members formed the greater part of the audience, and the last one, when Mrs. Penn Lewis dwelt on the different traits in Christ's character, will long be remembered.

The monthly missionary meeting of the united branches of the Bessbrook Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. was held on the 30th ult., and was largely attended. Mr. Samuel Giddis took the chair. Miss Jowle gave an interesting account of the life of Allan Gardiner, who was a missionary to the natives of Tierra del Fuego.

Christian Endeavour.

The South Carolina Union has undertaken as its particular work the formation of C.E. societies in all the institutions of learning in the State.

A Germantown, Penn., society visited a Philadelphia rescue mission, where were present 500 persons, and each Endeavourer did personal work.

Rev. W. S. Houghton held a special service of Sunday week in celebration of the third anniversary of the Endeavour Society connected with the church at Edgbaston.

Seventy-five thousand bouquets of flowers were sent to the Chicago Flower Mission this year by Iowa C.E. societies. One junior society alone within four months sent 1200 bouquets.

Every Sunday evening the Calvary Society of San Francisco holds an open-air meeting prior to its regular service. At the same time it distributes good literature in the public plaza opposite the church.

The cause of Armenia has aroused remarkable interest among American C.E. societies since the Washington convention. The Endeavourers of one church at a single meeting contributed 50 dols. toward relief work.

Slavery in Zanzibar.—The Society of Friends has sent an address to Lord Salisbury, respecting the long-promised emancipation of the slaves in the British Protectorate of Zanzibar, emphatically protesting against any system of gradual emancipation, and would urge the immediate abolition of the legal status of slavery, as has been done in India and in many other British protectorates.

The "One Tun" Mission, with which Mrs. Baker-Harrison was so long and closely associated, gives in its new report an encouraging account of the work. The Sunday-school suffers from a lack of teachers, while the number of the children steadily increases. The various agencies and meetings for young and old have been vigorously maintained and, followed by indications of blessing. The hon. sec. is Mr. A. J. Woodhouse, Helenslea, Child's Hill, N.W.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE increase of matter coming before us for insertion obliges us to beg our contributors to write as concisely as possible, and, as our circulation is world-wide rather than local, to omit features of solely local interest.

That the hearts of the English people have been stirred by the Turkish atrocities has become evident by the numerous meetings held during the past few weeks all over the country. These, again, may be regarded as focussed in the great demonstration on Monday night, when St. James's Hall was crowded, when the municipal life of the land was represented, and when leaders of every section of religious thought and action were to the front. The speakers rose to the occasion, not one unworthy note was heard, and the demand for immediate action to put an end to the reign of terror was clear and unflinching. We trust the result will be seen in some relief to the outraged Armenians.

The Licensing Committee of the London County Council met last week to consider the applications for music-hall licences. In spite of a considerable body of evidence adduced by the National Vigilance Committee and the Purity Branch of the B.W.T.A. as to several objectionable features either upon the stage or in the auditorium (or both) of some of the West-end halls, the Committee decided to recommend renewal in each case. The evidence was declared to have been overstated; possibly it was. It is better to claim less and get it, than to demand too much and lose all. Nevertheless, the friends of purity and morality must not be discouraged from going on with such inspection. They encountered a good deal of railery from men who were paid to defend the halls, but that is inevitable. This is part of the cross. They are doing a work which must have its effect. The halls would be much worse than they are if there was no dread of such visitors, and it is well that the public which does not frequent such places should know from perfectly reliable witnesses what is going on.

The objection made by some of the daily papers to the purification of our places of amusement, on the ground that it would only tend to drive the evil out of sight, is both shallow and immoral. It ignores the great principle that—

The sight to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done, and the still greater principle that public decency can never be anything but a help to private purity. As usual, The Daily Telegraph stands out conspicuously for its cynical and bitter abuse of those whose one aim is to make places of amusement as harmless to public morals as possible. By scornful vituperation, cheap alliteration, and unfair deductions, it bolsters up a system which, as at present conducted, ministers largely to the prostitution of the city. Yet, strangely enough, towards the close of the article, it acknowledges the existence of elements of "bad taste" and an unsatisfactory "residuum," expressed in other guarded and euphonious epithets, which are

An undeniable blemish on the general character of these entertainments, [and which tend to] bore and disgust a certain portion, even if it be only a minority, of the audience.

This is a justification for all the objections raised before the Licensing Committee, all the more cogent because of the reluctant way in which the warning to music-hall managers is given.

One wonders often at the slowness with which nations move on any great human question, at their apathy towards the suffering, at their selfishness, at their unwillingness to make an effort. The freedom of the Negroes and the reforms of Lord Shaftesbury may be cited as instances, while the case of the Armenians is an illustration of to-day. What is the cause? Is it not that the nations allow their hearts to be eaten away by carnal pleasures, or have them so choked with worldly cares that they cannot feel? Evil things go on unchecked from year to year, and then comes a catastrophe which compels attention. When it is remembered that all over Europe a white slave trade is carried on, and that in London girls are consigned to certain markets elsewhere, is there any wonder that our hearts are eaten out of us? Many persons must be directly and indirectly involved in such a nefarious traffic, and the deadly influence of their lives must be a pestilence.

One of the effects of the Education Act has been to lead the wives of artisans, with a pardonable but fatally mistaken pride, to wish their boys to get their living "without taking their coats off." They think the counting-house to be the first step in advance, and instead of the boy learning a useful trade he becomes a clerk, without technical knowledge of anything. The Times many years ago pointed out that the knowledge of a handicraft often makes the difference between a living and starvation.

A skilled and reliable mechanic can always earn his bread abroad, if not at home; but for mere clerks, uninstructed in any particular business, there is little demand anywhere. There are thousands of young men without any useful future in this world, because their parents allowed them to pass their teens without learning the use of their fingers. Take care that your boys do not grow up Jacks-of-all-trades and masters of none; men who can turn their hands to anything, but can do nothing thoroughly; drifting into everything by turns, but continuing in nothing long.

Do not throw upon your boys the responsibility of choosing what they will be. A parent ought to know his child better than the child knows himself. "Train up a child according to the tenor of his way." Watch his tastes and abilities as they develop and expand; assist and encourage him in the cultivation of the special talents which God has given him. Seek to learn from God the path in which He hath fore-ordained that your boy or girl should walk; and pray to be made a fellow-labourer with God in educating and educating, in training, and restraining, and constraining the qualifications and capabilities with which God has endowed your child. Teach them the dignity of labour. Bring them up from infancy in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. And when they are old they will not depart from it.

The new woman has come to stay if she will be a true woman. To retain her newly-acquired position she must be womanly. A mannish woman is as unnatural as a womanish man. Of the ideal woman one poet has said—

Her voice was always soft, gentle and low,
An excellent thing in a woman.

All the foundations of the earth are out of course; and when Baraks shrink back, Deborahs must lead. But let them guard against the tendency and temptation to become unfeminine in tone and manner. Dear Deborah, don't try to put on the man. Men will give honour to the weaker vessel, but if she assumes the airs of a strong man she will be treated accordingly. Ladies standing in the gangway of a tram-car while gentlemen keep their seats is not a pleasant sign of the times.

While writing these notes we find the following in the daily press:—

An amusing scene was witnessed in a tramcar running from Highgate Archway to Moorgate-street the other morning. On nearing the Nag's Head, the car was quite full, when it was boarded by a young lady of severe aspect, with short hair, and wearing a gold pince-nez. A gentleman in the car offered her his seat, but the lady declined, saying, "Indeed, no; this so-called politeness on the part of mankind is only the gilding of our chains; they are polite because they think women inferior to them. If they looked upon us as their equals these stupid gallantries would cease." The gentleman seemed surprised at the rebuff, and the other passengers smiled, while the strong-minded young lady stood.

It seems scarcely credible that any lady could be so supercilious and so silly. But others are likely to suffer from her folly.

Among many other letters contributed to the Press by lady correspondents upon this incident, the following is as sensible as it is courteous:—

Those of us who have to battle with the world, and journey to and from town every day, are deeply grieved that one of our sisters should call down on us the pitying smile of those men to whom one voice is as the voice of all. Knowing the mind of many of my sex, I can truly say that we do appreciate greatly the many kindly courtesies shown to us in train, tram, and 'bus alike by men in all stations in life, as frequently by working-men as others, and at times we feel compunction at taking the seat of a worker perhaps more weary than ourselves.

We wonder what useful result Prebendary Denison, vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Kensington, anticipates from the new "ecclesiastical experiment" of a men's club attached to the church, which is described in the Press as follows:—

A spacious skittle-alley adjoins the room for boxing, and the billiard-room has a fine, full-sized table. At the bar, already fully equipped, the beer is laid on, and close by the taps is a fine hot-water urn. Coffee was at one time mentioned in connection with this, but the Rev. Mr. Butcher, curate-in-charge, was of opinion that there might be little demand for that, and that hot water would be more serviceable. On the next floor is a reading-room, and a large, well-arranged concert-room with stage and footlights and good dressing-room accommodation.

"And the entertainments?" queried the reporter: "These to some extent are in abeyance, as the County Council must be approached about the licence. There will, at an early date, however, be smoking concerts, etc. I have been approached as to the opening of the club at six on Sunday evenings. As a Churchman, however, I am bound to uphold the evening service, and cannot see my way to opening a counter-attraction during the service hours. At 8 o'clock, when service is over, the club will be ready for the members. We can't afford to let them play for nothing, but I have told the men that if they can obtain a repeal of the law prohibiting acceptance of payment for games on Sunday, I shall be only too pleased to give them access to the billiard-room and skittle-alley."

A bare statement of these facts is enough to startle and shock all those who would preserve the Lord's day from wholesale desecration. A determined attempt is being made by secularists and others to avowedly continentalise our Sunday. This is a frank and open movement, and can be gauged as such. But for clergymen to join the forces of religion with those of the world to attain the same end is a prospect which cannot be viewed without alarm. How many of the men who attend the club on a Sunday night will have attended the evening service? And if they have done so, how will its effect be aided by drinking and playing skittles for the rest of the evening? "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

There was some straight and useful speaking at the Church Congress on "modern society." Dean Hole turned into amusing ridicule the "impossible" novel, and scattered as with fire the "lascivious and profane novel." Canon Ainger was as pointed in treating of the novel which parades itself as the champion of religion and morality against a godless age, and attracts its readers by spurious sentiment and philosophy. He believes that the old domestic purities, charities, and reverences are relaxed, and such decadence is reflected in books. He thinks that the remedy lies in the influence of true Christian doctrine. Doubtless a change for the better will come as the taste and tone of society are indirectly affected by the action of the Gospel upon individual hearts. We regret to notice that keen as Dean Hole was upon the bad novel, he pleaded for the theatre—of course, the good one. Unfortunately the theatre is largely responsible for a good deal of the bad tone which again is reflected in novels and society papers.

Whilst the terrible "Madras Famine" was raging some twenty years ago, Sir Arthur Cotton was insistent that only by greatly increased railway and canal accommodation, so as to carry food from the land of plenty to the land of famine, could these recurring calamities be prevented. It is satisfactory to observe that, although scarcity is anticipated over a large portion of India, the Government hopes, by means of railways and canals, to be able to pour enough food into the afflicted districts to prevent "any acute famine." Wheat can be imported from California and other countries. Sir Arthur Cotton, we believe, would say that if irrigation were sufficiently carried out even importation would not be required. But we are thankful meanwhile for what we have.

The situation in Madagascar is full of interest. On one side is disaster, confusion, violence, loss of property, and cessation of work; whilst worse than all are the machinations of the Jesuits. On the other side the French Evangelicals are coming to the aid of the L.M.S.; the authorities are both amazed and delighted with the work that has been done, and are persuaded that the English missionaries have no political ends to serve. Frenchmen are learning that all Englishmen are not perfidious and selfish. This will be no small gain to the forces that make for peace nearer home.

Mr. Thomas Drapes expresses in The Fortnightly Review the opinion that lunacy, now so prevalent, will not be abated until the general public does its duty by regarding drunkenness, from which so much lunacy springs, "as an act of immorality." It is nominally held so, but not so in practice. It is a thing to smile at, wink at, excuse, condone. Anything but a vice. He would have it put in the same category as theft. Unfortunately theft also, if large enough and successful enough, is not a sin with man. But Mr. Drapes is undoubtedly on the right line. It is a true moral judgment that we need, out of which will come a true moral conduct, which will be the cause of sounder health, both of mind and body.

Kind-hearted people who indulge in alms to street mendicants would do well to study some facts provided by the London Mendicity Society regarding these beggars. In an interview with a representative of the Echo, the secretary, Mr. Eric A. Buchanan, states that in a wide experience he has scarcely ever found a deserving street beggar. The babies and little children with them are usually hired. The mother is given sixpence a day for them, and the little ones are often ill-treated to give them a sufficiently ill-used appearance. Really deserving and unfortunate people will not beg in the street. There is also a large army of begging-letter writers. Most of these epistles are written by "professionals," of whom there are about 500 in London, who live on the charitable by this means. This has been reduced to a fine art, and the ingenuity and craft exhibited in their composition is wonderful. It is a shock to hear that some of these social parasites "live in expensive houses, keep their servants, and indulge in luxury and display," and that even bona fide certificates and documents are doctored to serve the purposes of deception.

Many people find it easier to be rid of the sight of apparent suffering, by bestowing alms thoughtlessly, than to take the trouble to inquire into the deserts of those who appeal to them; but it has often been proved that indiscriminate giving is not a blessing but a curse to society. It puts a premium on deception, and encourages the idle and the thriftless to live on the gifts that ought to find their way into the hands of the deserving poor and unfortunate. There is no efficient remedy for this evil except a determination on the part of those who are blessed with kind hearts and means of help not to bestow money without making adequate inquiry, either personally or (often better) by an experienced deputy.

We heard lately of a millionaire who confessed that doing good with his money was an unknown art; he had never learned how to give; he had only studied how to invest it. Thus his money made money, which brought no advantage to himself, nor pleasure or relief to others. Giving is an essential part of Christian education. A testing crisis in a man's life comes when he begins to find his means increasing beyond his needs. It is right that he should make suitable provision for his family. Beyond that, will he hoard or give? If the former, he will become hard and selfish; if the latter, generous and kind. He may gain the world and lose his soul; or he may count all else dung and loss, and lay hold on eternal life.

"The Powers of the world," wrote Coleridge in his 'Aids to Reflection,' "are often christened, but seldom Christianised. They are but proselytes of the outer gate; or, like the Saxons of old, enter the land as auxiliaries, and remain in it as conquerors and lords."

These apt words represent a frequent tragedy in the spiritual life. Both in business and in pleasure, in the individual and in the Church, alliance is made with certain worldly forces and influences. It is all done with good intention; but often it ends in utter disaster. Friendships with worldly men are entered into possibly with a sincere desire to help them; questionable business ways and methods are adopted with a view to some unselfish result; habits of ease and pleasure are indulged in with a simple intention to benefit the health or relax the mind. All goes on well for a time; but in the end the means have defeated the end; and the master turns into a victim. It is best to keep a clear path at all costs, and avoid compromise or alliance with doubtful things. The narrow way is the way of safety in the end.

An Editorial Reply.

WE have not obtruded our convictions as to Baptism and the Lord's Supper upon our readers, for this reason: we have felt it more important to insist upon the truths of the Gospel, than upon the ordinances or symbols which set them forth. We are convinced that many profess, or intellectually hold, beliefs which little influence their lives; and that, on the other hand, many are profoundly influenced by truths of which they disregard the outward symbols; e.g. the Friends regard both baptism and the Lord's Supper only in a spiritual sense, or as abrogated Jewish rites. We think that in their Scriptural forms they are "outward and visible signs of inward and spiritual grace."

We believe that the consciences of Christians are very diversely exercised. Some are stirred with respect to principles or practices which never seem to be pressed upon others. We cannot judge their consciences by our own, and we are expressly prohibited from judging our fellow-servants. Education, association, tradition, affection, reverence for parents, or pastors, or teachers, or others, influence to some extent all of us, veiling our eyes to one line of truth, and leading us to attach disproportionate importance to another. But while this is to be confessed and lamented, each stands or falls to his own Master; and if we judge others by our own convictions, we may condemn those of whom the Master may be saying, "Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand."

In the words of a correspondent, "THE CHRISTIAN has hitherto taken a broad view of controversial subjects which are not vital doctrines of faith." This has not been accidental, but the necessary result of the convictions above expressed, which deepen as we grow older; and which we trust and believe will continue to be the principles on which this paper will be conducted, when we shall have ceased to edit it.

The Safety of Faith.

THE last words that Christ spoke on earth before He was received up into heaven are these: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; and they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." The fulfilment of the most of these promises is to be found in the Acts of the Apostles.

It is usually said that the age of miracles is past, and was never meant to continue beyond the first establishment of the Church. Browning urges that miracles are now no longer required, because they have served the purpose for which they were given. When you sow a plot in a garden you stick twigs round it, that no careless person may tread down and destroy the young and yet unseen plant, but when the plants have themselves become as tall and visible as the twigs, then they are useless. So if the miracles actually helped the young Church's growth, she by their means has become sufficiently visible and sufficiently well understood to need them no more. But what we want to show is that this great eternal promise of Christ is as bright to-day as it was in that fresh morning when our Lord passed within the veil. It is not contended that the power of faith is now mighty over the serpents which the hands can handle, or sickness which wastes the human frame. But faith has still power over the serpents of the soul, the sickness of the heart and mind. And the conversion and preservation in grace of every saved person is a sign and a wonder as great as the raising of the dead. The renewal of every saint is as great a marvel as the casting out of a demon, or the healing of a sick man, or the speaking with new tongues.

When we translate Christ's promise into the language of our every-day life, we get the doctrine of the safety and helpfulness of faith. The safety which Christ offers is not a safety that results from the avoidance of deadly things, but by the neutralizing of them through a higher and stronger power. There is no such idle promise made as that if a man believes in Christ a wall shall be built round his life, so that the things out of which the soul makes sin cannot come to him. God has not seen fit to deprive sinful things of their attractiveness, nor to disarm the great enemy of his fiery darts. This would be fighting the battle, and gaining the victory without us, and there could be no perfected purity, no established character, no conqueror's crown. But Christ undertakes to keep his people safe from the deadly things that surround them, by enabling them to live and believe and work for Him. Only those temptations which we encounter in the path of duty, in the path of consecrated service, only those has Christ promised that we shall conquer.

This principle admits of an infinite variety of application. It is sometimes asked if it be safe for a man to venture into society where there are many forms of temptation. Much depends on his spiritual vitality and his purpose in going there. It is the low system, the constitution that is broken down and depressed in tone, that catches the contagion. The strong healthy man walks past the house where the disease is rioting, and his healthy vitality flings the distemper back. And a deep living sense of Christ is the true vitality of the soul, which enables it to fling off sin as health throws off disease. But it would be unwise even for a healthy man to venture into a house where disease is rioting unless duty calls him there. It would be equally unwise of a Christian man to rush into places of temptation for no higher purpose than curiosity.

It is only when we are about some higher task, only when they meet us as accidents in the service of Christ, that we have a right deliberately to encounter temptation and claim the promise of Christ. If we have a strong, well-defined life in Christ, and a genuine purpose in seeking to heal and help men, we may safely face the evil with which we seek to deal. When we are possessed by the life of Christ and the purpose of Christ, the world for us in vain may mix its poisons.

Two men read a sceptical book. It is a book of poison; but the effect depends upon what sort of life a man brings to meet the poison. If a man has no spiritual life in him and no definite religious purpose, his soul will be poisoned through and through by the scepticism which he drinks in. If a man has a genuine life in Christ and a mind educated by the Word and Spirit of God, he will rise up from a study of that book with a deeper faith and an increased knowledge of the difficulties of those whom he desires to help.

Christ's promise, then, in its general application for all time, is that the man who, by faith in Him, has life is the safe man. But that is not all. The safe man lives a consecrated life in seeking to help other men. No man is really so secure that the world will not harm him, unless there is going out from him a living and life-giving influence to others. And no man is really helping other men unless there is true life in his own soul. Men have tried to be safe without being helpful, and they have neither preserved the purity of the Christian faith nor their own souls from the power of temptation. This was the error that originally carried men and women into remote deserts, and finally built up monasteries and instituted vows of celibacy or single life. It was to get away from the world and have nothing to think of but God, and to present the soul pure to Him. Such a withdrawal must always be impossible for the mass of men, and it is in direct opposition to the example of Christ, and to the spirit of the Gospel. The Lord Jesus Christ mingled with men all through his own life, and touched them in every relation of theirs. And his people are left in the open world, to deal with the facts and duties of life, and everywhere are expected to work out his purpose.

Christ has left his people in the world to be engaged in its business, to suffer under its trials, to be exposed to its temptations. They must not only have a vigorous life, but so carry the Spirit of Christ into all their work that they shall be lights in the world. If the world and its business are ever to be put right, and cleared of the frightful frauds and robberies that threaten the very ruin of society, where is the stand to be made, if not by those who have lifted up their hands to God and said, "We are his witnesses"? The people of God must not merely resist evil by the power of life, but so express that life in helping others, that they shall subdue the evil around them. Wherever there is true life it is life-giving. The brave and godly boy among a group of boys just learning to be proud of their ungodliness—the man of golden principles among the sceptics of the street—the true penitent rejoicing in Christ, these bear their testimony of life, and so make life about them.

This is the way that believers lay their hands on the sick in sin, and through God's grace they are healed. The man who is full of spiritual life is giving life and help to other lives that he may touch. In his presence, the frivolous grow serious, the mean are led into generosity, and sinners are ashamed of their sins. There have always been such men in the world; men who are the light of the world, the salt of the earth, and living epistles of Christ, known and read everywhere.

GOD.

IN order to communion between two kindred beings there must be mutual knowledge of each other. God knows us thoroughly. "There is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether." Our communion with God will increase as our knowledge of Him increases. His complaint of his people is that they do not know Him. "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know Me, my people doth not consider Me." On the other hand, Jesus says, "This is life eternal, that they may know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

Just as the seven colours are component parts of the light, which is white, so all the Divine attributes are the component parts of the Love which God is. The soul assured of this has unqualified confidence in God. It is impossible for such a soul to doubt or question his love, his righteousness, his wisdom, or his power. His words and acts may be far beyond our understanding, but we know they are righteous because we know that God is right. Therefore Luther said, "Let God be God." So Abraham appeals to the nature of things: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right!" It is not so much a question as an exclamation. So Elihu asks a question which needs no answer, to which only one answer is possible: "Shall he that hateth right govern?" another appeal to the nature and necessity of things. And the Apostle repeats it after 2000 years: "Is God unrighteous Who taketh vengeance? How then shall God judge the world?" It would be as absurd to suppose that an unrighteous being could judge the world, as that a being ignorant of weight and measure and number could create the stars or control their motions, or ordain the dispensations of human history or the ages of eternity.

God could never have done in the eternal past any other than He did; nor in the eternal future will it be possible for Him to do other than He will do. With God there is no alternative, for there is only one solution of any problem, only one right course of action under any circumstances. The direct path between two points is a straight line, a right line; that, and no other, God, because He is God, must take. There will be no question of the righteousness of his decrees, as there never has been and never will be any question of the judgment of Solomon, when he touched the springs of nature, and without witnesses or jury declared the true mother of the living child.

Let the soul be firmly rooted in these great truths, and it will not be blown about by every or any wind of doctrine as to God's judgment when He sits on the great white throne. Each will go to his own place. Every saint and every sinner to his own appropriate and appointed place. And as there has never been a sane man who has questioned the judgment of Solomon, so neither on the earth, nor above the earth, nor under the earth, will there be man or angel or demon who will not confess, "True and righteous are thy judgments, Lord God Almighty." The Gospel for the Age.

By PROF. J. CASTELL-EVANS.*

TO the world Paul at Athens will ever seem to have been Paul at his best; but to the Christian I am afraid he will ever appear as Paul the erudite and eloquent rather than as the great apostle. How his scholarly instincts must have thrilled and glowed as day by day he discussed the deep meanings of the law and the prophets with his devout fellow-Israelites in the synagogue! What rapture to sway the multitudes in the Agora with an impassioned eloquence scarcely equalled by their own Demosthenes! And, finally, what a grand triumph of logical acumen on Mars Hill, which left the keenest minds and wittiest tongues in Greece with no better reply than foolish mockery, or an evasive promise of a future encounter! But what a meagre harvest—"Howbeit certain men clave unto him and believed," and that was all! No church planted at Athens. No fountain of light and love within the shadow of the Acropolis. No perennial rill of the water of life flowing through that thirsty market-place. No; nothing but the great Christian general's solitary defeat. Perhaps, after all, it was Paul's grandest triumph: his hardest victory over self.

Leaving Athens, and arriving at Corinth, as he looked at the throng, his mind was at once and for all made up; erudition, logic, knowledge of Jewish customs and Grecian science were firmly relegated to very subordinate positions, and he resolutely determined to know nothing—see nothing at Corinth save the Christ and Him crucified. The Jew might clamour for a sign from heaven, the Greek might demand polished phrases and scientific attainments, the rich might seek for pleasure and the poor crave for daily bread, he would have but

ONE GOSPEL FOR EACH AND ALL

—the simple pathetic Gospel of the Cross of Calvary. And in Corinth—the most disreputable and lascivious city of the age, and from men and women guilty of sins not even named among the heathen—a church was built which long afterwards received from Paul himself the certificate that it "fell behind in no gift," whose faith "stood not in the wisdom of men but in the power of God."

And from that day to this, where there has been any true success it has been the Gospel of the crucified Christ that has succeeded. Dogmas and creeds, forms and ceremonies, priestcraft and ecclesiastical policy, have over and over again hidden the Cross and the Christ from view, have blighted and cursed humanity with their cold shades and their weary barrenness, have reared and nourished moral iniquity and civil oppression; until a Luther or a Knox, a Wesley or a Whitefield, has been raised by the grace of God to lift on high the crimsoned banner of the Cross, and thus again bring life and immortality to light. Whatever of moral improvement, of mental development, or of civil liberty and national righteousness has been attained by and for mankind within the last nineteen centuries, it is all, directly or indirectly, owing to that humble carpenter from Nazareth and his death on the Cross on that never-to-be-forgotten Friday afternoon.

His pierced hands have wrought the marvels,
Snapped the fetters of the slave,
Crushed the sceptre of the tyrant,
Blessed the life his Father gave.
He hath made our earth an Eden,
Full of light and full of love;
Day by day He makes it holier
More and more like heaven above.

But, alas and alas! Christians of this fin de siècle day think themselves wiser than Paul and all his true successors, and talk glibly—and to my mind flippantly—of "suiting the Gospel to the age"! With quite as much reason might you suggest trimming the sturdy Andes and the mighty Himalayas, like the sails of a child's toy boat, to the capricious breezes of a summer day! This age, and all the ages of time and eternity, have to suit themselves to the Gospel; and we, as preachers and teachers, have to tell our age and generation, faithfully and fearlessly, that the everlasting truth of God is unalterable, and cannot adapt itself to the caprices of any age or class. We want no apologies for the New Testament message, no toning down of its denunciations, no compromise, and not one tittle of mitigation of its most rigid demands. Our Christ is King, and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and every man and woman who professes to serve our King must be strictly, sternly, loyal to Him.

Let me not be misunderstood; get all the knowledge you can possibly lay hold of—study everything if you can find time; know all that can be known about the mightiest sun and the tiniest atom.

A teacher who is not a learner, a preacher who is not a student, has no room in the economy of the world or of the Church; he is that never has been, and never will be, of the slightest possible use in any part of God's universe. A sermon or a Sunday-school lesson that has cost one nothing is barely worth what it cost; and it is a gross insult to our audience and to our Lord ever to deliver such.

But do not think that useful knowledge can only be got from books: the best knowledge is never got from books—not even from "the Book" itself. When you stand up to preach, never be content merely to be able to give chapter and verse for your doctrine, but see that on every point you can say with Paul, "I have received of the Lord that which I deliver unto you." Jesus Christ is the best of all teachers; walk with Him, sit at his feet, lean upon his bosom and learn of Him; and then what you have heard of Him, what you have seen with your eyes, what you have looked upon, what your hands have handled of the Word of Life, that and that only, declare unto the people.

There is always the danger that we may be tempted to preach many things other than Christ, and do it, too, with a very conscientious conviction that we are serving God. All manner of things, from party politics up to natural science, have been and are ever being preached by most excellent and devoted Christians, firmly impressed that they are preaching the one thing needed for the elevation of humanity to its God-given standard. Many a time has it been my lot to listen with pleasure and admiration to some of the brightest intellects of our day, descending from Christian pulpits on social topics or scientific truths with an erudition that astounded, and an eloquence that held their hearers spellbound; and when their magic tones were hushed, and the mind was free from the glamour of their eloquence and power, one has felt very Mary-like, the tears have welled up, and the yearning, hungry soul has wailed forth, "They have and I know not where they have laid Him."

Better for the hungry child of God—better for the patient soul—better, a million times better, for the unrepentant sinner, is one syllable of Calvary than whole encyclopædias of science. By all means let social questions, national and international politics, be freely and fearlessly discussed from our pulpits; but never let them hide the Christ; let his voice be heard and his form be seen through them all, and above them all; let the congregations go their way thinking more of Christ than of the preacher, more of salvation than of politics; let there be more religion in politics and less politics in religion. Remember, too, that neither the leisure nor the ability is given to everyone to master the intricacies of political science, or to penetrate into the deep mysteries of Nature-lore; but everyone, by God's grace, can be made wise unto salvation and wise in salvation also.

Poor uncouth Billy Bray would have been a horrid failure if he had tried to discuss science, history, or politics; probably on every point his information was more defective than his grammar. Yet what a mighty power he had! I have heard him in his broad Cornish tell the story of the Cross—talk of his walks with God, and his communings with the Master, in such a way that educated and uneducated alike forgot everything except the Christ about whom he was speaking; the queerly clad figure vanished and we saw the form of one like unto the Son of God; we lost the tones of the West-country miner, and heard, as some of us never heard before, the voice of Him who said, "Come unto Me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The voices of some of the fiery old Welsh preachers which I heard in my boyhood, and which for over thirty years have been hushed in death, ever and anon ring in my ears like silver clarions, recalling scenes and gatherings precious and dearly loved because of the Master's presence and power in our midst. What was it that gave these uneducated peasants their marvellous power? Uneducated, did I say? Nay, they were thoroughly educated in the one thing needful—graduated in high honours in God's own university.

THE SECRET OF THEIR POWER

and of the marvellous success attending their preaching lay in the fact that they had been with Christ, and learnt of Him; they knew Christ better than they knew their own families, and they just told what they knew. Their words flashed forth bright and glowing from hearts where love to God burned with an unquenchable flame. Then, let the Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after science; we will preach a crucified Christ, and He will ever prove to be the Wisdom and the Power of God.

The Free Churches.

REV. H. P. HUGHES presided at a meeting in the Memorial Hall of the Executive of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, when arrangements for public meetings to be held in 130 centres in various parts of the kingdom before the end of this year were reported. Among these is a conference of all the local councils for Lancashire and Cheshire, with a view to their consolidation; to be held in the Central Hall, Manchester, on the 28th inst. The services of Rev. George Jackson, of Edinburgh, have been secured for the evening meeting. At the afternoon conference Rev. Dr. Mackennal and others are to take part.

The Nottingham Nonconformist Council are arranging for a series of meetings in eight of the villages in the vicinity of Nottingham for the exposition of Free Church principles and for the strengthening of village Nonconformity. Among other arrangements, a united evangelistic mission is to be held in November. The town has been divided into eleven districts, and a church in each district chosen as the centre for the mission in that neighbourhood. The missionaries who will take part will include Revs. F. C. Spurr, F. B. Meyer, J. Flanagan, Thomas Waugh, W. Y. Fullerton, and H. Shaw.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says:—"The Catechism is finding its way back into Nonconforming Sunday-schools. The Council of the Evangelical Free Churches has appointed a special committee to prepare one; in the meantime the Wesleyan Book Committee has, in accordance with the resolutions of Conference, prepared a shorter catechism for the use of young people connected with that denomination. It can be said almost to err on the side of brevity, for it only consists of twenty-five questions. The demand for catechetical teaching is a sign of the times, a distinct return to the methods of former days."

Stores Prayer Union.—The fourth annual meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., on Tuesday week. The report of the year's work, pointed out the steady progress made, the attendance being slightly increased at the regular weekly meetings. The chairman, Mr. J. E. Bignall (sec. C.S.S.A.L.), remarked that he was pleased that the Union had reached its fourth anniversary, and that its position was so good, and its progress steady but sure. Addresses followed by Rev. H. Grainger, and Mr. H. Kydd.

THE South Africa General Mission, which has for some time been conducting a native mission and school in a hall in Jeppestown, have lately branched out into more aggressive work among the natives in the compounds. Several deaconesses, who have been studying Zulu for some months, and Mr. Palmer-Jones, visit and hold services in various compounds assisted by an interpreter.

There are other consecrated souls working independently of any society. Amongst them, Brother Mundell, formerly of the Gordon Memorial Mission, is specially active. Engaged in business till noon every day, he devotes his afternoons to evangelistic work over a wide area, searching out the little groups which other agencies do not touch.

Our own small corner is widening and we are now able on each Lord's Day to have services in six or seven different compounds in Zulu or Sesuto. We only seem to touch the fringes of the crowds in each of these compounds. We hope to reach the hearts of some of the wild ones, who will not lend us their ears to preach to, through the eyes, as they are very fond of pictures. We have imported a choice selection of pictures representing the life of our Lord and his teachings.

The Prohibition Law has passed both Volksraads, and we return thanks to our Master first, and also to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who helped to the result by their prayers.

ENCOURAGING INCIDENTS.

When in Natal lately we were greatly encouraged by the following incidents. A relative asked us to speak a few words of encouragement to the kitchen-boy. Said she: "I think he is converted!" She supported her statement thus: "He is so different. He has always been cross-grained and short-tempered before, but now he is so obliging and bright, and goes about humming hymns as happy as a bird. On questioning the boy he replied with a glad smile. There was no doubt, or hesitation, or false humility, about his testimony. He had been converted in the Free Church of Scotland Mission (pastor, Rev. John Bruce), Pietermaritzburg, Natal. He went on to tell us that there was a blessed spirit of inquiry abroad amongst the natives on the farm on which he lived in Weenen County, Natal, and that they were anxious to have a teacher.

As the farm belonged to another relative of ours, and we were going into the vicinity to inspect a property we had lately bought for mission purposes, we asked permission to visit the farm in question. Imagine our delight to find that two native youths had already erected the walls of a building 25 feet long by 12 broad. The walls are of blue whinstone set in mortar. The thatch for the roof was stacked alongside, and had been cut and bound in bundles by women and girls who attended the services.

One of these youths, named Mahlatim, had been converted some years ago at Mr. Bruce's church, and had gone to Delagoa Bay with his employer, travelling on from there to Barberton, Pretoria, and Johannesburg. He was absent some years, and his parents, hearing nothing of him, had given him up as dead. When, however, he suddenly and unexpectedly turned up alive and well, his father readily assented to his request to have a little singing and prayer every morning. The strangeness of his return and conduct made him a marked man, and as the report spread abroad people began to come to see him. The little circle of singers and praying people grew until he felt he must begin to make some provision for their comfort; so he set to work and put up the building we saw. What pleased us most of all was the humble spirit in which he spoke of it all, referring to himself as "ubutakataka" (nothing at all), and expressing an earnest desire that a competent teacher might be sent to take over the work. The owner of the farm, although not resident on it, was so surprised and interested at our report that he voluntarily sent door, windows, and other necessities to help to complete the building, and has given his full consent to our locating a teacher and evangelist there.

In Durban a prominent business man asked us into his office to confer on the best means of placing facilities for education in the way of the natives employed in the stores and houses in that town. His own coach house had been cleaned out and converted into a school and preaching place through the zeal and love of his native nurse-girl.

In a certain Episcopalian church on the Berea, Durban, we had the joy of hearing the curate say, "God has been speaking to me so definitely about our not having any native work in connection with this church that if I get no support for it I must and will start it out of my own pocket." Before we left Durban the Lord had sent him nearly £200 towards it.

Now look at this contrast. Recently we went out with Mrs. Greig (a lady who for years has been working among the natives, and supporting herself at the same time) to call on the manager of a mine who had inhibited our evangelistic services on the company's property. "It's demoralising, sir, and I won't allow it!" "In what way?" "Do you see that mule? Well, you might as well read the Bible to it!" "But how would reading the Bible to it demoralise the mule?" "Others, who have been longer in the country than I, agree with me that it only demoralises them. My directors agree with me, and I won't have it." We could not get him further than that. The Lord will remove him from his position, we believe, before long. A. W. B.

Denying Self.

BIBLE READINGS BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

THE Bible-talk at St. Martin's Town-hall, Charing Cross, on Wednesday last week, was devoted to the consideration of self-denial as one of the grand essentials of discipleship. The hall was again crowded.

Mr. Brooke began by recalling his introductory exposition of the terms of discipleship laid down by our Lord in speaking to his disciples, to a mixed company, and to a great multitude.

The first condition that Christ should have the primary place in our affections and allegiance had been spoken of in the preceding lecture. The second condition is, "Let him deny himself" (Matt. xvi. 26). Our Lord demands self-denial. What does this mean? The term "to deny" is used in three senses—as in Matt. x. 33, a refusal to confess ownership or a lord; in Acts iii. 13 and 14, a rejection of the King; and in Tit. i. 16, a denial in action. These principles the speaker proceeded to apply with much point and force to the self-denial claimed by the Lord Jesus Christ, making this self-denial appear a much more intense, real, and practical thing than the mere abstinence from something, for a time perhaps, which many seem to suppose fulfils the condition of discipleship. The word denial means to refuse obedience; have we flatly refused to yield obedience to self? It means to disown a king—have we disowned the kingship and rule of self. It means something shown in action; have we (not in words merely) acted as those over whom self has no power? Until our self-denial fulfils these root ideas of the Word it cannot be said to be a genuine response to the claims of Christ.

In this way Mr. Brooke drew the sharpest possible distinction between merely denying ourselves something—say at Lent for a time—and that full and entire denial of self which Jesus demands from his followers. Answering an inquiry sent him, whether this is an act or a growth, he said that it is both—a definite act at a definite time to begin with, and a continuous attitude to be maintained throughout life.

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—As the Earl's Court Exhibition closes this week, Mr. William Forbes held his last tea-meeting for the female employes on Friday last, at St. Mary's Mission Hall. Brief addresses were given. Lately Mr. Forbes met one of these women, who has for several years been an evangelist.

The Armenian Troubles.

RELIEF WORK AT VAN.

IN his report of relief work during August, Rev. C. G. Reynolds, of the American Mission at Van, says:—

"The administrative department of this work has sustained a serious loss in the departure for America of Dr. Kimball, to whose enthusiasm and executive ability the work has owed its success from the beginning. The whole number of deaths at the time of the June massacre and as a result of it is put at 1215. Estimating the Armenian population of the city at 25,000, and counting one-quarter of this number as able-bodied males, or bread winners, it becomes evident that one-sixth of this class were sacrificed in the city. Taking the whole vilayet, and as far as reported, the number of killed and missing is 5322, of whom 4454 were from the class of bread winners, or nearly one-fifth in the vilayet. Statistics from some of the remoter districts are not yet in, and will considerably increase the proportion. The mere statement of this loss shows an immense increase in the need of help for the province. To appreciate the situation we must add to the account the immense loss of property which has taken place, and which is somewhat more difficult accurately to estimate. Hundreds of families who last year received assistance because they had nothing on which they could realise money to meet their needs have now lost the beds, copper vessels, and the rest of their very meagre supply of household utensils, as well as the roofs that covered them, and are lying on the bare floor in the houses of friends, and with almost nothing to cover them—a condition of affairs which the autumn nights will soon render intolerable. Hence it is evident that the need of help for the city of Van will be very greatly increased over that of last winter.

"The books show that upwards of 600,000 dollars was used in carrying on relief work in this province last year. With no larger contributions than this for the coming year it is evident that the amount of suffering must be much greater than last year. As compared with the pressing needs of the people, I am sure I am making a very modest request in urging a generous Christian public not to allow their gifts for this work to fall below this figure. As it is not yet evident what we may expect, and the present is the time when existence can be in some way prolonged, I am bringing the work down to a settled basis, pruning out all employes not absolutely essential, however needy they may be, cutting down wages to the lowest possible point, and reducing the number receiving free aid as far as possible. To continue work on this principle during the winter would require a steeling of heart and closing of ears to the cry of suffering fearful to contemplate, and which I trust may not be required."

Help for the sufferers in the Van district is received by Mrs. Cole, 3, Trebovir-road, Earl's Court, S.W., Treasurer of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund.

REFUGEES AT MARSEILLES.

DEAR SIR,—The refuge for the Armenians in Marseilles is in excellent and trustworthy hands, and in every way worthy of the public confidence and support. Anyone who can send clothing had best let it be of flannel, underclothing for men and women being most needed. Socks and stockings are in demand, and clothing, if in good repair, is most acceptable. Everything of this kind forwarded to the headquarters of the British Women's Temperance Association, Albany-buildings, 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W., care of Lady Henry Somerset, will be greatly appreciated. It is desired that all parcels should be accompanied by a letter, giving the address of the sender, that due acknowledgment may be made by post.—Yours sincerely,

The Priory, Reigate. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

DEMONSTRATION IN ST. JAMES'S HALL.

A crowded and enthusiastic meeting was held on Monday night at St. James's Hall, to protest against the Turkish atrocities and the ruthless massacres in Armenia. The Bishop of Rochester presided, and the speakers included Sir Arthur Arnold, the Bishop of Hereford, Dr. Welldon, Dr. Clifford, and Dr. Berry, while great cheering was evoked by the reading of an emphatically-worded letter from Mr. Gladstone.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 25.

"HOW THEN CAN MAN BE JUST WITH GOD?"—
Job xxv. 4 (R.V.).

THIS is the question of the ages. Man knows that he is as a worm, and worse. For no animal, however humble, has consciously and determinedly broken the law of God, and defiled its nature.

Our first effort is to go about to establish a righteousness of our own. Repeated failure only aggravates our misery and chagrin, till we fall helpless at the foot of Sinai. Our vows are broken, the law of God lies shivered around us, the thunders and lightnings make us afraid. Then God in the Person of Jesus comes to our help. First He meets and satisfies the demands of the broken law; and then produces in us that faith by which his finished work is applied to our conscience and heart. By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight, for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But we are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation. God is Himself the Justifier of the ungodly. "Whom He called, them He also justified." He takes off the filthy garments, and clothes us in change of raiment.

But the condition is faith. We must believe in Him who justifieth the ungodly. They who believe are justified from all things. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then, as we believe, we are adjusted with God's holy law, and receive into our hearts the blessed Lord, to be the source and spring of a new fountain of holy living.

MONDAY, October 26.

THESE ARE BUT THE OUTSKIRTS OF HIS WAYS: AND HOW SMALL A WHISPER DO WE HEAR OF HIM! BUT THE THUNDER OF HIS POWER WHO CAN UNDERSTAND?"—
Job xxvi. 14.

Job in thought passes through the universe. Sheol stands for the grave and the unseen world; Abaddon, for Satan, or for the great reservoirs in which the destructive agencies of creation have their home. With a marvellous anticipation of the conclusions of modern science, he speaks of the world as pendant in space. He passes to the confines of light and darkness, rides on the wings of the wind, discourses of the clouds, skims the mighty surface of the sea. All this, however, he deems as the outskirts of God's ways. It is but a whisper compared to the mighty thunder of his glory and power. If this is a whisper, what must the thunder be? If this universe is but a flower on the meadows of God's life, what must not God Himself be?

Perhaps we know something more of the thunder of his power than Job could, because we have stood beneath Calvary and seen Jesus die, and He is the wisdom and power of God; yea, we have witnessed the exceeding greatness of his power, according to the working of the strength of his might, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead.

Who of us can fathom or understand the power of God? But what a comfort to know that it is an attribute of his heart. God is not power, but He is love, and his love throbs through and commands his power. Be reverent when you kneel before the great and mighty God, but believe that He can do all things for your faith. A Nasmyth hammer can break a nutshell without crushing or touching the kernel.

"MY RIGHTEOUSNESS I HOLD FAST, AND WILL NOT LET IT GO."—Job xxvii. 6.

Job had an ideal and clung to it. Have you such? A vision of what you may be, and, by the grace of God, will aim at being. Bishop Westcott says:—"The vision of the ideal guards monotony of work from becoming monotony of life." Bitter indeed is life for those who have not seen the heavenly vision, or heard the calling upward of the voice that says, Come up hither. Any life looks more interesting and attractive when the light of our ideal falls on it, and we realise that every yard leads somewhere, and every step is one nearer the goal. So someone has suggested that, "If we cannot realise our ideal, we may at least idealise our real."

But there are many hindrances, many adverse influences to combat, many suggestions that we should let go our ideal. We have so often failed, slipped where we thought we should stand, limped where we thought to overcome by wrestling. The crags are so steep, the encouragement we receive from fellow-climbers so scant, the dissuasions and misconstructions—like those Job had from his friends—so many. But Jesus who inspired the ideal waits to realise it, if only you will open your heart and let Him enter. If you hunger and thirst, He will satisfy. He will become the source of realisation if you will only obey and trust Him.

Have we not all, amid life's petty strife,
Some pure ideal of a noble life
That once seemed possible? It was. And yet
We lost it in this daily jar and fret,
And now live idle in a vague regret.
But still our place is kept, and it will wait,
Ready for us to fill it, soon or late:
No star is ever lost we once have seen,
We always may be what we might have been.

"THE DEEP SAITH, IT IS NOT IN ME: AND THE SEA SAITH, IT IS NOT IN ME."—Job xxviii. 14.

In this sublime chapter the holy soul goes in quest of wisdom, which is the perfect balance of the moral and intellectual attributes of the soul; that knowledge of God, and life, and truth, which is only possible when the eyes of the heart have been enlightened to know; that radiance of spirit which is enlightened with God who is Light.

In a marvellous description of mining operations, which would arrest any company of miners in the world, if read from the Revised Version, Job declares it is not to be found in the deep. From one quarter of the universe after another, he receives the intelligence that it is not there. God alone has the secret, He only can communicate it, or give the disposition to appreciate and receive.

We must deal with God. Looking away from every other source of illumination and satisfaction, we must have close and searching fellowship with Him. Dr. Gordon was wont to say that evangelical faith consists not in only a glance, but in a gaze. "We live in a very busy, perspiring time, when a thousand clamant calls assail us on every side; but we must have more time for visions if we would be well equipped for our tasks." Let us then turn from the quarters where we have been accustomed to draw our supplies—broken cisterns, with uncertain and brackish water—and let us come to God, the eternal source of life and peace. Love and rest we want. Thy love and rest, oh give us. From men and things; from the mine, the deep, and the sea; from the murmur of human voices, and the cross-lights of human interests, we come back to Thee, our Home.

THURSDAY, October 29.

"OH, THAT I WERE AS IN THE MONTHS OF OLD."—
Job xxix. 2.

We are irresistibly reminded of Cowper's sad complaint:—

What peaceful hours I once enjoyed!
How sweet their memory still;
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill.

We are all prone to think that the earliest days were the best, and it is quite possible they were. But we must carefully distinguish between the exchange of the freshness and novelty of our first love for a deepening and maturer love, and a loss of love. The streamlet may not babble so cheerily, but there may be more water in the river. We lose the green of Spring, but is it not better to have the intense light of Autumn in which the fruits ripen. There may not be so much ecstasy, but there may be stronger, deeper experience. We should not reckon our position in God's sight by our raptures and count ourselves retrograding because they have gone; there is something better than rapture: the peace of a settled understanding and unvarying faith.

Still, if it be really so, that you have left the old place on the bosom or at the feet of Christ, that your love is cooling and your spirituality waning, I beseech thee, get back. Remember whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works. Jesus yearns to reinstate thee and has permitted this restless longing for the past to come, that it may be with thee as in the months of old. Again his lamp shall shine above thy head, the secret of the Lord shall be upon thy tent, thy steps shall be washed with butter, and the rock pour out rivers of oil, thy roots shall spread to the waters and the dew shall lie all night upon thy branch.

FRIDAY, October 30.

"I CRY UNTO THEE, AND THOU DOST NOT ANSWER ME."—Job xxx. 20.

It may have seemed so to the sufferer, but there is not a cry that goes from the anguished soul which does not ring a bell in the very heart of God, where the Man of Sorrows waits, touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

I have sometimes gone to a telephone office, and have rung the bell, asking to be put in connection with my friend, but it has seemed impossible to get at him; either he has been engaged or absent, and one has found oneself speaking to a stranger, and the voice which replied has been unfamiliar. Thoroughly disappointed, one turns away. But this is never the case with God. And the comfort is, that He is most quick to succour those whose cry is lowest. As a mother goes about her work, she is less sensitive to the trains that thunder past, and the heavy drays and the laughter of boisterous health, than to the stifled cry of her little invalid; and if there could be one thing more sure than another of awakening God's immediate response, it would be such broken cries as pain elicited from Job.

But the answer will come—nay, it is on its way, timed to arrive in the fourth watch of the night. Perhaps the delay is the answer, because the heart needs to be prepared to receive the great gift when it comes. Perhaps, like the Syrophenician woman, you have to give Christ his right place as Lord, and take yours amongst the dogs. Perhaps the answer is coming all the time by one door, whilst you are looking for it through another; but you cannot and must not, say that God is not answering.

SATURDAY, October 31.

"MINE INTEGRITY."—Job xxxi. 6.

Integrity is from the Latin word integer, whole. It means whole-heartedness. It is interesting in this chapter to see what, in Job's estimation, it involved.

- v. 1. Purity in the look.
- v. 7. Cleanliness of the hands.
- v. 13. Thoughtfulness for domestic servants and underlings.
- v. 16. Justice to the poor and the widow.
- v. 17. Willingness to share morsels, and to be a father to the fatherless.
- v. 19-20. Clothing the naked.
- v. 21. The refusal to depute to others help which he might render.
- v. 24. The heart weaned from the love of gold.
- v. 26. Refusal to turn aside to idols.
- v. 29. Inability to rejoice at the destruction of those who had derided and hated.
- v. 33. The frank confession of wrong-doing.

It becomes us, prayerfully, to go over these items, and use them as the catechism of our soul, for if this was the standard of character to one who lived so many centuries before the full revelation of Christ, what should not our standard be? How impossible, however, it is to live like this from without. We must enshrine within us the blessed Spirit of God, who alone originates and maintains that perfect love to God and man which is the heart of which Job's maxims are the body. Law is given as the expression of God's will for the regulation of life, but it is impossible to keep the law till we have the love, and it is impossible to have the love until we have Jesus Christ, through the Holy Ghost.

At all Times.

A GOLDEN CHAIN OF FOUR LINKS.

By DAVID BARON.

FOUR times is the expression, "At all times," found in the Book of Psalms, and in four different connections. Once in relation to the Scriptures, once in relation to faith, once in relation to practical righteousness, and once in relation to praise. Together, they sum up the activities and employments of the spiritual man, and they also supply each child of God with a fourfold standard by which to measure and compare himself.

1. In relation to the Scriptures. "My soul breaketh (lit., 'is crushed' or 'worn away') for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times" (Ps. exix. 20). This longest psalm in the collection is chiefly a eulogy on the Word of God, by a soul enraptured with it, whose eyes have been opened by the Spirit of God to behold the wonderful things it contains. The writer sees the Scriptures in such manifold lights that he uses ten different words to describe it, each of the terms (one or other of which, according to the Massorites, is found in every verse except verse 122) being significant and descriptive of one or other aspect in which the Word of God may be regarded by us.

Thus, for instance, it is "his law" or code of instructions, which is to regulate his people as individuals, or communities; "his testimonies," or witness to men concerning Himself; "his way," because in it are revealed God's great lines of action, his procedure with men and things; "his precepts," or his visitations, his interpositions; "his statutes," or, his sovereign and eternally-graven decrees, which can never be altered or blotted out; and "his commandments," or his authoritative and beneficent appointments.

The term "Judgments" is also a name which the Psalmist gives to the whole Scripture, because in it are revealed the principles of God's judicial dealings in the moral government of the universe. The word, however, is sometimes used as a synonym for God's plans or thoughts, as, for instance, in Psalm xxxvi., where the Psalmist exclaims, "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains"—immovable, inflexible—"and thy judgments are a great deep," i.e., Thy thoughts are inscrutable, vast as the ocean and deep as the abyss. In the same sense it is used by the Apostle in Rom. xi. 33, when, overwhelmed with the sense of the infinite wisdom and perfect righteousness of God's "mystery" with Israel, he exclaims, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!"

Now I wonder how many among God's people at the present day could honestly use such language. Do our souls break, or "pine away" for the longing they have for the Word of God "at all times"? The Psalmist did not have all the precious Scriptures that we now possess. He did not know many of the words which God spake to the fathers by the prophets, and he never heard or read the wonderful words which God has in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, and by his Spirit through the Apostles. But what he possessed he could not live without; his soul, with exceeding longing, yearned for it "at all times." Alas! for the condition of soul of many of us who are easily satisfied with the hasty reading of a chapter or a few verses, and find it possible to bestow much more time on our daily papers, and favourite books, and magazines, than we do in the study and meditation of the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

The truly "blessed man" conforming to the example of his Lord and Saviour is he whose delight is in the law of Jehovah, and who meditates in it "day and night." Only of such an one can it be said that he is "like a tree planted by the rivers of water," his leaf ever green, and bringing forth fruit in his season. The spiritually vigorous man esteems the continual feeding on the Scriptures as more important to him than his "necessary food," for he knows that it is not by bread alone that he lives, but by these words which proceed out of the mouth of Jehovah; and he never misses an opportunity of hearkening unto the voice of his word, whatever apparent earthly advantage he may lose by it. To such an one the Law of God's mouth is more than "thousands of gold and silver"; but when the heart gets out of communion, and lukewarmness and indifference take possession of the soul, it is then that all relish for the Word of God is lost. May God quicken us by his Spirit, and create in our hearts a deep longing for his Word "at all times."

2. These words occur in relation to Faith. "Trust in Him at all times, O people. Pour out your hearts before Him: God is a refuge for us" (Ps. lxxii. 8). Trust is faith in exercise. It is the same as "believing," and, here being in the imperative mood, it is equivalent to a command, and disobedience to it not only brings countless miseries on man, but is the root of all sin. Trust in Him "at all times." Is this, I wonder, the measure of our faith? It is comparatively easy to trust in Him sometimes, and for some things; but oh, to attain to this full measure of faith, and to believe God "at all times." O brethren, let us trust in Him, for we know Him in whom we believe, and He is worthy of the utmost confidence that we can place in Him. He will never disappoint us, and for this we have his promise, and the experience of his saints in all ages. "Our fathers trusted in Him; they trusted and He delivered them. They cried unto Him and were delivered; they trusted in Him and were not confounded" (Ps. xxii. 4, 5).

"What time we are afraid," let us trust in Him, or better still, let the language of our hearts be, "Behold God is my salvation, I will trust and not be afraid." Are our hearts troubled? Let us believe God, and believe also in Jesus Christ. Is any servant of his, into whose hands this paper may fall, "walking in darkness" of outwardly adverse circumstances, or inward perplexities, and "having no light"? If his heart be only right with God, let him remember the gracious promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," and "let him trust in the name of Jehovah, and stay himself upon his God" (Isa. i. 10).

Does it appear as if He were slaying us? Still let us trust Him, for if He kills, it is only to make us truly "alive," and when "He bringeth down to the grave," it is only in order to bring us up again, to walk in newness of life now, and, by-and-by, in resurrection glory. "Trust in Him" then, for today and to-morrow, for time and eternity; for things temporal as well as for things spiritual; for your body as well as for soul and spirit—yea, "trust in Him at all times and you will find that God is a refuge for you."

An Invocation.

COME Thou, O come,
Sweetest and kindest,
Giver of tranquil rest
Unto the weary soul;
In all anxiety,
With power from heaven on high Console.

Come Thou, O come,
Help in the hour of need,
Strength of the broken reed,
Guide of each lonely one;
Orphan's and widow's stay,
Who tread in life's hard way, Alone.

Come Thou, O come,
Glorious and shadow free,
Star of the stormy sea,
Light of the tempest tost;
Harbour our souls to save,
When hope upon the wave
Is lost.

Come Thou, O come,
Joy in life's narrow path,
Hope in the hour of death,
Come blessed Spirit, come,
Lead Thou us tenderly,
Till we shall find in Thee
Our Home.

Bethnal Green.—The seventh anniversary of the P.S.A. in Bethnal Green-road Congregational Church was celebrated on Sunday week. Rev. James T. Davies conducted special services, morning and evening, and in the afternoon a stimulating address was given on P.S.A. work and its great possibilities by Mr. John Blackham, founder of the movement. On the following Tuesday a large and representative meeting was held in the church. Brief testimonies were borne by many friends, and addresses given by leaders in P.S.A. work.

Colportage in China.

DEAR SIR,—I have recently returned from a journey of several weeks in the northern part of Kwong-si, having spent more than a week in the capital itself, besides being able to visit a number of other cities, towns, and market centres. The friendly reception met with (excepting in one or two cases) and the readiness to buy the books we offered were most encouraging. In many places through which I passed the presence of a foreigner is a rare event; in some, indeed, they informed me they had never seen one before. One's arrival consequently quickly attracted a large crowd, anxious to satisfy their curiosity, but very seldom did any unfriendly feeling manifest itself. Many came forward to buy our books, others to ask questions, and so on.

Kwei Lin, the capital of the province, is a large, wealthy city built on the bank of a fine river which brings it into direct communication with Canton, some 400 miles distant. In the opposite direction a few days of overland travel connects it with another large river in the Hunan province, making a direct route to the Yang-tse and Central China. It is, therefore a most important business centre, with a teeming population. Alas, one might say of it, like many another great city in China, that it is "wholly given up to idolatry," if one excepts the Mohammedans, who are reported to be very numerous.

The officials and literati form no inconsiderable proportion of the population, and one quite expected to meet with a good deal of opposition and some trouble. It was an agreeable surprise as well as a cause of great thankfulness to find it otherwise. I stayed at a large inn within the city and went on the streets every day, visiting every part, both inside and outside the walls, attracting crowds everywhere, but nowhere meeting with any difficulty. During the eight days of my stay, the two native colporteurs and myself sold between us from 2500 to 3000 portions of Scripture and tracts.

Altogether we sold some 6000 Scripture portions and tracts, the distance covered within the Kwong-si province being about 400 English miles. Let us pray for the power and blessing of the Holy Spirit to attend and follow the circulation of these books. The agents and native colporteurs of the National Bible Society, travelling as they do throughout the whole of the Empire, circulate many tens of thousands of tracts, but our tract fund is so low that the demand cannot be met. Any help in aid of the China Tract Fund, sent to Mr. W. J. Sloman, 224, West George-street, Glasgow, will be used for this purpose.

Yours in the Master's service,
FRED. R. JOHNSON.

The Booklending and Evangelistic Society of Canton Province, China, is a united organisation, started in 1890 by native Christian preachers, the object being to give the Gospel to the literary class in Southern China—a class ashamed to come to preaching chapels and listen to the story of the crucified Christ. This was partly because they regarded it as the doctrine of outside barbarians, and partly because the preachers were not as literary as they were.

There are now eight colporteurs at work in different districts around Canton, who carry books to the village schools, and ask the teachers to borrow them free of charge, or, if they are willing, then to buy them. These books are provided by the different Bible and tract societies, while the native Christians furnish the men and manage the whole work. Already about twenty or thirty most hopeful converts have joined the churches in China.

The work is going on very well, and native subscriptions for its support are increasing every year. We want to get more men for this great work, and to place one as soon as we can in each of the eighty districts of Canton Province. To reach this important end we need funds. The whole cost of the support of a colporteur for a year is about £9.

THE LATE

Rev. John Symon, Perth.

TWO months ago the Christian community of the city of Perth was bereft of one of its most faithful and useful pastors, by the death of Rev. John Symon, of Free St. Paul's. His career was one of no ordinary interest. It is too common, we fear, to find men entering the Gospel ministry, the clearness of whose call to that sacred office is not made very plain by subsequent events. Such was not the case with Mr. Symon. He was evidently set apart of God for the work, long before any presbyterial hands were laid on his head in ordination.

Mr. Symon was born of humble parents, at Perth, in the year of the Disruption, 1843, so that at his death he had not far passed his prime. His father was a working engineer in the employ of the railway company. At an early age the son John was apprenticed to the same trade, and passed his apprenticeship in the town of Arbroath. While living and working there the lad came within the influence of a revival movement; from that time his energy was directed into new channels. He began to preach the Gospel which had been the means of his own salvation. He soon developed special gifts as an evangelist. He preached on the common at Arbroath, and drew large crowds of hearers while still a youth of eighteen. This work he continued with much evident blessing throughout the rest of his residence in the town.

On removal to the locomotive works at Perth, after the close of his apprenticeship, Mr. Symon continued to show the same earnestness in Christian work, entering freely into the Mission work carried on by the congregation of Free St. Stephen's Church. His zeal was so quenchless that even the spare minutes of the meal hours were utilised in making known the truth to his fellow workmen. Meantime he was acquiring knowledge. As one has well said of him, "Between manual labour, mental study, and mission work, the days and hours of the young man's years were filled to the full."

These facts became known to the Home Mission Committee of the Free Church, and young Symon was appointed a city missionary in Edinburgh. Of course he had to relinquish his worldly calling. He visited in poor lodging-houses and prisons, and had many varied and remarkable experiences. Friends to whom he became known advised him to study in the Edinburgh University, with the view of entering the regular ministry of the Free Church, and this advice he gladly followed. Having completed his term of study in college and Divinity Hall, he spent three years in the mining district of Newbattle, where considerable congregations were attracted by his warm and loving Gospel ministrations.

About this time the congregation of Free St. Stephen's, Perth, with which he was formerly associated, had moved into a new building in another district. The old church was in danger of being alienated to secular purposes, and some friends suggested that Mr. Symon should be invited to Perth to open it as a mission church. The young minister fell in with this proposal and returned to his native city. There was, however, no congregation, and the place was burdened with a debt of £900. Being possessed of a fine musical voice, much natural humour and eloquence, added to intense earnestness. Mr.

Symon speedily gathered a large congregation. After a time the debt was wiped off, a mission-hall bought for the church, and a manse secured for the minister. But the spiritual work of the pastor was in no wise neglected. At that time he almost always preached three times on the Sabbath, and often addressed meetings every night of the working week as well.

For seventeen years Mr. Symon laboured at Free St. Paul's; during that period the membership rose from nothing to nearly 600, notwithstanding losses by removal and death from year to year. He was a great power for good in the city and the district around, not only in purely Gospel work, but in the causes of temperance and purity and all that concerned the best welfare of the people. Educational matters received much attention from him, and he served as a member of the Perth School Board for six years. His ministry was specially acceptable to the industrial classes, whom he addressed with a full knowledge of their difficulties and temptations in life, and with a genuine sympathy that gained for him great influence over them. Many of the sons and daughters of toil were drawn to the Church, and through that to the Saviour. His labours were not limited to the locality. His strong hold on the central verities of the Gospel, and his gift's utterance made him effective in special missions which he held in different parts of Scotland. There remains undoubted testimony as to the fruit of his efforts in that field.

All these unceasing labours were maintained with apparent ease, for Mr. Symon was naturally robust in physique. For the last two or three years, however, he had not been so strong and suffered a good deal from stomach weakness. But his spirit kept him going, and he would not "give in." He preached up to the middle of last June, when he suddenly became worse. Paralysis of the stomach intervened, with the inevitable and painful result that complete starvation began. His sufferings latterly were very intense, but no murmur escaped his lips during the nine weeks of his illness. His heart was steadfastly fixed on God, to whose will he was beautifully submissive. He was released from pain and entered into his eternal rest, on August 20 last.

The funeral was a public one, and all sections of the Perth community showed sympathy by the attendance of representative brethren. To show how the deceased had commended himself to those of other religious bodies it may be said that Dean Rorison, in a sermon preached at St. Ninian's Cathedral the following Sunday, paid to him the following striking tribute:—

Seldom have I seen more eloquent testimony borne to the value of a simple but truly Christian life in any community than yesterday, when I followed the remains of my friend and neighbour Rev. John Symon to Wellshill Cemetery. Here was a man who had no extraordinary gifts of this world's giving. He was simply a hard-working, loving minister among Christ's poor; but as he was carried to the grave the people lined the streets with faces of real sorrow: many of the sons and daughters of toil, and even little children, were shedding tears. What pomp and circumstance of long-drawn funeral array, what melting music, or accumulation of touching ritual observances, or cartloads of wreaths, can match or rival the spontaneous tribute of a population in sorrow for one whose face they would see no more! He was a true witness for Christ in the world. It will be long before the memory of John Symon ceases to be blessed by the poor people of Perth, and his name is inscribed in that calendar where the righteous are held in everlasting "remembrance."

Mr. Symon's own presbytery recently passed a special resolution, expressing their deep sense of his faithful and fruitful ministry, and their sympathy with the bereaved family.

Brothers Weaver in Aberdeen.

THE mission of these excellent evangelists to this city came to a close on Friday week. It has more than fulfilled the hopes with which it was anticipated. From first to last the preaching of Mr. Bewley Weaver was of that thoughtful, yet simple, and intensely earnest kind which is eminently calculated to arrest attention, and to produce a deep and abiding impression. It was well supported by the impressive solo singing of his brother Frank. Both of the brothers have won that high place in the esteem of all who met them which manifest sincerity of devotion, joined to unaffected modesty of manner, always wins.

As the first week in Free St. Clement's Church led us to expect, the work grew in interest and in fruitfulness day by day. Beginning in the Free North with an overcrowded audience, the meetings continued to fill the church every night, until Friday found it again overflowing with eagerly-interested worshippers, and every meeting was impressive with the marks of a deep spiritual quickening.

Two particularly hopeful features may be noted as characteristic of those services: first, the striking preponderance, in every meeting, of young men and women over those of maturer years; and, second, the apparent depth of conviction, without undue emotion, exhibited by most of the large number of inquirers, who were led into the light of a newly-found faith. The ministers and office-bearers of the four congregations principally concerned have been moved to much thankfulness and filled with fresh hope by this saving work of the Spirit among us. To them, and to very many of their people, as we believe, the Holy Communion of last Lord's Day was an epoch-making season in their spiritual history not likely to be soon forgotten.

F. RENTON BARRY,

Minister of Free North Church.

Aberdeen, October 12.

The Yarrow House for Convalescent Children, which was opened a year ago at Broadstairs, has been a complete success. During the summer the competition for admittance was of the keenest character, as many as 150 children having been waiting for admission at one time. Up to the present over 600 little convalescents have enjoyed a holiday at Broadstairs. The guests have been drawn from all sections of the middle class. During the coming winter a chronic ward is to be opened, in which children suffering from hip and spine diseases will be able to enjoy the advantages denied them in the summer.

Rev. John McNeill at Warrington.

THE United Evangelistic Mission in Warrington, the opening of which we described on Oct. 8, came to a conclusion on Friday last. As the mission proceeded, the interest grew in depth and intensity. Not only have the inhabitants of the town been greatly stirred in religious matters, but from outlying places, such as Frodsham, Runcorn, Widnes, St. Helens, and Lymm, many have come to hear the Gospel proclaimed by the faithful and powerful evangelist. It is believed that a real and abiding result will follow Mr. McNeill's earnest labours, for he has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God.

The weather at the beginning of the first week was very unfavourable. It rained in torrents, yet, notwithstanding, the Parr Hall, which will seat two thousand people, was well filled on Monday night, Oct. 5. During the first week the evening attendances were surprisingly good. The spacious hall was more than three-fourths full on most of the evenings, while on the others it was quite full. The second Sunday was ushered in by a severe snowstorm, but the weather cleared up before the afternoon service began, with an audience consisting for the most part of young men. The preacher's rousing message was based upon the text, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light" (Eph. v. 14). Very powerfully, and yet very affectionately, were the unsaved urged to awake out of their sleep of sin and death. Very quaint were some of the similes and illustrations which were employed to press home the truth.

The evening meeting on this Sunday was held simultaneously with the church and chapel services so as to give a better opportunity for those not connected with places of worship to attend the meeting. The hall doors had to be closed to prevent a crush, and many had to go away disappointed. Every available place in the body of the hall, gallery, and orchestra was occupied, some persons even reclining on the carpeted platform, there being no more available seats. Mr. McNeill took as his subject Luke x. 57 to 62, which he called "The imperial standard for measuring candidates for the Kingdom of Heaven." He spoke of the first candidate as "too quick," the second "too slow," and the third "too soft." "The coming-butts were," he said, "a big tribe." In the course of his sermon he pointed out in a very powerful way how Christians often put their own personal affairs before that work which lies so near the heart of Christ, namely, the evangelization of the world.

The afternoon meetings during the second week were largely attended. One of the most remarkable addresses was that delivered on Wednesday night on "The Axe-head which was Lost" (2 Kings vi. 1-7). It was, he said, a time of revival in Israel, and the revival had shown itself in young men offering themselves for the work of God and placing themselves under the training of Elisha. Those present will never forget the very suggestive way in which it was shown how utterly useless is even the most intense earnestness apart from Christ, or, in other words, the axe and the handle apart.

These must be joined together in order that effective work may be done. Another point emphasized was that the presence of the heavenly Elisha must be secured for in all the occupations of a Christian, but that if a Christian could not ask for that presence, his occupation or business must be wrong. On this point, some most effective words were spoken relative to the drink question, and in one instance a person who for five years had been looking out for an off-licensed house decided that as he could not ask for the presence of the heavenly Elisha in it, he would never take such a step.

The mission concluded on Friday evening last, on which occasion Mr. E. J. Guest, B.A., J.P., the chairman of the United Mission Committee, and Rev. John Yonge expressed the acknowledgments of the laity and ministers of the town for the faithful and earnest labours of the evangelist. They recognised Mr. McNeill as a gift from God. He knew that none of his gifts were his own, but were given to him to use for others, as they had had a great uplifting. Rev. Jno. Yonge, on behalf of the ministers, said their first note was one of thankfulness, a supreme note of thankfulness, of unbounded gratitude to the Lord of all Grace, for the marvellous blessings He had vouchsafed to them. The influence of those wonderful services would not be lost upon their churches.

Warrington had never seen sights like these before, and he believed it was a fact that there had never been religious services of that size held in Warrington.

THE MIDDLESBROUGH MISSION.

Mr. McNeill is now conducting a fortnight's evangelistic mission in Middlesbrough, having been invited by a large and representative committee from all denominations. Middlesbrough is a large and rapidly-growing town of about 80,000. Half a century ago the population was only about 10,000; a hundred years ago the population was twenty-five. During the past fortnight the churches have undertaken and carried out a systematic house-to-house visitation. So the mission now commencing has been made known to everyone in the town, and a large number of workers has been secured. Thus prepared for, the mission commenced well, the Saturday evening workers' meeting, presided over by Rev. C. F. Fleming, being enthusiastic and hopeful; while on the Sunday the Temperance Hall was crowded, and great interest was awakened. But we must reserve our report to next issue.

Prayer for Moslems.

MANY readers may have read the booklet, "A Challenge to Faith,"* written by one who has lived and worked in Africa for some years, and has faced the special difficulties in connection with work amongst Mohammedans. The time has come when the world has an opportunity of seeing something of the fruit borne by the seed sown by Mohammed more than 1200 years ago.

It is a terrible, but striking, example of the ruinous results (that must sooner or later show themselves) issuing from error, false doctrine and anti-Christian principles, even though accompanied by apparent devotion to God and profession of allegiance to his laws. Little did Mohammed dream, when he took the sword as a means of propagating his new religion, that he was sowing a seed which should all along bear the fruit of cruelty, lust, fanaticism, and devilry.

Many Christians in England seem to fail in understanding that the "religiousness" of the Mohammedans makes them more difficult to deal with than if they were heathen, and that their "religiousness" does not make them one whit less in need of the Gospel of Christ. One reason, amongst many, is that the tenacious holding of a creed, especially when that creed answers to the lust and passion of the human heart, is sufficient motive power to resist all efforts directed against it, at any price and by all means. It is no new fact that religious bigotry and zeal is the most relentless and stubborn factor in opposition to the cause of truth, freedom, and progress.

But the object of these lines is not to go into so wide a subject, but to make a special and earnest appeal to all Christians to unite in believing prayer for Mohammedans, and for all missionaries working amongst them. Too long the Church held back from aggressive work amongst them; too long has she through unbelief neglected the work, which, because of its difficulty, claims and needs her best men, her most devoted and spiritually minded men and women.

We ask now, not only the Churches, but every individual member to unite in asking God's rich blessing on all work done amongst Mohammedans, and to exercise an intelligent faith in their conversion. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" Thousands of Christians have answered, and do answer to-day,

* "A Challenge to Faith," by J. Lillias Trotter, Marshall Brothers. One penny. 7s. 6d. 100

by their unbelief or unwillingness to face the subject. "Yes, Lord, the conversion of Mohammedans."

"He did not many mighty works there (his own country) because of their unbelief." (Mat. 13, 58). All power was his, every opposing force had to yield at his will, before his omnipotence or love, yet unbelief hindered and does hinder to-day the manifestation of his power and blessing.

Now is the time for prayer and real co-operation from Christians at home. Will the readers unite with us in this spiritual crusade, and forsaking all indifference and unbelief, claim God's speedy blessing and victory for the cross over the paling star and crescent of Moslem error and oppression?

Christmas Letter Mission.

A QUARTER of a century has passed since, at Brighton, the first parcels of Christmas letters were sent forth. At least nine millions of these bright missives, with accompanying text cards, have since then been circulated in England and other lands. The report, just issued, says:—

"Even had no single case of blessing come to the knowledge of the organisers of the Mission, the 'opportunity and ability' for so wide a sending forth of the Christmas message would be regarded as an abundantly sufficient call to the work. We may, however, thank God and take courage as we see how his Word, thus disseminated, has been 'confirmed with signs following.' His spirit has, from year to year, touched with life the 'glad tidings of great joy'; and while we earnestly desire prayer for a larger measure of his vitalising power, we willingly await, for a fuller revelation of this harvesting, 'the Day' which shall 'declare it.'"

In accordance with custom, the report gives extracts from letters conveying assurances of the welcome accorded to the Christmas letters in different parts of the world. A Hospital Chaplain writes:—"Men and women convalescing after fever gladly receive the letters, and not a few speak to me afterwards of the spiritual comfort and quickening received in reading the Christmas letter." A friend in a manufacturing town writes:—"God used a Christmas letter to bring me to Himself. It was given me in the days of health, and it was for an invalid. I put it on one side, and did not get any good out of it, but, a few years after, I became an invalid, and oh! the heart-ache and longing for Christ and rest was dreadful? One day, I know not how, I found my old Christmas letter near me; and it was then that I learned its worth. It is one of my greatest treasures now, and I would not be without it for anything. I am now a confirmed invalid, but I am glad to say also a worker for Him who died for me. I do a great deal of writing to those in sickness or sorrow, and I have often longed at Christmas time for letters something like mine."

For ministers and district visitors desirous of sending out the message of life in appropriate and attractive form, the General Use Letters furnish an inexpensive means by which numbers can be reached who would not receive ordinary tracts. A London City Missionary writes, after a liberal supply of letters for tramcar, omnibus, and cabmen:—"You will be pleased to hear that the reception of the Christmas letters has been as good as ever. The men often wish their thanks to be returned to the senders. Some of the men have kept all the letters from the first. Others send them to a distance to friends, as they hope to cheer them as they have been themselves."

Concerning a grant of children's letters, the distributor, a kindly Essex farmer, reported: "Sunday was indeed a day of joy and gladness with us. The sight of their own names on the envelopes inspired the little ones to such a degree that they were not fully accountable for their actions for the time being. Some ran home to open them, and hastened back to let me see them. I shared deeply in their joy. I do not know what words to use, but it all either took me nearer to heaven, or else it brought heaven nearer to me."

The report takes account of work among fishermen, and in Scotland and India, in Continental countries and distant colonies. Those who wish for further information as to the work, and the various ways in which it may be promoted, should write to the organising secretary, Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay-park, N.

National Protestant Congress.

THE sessions of the National Protestant Congress, which began on Monday last week in Exeter Hall, Strand, were continued on the three following days. Three meetings were held each day, those of the morning and afternoon in the Lower Hall, that of the evening in the Large Hall. The papers and addresses were instructive, and of the character required to qualify Protestants of the present generation to do their part in standing for truth and against error in the controversy with Rome.

On Tuesday morning the positive side of Protestantism was shown by Rev. J. Hughes-Games, D.C.L. (Hull), Dr. Barnardo, and Rev. J. W. Harrison (Arklow, Ireland). In the afternoon the real character of Romanism was set forth by Mr. A. H. Guinness (Protestant Alliance), Rev. J. Sturrock (Edinburgh), and Rev. Charles Stirling. The evening meeting was devoted to a consideration of Rome's attempted conversion of England, addresses being delivered by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, Canon O'Connor, and Pastor W. Cuff. The treatment was such as to evoke much interest, light being thrown on the work of the Jesuits in the sphere of education and by political intrigue.

ROME'S INTERFERENCE.

On Wednesday morning Rev. Dr. HILES HITCHENS presided, and in some introductory remarks pointed out that Romanism is essentially political, interfering in State affairs; and therefore should be resisted by lovers of liberty, as well as those who stand for Christianity in its simplicity. Mr. T. A. Coghlan, of the Irish Open-air Mission, read a paper by Rev. THOMAS CONNELLAN on "Rome's Influence in the Press." It was declared that the Press is flooded with Roman Catholics, there hardly being an influential London paper without a Romanist on the staff. Another striking statement was that there are now in England thirty-three establishments of Jesuits, and the number is daily increasing. Though all States in the old and new world have expelled the Jesuits, England is taking them to her bosom, and they have now formed an "Apostolate of the Press," to watch Rome's interests in the newspapers. Among the remedies for the evil, Mr. Connellan recommended the education of the young in Scripture truth; that lovers of truth should make themselves acquainted with Roman Catholic controversy; and that, by lectures and conferences, every endeavour should be made to build up a healthy public opinion.

Mr. WALTER WALSH spoke on Rome's interference in public meetings, with special reference to the operations of the Guild of our Lady of Ransom, which is under the patronage of the Pope and Romish dignitaries in England. On many occasions the lives of Protestant lecturers have only been preserved by the attendance of police in large numbers, mounted and otherwise. In order to meet the brutality shown by members of the Guild, a body called the Protestant Defence Brigade was formed, the members of which have successfully relieved meetings of noisy intruders and maintained decency and order. Mr. JOB WILLIAMS, of the Protestant Forward Movement, followed on the same subject, especially with reference to open-air work. He had on various occasions been hemmed in by Ransomers, and had his meetings broken up. At length some stalwart men banded themselves together as "Gideonites," and they have exercised a salutary influence. The opposition has now largely spent itself, and the meetings in Victoria Park, Finsbury Park, and elsewhere proceed without much difficulty.

Mr. W. JOHNSTON, M.P., dealt with Rome's interference in Parliament, or rather with the Papal claim of power over the bodies and souls of men, social and civil, material and spiritual, in all lands. Every concession to Romish claims is an acknowledgment of the Pope's supremacy. He maintained that a Protestant party in Parliament is a pressing need. Rome has been gaining power step by step, and an opposing party is loudly called for. Protestants are apt to lapse into apathy after a small victory; but Romanists are unsleeping in their endeavours to do the Pope's will, and establish the Papal rule.

THE WORD OF GOD.

The subject on Wednesday afternoon was "The Word of the Living God," and it was dealt with from varying points of view by three speakers. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. MORGAN HARVEY, who, in some introductory words, called attention to the world's hunger, and showed that nothing but the Word of God can satisfy man's spiritual want.

The first speaker was Rev. R. P. DOWNES, LL.D., who dwelt upon the self-evidencing light and power of God's Word. Without enlarging upon the organic unity of the Book, or its miracles of type and prophecy, he asserted the Divine character of the Bible, because it reveals truths unobtainable by the unassisted reason, of men, that could only have been given to the world by God Himself. He contrasted the teaching of Moses as to God and his attributes with that of ancient Egypt; and that of Israel's prophets with that of the worthies of early Greece. The sublimest conceptions of God, to which modern investigations and thought can add nothing, were given forth by those who spoke by inspiration of God. The merest Hebrew child knew more of God than the greatest of heathen sages; and the truths that are thus brought to us are such as meet our deepest need. The Word of God speaks to the heart as no other book can, converting the soul of man, and settling it in the everlasting rest of God. The Word must be stood by, and nothing in the way of Roman Catholic interpretation should be suffered for a moment. In his own rugged way, Martin Luther well said that to submit the Scriptures to the interpretation of Rome is like straining milk through a coal-sack.

Rev. JOHN URQUHART dwelt upon rationalistic attacks upon the Bible. As in the beginning of the Papacy, pagan institutions were taken and christened by the Church, with the result that heathenism fairly overwhelmed Christianity; so, later on, Protestantism in Germany approached infidelity, and in order to bring it under religious influence proposed a compromise, excluding the miracles from Scripture, and suggesting explanations more ingenious than consistent, with the result that Gospel verities were given away and disregarded. In both cases the intention was to effect progress, but at the terrible cost of truth. After describing the disastrous work of Eichhorn, Paulus, De Wette, Kuenen, Graf, and Wellhausen, the speaker showed that the fashionable story of the evolution of monotheism from polytheism is the reverse of the true process, for man did not begin in savagery, but in the highest civilisation—not with idolatrous darkness, but with a knowledge of the living and true God. After giving an account of the recent discoveries in Egypt and Babylonia, Mr. Urquhart led his hearers to rejoice in the fact that year by year the Word of God is being confirmed, the speculative rationalist being answered by the archaeologist.

Principal WALLER, of Highbury, spoke on Romish hatred of the Bible. Answering the question "Is it a fact?" he read extracts from the latest report of the Bible Society, showing that in Roman Catholic countries, alike of the old and new worlds, the Book is reviled by the priests, and in many cases copies have been gathered and destroyed. Inquiring, then, what is the reason for this hatred, the speaker quoted the word of an ex-priest to the effect that to give the Scriptures to the people would be suicidal on the part of Rome. The Council of Trent recognised tradition with an affection and reverence equal to that given to Holy Scripture, and herein is found the explanation of Rome's attitude to the Bible itself. Just as was the case with the Jews of old, Romanism has made the Word of God of none effect for the sake of tradition. The poor Romanist spends his time in keeping the orders of his church, and never comes face to face with the Word of God. God does not mean to speak by men only, but by his own Word; He is jealous to speak his own word. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches," not what the Church says to the people.

MONASTERIES AND CONVENTS.

The theme on Wednesday evening was monasteries and convents, their alarming increase and the intolerable wrongs endured by many of the inmates.

Rev. W. LANCELOT HOLLAND, who opened the proceedings, began by touching on the history of the conventual system, showing how in some Continental countries the authorities had been compelled to take action by reason of the disclosures of cruelty and sin. In this land, however, the land of freedom, we have, so far, weakly yielded to the claims of the priests, and permitted the doors to be shut in the face of public inquiry so urgently demanded. It is said, again and again, that young women, having gone in voluntarily—though this is far from true in every case—have forfeited their right to protection. But remember, they have gone in wholly ignorant of conventual life. They expect to find a calm religious retreat, a life devoted to pious exercises, but in this expectation they are speedily disappointed. Once they have "taken the veil," they are hopelessly held fast; then they discover the life to which they are committed. They are subjected to the whim and caprice of the Mother Superior, and handed over to the mercy of the priests. The awakening is startling but hopeless.

Various disclosures of convent life were narrated by the speaker, who maintained that the cruelties revealed were by no means a past state of things. Letters might be produced showing that

THESE EVILS EXIST NOW IN OUR OWN LAND.

There are many prisoners longing vainly for an escape which seems hopeless. Facts might be given to show that many have the strongest aversion to the life they are expected to lead. The demands of the priests are abhorrent to many of the inmates, but where is help to be found? The nuns are simply coerced into acquiescence. As prisons and lunatic asylums are inspected, why should not these more intolerable prisons—the convents in which unhappy women are weeping out their lives—be inspected also? However reluctant our rulers may be to move in the matter, Protestants demand, and will continue to demand that the convent doors be opened, and that light be thrown on the revolting inhumanities practised behind their gloomy walls.

Mr. B. NICHOLSON adduced a series of figures to prove the startling increase in the number of convents in this land in recent years.

Pastor CHINQUY recalled past experiences of convent life, and gave illustrations from statements made by converted priests, showing infamous treatment of helpless women. The lives of many of the inmates is little better than that of abject slaves.

Rev. JACOB PRIMER spoke of the increase of convents in Scotland, the land of Protestantism and of John Knox. He demanded vigorously the compulsory inspection of these establishments, and insisted on their suppression. When the people of the United Kingdom know what really goes on in these places, suppression will speedily follow.

THE WOMAN'S PROTESTANT UNION.

The morning and afternoon meetings on Thursday were under the auspices of the Woman's Protestant Union, Mrs. R. H. ARBUTHNOT, president of the Union, occupying the chair. The general subject was Woman in relation to Romanism. By way of opening the earlier meeting, Mrs. Arbuthnot remarked that the Union register now bears the names of upwards of 9,300 members. The Protestant Woman has a circulation of ten thousand copies, and among the readers are many Ritualists and Roman Catholics.

Miss ROSE ANDREWS spoke on the connection of woman with modern education. Touching, first of all, upon the hysterical literature of to-day, she deplored the popularity of books of that class among young people, and denounced the religious and social-problem novel. She spoke of the degrading conditions of club life among women, and regretted the extent to which those who have not real need enter into competition with men in the commercial world. In many a case men are kept out of employ because of women working for less wages in order to get a little more pin-money or a pass or two at a theatre. Proceeding to speak on the educational phase of her subject, she maintained that religion is spiritual education, and that the pressing need of our time is not so much doctrine as practice, humanity of principle as well as dogmatical statement.

Miss LUCY GUINNESS told the interesting story of Mexico, with its marvellous past of high civilisation and sanguinary heathenism. Coming down to the present century, she described the revolution, and told of the collapse of the Romish empire, and the revulsion of the political power from the practices connected with past oppression. For three or four hundred years Romanism ruled without challenge in the land, but the assertion of civil freedom has been followed by a large demand for Bibles, and to-day there are about 150 foreign missionaries and 300 native workers in the country. The population numbers about ten millions, so that there is still "much land to be possessed." The story was one of heroic effort, patriotic and religious, on the part of devoted men, sometimes of the Aztec remnant, at other times of enlightened Romish priests, and again of missionaries from the churches of the United States, or by private Christian workers. In the old heathen days the hearts of human beings were offered in sacrifice in idolatrous worship; and, in conclusion, Miss Guinness asked for hearts to be given for Christ in the interest of Mexico, whose urgent appeal she presented with much force.

On Thursday afternoon, when Mrs. Arbuthnot again occupied the chair, Rev. Warden F. Stubbs read a paper prepared by Mrs. GRANT, president of the Scottish Women's Protestant Union, on the Protestant Woman's work in Scotland. The paper described the genesis of the Union, and the work it has done, including appeals to the women of Scotland, and the dissemination of information on the subject of Rome's advances. The membership is now 970, and it is in hearty sympathy with the Woman's Protestant Union in England. Mrs. Grant maintained that there are to-day in Scotland women worthy of the history of the country, with its resistance of Romanism centuries ago; and she expressed a hope that they would rise to the opportunity presented at the present critical time.

Miss C. M. Rouse spoke on "Woman in the System of Rome, as Contrasted with Woman in God's Church." She showed that in the Early Church woman had her public place and service, while the Apostles Peter and Paul showed the beauty of her domestic life, styling women "workers at home." In the Romish system woman had been degraded, through unscriptural teachings and practices, especially through the confessional and the celibacy of the clergy. Having referred to the fact that through the confessional young minds have been corrupted, and through the conventual system deluded women have left the world only to be followed into the convent by priests and nameless sins, Miss Rouse bespoke the sympathy of those who enjoy the blessings of liberty in the Church of God, urging her hearers to pray and work for the women in the Romish system.

A CONVERT'S STORY.

Miss O'FLAHERTY, a young lady brought up in the Church of Rome, now an Evangelical believer, told in a simple way the story of her conversion. She began by thanking the Lord for bringing her out of Rome. On the death of her father, a Protestant governess had charge of her, and through a friend to whom she was introduced, she attended meetings held at Tralee by Major Whittle. Her sister, who was with her, was saved through the preaching, and on arriving home had to endure much persecution, especially from her brothers. After remaining at home for about a year after her conversion, her sister found things so "hot" that she had to go.

At that time (said Miss O'Flaherty) I was beginning to see the light, and my eldest brother came to me and begged for my father's sake that I would remain faithful to the Church of Rome. After that I came to England to school, to Weston-super-Mare, and it was through Mr. Rainey, who has now gone to be with the Lord, that I saw the light. When I was about eight years old I was sent to a boarding-school at Killarney. There were about 150 girls there; and the nuns, by whom we were taught, were exceedingly kind—in fact, they did all in their power to make us happy. This was for one end—to get us into the convent. Over a hundred of the girls who were in the school are now nuns.

In due time I was confirmed by the bishop, and received on my forehead the sign of the cross with ashes. The bishop puts a lot of questions, and if you show you have earned well, he gives you a slap on the side of the face, and crosses your forehead with black ashes. The slap on the face, I am told, represents sorrow for sin. When, at length, I was going to take my first communion, I did something that I shall never forget. As you know, a Roman Catholic has to receive the sacrament fasting, and we were told that if we went to communion after eating anything we should immediately drop down dead. I came down in the morning very hungry, and some hot scones were too great a temptation to me; and not thinking what I was doing, I ate one, and when I went to communion I had quite forgotten the forbidden act. After taking the sacrament, and going to say a set number of prayers on my rosary beads, I remembered what I had done. I was greatly frightened, but I did not drop down dead! I went home, and after a while spoke to my mother on the matter. I began to see the light, and how Rome was deceiving the people.

My mother was never a very bigoted Roman Catholic, but had a kind of craving for something better. When I told her about my eating before the sacrament, she did not wish me then to come out of the Church of Rome; she was frightened at the persecutions which I would have to endure. Later on she left the Church of Rome, and is now a believer in the Lord Jesus; so is my sister, also my two brothers. I have one step-sister married in America, still in the Church of Rome, and thinking that we are all out of our minds. I have also a brother in the Church of Rome, married to a bigoted Roman Catholic. We are praying for these, and trust that the Lord will answer our prayers. Will you also pray for them, that they may be led to the light?

PROTESTANTISM IN PERIL.

The evening meeting on Thursday had for its general subject "Our National Protestantism Imperilled," and the chair was occupied by Mr. W. JOHNSTON, M.P., who sought to rally Protestants to a militant jealousy of national liberties. The first speaker, Mr. J. INSKIP, of Bristol, pointed out the peril involved in the system of Rome and Ritualism. The anti-Protestant character of Romanism is openly avowed, and it was easily shown that, whether conscious of the fact or not, the promoters of Ritualism are in league with Rome and doing Rome's work.

The speaker described the conflict of Protestantism and Romanism during the past sixty years, and emphasized the gravity of the present crisis. Alluding to the negotiations between the Ritualists and Rome as to the validity of "orders," he declared that the question is only of interest to those who hold substantially Romish doctrines. No succession is of any value except in the true and Scriptural faith, and this satisfies with any man sent of God and doing God's work. He held the condemnation of the Papacy on the point submitted to be preferable to its endorsement. After expressing a conviction that rapid developments may soon be witnessed in this country, probably in the form of a patriarchate, he maintained that Rome at Canterbury would be as destructive of our national Protestantism as Rome on the banks of the Tiber. In view of the serious consequences that must follow such a contingency, he begged Protestants to do their utmost to resist Romanism and Ritualism, and conserve Protestant liberties.

Rev. Dr. KANE, of Belfast, spoke on the perils threatened by Agnosticism and Latitudinarianism, turning them into the plainer English of indifference and unbelief. The Reformers held definite views of Gospel truth; hence the success which attended their work. Dr. Kane declared that Protestantism is fast overtaking the Romanism of the world. At the beginning of this century there were in the United Kingdom about five million Romanists, and the number is about the same to day. Then there were about ten million Protestants, now there are about thirty millions. Samson shorn of his locks was not more weak and impotent than is Protestantism without definite Gospel teaching and the leadings of the Holy Ghost.

The Romeward tendency during the Tractarian movement was, in a sense, a consequence of the antecedent worldliness of the Church, those who professed and preached Evangelicalism being untrue to their solemn trust in the Gospel. In conclusion, he said he thought the present moment offered a rare opportunity for the Evangelicals of England, in view of the fact that the Ritualists were fretting under the Pope's reply. For an infallible man, the Pope had made a marvellous mistake in putting his answer in the form he did. The word Protestant is not a mere party war-cry, but stands for Apostolic truth, Evangelical fervour, Christian patience, and zeal and charity, and if this is shown to those who are going astray, it may influence them for their good.

BACK TO THE BIBLE.

Dr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS dealt with the peril through neglect of God's Word and needless divisions. He showed that Protestantism has ever been a Bible movement, arising from a study of the Bible, promoting its translation and circulation in various languages, and preaching its doctrines and counsels. Having traced the story of the Paulicians, the Albigenses, and the Waldenses, who witnessed unto blood for the truth of God as set forth in the Bible, the speaker maintained that the Reformation, which was also a Bible movement, was symbolically referred to in the Apocalypse as an angel, cloud-throned and rainbow-crowned, with one foot on the land and another on the sea, whose voice was as the roar of a lion, and who held in his right hand a little book opened. The Reformation was a return to Scripture, and Protestantism should mean the study of Scripture, and the proclamation of its teachings—holding and holding forth the Word of the living God.

On the other hand, Romanism was not built upon Scripture—confessedly it is not; but it claims to follow tradition as well as Scripture. It interprets the latter by the former, the Papacy itself claiming to be the oracle of God and the mouthpiece of Jesus Christ, and absolutely infallible. As Protestantism originated in the resolute study of God's Word, so the Romeward tendency of our day is the result of neglect of the Book, and the substitution of another foundation.

Proceeding, Dr. Guinness urged his hearers, when considering the Apocalyptic description of Romanism, to be careful to distinguish the description of the true Church of Christ. On the one hand is a proud, boastful, tyrannical Church in alliance (in the past) with the Governments of the world, oppressing the people of God and repressing the truth. On the other hand, there is a poor, despised, but faithful body of people witnessing against the corrupt Church. The true Church is represented as a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, crowned with twelve stars, a truly Apostolic Church; and she is depicted as persecuted by the serpent, the great draconic Roman power, and fleeing to the wilderness, where she is hidden and preserved during the predicted period of 1260 days or years.

In other words, the true Church must be sought, not on the throne of empire, but in the wilderness of banishment, not fed with the riches of the world and pampered and self-glorified, but, as was Elijah the prophet in the days of Jezebel and Ahab, she is fed from heaven and nourished by the pure Word of God. The true Church is the church of the wilderness, and her martyrs and oppressed ones have ever found consolation and support in the study of the Book of Revelation. If we were to-day in circumstances of persecution, we should have eyes to read the prophecy. After showing that Protestant divisions largely arise from a laudable attempt to get more perfectly at God's revealed will, Dr. Guinness urged his hearers to rise above the mere denominational spirit, and above all to be on their guard against neglecting the Sacred Scriptures.

Sympathy.

For every deed of kindness done,
For every lightened load of care,
For every conquest nobly won,
For every act of faith and prayer,
Another's love shall meet thine own,
And seek in grief thy load to share;
Thy seed of kindness gladly sown
For thee in time sweet fruit shall bear.
Each victory will give thee strength,
And rest shall crown the hard-won fight,
And courage deepen till at length
Thy heart shall only love the right.
Thy faith shall soar with freer scope;
From answered prayer thy life shall take
New trustfulness, and steadfast hope
In glad fulfilment shall awake.
Through every bond of sympathy
The knowledge of thy fellow's need
Shall give thee wider, fuller range
For loving thought and kindly deed.

ELIZABETH GIBSON.

A Belgian Church.

I HAVE lately returned from Germany, and on my way home made a détour in order to visit and see for myself the work going on at Jumet près Charleroi. I stayed at Charleroi and went over to Jumet on the Sunday, which was a marked day for the little community. It was the pastor's last Sunday after a ministry of nine years. There was a very affecting "leave-taking" at the door of the temple. The Belgian churches are supplied from Switzerland.

The population of Jumet is somewhere about 21,000, and the majority are still Roman Catholic. The converts, who are hard-working miners, in fact, have striven hard to get their temple, but the total sum cannot be raised by them, and help just now would be a very great encouragement to this comparatively young but zealous and self-denying congregation so recently come out from Rome. As Monsieur Raymond has left Jumet for Cambrai (France), any help will be thankfully received by Monsieur Kennedy-Anet, Pasteur, Secrétaire Général, Chaussée d'Ixelles 129, Bruxelles. T. H. H.

Glasgow West-End Mission.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE has been with us for the last three weeks, conducting a series of evangelistic services in my church (Free Anderston) on the Sabbath and week day evenings, and in Kelvin-side Free Church (Dr. Ross Taylor's) Bible readings on the week-day afternoons. A special interest was felt throughout the district in this effort, because eleven years ago Mr. Clarke had in it one of the most remarkable missions he has ever held. For many months previously we did what we could by prayer and effort to prepare the way, the members of the West-End Christian Union, which was formed after the mission of eleven years ago, naturally doing what they could to make this movement a success.

The Mission is now over, and we are very thankful and full of hope. As a preacher Mr. Clarke has greatly improved. Much that might have been put down to lack of experience has gone, whilst there is a breadth of thoughtfulness and reasoning, combined with almost unemotional quietness and power of wrestling with the conscience of his audience, which has been very remarkable. The addresses have been to a certain extent what one expects at conventions for the deepening of spiritual life; we are therefore rejoicing in a very marked quickening in Christians; many, very many who had at some time made a profession of conversion are now standing for a fuller and consecrated life, besides which a goodly number has come out on the side of Christ for the first time.

As to my own church, I am rejoicing over blessings to many; and I take this opportunity of asking others to praise God with us for this holy time, and to pray that these may go on in a life of earnest activity and holiness. One of the pleasing features of this mission is the number of those who professed conversion eleven years ago, who have been helping others to find the same Saviour whom they had found. From the West-end Union ranks, too, it is interesting to know that eleven have already gone out to the Foreign Mission field.

Lord Overton is to follow up the effort with a series of meetings in Kelvin-side Free Church, under the auspices of the West-end Y.W.C.A.

Mr. Clarke begins a three weeks' mission on the south side of our city on Oct. 31, and we shall follow him there with much intercession and gratitude.

THOS. ADAMSON, B.D.,
Minister of Free Anderston Church.

Mission in Hawick.

MEETINGS of quite exceptional interest have just been held here by Mr. W. D. Dunn, from Glasgow. His visit has brought back to us the memories of 1873-4, when he was accompanied by the late Mr. John Scroggie, a servant of God with a burning heart, and one who, for us, went away too soon to his rest. They were true yoke-fellows, and God made use of them at that time for wide and lasting blessing to our town and district.

Mr. Dunn has not changed, save in his enlarged experience and power and consecration to his work. Again and again we have been reminded of the former work in the incidents and results of this Mission. Persons from a distance have come to the services and have found peace. One young woman left the meeting in great trouble of heart, but on her way home had to come back and give herself to the Lord. Night after night the place in which we meet has been filled to overflowing, and the people seemed rooted to their seats and unwilling to go away.

The work has spread over the town, and an interest has been awakened which we trust will make the winter one of united and successful work, the more that this effort is to be followed up by a series of meetings conducted by the Brothers Stewart, from Leith. One result of Mr. Dunn's meetings has been the bringing together of the Christian workers of various Churches, making us all feel there should be closer fellowship, as the evangelist often told us, in the work of the King.

DAVID HISLOP.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE rescue work of this Mission is maintained vigorously and successfully. The four Homes for Boys—first offenders handed over to the care of the Mission—are in full and constant use, and many snatched from a prospective life of crime are now winning a good character for honest industry. Amongst the discharged prisoners the work goes on morning by morning at the prison gates, and many thus got hold of find their way later on to the office in Brooke-street, for conference with the director, Mr. Wheatley, as to what can best be done to enable them to retrieve the past.

All classes and kinds of wrong-doers are dealt with—provided there is repentance for the past and a real desire to "go straight." Calling at the office, one day last week, we were much interested in three cases just in hand—all three being attempted suicides, men driven to despair by the apparent hopelessness of finding work to support their families. The new judge, Mr. McConnel, called the attention of the Mission to these poor men, under remand, suggesting that something might be done to aid them.

The first was that of a foreign sailor, who had lost every penny and seemed unable to obtain employment. In his despair he foolishly tried to take his own life. He was taken in hand by the Mission, a ship was found for him, and meanwhile he heard the simple Gospel as he had never heard it before. Who knows what good issue may yet come from the Christian kindness shown and the earnest words spoken to this poor stranger in our land?

The next case was that of a carpenter, out of work, his tools pawned for bread, with a family of seven children, and the brokers in. Frantic with despair, agonised by the cry of his children for food, seeing his little home broken up, he also sought a lawless end to the perplexities of this life, but happily in vain. Help came, he was sent to the infirmary, and on recovery remanded for trial. Here, on the judge's suggestion, Mr. Wheatley visited him and took his case in hand. The family were relieved, tools were provided, work found for the father, and thus a whole family were rescued from destitution and despair.

Another man, in an East End district, a cabinet maker, also with a large family to support, had got into similar straits, and had attempted his life. He also has been aided, and set on his way afresh.

Similarly, within the last few weeks a girl was found in an awful condition, having been ruined by her employer, cast out to perish, and tempted to end her life. A well-known Christian worker in Stratford brought her case before Mr. Wheatley, who visited her, entered into her sorrows, and, finding her in a very weak state physically, sent her to his Home at Hastings, where she soon recovered, and is now doing well in a good situation.

So this St. Giles' Christian Mission goes on in its chosen field, helping the helpless and despairing, rescuing the fallen, and saving many from a fatal plunge into the ways of crime; but, so doing, it urgently needs liberal help. The director is Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian.

Rev. KRİKOR BEHESNILIAN writes to us:—"According to the latest news from home, which reached me this week, my wife and children are keeping fairly well. She has been visiting the bereaved, and carrying on the work of the Christian Home for Fatherless Girls."

Among other places, Mr. Behesnilian has visited Derby, and spoken on the Armenian horrors. Mr. A. K. Yapp, Secretary of the Derby Y.M.C.A., writes to us:—"If any of your readers purpose arranging meetings to protest against these fearful massacres, I can strongly recommend them to secure Mr. Behesnilian as a speaker. He speaks English fluently, and his addresses are characterised not only by extreme fervour but also by commendable moderation and common sense. He sings well, and at each meeting gave us one or more sacred solos in Armenian. On one occasion he spoke to about nine hundred men, in one of the Midland Railway Company's mess rooms, and completely won their hearts. He also gave us a most interesting account of his work amongst young men, in the native land of the Apostle Paul."

Communications for Mr. Behesnilian should be addressed Exeter Hall, Strand.

Young Men of India.

THE October issue of the American Christian, issued by Mr. H. L. Hastings at Boston, Mass., prints a remarkable article on Christian Work for Young Men of India, by Mr. David McConaughy, General Secretary of the Indian National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations. Probably no fewer than five millions of the natives of India now use the English language, even to the neglect of their own vernaculars. Familiar with our history and literature, our science and philosophy, as well as with their own, thousands of them studying our English Bible daily, as textbooks in their educational curriculum, "Young India" has already revolted from Hinduism almost en masse; and thus cut loose from the old rotten moorings, is drifting out upon a dreary sea of agnosticism and godlessness, without chart or pilot or rudder, catching at straws such as the Brahmo Somaj, the Arya Somaj, the Theosophical Society, and the like, only erelong to let go and grasp at the next new thing. It is at this critical juncture that the Young Men's Christian Association has, in the providence of God, been called to the front in that ancient Empire, to bear a most important part in the making of the men who are fast forming the New India that is soon to be.

Mr. McConaughy points out that educational missions, developed from Dr. Duff's pioneer work, have made possible the undertakings upon which the Y.M.C.A. is now entering. Already in Madras, Calcutta, and Bombay Associations have been established. To a large extent these are self-supporting, but friends in England and America have been appealed to for help in providing the needful buildings. Students' Settlements have now been proposed. The undenominational character of the Association's operations is a great recommendation, as also is the fact that the work is for the most part carried on by laymen. "At the University centres where general secretaries have now been located, the Association has attracted large numbers of non-Christian students who throng the rooms daily, attending the various literary and social gatherings and even the religious meetings. It has been found impossible for the general secretary to overtake the opportunities for personal work which are thus presented, and the object of the Students' Settlements is more adequately to seize these many opportunities. It is intended that four or more college graduates, laymen and unmarried, shall go out for a term of three years or more, live together in apartments provided in the new Association buildings, receive simply enough to cover their actual expenses, and devote themselves wholly to direct contact, for purposes of spiritual help, with the non-Christian students, who are putting themselves under Christian influences in these Association buildings.

"The first of these settlements is about to be established in Calcutta, under the leadership of Prof. W. W. White, Ph.D., D.D., lately a teacher in the Bible Institute, Chicago. Prof. White becomes secretary of the College Department of the Young Men's Christian Association of Calcutta, and removes with his family to India this month. One or two associates will probably join him. By next year the Madras building will be ready, and it is hoped that another settlement will be established in that city in 1897. In connection with these new departures in Christian mission work in India, an opportunity is presented for the distribution of Christian literature on a very large scale.

"Unfortunately the emissaries of evil are most active in their efforts to poison the minds of Young India. A tide of sceptical writings is pouring steadily in upon the shores of India. The works of Mill, Spencer, Huxley, Darwin, Voltaire, and even Ingersoll, are circulated in great numbers amongst these students. What better antidote to this poison could be provided than to scatter the Anti-infidels writings of Mr. H. L. Hastings broadcast amongst them? During the Christmas holidays delegates from the Young Men's Christian Associations from all over India meet in convention in Calcutta. An opportunity will thus be afforded to arrange for an effective distribution of literature over a wide area and in influential quarters."

Mr. Hastings's striking lectures on the Inspiration of the Bible, the Admissions of Infidels, and other allied subjects, are known throughout the world. Those who may wish to have a hand in the good work of giving effect to Mr. McConaughy's excellent proposal, may address Mr. Hastings at 47, Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

THE PLAGUE OF PRIESTISM.

SIR,—The very clear and earnest plea of F. C. Spurr on this subject is both timely and true. The disease of ignorance is, I fear, widespread. Rome insidiously uses the natural generosity and trustfulness of the English character, and thus by plausibility and pretence imposes her pretensions on those who do not know her, and whose suspicions are hard to arouse. It has been my privilege for years past to give lectures, more or less historic, and I have been struck—indeed, amazed—at the utter ignorance of history prevalent. No one can read and understand the doings of Rome in this country, in France, Spain, Italy, Germany, or elsewhere, without realising our danger.

As soon as the shackles of priestcraft fell from the English mind and heart the country began to be felt as a power among the nations. As soon as the people received their charter of liberty, the Bible, the great mission of the Anglo-Saxon race began to be manifest; and were we ever to lose that charter, decadence and death must ensue.

It is easier, however, to establish the fact of our danger than to supply a remedy. Truly Satan cannot cast out Satan; and churches that recognise the priest, that permit a separate caste in dress and address, and that have "ordinances" only differing in degree and not in principle from Rome, are heavily handicapped in the conflict with so well-organised and unscrupulous a foe. In Roman Catholic countries, where priestcraft is known, it is hated or despised, but here the misnomer "Catholic" is claimed by and given to the Church of Rome, than which no name could be more misleading or incorrect. The "Claims of Romish Priests" in last week's CHRISTIAN ought to open the eyes of incredulous people; books such as "Life Inside the Church of Rome" and "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome" show us the awful character of Rome's teaching and life.

It seems to me that the only true antidote is a wholly unpriestly Church—that is, a church that recognises no order of priests of any kind, but that asserts and maintains and lives out the brotherhood of all believers—proving that they are "a royal priesthood," and that there is no "layman" among them. Such teaching smites at the root of priestism, and makes havoc of all such pretensions. It abolishes the very ground on which it stands, whether in the Romish, Anglican, or other communions, and establishes the only possible logical and Scriptural principle making for its overthrow and annihilation. Probably the natural indolence of the human mind, inclining it to accept ready prepared dogmas rather than think out Truth for itself, and the careful adaptation of Rome's dogmas to the fallen heart, constitute her chief strongholds in the world.

But not only is history a great teacher with regard to Rome's doings, there is another test that we ought to apply. "By their fruits ye shall know them." What are the fruits of Romanism in all lands where she has sway? Just in proportion as she is submitted to, slavery and decadence are found. Ignorance, degradation, and pauperism are greater here in proportion to her numbers than with any other body of professors. Are not the Irish quarters in towns—which is another name for Roman Catholic quarters—generally speaking, a disgrace to those towns? and where there is uniformly the same sort of fruit from the same tree, what can you do but judge the tree by its fruit? Thus we simply apply the Master's own infallible test, and at once ascertain the character of that strange mixture of Judaism and heathenism, tinctured with Christianity, that calls itself "The Catholic Church"—a "church" that keeps the Bible from the masses, and by priestly terrors retains an ascendancy over ignorant and deluded people.

Opinions differ as to Rome's growth in England, but that she is striving for supremacy no one doubts, and that she can only be met and defeated by true Christianity in doctrine and life would probably be generally accepted as true. The claims of Christ, of patriotism, and of pitying love to our fellowmen alike call on Englishmen to grasp the situation historically and practically, and in the power of love and truth, of faith and prayer, so to pull together for the common good, that no spiritual tyranny may ever again be able to throttle freedom and arrest progress in the land. Wm. HOBSON.

MR. RHODES.

DEAR SIR,—In your Letters from South Africa No. 28 (Aug. 13), you mention eulogistically "The Political Situation," by Olive Schreiner and her husband, S. C. Cronwright Schreiner which is virtually an attack upon Cecil J. Rhodes. This attack seems to meet with your approval, and you recommend your readers to make themselves acquainted with it.

Dear though my sister, Olive Schreiner, is to me, truth is dearer, and I must ask you to give me space to say that the paper gives a very one-sided and incorrect idea of the man, his character, and policy. Strange to say, Olive Schreiner, only a few years ago, when quite as intimately acquainted with Mr. Rhodes as in 1895, had naught but praise for him and his aims. He has not changed, but she has in her opinion of him.

I am not concerned to defend all Mr. Rhodes's political acts, but I wish to point out the following facts:—

1. Mr. Rhodes's acceptance of the Parliamentary support of the Afrikaner Bond, in return for such support in the carrying out of its programme as he could conscientiously and honestly give, was a position that every Cape Colony Ministry more or less takes up, involved nothing immoral or dishonest provided there was no sacrifice of vital principle expected on either side, and was one of the means whereby it became possible for Mr. Rhodes successfully to carry out his great scheme of the Northern expansion.

2. Even if Rhodes did vote for the principle of legalising the infliction of corporal punishment by order of certain officers for offences under the Master and Servants' Act (legislation to which I am strongly opposed), I believe he did so honestly, and would have used his influence to modify the harshness of such provisions had the bill gone through all its stages. People in England have no idea of the peculiar hardships of the isolated farming population in South Africa owing to the thieving propensities, insolence, disobedience, carelessness, and refusal to work of their servants and the natives who dwell on their farms.

Mr. S. C. Cronwright Schreiner himself, if report speaks true, has, when a farmer, inflicted corporal punishment on his own farm servants without an order from the magistrate, while even on some mission stations in South Africa the missionary, by agreement with the people under his charge, possesses and uses the right of inflicting corporal punishment on any of them for certain misdemeanours.

3. The so-called "narrowing" of the electoral basis," which, in other words, means the raising of the franchise to a certain extent, and the fixing of an educational qualification so as to exclude the barbarian vote, will really tend to the elevation of the condition of the coloured people; and I do not believe that Mr. Rhodes would ever be a party to the absolute shutting of the door to political rights and privileges against any man because of the colour of his skin, however much the Bond may desire it.

4. The compulsory labour provisions of the Glen Grey Act are an honest attempt (well devised or otherwise time only can prove) to help the natives to realise the necessity and dignity of labour, a lesson which their best friends wish them to learn.

5. Mr. Rhodes cannot be justly held responsible for the high prices of many of the necessities of life in the Cape Colony, the truth being that the Government is largely in the hands of the farmers, and they naturally will not allow the products of the country to be taxed, but for their own protection they levy heavy taxes on imports. This accounts for the fact of there being no excise tax on colonial wine or brandy, and also of there never having been any tax levied on rough diamonds; and Mr. Rhodes is really not responsible for the one fact or the other.

6. "The alienation from the people of public lands, minerals, precious stones, and even public works, by a band of speculators and monopolists," is simply so much socialistic claptrap, and a misstatement of actual facts.

As a Kimberley diamond digger from the earliest days, and intimately acquainted with the history of the diamond fields, I assert that the amalgamation of the diamond mines into the De Beers Company has been on the whole a great benefit to all concerned, and to the country at large. I am the bolder to say this, seeing that I have never been nor am now a shareholder in De Beers, nor in any company with which Mr. Rhodes's name is connected.

In all Mr. Rhodes's great schemes there has been, and is, far more thought for and aiming at the general good than any thought of personal wealth, or self-aggrandisement; and if all capitalists and millionaires were like him the world would be infinitely happier than it is!

7. I do not think that Rhodes ever said that every man has his price. The unfortunate expression which he let slip some years ago, when speaking about the Mahdi in the Soudan, to the effect that it was possible to square almost any man, is always being trotted out against him. But what after all did he mean but the truth, that by concession and compromise, and a mutual give and take, almost any opposing interests may be reconciled, and is this not a fair political statement? Mr. Rhodes's truest and staunchest friends and supporters are people who have never received benefits from his hands. His character has a wonderful power to attract those who can admire men greater and nobler than themselves. Even Khama and the Matabele chiefs in the Matoppos realise this. Lest any of your readers may think that I have been squared, and hence this letter, let me say that I have never received any favours from Mr. Rhodes. On the contrary, his political connection for several years with the party to which the wine and brandy-making interest of the Cape Colony belong has been a sore thing to me, whose life has been given to the setting forward of the total abstinence reformation in South Africa; but this soreness cannot blind me to the magnificent services he has performed for the Cape Colony, for South Africa, for the British Empire, and for the world at large; and though not honoured with Mr. Rhodes's personal friendship, I have an intense admiration and affection for the man, born of my knowledge of him and his career during many years.

Mr. Rhodes deserves well of the people and Government of England, and should England fail to recognise this, she will weaken the cords of loyalty which bind her sons and daughters in South Africa to her, and will strengthen the hands of those whose desire, hidden or expressed, is to sever the South African connection with the British Empire. THEO. SCHREINER.

Cape Town, September 22, 1896.

[The above is about half of Mr. Schreiner's letter. In the other parts he goes into matters not touched upon in my letter. I have no partisan prejudice against Mr. Rhodes and all acknowledge his great abilities. I leave my readers to judge between the views of him presented by Olive Schreiner on the one hand and her brother, Mr. Theo. Schreiner, on the other. It would be interesting to know the mission stations whose missionaries have and use the right to inflict corporal punishment upon the natives.—R. COPE MORGAN.]

Our Village Children.

At the annual meeting in connection with the Caravan Mission to Village Children, held at this time last year, a letter was read in which it was asked whether, in the event of money being provided for the purchase of an additional van, workers could be found to man it. To this a reply in the affirmative was given, and in a short time bank-notes to the value of £75, the cost of a van, with the words,

Take my silver, and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold, were sent in without any indication as to who the donor was. In due course the van was built, and during the past summer has been travelling among villages in Cambridgeshire and Somerset, where God has been pleased to bless abundantly the preaching of the Word, to the conversion of many young people, as well as adults. The other two vans have been at work in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex during the past summer, but what are these among so many villages? Many Scripture Union branches have also been started for the reading of God's Word, and thousands of Gospel leaflets given away.

Owing to the approach of winter the caravan work has been suspended for a while. S. J. HEWLETT.

Guildhall Art Gallery.—This year the average daily attendance at the special exhibition has been, on week days 1261, and on Sundays 709. The Sunday average this year is about one half of what it was last year (1518), and about one-fourth of what it was the year before (2921).

Open-Air Work.

THE glorious weather of the earlier summer months gave ample opportunities for the open-air preachers of our Lord to be busy in the work. I have been privileged to help these brethren in different parts of the country, and note a few of the places visited and some of the blessing seen.

At Seaton, in South Devon, a few Christian brethren carry on a service on the beach. During the singing of a solo by a lady a bright young man was led to accept Christ. On another occasion, a lady who described herself as an "advanced ritualist without Christ" was attracted to the meetings and converted.

The Sands at Ramsgate have always been a favourite place for open-air preachers, and among others who labour here is the pastor of Cavendish Baptist Chapel. Every Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening a good band of workers take up their stand near the pier. The attention given is most remarkable. Many are the anxious souls dealt with at these services. At Margate, Mr. Mell, of Shaftesbury House, has a service every evening in the open air. There does not seem the same willingness to listen as at Ramsgate, but God has given our brother to see souls converted.

On Brighton beach there are several bands busy during the summer. The friends from the Odd-fellows' Hall occupy the platform of the Electric Railway. The workers of the Athenæum are also seen on Sunday afternoons. Meetings are also held by the friends belonging to the Sailors' Bethel on Sundays at 3 and 7 o'clock. On one occasion when I was present an immense crowd gathered and stayed for nearly two hours. At the close inquirers were dealt with and pointed to the Saviour.

One of the hardest places I know of is Barnet Fair. Here the City Mission Choir Band are always seen, and one admires them for their persistence. They can tell of trophies won from this Babel of noise and revelry. One case may be cited. A man was noticed in the crowd who was deeply impressed. He was approached tenderly; presently he broke down, and said, "Ah! I was a good man once." He was followed on to the station, and we trust this weary backslider was real in his desires to be restored.

Mr. Thomas Clark, who labours in the villages, tells of one or two striking cases of conversion—one a man of eighty-three years of age, and another who is now preaching in the open air. During the summer Mr. Clark has also preached in the Broadway, Tooting, where large audiences gather.

Hammer Smith Bridge is a famous gathering-place for working men on Sundays, and here may be seen Socialists, politicians, and others haranguing the people. Here also the name of Jesus rings out with no uncertain sound.

Time would fail to tell of brethren labouring on Peckham Rye, of Mr. Woffendale in Regent's Park, of Mr. Barry Wake and others in Finsbury Park, and the young men of the Great Assembly Hall in Victoria Park; but one has rejoiced to hear of blessing in all these centres.

We have never known so much opposition and persecution in Hyde Park as during this season. We have been roared at by the infidel party and blackguarded by so-called actors. Nevertheless, God has saved and restored many souls.

The public generally are under the impression that the new rules issued by the First Commissioner of Works for Hyde Park are in operation, but it is quite a mistake; they have been published and issued, it is true, but no attempt has yet been made to carry them out, and many would like to know the reason why. Despite the issuing of these rules, blasphemy, performances, and the collecting of money goes on week-day and Sunday. Is it not time that something should be done?

Shoreditch Christian Mission.—The report of this mission shows a large amount of steady fruitful service. Three ladies reside at the mission house, devoting nearly all their time to this work among the poor. Eleven meetings are held weekly—Sunday-school, Open-air Service, Mission Service, four Mothers' Meetings, Girls' Sewing Class, Wednesday evening Gospel and Temperance Meeting, Girls' Night School, Prayer-meeting. The ladies supply interesting accounts of personal and from house-to-house labour among the poor. Full details may be had of the Secretary, Miss A. S. Catlin, 24, Charles-square, Hoxton, N.

South Africa General Mission.

I HAVE just returned from a two months' pioneer tour through Zululand, reaching the district north of the large lake St. Lucia. I am hoping the result will be the establishment of new stations in new districts, where we do not build upon another man's foundation.

It was my joy to see the power of the Gospel in the remarkable conversion of an old Induna, far away north of the lake. He was named Unongaba, a man of considerable influence and owner of many cattle. Our missionaries had visited him three times, always getting a kindly welcome and a request to come again. He had, on each occasion, allowed them to hold a meeting. Consumption laid hold of him, and he rapidly wasted away.

His sons had cut him a little "clearing" in the dense forest behind his kraal, to shelter him from the winds, and there we found him dying. A small hut, beehive shape, was in the corner of the clearing, and beside it lay the dying Zulu. When he saw us his face literally shone with joy. Pointing up with his thin finger, he said in Zulu, "My heart is right with Jesus; I trust Him only. He has washed my sins away." It was indeed a blessed fact. He could not read—had no Bible—was buried away with his people in the densest heathendom, but through it all the message of life, taken by our dear missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Feyling, had broken in upon his soul.

Some say the heathen have to be educated up to it. Others, that it takes years to break through the thick crust of sin and superstition. Thank God, the old Gospel of Jesus Christ, in the power of the Holy Ghost, has the same effect to-day as at Pentecost. Pray for this country with its half million of Zulus. At present the cry is "We are hungry," owing to the awful locust plague, and severe famine is threatening, if not already experienced, in some districts, where that fearful scourge rinderpest is nearing us with a steady march.

Sermon Lane Mission.

ON Tuesday, October 13, the hall of the Mission, off Liverpool-road, Islington, was bright with preparations for the annual tea. The year has been one of much care and anxiety. Mr. Harry Dave, the former superintendent, has given place to Mr. E. Cuthbert, in whose hands there has continued to be steady progress, so that the coming year is fraught with anticipations of blessing. Miss Pound, whose work is chiefly amongst the mothers and elder girls, gave a few words of welcome and encouragement.

At the public meeting Mr. J. Lamont occupied the chair, and referred to his forty years' association with the work and the many alterations consequent upon the development of the Mission from the old Ragged School. Mr. Nixon directed the mind of all to the blessing the Mission had imparted, and the fuller blessing it was designed to accomplish. Mr. Main referred to the work of the Sabbath School and its influence on the children. Mr. Edwards spoke of the claims of the Mission on all its friends. The hon. sec. endeavoured to show that the only antidote to care and anxiety was to listen to the song of hope God's Word poured forth. Mr. Nicholls, one of the old members, concluded the proceedings with a few earnest words.

Requests for Prayer.—For a special mission being conducted by Mr. James Scroggie, at the Gospel Hall, Woolwich.—For Mr. Lane's Mission to Young Men in Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's-road, W.—For blessing on Mission by Rev. Joseph Morris, in St. Andrew's Church, Canal-road, Kingsland-road, Nov. 1 to 9.—For a Mission to be held by Mr. Henry Thorne, from October 24 to November 2, in the Presbyterian Church, Downs Park-road, Hackney Downs.—For special Sunday evening meetings at Assembly Rooms, Leytonstone. Praise.—For blessing on a ten days' Mission held amongst the navvies at Sutton-in-Ashfield.—For great spiritual blessing at Middle Barton, Oxon, during a Mission conducted by Mr. Harris of the Evangelisation Society.—Lord Radstock writes:—"Desire praise to the Lord for many tokens of coming blessing, and that seed sown twenty-three and twenty-nine years ago has brought forth fruit a hundred-fold. Request prayer for meetings of McAll Mission workers this week seeking fresh communion with God."

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

THESE evangelists closed their week's work at Alloa with a crowded meeting at the Town Hall on Sabbath. One feature of the evening was the attractive singing by the choir, with two duets by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, viz., "Morning Land" and "Steal Away to Jesus," and a solo from Mr. Stebbins, entitled "The Homeland." A deep impression was made upon the audience by the presentation of Gospel truth in this winning form.

Major Whittle's address from the words found in Rev. iii. 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock," was followed by an after-meeting in the body of the hall, for the consecration of Christians and the helping of inquirers. A large number remained, and nearly all joined by rising in the prayer inviting Christ to come in and take full possession of their hearts. Among those met at the close who had accepted Christ during the mission were three members of one family—two sons and a daughter—all of them clear and decided in their acceptance of their Saviour, and very happy in the joy He had brought into their souls.

During the week the meetings have been held in the Corn Exchange Hall, and have grown in interest and attendance from night to night. The ministers of the Established, Free, and U.P. churches have been present, and participated in the meetings.

A great interest was awakened among the children of the Board schools, who came in large numbers to meetings specially appointed for them. Over twelve hundred were present at the Tuesday afternoon service. The meetings will be carried on this week at Mr. Maybon's Mission Hall by Mr. Porter of Glasgow.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins will spend the week from Oct. 25 to 31 in Rev. John Riddell's church in Glasgow, and then go north to conduct a united mission in Inverness. On Nov. 22 they commence a six weeks' mission in Edinburgh, under the invitation of a united meeting of ministers, convened by Rev. S. Hood Wilson, D.D., Moderator of Free Church. The opening and closing week of the mission will be at the Free Assembly Hall, and the intervening weeks in four different quarters of the city in Established, Free, and U.P. churches. A large united choir is being formed to practise the new songs in the Christian Choir (Revised and Enlarged), and much interest is shown in preparation for the mission.

Sailors' Welcome Home.

IN connection with my letter in your issue of September 24, I feel it is my duty to let your readers know that the Lord has step by step led the way for the Bow Creek branch, at 15 and 17, Bark-ing-road, E. I am now busy preparing these premises for a home, temperance bar, book and meeting-rooms.

Lady Ashburton, who takes a deep interest in the work, will open the homes on Wednesday, November 11, at 3.30 p.m., supported by Pastor Fuller Gooch, Admiral H. D. Grant, Messrs. M. H. Hodder, John McCall, J. E. Mathieson, and H. W. Maynard, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Colonel Morton, Colonel H. Macgregor, and others. The above premises are situated in a thickly-populated neighbourhood, much frequented by our sailors, and in close proximity to the principal docks.

All friends willing to have a share in the work are earnestly invited to communicate with me as early as possible.

173, St. George-street, London, E.

The Palestine Exploration Fund's operations at the present time are full of interest. From the October issue of the Quarterly Statement we learn that Dr. Bliss's excavations in the Tyropæon Valley have brought to light a very remarkable stone stairway, forming part of a road leading down from the city past the Pool of Siloam. It is impossible not to be reminded by this important discovery of the statement in Nehemiah iii. 15, that Shallan repaired the gate of the fountain, the wall of the Pool of Siloam, "and unto the stairs that go down from the city of David." It is not suggested that the newly-discovered stairs are identical with those mentioned by Nehemiah, but possibly they may be on the same site. Every issue of this serial has definite value to those who follow Biblical archaeology. We trust that the Society's appeal for funds, so that its work may proceed without interruption, will meet with a liberal response. The secretary is Mr. George Armstrong, offices of the Fund, 24, Hanover-square, London, W.

The Y.W.C.A.

At the opening social of the Y.W.C.A. new headquarters, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, on Tuesday week, there was a very good attendance in spite of the unfavourable weather. The members and others having inspected the new premises, Mr. Keeble explained why the George-street premises were purchased; the Y.W.C.A., having made up their minds to do without leases and go in for freehold property. He then read the finance statement, which showed a balance of £11,000 wanting to complete the purchase-money and extra expenses for building new hall at rear, etc., which he was assured we should raise. Miss Wingate gave a detailed programme of the coming winter's work at the Central Institute. She then presented the hon. finance secretary with a cheque for £140 9s. 11d., collected by the Central Institute, also a cheque for £20 15s. 8d. on account of coin collection from the employment agency branch per Miss A. Gough. Mr. W. T. Paton, in his address, called the new building a trust from God. "What shall we do with this trust," he said, "that God has put into our hands?" This place ought to be so constantly the abode of the Lord that girls who have a pleasant time will seek the feet of Jesus, having heard his word here.

BRIEF NOTES.

The annual conference of the Dumbartonshire Y.W.C.A. was held on the 3rd inst. at Milton. Lady Overtoun presided.

The annual social meeting of the Bushby branch was held on the 7th inst. The annual report gave a very favourable account of the work done during the year.

In connection with the Hampton Wick branch, a home for young women has been started at Tudor Lodge, Vicarage-road, the residence of Miss Florence Lack, where they can meet together for social intercourse, needlework, reading, etc. On Sunday afternoon there will be a Bible-class, followed by a free tea.

Mrs. Smith, the president for Ireland, has been visiting some of the Ulster branches; addressing the Cullybackey annual meeting and that of the Ballymena branch. A very pleasing feature in the work of this branch is the hearty and cheerful manner in which the missionary funds are collected. A small "visiting box" is taken home for one week by some willing member, and such is the interest in this work that a considerable sum is sent annually to "our own missionary" in North Africa.

The Y.M.C.A.

DURING the first month of Mr. Walter Price's secretariat at Cardiff fifty new members have been received.

Anniversary meetings have been held with many features of encouragement by the Newcastle (New South Wales) and Brisbane Associations.

New premises were opened on Tuesday week by the Calne Association. The report was very encouraging, telling of successful open-air work and indoor services.

The Kingswood, Bristol, Association have held a very successful meeting, when the speakers were Mr. J. E. W. Wakefield, Rev. J. Glyn Davies, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

The Association at Invercargill, New Zealand, has been resuscitated, and has erected a building which is said to be a credit to the town. Good evangelistic work is being done, and considerable extension is contemplated.

A very successful social gathering was held at Cairns Memorial House, Bournemouth, on Wednesday, Oct. 7, presided over by General Hutchinson. A large number of young men were present, and listened to an interesting address from Mr. George Holmes. The work is going forward, and the winter's work is expected to be a great blessing to the young men of the town.

The Middlesbrough Association annual meeting held on Tuesday week, under the presidency of Mr. Wayman Dixon, was well attended. The Association has made arrangements for the present winter, which give promise of greatly increasing its serviceability. One of these is the opening of a Christian Evidence class by Rev. J. H. Wishart, the recently appointed minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church.

The Dublin Y.M.C.A. have secured the services of Mr. Samuel Millar, evangelist, to conduct a ten days' mission to men from Oct. 22. The Association have secured new premises in the great thoroughfare of the city, Sackville-street, the headquarters of the National League, and are about to issue an appeal for financial help. The members themselves hope to do their part in giving over £1000 towards the £5000 needed.

The annual conference of the Western District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s took place at Bristol on the [952]

12th inst., and proved a most successful and encouraging gathering. Mr. White made a statement as to the progress in the district. This year they had twenty-four associations, as compared with twenty-two last year. The gross membership was 4417, or an increase of 223. Mr. W. C. Ferris, of Gloucester, presided over a noon devotional meeting, when a very impressive address was given by the venerable Mr. George Müller. After luncheon, at which Mr. S. D. Wills presided, Mr. Thomas took the chair at the conference session, when papers were read by Mr. E. P. Garrett, of Gloucester, and Mr. H. Handel, of Taunton.

The winter's work at the Stratford Association has commenced well all round. We have to thank God for the conversion of a number of our young men at Dr. Harry Guinness' fifteen days' mission in our Conference Hall—which had to be prolonged three days on account of the blessing that attended same. Special evenings were set apart for men only on the subjects of "Gambling" and "Purity." Last Monday, 12th inst., a series of weekly meetings for the promotion of temperance and other morals, especially for young men, was commenced, when Mr. J. H. Raper gave an address on the "Drink Question and Young Men," the Mayor of West Ham presiding.

Christian Endeavour.

THE Presbyterian Endeavourers of Glenholden, Penn., have been holding weekly open-air Gospel services, with an average attendance of 300 persons. Scores of other C.E. societies have been engaged in similar work.

"Saved to Serve" was a motto kept before the South Dakota Convention, and the evangelistic services were very impressive. At the consecration meeting about twenty-five declared their purpose to lead a Christian life.

At the annual meeting of the branches comprising the Ipswich Union of C.E. Societies the president stated that 600 members had been added during the year, sixty-three had joined the Church, and seven junior societies had been formed, with 300 members.

The first Devon Convention affords fine evidence of the growth of the Christian Endeavour movement in the West. At the Exeter Convention in 1894, there were only three societies in Plymouth; now these have grown into a host, full of enthusiasm and zeal.

The Glasgow and West of Scotland Union now includes 160 societies with a membership of 6,864; twenty-eight of these societies are junior. The Free Church leads with forty-nine societies; then comes the U.P. Church with thirty-one, and the Baptist with seventeen.

The fourth annual convention of the Stroud District C.E. Union was held in Stroud last Thursday. Prayer-meeting in the morning, junior rally in the afternoon, senior rally in the evening, Mrs. Restall presiding. Rev. Justin Evans gave an address on "Healthiness and Holiness," and a consecration service was conducted by Rev. G. T. Coster. There was a crowded audience.

Iowa has shown a special interest in the Flower Mission and in the work among prisoners, having made these different departments with a superintendent in charge of each. During the State Convention at Council Bluffs, noon meetings were held in the hospital and the jail. Flowers were sent to each prisoner, Testaments were distributed, and there were several requests for prayer.

The possibilities open to an individual society of Christian Endeavour are shown in a report that comes from Geelong, Australia. The Yarra-street Wesleyan Society, which contains five divisions and 550 members, has organised a boys' club, a men's club, a birthday league for missionary purposes, and a Sunday-school home department. During the year it held 208 cottage prayer-meetings besides seventy-eight open-air services. 4251 visits were paid and 2488 loaves of bread distributed. The Juniors provided an outing for 100 slum children, distributed 150 bouquets of flowers, and made more than 500 visits. The other labours of the society were on a proportionate scale.

Evangelical Protestant Union.—The eighteenth annual conference of this Union took place on Thursday at the Manchester Religious Institute. Delegates were present from London, Liverpool, Blackburn, Clitheroe, Frodsham, Ribchester, Southport, Wigan, Oldham, Tewkesbury, Bolton-le-Moors, and Manchester. Gen. Sir Robert Playre presided at the morning meeting, when a paper was read by Rev. Charles Guest, of Burton-on-Trent. A discussion followed, in which Rev. Edward Brewer, of Old Hill, Staffordshire, Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool, and others took part. Rev. P. E. Thomas, vicar of St. Barnabas, Blackburn, was the author of the paper read in the afternoon on "Recent Proposals for Reunion."

Irish Notes.

EVANGELISTIC services have been held at Tigoncil Methodist Church by Rev. Henry Ball and at Castlereagh-road Methodist Church by Rev. P. E. Donovan, of Hollywood.

Much regret is felt in the north of Ireland at the deaths of Revs. Robert Boyle, of Garryduff, and J. S. Gass, of Clones, both Presbyterian ministers and excellent Christian workers.

The Belfast Methodist Council has been discussing the subject of church attendance in Belfast. The conclusion at which it has arrived is that, on the whole, the attendance is fairly satisfactory.

Miss Alice Gubbins, a well-known and highly-esteemed inhabitant of Cork, has passed away. Deceased was a liberal supporter of many public institutions and in cases of private need not a few will miss her help and mourn her as a true friend.

Rev. A. H. Kelk, of Jerusalem, is at present in Ireland, pleading the cause of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. He has been preaching and addressing meetings in various churches in Dublin and the neighbourhood in the interest of that Society.

Scottish Notes.

A SERIES of Christian conferences were held in Dundee last week and were largely attended.

A movement has been warmly taken up in Glasgow for the establishment of a farm colony. Some very liberal contributions have been promised towards the cost.

A largely-attended conference of the Free Church Guild has been held at Elgin. "Women's Work" and "Foreign Missions" were among the subjects discussed.

Since Mr. Quarrier opened the Consumptive Homes at Bridge of Weir, many applications for admission have come from all parts of Scotland. £43,000 is yet needed to complete the scheme.

A social meeting in connection with Dundee Boys' and Girls' Religious Association was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall last week. Two additional meetings have joined the Association during the past year, and the work has been carried on very successfully. A week of meetings for children will be held in the Kinnaird Hall at the end of this month.

At the close of the evening service in Holburn Established Church on Sunday week, a meeting of the congregation was held for the purpose of forming an association for the promotion of foreign missions on the lines recommended by the General Assembly. Sympathetic reference was made to the death of the late Mr. Slater and his example was held out as a stimulus.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Ladies' Auxiliary of the National Bible Society of Scotland was held last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, when there was a large attendance of ladies. The collectors, numbering 181, have brought in about £530. It was stated that Mr. James Murray, who has been eight years in China, is now returning to his field of labour. During his short holiday he has taken part in 212 meetings in Scotland. Mr. Murray gave a farewell address, dealing with his work among the Chinese. He confines himself to the south-western provinces of China, embracing a territory equal to one-half of Europe. They have a staff of 121 Christian men employed, who are not only colporteurs, but also evangelists. The Scriptures scattered throughout China last year numbered 300,000 copies.

A public meeting in connection with the Christian Literature Society for China was held last week in Edinburgh, Professor A. Crum Brown in the chair. The secretary of the Society in China (Rev. Timothy Richard) addressed the meeting. The Chinese, he said, were great thinkers, and he believed that when they came to join the intellectual forces of the world they would not be a small factor in the future progress of mankind. Speaking of the difficulties under which Christian missionaries laboured in China, Mr. Richard pointed out that they had to contend against the Roman Catholic and the Greek Churches, and he went on to refer to the efforts of the Russian minister at Peking to gain influence over the natives of the country for political, commercial, and religious purposes. The Society, however, had had a wonderful record, and the work done had been far above their most sanguine expectations.

Mr. Josiah Nix will commence a series of lantern Gospel addresses in the Princess's Theatre on Sunday, October 25, at 7 o'clock. These services have been so successful during the last two seasons that sometimes thousands of people have been turned from the doors.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR readers will note with a sympathetic interest the statement on p. 18 as to the wreck of Dr. Paton's mission ship Dayspring. This untoward event, besides the deplorable sacrifice of life, will cause no little loss to the Society which Dr. Paton represents. The call for help in replacing the wrecked vessel is an urgent one, and we trust many friends will respond heartily.

Grave news again reaches us from Constantinople. A growing sense of uneasiness fills the air, and a fear is extending that another massacre is about to take place. So far there does not seem to be any real improvement in the situation, nor is there any evidence to show that the Sultan has been impressed by the agitation in England. Our only hope of betterment comes from hints and suggestions that leak out of better relations between Russia, France, and England. Every endeavour should be made to foster a good understanding between these Governments.

Turkey, it appears, is not all bad. Among the highest in office and among the poorest and humblest there are some who hate oppression and fraud, and will have nothing to do with it. Here and there a provincial governor refused to carry out the shameful instructions sent from headquarters, and consequently was removed from office. There is a Young Turkey party which seeks to reform the administration everywhere. Sir Henry Elliot in a letter to The Times says, that if the English people would show they are anxious not only to save the Armenians but also to put an end to the system under which outrages occur, their efforts would be gladly welcomed in Turkey, "and would afford immense encouragement to the reforming party, from which alone any good result is to be hoped for." This is a suggestion not to be overlooked.

In some recent remarks on the Eastern question, we spoke with approval of the proposal for England to relinquish Cyprus. An esteemed correspondent writes to point out that such a course would be against Britain's destiny as outlined in the Prophetic Word. For ourselves, we cannot subordinate the cause of righteousness to what is at best only an interpretation of prophecy. Moreover, we are more impressed than ever with the conviction that the Word of Prophecy was not given in order that those who study it should themselves become prophets. God's purpose with the nations will go forward without anxiety on our part. All the same, it is our bounden duty to do justice in national as well as personal affairs.

An aged brother, whose study and meditation during a large portion of his life have been the Scriptures of truth, writes that "a book or paper by one who has the gift of the word of wisdom, on 'the promise of his presence' (2 Pet. iii. 4) would be greatly prized: for at seventy-four I find that nearly all past instruction needs recasting." This is itself a word of wisdom for prophetic and other students, who when they are young think they can arrange in detail all the things that are to come; but when they reach mature years find it necessary to reconsider the arrangement.

The appointment of Bishop Temple to the Archbishopric of Canterbury has caused considerable surprise, in spite of the unquestionable fact that he is the oldest and most experienced member of the Bench. His failing eyesight and great age (seventy-five) would under ordinary circumstances be a fatal obstacle, but his physical vigour is extraordinary, and he is still the hardest-working of living Church dignitaries. There is no question of his great power of organisation, and his independence of judgment and outspokenness of speech are proverbial. He is not likely to be an ecclesiastical figure-head, for whatever his hand finds to do he does with all his might.

The chief points of significance in this succession to the Primacy are that Dr. Temple has since his elevation to the office of bishop been markedly tolerant of the High Church Party; that he was last year a strong partisan of the Government Education Bill; and that he is an uncompromising temperance reformer. How far he will carry his influence in the last-mentioned movement into the wider sphere of work is for the future to tell; he will have to change his methods considerably if he eases off from his customary plainness of attitude and speech. Unceasing watchfulness and fearless preaching of the Evangelic Gospel, apart from the errors of priestcraft, will be as necessary as under the reign of Archbishop Benson.

The Vestry of St. Anne's, Soho, is determined not to give up the fight for decency in the West-end music halls. It has passed a resolution nem. con. to request the London County Council to make a withdrawal of a certain type of "living pictures" a condition of renewal of licence, and Rev. J. Cardwell, the rector, is doing his utmost to secure this end. So also Rev. Prebendary Kitto, rural dean of St. Martin's. The St. Anne's Parish Magazine says:—

The proceedings before the Licensing Committee of the London County Council in the Clerkenwell Sessions House were not such as to make a right-minded London citizen feel at all proud. Judicial and impartial they certainly were not. The court was filled with what appeared to be the clientèle of music halls, who showed their disapproval of any adverse criticisms which were made by the opposition witnesses by contemptuous laughter, which was not checked.

Now and then a member of the Licensing Committee would address, what he considered, a crushing question to an opposition witness, and then look across to the audience as if for approval. An experienced constable at the door, accustomed to more orderly proceedings, expressed his contempt very openly for the whole business by remarking that if Sir Peter Edlin were there, "he would have the Court cleared right away." The striking variety in the newspaper reports of the same evidence shows that in many cases accuracy was not even aimed at. The omission of some damaging statements made by the opposition seems to suggest that some of the representatives of the Press were there to report only what they considered favourable to their advertising customers. This may be an ungrounded suspicion, but it is somewhat confirmed by the fact that many of the daily papers are unwilling to insert a protest against any part of the music-hall performances.

A further project is the combination of all the neighbouring Vestries to combat the flagrant immorality of the district. Such official action, if sufficiently thoroughgoing, is the best way of dealing with the existing state of things. The fight is a hard one, because of the vested interests involved.

The latest news from Uganda is eminently cheering, and seems to show that this latest of mission fields will prove to be one of the brightest. Rev. J. Roscoe, one of the C.M.S. staff in Uganda, who has recently reached England, reports the establishment of a kind of parliament in the territory, modelled on our British House of Commons. The King is said to be decidedly friendly, and his attitude towards Christianity is more favourable. In Uganda, as elsewhere, the blood of its martyred witnesses of the early days has proved the fruitful seed of a strong Christian community. For this our C.M.S. friends will thank God and take courage.

The Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice has arranged for the holding of an afternoon conference and an evening public meeting at Birmingham on Friday, November 13, in order to rouse public feeling against the attempt to reintroduce the C.D. Acts into England and India. The summons to action comes none too soon, for the danger is grave. We hope that the meeting may so alarm the whole country as to make the Government afraid of yielding to the pressure of a number of men who cannot see that the only way to destroy or minimise diseases which arise from immorality is to inculcate the practice of pure living.

We express no opinion on the main issues at stake in the approaching Presidential election in the United States. It seems certain, however, that one great cause of the social turmoil and discontent which the contest has been revealing is the ominous growth of giant business monopolies that tend to press hardly on the masses of the people and merely enrich a few. The same evil is at work in a modified form among ourselves. One manifestation of it is the injustice done to local tradesmen by the great "store" system, which enables these gigantic concerns to undersell the small trader, and thus takes the bread out of his mouth. It seems to us that Christians at any rate ought to discourage and discountenance grasping monopolies of every kind.

It appears that the low prices realised by the farmer of corn during the last few years are by no means solely due to over-production, but largely to the pernicious custom of gambling in corn options, which is the bane of that agricultural exchange. The fact that America, Austria, Belgium, Germany, and Switzerland have thought it time to take active measures to repress this evil is strong ground for our own Government to follow suit. The difficulty in the path of private reform is that in such matters the majority are in the hands of an unprincipled minority, who can defy every force except that of legal compulsion. Once their licence is restrained by law, a healthier standard has some chance of being attained.

Meanwhile we hear that there is going to be a corn famine in India, the news of which is rapidly advancing prices in America, and influencing the attitude of the farmers towards the currency question, which is the pivot of the Presidential election. Human affairs are growing more complicated, and the solidarity of the race becoming more close and vital. In older times, communities and nations were largely isolated, and could act independently of others; now they are knit together right over the world, so that trivial events in one part often affect international policies in another. There should be, corresponding to this, a deeper and wider sense of responsibility. Unfortunately, this sense always lags behind the demand for it, and grows more slowly among communities than among individuals. Apart from the Gospel there is no influence at work in this direction, and it should be the care of God's people to open channels more freely for its action.

One of the most hopeful signs of social improvement we have seen for a long time was the protest last week of a politician in Leicester against publicans being put forward as candidates for municipal honours. He affirmed that some of the contests entered upon would be hopeless except for "appeals to the worst instincts of some of the most undesirable voters." Other leading politicians have united in this spirited and high-minded protest. We have always deplored the introduction of politics into social and municipal life, being strongly of opinion that any capable, trustworthy citizen, no matter what his politics, is the right kind of person to be elected on councils and boards. The excellent example of Leicester might be copied with advantage by some other towns at the approaching municipal elections.

The ways in which Christians may make useful impressions upon the world are manifold, but none is better than by showing that they believe in the human soul. To the employer of labour a poor man may be only a machine, to a politician a voter, to a mere Socialist a human being with the wants of a mortal life, but to a Christian he should, above everything, be a fellow man with a soul. It is his spiritual condition, his spiritual possibilities, his spiritual destiny that dwells in the Christian's thought and concern. Proving that we believe in the soul we supply a powerful evidence of the reality of God also; the kingdom of the spiritual is one.

The hardship of Sunday railway labour is largely due to travelling theatrical companies proceeding from one town to another on the day of rest. A list of the companies, travelling across country in all directions, is published every week, and furnishes startling evidence of the rapid growth of this evil. On the 18th inst., for example, as many as 118 separate companies were accommodated with special trains in whole or in part, some of whom spent the whole day in transit, involving not only the railway labour, but extra provision for luncheons, dinners, and teas. This means the loss of the physical, not to speak of the spiritual, privileges of the Lord's Day, for thousands of actors and actresses, as well as enormous work for railway servants. On the Midland Railway alone something like 200 vehicles were provided for passengers, horses, scenery, luggage, etc., the week being one of the heaviest on record. Those who give attendance at the entertainments purchased at such an appalling cost, would do well to consider their complicity in upholding this cruel and pagan custom.

When Paul preached Christ crucified he knew that he was bringing a new and victorious power to bear upon men and life which would make all things new. He knew that wherever the love and righteousness which Christ crucified brought, was accepted, it would turn the recipients into holy, self-sacrificing, resolute workers and fighters for the salvation of mankind; it would affect them, in measure at least, as it had affected himself. And him, "the chief of sinners," it had made the least of all the saints and chiefest of the apostles. Men of the world, with their materialistic notions, might scorn as they liked, but he was confident that Christ crucified would prove too strong for any force that opposed Him; He was "the power of God." The cross has more power to redress the world's wrongs, to chain the world's passions, to emancipate the world's slaves of every kind, to dry up the world's sorrows, to reconcile the world's enmities, to hush the world's wars and strifes, than anything else.

It is a significant fact that the Apostle John, speaking at the close of his life, at a time when mischievous errors were already abroad, cast the responsibility of discriminating between the pure Gospel and the fungous growths that endeavoured to perpetuate themselves by association with it, on believers themselves. He instituted no Papal authority, authorised no council of the Church, drew up no elaborate statement of creeds and formularies and faith. He knew that the Gospel had been transmitted to the Church in its purity in the written Word, and that the Holy Spirit had been promised to lead Christ's people into all truth; and he knew that no power short of that outward standard, and that inner illuminating influence, could serve the purpose of preserving faith from contamination. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but prove the spirits whether they are of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world."

Learned and able divines are in danger, in their addresses to students for the ministry, of laying undue stress upon the attainment of great knowledge of things which, after all, are only ancillary to the ministry. When will any young man be ready for his work if, as a distinguished professor said the other day, he must know all philosophies before he can be a theologian? Much more was added about theology itself, about other religions, about languages, and about criticism. To insist upon such attainments, even in the way of only intending to impress young men with a sense of their ignorance, is not wise or wholesome. The knowledge of God and of his Son Jesus is the knowledge the minister needs, and the only knowledge he has been appointed to be the means of communicating to his fellow-men.

"Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer." A fine and worthy vessel will never be allowed by the Master to lie unused. The chief thing is to get the dross of sin and foolishness smelted away from the nature of every believer, and to prepare him unto good works. Conversion takes away the dross of sensual and gross sins, but the refining process is only thus begun. There remain the sins of the spirit—pride, self-sufficiency, vanity, love of praise, self-will—and not until they also are removed can a believer be a vessel meet for the highest uses of the Master.

Paul's Preaching.

THE Gospel preached at Athens was in substance from the same text as at Thessalonica, "Jesus and the resurrection"—Paul's constant theme. The Athenians did not turn away from erudition, logic, knowledge of Jewish custom and Grecian science, but from the distinctive feature of all apostolic preaching—the resurrection. "When they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked, but others said, 'We will hear thee again of this matter.'" Nevertheless, Dionysius, the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them "clave unto him." That is to say, the prominent men, the talkers, the élite, the newsmongers mocked the preacher, or put off the subject to a more convenient season; but the inconsiderable and poor people clave unto him. For to the poor the Gospel is preached. There is no reason for saying that no Church was formed at Athens, or that Paul took no care that those who clave unto him should receive further instruction, be baptized, and formed into a Church.

Nor is it correct to represent the apostle as confining his preaching at Corinth to the cross of Calvary. Jesus Christ was a risen Saviour, and to preach "Jesus Christ and Him crucified" is to preach Jesus and the Resurrection, with an especial emphasis in that proud and pleasure-loving city, on the cross of shame, where all human glory is brought to nought; and no less emphasis on the resurrection out of the death of the old creature into the life of the new. The apostle himself fully declares this Gospel to the Corinthians—that Christ died for their sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He rose on the third day, according to the Scriptures. It is in this Epistle that we have the glorious chapter which we read over the dead in Christ, in sure and certain hope of their resurrection, to their unfading and undefiled inheritance. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is never preached if it stays at Calvary. We do not preach Christ Jesus as dead, but as living—declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the resurrection from the dead. This was the Gospel of which Paul was not ashamed, because it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. M.

COVET EARNESTLY THE BEST GIFT.

The Lord and Redeemer of our souls said to his disciples, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" He that meditates often on these words, and who is more seriously concerned for the welfare of his soul than for the increase of his fortune, or for the entertainment of his body, is a merchant truly wise; for he prefers spiritual riches which perish not, to the passing goods of earth.—Thomas à Kempis.

KEEP SWEET.

There's a little sentence,
Worth its weight in gold,
Easy to remember,
Easy to be told.
Changing into blessing
Every curse we meet,
Turning hell to heaven,
This is all—"Keep sweet."

“Willing and Obedient.”

AS the knowledge of God renders it impossible to doubt his love, his grace, his wisdom, or his righteousness, so it necessarily produces obedience to his will and word. For it is by the ignorance that is in them that men are alienated from the life of God.

Let us take as examples of obedience (1), the little child Samuel, and (2) God's ideal man as symbolised in the living creatures, the cherubim.

Samuel had been trained in obedience and trustfulness by his mother, Hannah, who had asked him of God; and he obeyed Eli as he had obeyed his mother. Eli's sons knew not the Lord because they were sons of Belial. Samuel did not yet know the Lord, because his word was not yet revealed to him, but he would obey Him as soon as He was revealed to him. It was surely pleasing to God that he did not say, “Speak, Lord,” but only “Speak: for thy servant heareth.” He would not go beyond his light and knowledge. Oh the transparent simplicity of a child brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord! Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

The living creatures (Ezek. i.) came out of the whirlwind and the fire; they were of the colour of amber (like refined and transparent gold). They had the hands of a Man beneath their wings; as Jesus said, “All power is given unto me, and I am with you alway.” Their wings kissed each other, for they walk in love; they touched, but they did not overlap, for love and courtesy made them respect each other's sphere of service. They had a straight foot, and they went every one straightforward, for there is nothing crooked or perverse in wisdom's ways. Their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps, for the Word of God is a fire within their bones, and they cannot forbear to give out its heat; and they walk in the light, as He is in the light, and cannot but reflect it, for their whole body is full of light. They ran and returned like a flash of lightning, and there is nothing so effective and so instantaneous—it strikes its object and the result is immediate and complete. The noise of their wings was as the voice of speech, the voice of the Almighty, for it is his words they utter. And when they stood they let down their wings, for they do his pleasure hearkening to the voice of his word. And there was a voice from the firmament that was above their heads when they stood and let down their wings. Reverently covered and silent, they receive from the Man upon the throne the testimony that they have pleased God, and they await new commands for new obedience to his pleasure.

We naturally turn for a fulfilment of this in flesh and blood. In the Acts of the Apostles, while Philip the Evangelist was engaged in the Revival at Samaria, an angel of the Lord spake unto him, saying: “Arise, go toward the South, into the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.” The last clause seems specially intended to prove Philip, whether he would keep the commandment or no. Without doubt or question he obeyed like a flash of lightning, and intercepted the Queen's Prime Minister, in whom Ethiopia was stretching forth her hands unto God. And as he was reading a special verse in Isaiah the Prophet, the Father in heaven, through Philip, revealed to him Jesus as the suffering Messiah and the Son of God,

Thus to Africa was conveyed the good news of God, because Philip instantaneously obeyed; and, walking in the Spirit, at the pace of the Spirit's guiding, intersected the eunuch's path at the moment of the Spirit's choice. It seemed to self and sense strange and unreasonable to send the Evangelist away from fruitful Samaria to a desert road, but Philip will be glad through eternity that he did not hesitate when he was sent to reflect upon Darkest Africa that ray of light from the face of God.

Paul was desiring to continue in Asia, but the Spirit suffered him not. He obeyed the Spirit, and God gives the Spirit in increasing measure to them that obey Him. In a vision a man appears, saying, “Come over into Macedonia and help us,” and the Apostle was thus used to reveal to Europe and the Western world the mystery of the Reign of God.

It is surely worthy of note that these two great portions of the world were opened to the Gospel through the unquestioning, unhesitating, and willing obedience of Philip the Evangelist and Paul the Apostle. M.

Christ and the Church.

By MR. JAMES WRIGHT, BRISTOL.

THE Apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. iv. 1, teaches the Saints at Corinth—to account of himself and his fellow Apostles as “ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God,” adding, “it is required in a steward that he be found faithful.” In vii. 25, he declares that he had “obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.” In Eph. v. 30 to 32, we find an instance of his exercise of this faithful stewardship of the mysteries of God. He refers (v. 30) to the words spoken by the first Adam in Eden, as recorded in Gen. ii. 23, and quotes (v. 31) the utterance of God, as given us in Gen. ii. 24, as wrapping up a “great mystery” which had been hidden from ages and generations, and then in v. 32 he proceeds, by the inspiring Holy Spirit, to unfold the great mystery, by declaring that he spoke (that is, in what he had been immediately before writing) “concerning Christ and the Church.” This “great mystery” we may profitably consider in three aspects.

1. The mystery as expressing the heart of the Blessed God. When Adam was created, he found himself in an earth which God had pronounced (Gen. i. 31) “very good.” But, showing his love to and delight in the man that He had created, God selected a spot in this “very good” earth, and “planted a garden,” making it an “Eden,” a thing of beauty, a garden of delight. Still, God had further blessing in store for Adam. Amongst all the lower orders of living creatures which the Lord God brought before him, and the distinguishing characteristics of which He gave him intelligence to perceive, and unerringly to express in the “names” by which he called them, there was found “no helpmeet for him.” So the Lord God formed the woman, and brought her to the man—thus doubling his joys! The provision of a “bride”—a “wife”—for the first Adam was the utmost expression of God's love to and delight in the man.

So, in the unfolding of the “great mystery,” we are taught that the formation of the Church—the Bride, the Lamb's Wife—is the utmost expression of the love of the Eternal Father to, and of his delight in, the Eternal Son of his love. The eighth Psalm shows in prophetic vision all the earth brought into subjection to the Second Man—from Heaven! “all sheep and oxen, yea and the beasts of the field,” “all things under his feet.” But, if this were all, the crisis of Eden would be re-enacted. No helpmeet for the heavenly Man would be found. So a Church of redeemed sinners is formed, according to the eternal counsels, and given to the Son, who, “presents her to Himself, a glorious Church,” the fit sharer of his joys and rule.

II. The mystery of the formation of the Bride. The woman was not formed by a mere act of creation, but by resurrection out of death. If we had only the statements of Gen. i. 27 and v. 2, we might have supposed that Adam and Eve were formed by two simultaneous creative acts; but Gen. ii. 21, 22 presents us in detail with God's wondrous way of working. He caused a “deep sleep”—(a figurative death) to fall upon Adam, and he “slept”—(figuratively died), and the woman is “taken out of the man”—while thus passing through (figurative) death! So, the unfolded “great mystery” reveals the Church obtaining her life through the death of her Lord. She lives eternally because He died! “In Him we have redemption through his blood.” “Who died for us that...we should live together with Him.”

III. The mystery of the marital union. The beautiful narrative in the book of Ruth, as a commentary upon the word “Redemption,” has a striking bearing upon this subject. Boaz, the mighty man of wealth, not only redeemed the forfeited inheritance of Elimelech, but he “purchased Ruth—the Moabitess”—the one who by birth was “an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, a stranger to the covenant of promise”—he “purchased her to be his wife.” So in this unfolding of the “great mystery” we are met with the astounding revelation of God's grace in the statement in Rom. vii. 4: That believers (the Church) are “married to Him who is raised from the dead”; and in 1 Cor. vi. 17 they are “joined unto the Lord one spirit.” Christ not only redeemed our heavenly inheritance—forfeited by our sins, but he purchased us with his own blood!

If Ruth should ever have known a passing doubt as to her right to Elimelech's land, she had only to look into the face of her Boaz to be abundantly assured. Had he not purchased herself to be his wife? Was she not his, and he hers? If any believer experiences a passing fear as to his certainly entering upon possession of his heavenly inheritance, ought not one look into the face of his Lord to be enough to set his soul at rest?

God is a God of order. He will put all things in subjection under his beloved Son—the Son of Man, and therefore under the Church, who will be associated with Him in his kingly rule. Christ “must reign” (and his Church with Him) until He has put all enemies under his feet. But the Church, who will reign, as the Lamb's wife, is herself subject unto Christ as her Lord. Then, when all things shall be subdued unto Him (and unto the Church, as sharing his rule), then shall the Son (and the Church as reigning with Him) be subject unto Him who put all things under Him, that God may be all in all!

This is the vista of his eternal glory, to which the God of all grace has called us. How are our hearts affected in relation to this Divine, eternal purpose?

1. Have we all submitted ourselves to the righteousness of God, by trusting in Christ for salvation?

2. If believers, are we “subject to Christ?” really owning Him as Lord, so that, whether we live, we live unto the Lord, or whether we die, we die unto the Lord?

If so, we may truly say, “For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain!”

"At all Times."

A GOLDEN CHAIN OF FOUR LINKS.

By DAVID BARON.

(Concluded.)

III. The words "at all times" occur in Relation to Practical Righteousness. "Blessed are they that keep judgment and he that doeth righteousness at all times" (Ps. cvi. 3). There is a special beatitude attached to this "at all times." It is well to know the will of our Lord and Master, but blessed are we if we do it (John xiii. 17).

He that doeth righteousness "at all times." Would that these words might indeed be written over the life of every Christian! Would that every disciple of Christ might remember that he is required by his great Master strictly and honestly to apply the principle of righteousness in all his relations, in his home, in the Church, and in the world! Then, indeed, the Church of God would be, not only blessed, but a blessing in the midst of the earth. Then, indeed, instead of giving the enemies of Christ occasion to blaspheme by pointing to the unrighteous ways and entanglements of some who profess to be followers of "Jesus Christ the Righteous," men would see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven. It is comparatively easy to do righteousness sometimes, when nothing is at stake, but God's standard is righteousness "at all times," and at any cost, even when it involves persecution and loss.

We are indeed justified by faith, and saved only and alone by grace, yet it is well to be reminded that it is by the practical carrying out in our daily life of the Divinely revealed principle of righteousness, that we make it manifest that we are born of God, and that there is any likeness between us and our glorious Lord, who is distinguished above all as "He who loveth righteousness and hateth wickedness" (1 John iii. 7).

God helps us, therefore, as Christians to be different from men of the world, who, seeking their portion in this life, greedily follow after gain, to fill their bellies with the hid treasures of the earth (Ps. xv. 14). Rather may we follow after righteousness and godliness "at all times," and in all things, until by his grace we shall "behold his face in righteousness, and awake in his likeness," to receive from Him the "crown of righteousness" which He, as the Righteous Judge, will give unto us at that day, and not unto us only, but unto all them that love his appearing.

IV. Again, these words, "at all times," occur in Relation to Praise. "I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be found in my mouth" (Ps. xxxiv. 1). This is a most noble resolution; but in its practical carrying out there is perhaps no point in which we so notoriously fail. It is even than to bless the Lord at all times; because in prayer we are still in some degree centred on self, whilst in true praise we must say to self, "Stay thou altogether here, whilst with a heart freed from self, I ascend the mount of God to 'make his praise glorious.'"

Then, again, by reason of our moral and physical infirmities we are continually reminded of our need, and consider that we have always cause and matter for prayer, whilst it is only a heart wholly fixed on God, and a truly enlightened spiritual vision that sees cause and matter for praise "at all times."

Of course the coldest-hearted Christian feels constrained to bless and praise God sometimes, when, according to our short-sighted estimation of things, everything goes well with us, or when we receive some special good at his hand, but the ideal condition of blessedness, and the standard for each of God's dear children, who have known and proved "what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God," is not only to pray without ceasing, but always and in everything (Eph. v. 20; 1 Thess. v. 18), to give thanks unto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us.

Oh, if we would but always dwell in the light of his presence, and, lifted out of our narrow and selfish selves, with unveiled face behold Him who is glorious in Holiness, fearful in praise, doing wonders! Oh, if we would but always keep in mind the character of "the God we adore"—his eternal power and godhead, his infinite wisdom, love and condescension—we would not be able to restrain ourselves. Our mouths unceasingly would "praise Him with joyful lips." With David we would sing, "I will extol Thee my God, O King, and I will bless thy name for ever and ever; every day will I bless Thee, and I will praise thy name for ever and ever; for great is Jehovah and greatly to be praised, and his greatness is unsearchable."

Then, passing from what He is, to what He does, if we would but always remember "the multitude of his lovingkindnesses," and enumerate even some of his mercies; "forgiving all our iniquity, healing all our diseases, redeeming our life from destruction, and crowning us with loving kindness and tender mercies"; how that He giveth to all his children grace, and causeth even their sorrows and troubles to work together for their good, and to prepare them for that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" hereafter—we should then be continually stirring up our soul, and all that is within us, to bless and praise his holy Name. God grant that we may be able to carry out this good resolution, and, turning it into a constant characteristic of our life's experience, say, "I do bless the Lord at all times: his praise is continually found in my mouth!"

A little golden chain of four links—the Word of God, Faith, Righteousness, and Praise—on each of which is engraven the two little Hebrew words, Bekhol Eth—"at all times." Let me now show how beautifully the four links are joined one to the other.

(a) Holy Scripture is the ground of faith, and when applied to the heart by the Spirit of God, it is the cause of faith, for "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." "Faith," as Dr. Adolph Saphir once beautifully said, "is the echo of the Word of God in the soul of man," and God must come first with his self-revelation before man can open his heart and respond. "I know whom I have believed," says the Apostle, "and am persuaded that He is able," and it is ever so, we must know Him before we can trust Him, and the better our knowledge of Him, the more perfect our trust.

But how can I know Him? Can I by searching find out God? He must reveal Himself. And now, as in ages past, "by the Word of the Lord" (1 Sam. ii. 21). Again, David says, "And they that know thy name shall put their trust in Thee; for Thou, Jehovah, hast not forsaken them that seek Thee." But how can I know his Name? The heavens declare his glory; the firmament sheweth forth his handiwork; creation uttereth loud speech, telling forth his power, his wisdom, his beneficence, but neither in the starry heavens above, nor in the deep places of the earth, is the name "Jehovah" spelt, but alone on the pages of his Word, which will abide when heaven and earth are dissolved. It is on the page of Scripture that his goodness is made to pass before us, and where the Holy Spirit proclaims to us the wonderful name "Jehovah-Jesus"—"God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." Knowing Him thus, we put our trust in Him.

(b). Now, just as the Word of God originates and nourishes faith, and we must have an "at all times" longing for his judgments, if our trust in Him is to be "at all times," so, in its turn, it is a strong faith, based on the Word, which alone will enable us to "do righteousness at all times." It was through faith that God's heroes in ages past "wrought righteousness" (Heb. xi. 33). By faith we exchange the things seen for the things not seen, and are able to see the great gain there is in the doing righteousness "at all times," though it may involve present suffering and loss, even as Moses, who chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, because "by faith" he had respect unto the recompense of the reward.

(c). Finally, it is only by way of the three preceding links that we arrive at the most blessed condition of praising God "at all times." The man who cannot trust God at all times certainly cannot praise Him at all times. Only faith knows that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Apart from faith, and the hope held out to us in God's Word, there are experiences in our lives, which are so dark, that we could not possibly praise God for them; but by faith we look not at things which are seen, but at things which are not seen, and faith already turns into concrete substance and reality the things as yet only hoped for; so that even in the darkest days of tribulation, and while still in the vale of tears, "we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." By faith we are enabled, not only when He giveth, but also when "He taketh away," to say, "Blessed be the name of Jehovah."

So also must we do righteousness at all times, if God's praise is to be in our hearts and on our lips at all times. Every Christian knows that it is not trial or affliction, but sin, which shuts his lips so that his mouth cannot show forth God's praise. "Praise is comely for the upright"; let us therefore remember that before we can offer our holy God the "sacrifices of thanksgiving" (Ps. cvii. 22), our hands must be clean, and we must offer unto Him "the sacrifices of righteousness" (Ps. iv. 5). He who would offer praise of a kind that shall truly glorify God must take heed at the same time to "order his conversation," or "dispose his way" aright, and such an one shall see the salvation of God.

Cross-bearing.

BIBLE READING BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

IN spite of the dense crowds assembled in Trafalgar-square on Wednesday week in celebration of Trafalgar Day, the hall at the N.E. corner of the square was crowded by a quiet, earnest company, all forgetful of the excitement outside.

Mr. Brooke began his Bible reading by recalling the last two lectures and showing that the third condition of discipleship as stated in Luke xiv. 27 and the parallel passages in the synoptical Gospels is cross-bearing. "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after Me cannot be my disciple." After examining the meanings of the word "bear" in the New Testament, Mr. Brooke went on to call attention to John xix. 17—"And He bearing his cross," endeavouring to elucidate what "bearing his cross" meant to Jesus. In the eyes of the beholders, it meant that He was going to a shameful death as one not fit to live. A careful study of Acts shows that the primitive disciples, and in particular Paul, took just such a position—in the eyes of men they seemed not fit to live. And this is exactly what the Lord Jesus Christ intimated to his disciples, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you...for my sake."

A comparison with Heb. xiii. 13 leads to the conclusion that to bear the cross of Christ is to suffer reproach for Him. If we wish to know what reproach really meant to our Lord let us ponder Ps. lxxix. 7, 9, and 10, remembering that if we go after Him and be where He is we will receive the same treatment. Many consider their cross to be such things as poverty, sickness, uncongenial relatives, hasty temper (a crime, not a cross); but a cross has to be accepted or declined, and none of these things are optional. The reproach of Christ is to be shamefully treated for his sake, to be consumed with zeal, to be grieved for the sake of sin. This is cross-bearing. Like Moses, let us "esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, having respect to the recompense of the reward."

Te Deum Laudamus.

WHEN song-birds wake the slumbering morn,
And violets scent the mossy dell,
Each heart that welcomes spring's return
Exclaims "He doeth all things well."

When summer weaves her leafy crown,
And sunlit waves their chorus swell,
Each prattling brook that sparkles down,
Seems singing "He doth all things well."

When cornfields wave and orchards glow,
And dancing leaves the season tell,
The dulcet hearts are taught to know
Our Maker hath done all things well.

And e'en through winter's icy reign,
When snow-storms sweep o'er vale and fell,
We dare not cease the sweet refrain,
"Our Father doeth all things well."

When blessings fall like summer rain,
Or round us whizz the darts of hell,
Oh! may this thought our souls sustain,
Our Saviour doeth all things well.

And last when awe-struck millions hear
The tramp that sounds Creation's knell,
All heaven will shout in accents clear,
"Jehovah hath done all things well."

Transformation:

A STORY OF THE HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

A FEW years ago, in a well-known country town, lived a family whom we will call the Ashdowns. They were quite of the middle-class, and never wished to be considered anything higher. But John, the eldest son, showed such a promise of talent in the advanced sciences, that those who understood these matters predicted great things for him.

"He will one day make a European reputation," was said. Already his solution of some problems, his notes upon various scientific discoveries, and the fresh light he had thrown upon many debated questions, had won for him a sure, if modest, fame.

One day John was meditating, on the road to Dorking, when a quietly-dressed man put a little paper into his hand. John looked up at the intrusive stranger, and said—

"I fear this is of no use to me, sir. These things have no force in them—they never convince; their logic is so weak that—"

"The wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein," quoted the stranger; and without waiting for a reply, he went.

"Here, sir!" shouted John, looking terribly annoyed, "take your sheet of print—I do not want it. Bother!"

For the stranger was out of sight, and John stood staring at the paper until his eyes caught the words, "A Miracle." He went to the roadside, and, thrusting the paper through a hedge, felt, strangely enough, that it was taken from his hand. "That's odd!" said he, "some workman or farmer on the other side evidently wants it more than I do. I suppose the man who gave it to me thought me rather weak to condemn a thing I had never looked at. Well, it is no matter."

With John Ashdown everything was regarded from a purely scientific standpoint; he fancied he could give a reason, a scientific explanation even of miracles; yet the title of the paper, "A Miracle," kept recurring to him, and he began to wonder if his cold, merely logical way of treating such questions was, after all, the best.

"After all is said and done, what is a miracle?" he asked himself. "However, I need not trouble about such things."

A few days after this a little girl, a young cousin of the Ashdown family, came to stay with them for a few weeks for the benefit of her health after an illness.

She conceived a great regard for her cousin John, and on the first Sunday of her stay in the country she said to him—

"I shall do whatever you do: if you stay at home, so will I; but I would rather go to church if I may sit by you."

To please Ruby, John went to church—not for the first time, but for the first time in many years. Just when he was thinking that in a few minutes' time he should be on his way home, the clergyman said—

"Every miracle is a transformation, whether it be wrought upon the imprisoned drop of water which becomes a diamond; or upon the corrupt soul of man which, at the touch of Christ, becomes a new creation in Him."

"Strange," mused John aloud, as he and his little cousin walked home, "that that man should have spoken of miracles. Ruby, do you know what the sermon was about?" he asked.

"Yes, it was about Jesus giving sight to the blind beggar who sat by the wayside," said Ruby. "That was a miracle, was it not?" she asked. "Why are there no miracles now, cousin?"

"I think there are," said John, "only we must have eyes to see them, you know."

"Have you ever seen a miracle, cousin John?"

"Yes," said John; "when the dry branches burst into leaf; when a little blossom becomes a large fruit; when the sun warms a little dry seed into life in the earth, so that by-and-by it becomes the spreading oak tree—these are miracles."

"No, I mean a true one out of the Bible," said Ruby.

"No, for Jesus lived hundreds of years before I was born," said John.

"Is Jesus dead, then, cousin?" asked Ruby, in a disappointed tone.

The man of science could find no answer to this question. "I think your Aunt could tell you that better than I," he said. John revered his mother, and respected her piety.

In the summer, when John went for his holiday, he was engaged to read a paper before a holiday gathering. He chose as his subject, "The Miraculous in Nature." "You spoke so beautifully," said a lady to him afterwards, "that I should like to hear you on the miraculous in grace." "That is beyond me," John replied, "I can only speak on what I know." A clergyman in the party, however, made this the subject of his next lecture, and John felt he had left so much ground uncovered that he resolved to look into it for himself.

You can see how God was gradually leading the young man of science into the truths and beauties of the religion of Christ. He became an enquirer; he read the four Gospels, and found in them the fascination of "the power of an endless life"—the life of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world.

His mother was praising God for what she could not help seeing. "He is being drawn to God," she said. "I notice that so many things are different in him. Yes, and things that accompany salvation are taking their place."

"Mother," he one day said to her, "I know you believe in the power of prayer. Have you ever had any answer to your prayers?"

"Many, dear John. And I am even now looking for an answer to a prayer I have prayed for many years. I know it will come," she replied.

"Many years is a long time, mother! But, just now, will you pray for me? I feel that I need your prayers, and you will know what to ask, dear." Then he hurried from the room. His mother smiled through her tears.

"Dear Lord!" she cried, "he will be thine, and Thou art rejoicing that another wanderer has turned back unto Thee."

Four years later, and Christmas morning, and Rev. John Ashdown is to preach on "The Miracle of Grace." His mother is there, and there is no happier woman on God's earth, for she knows that out of much darkness and sorrow the preacher emerged into the light of Christ, and that he is his tried and trusty servant.

John tells the people his own story without telling them that it is his. He speaks of a man proud of his talents, ignoring God, and seeking to prove by all his actions that Nature alone is supreme.

"That man," he continued, "was arrested by a word printed on a piece of paper put into his hand one day by a stranger."

He told how the man had, later on, been offered a high position in a department of science, but that the voice of Christ, calling him to Himself, had prevailed, and he had renounced science, and had become a humble Christian—a child in the school of God.

"Every regenerated soul is a miracle," said the preacher, "a new creature, 'transformed by the renewing of the mind,' an heir to eternal life through the salvation of Jesus Christ."

On his way home John was stopped by an old countryman who was waiting for him.

"Ah, you never spoke truer words than you did to-day, sir! Grace is a miracle. You see before you, sir, one who was brought to Christ by a real miracle—a miracle like those in the Bible."

"Indeed!" said the clergyman. "Can you tell me what took place?"

"Yes, sir. I was sitting in a field, eating my dinner and full of bad thoughts about everything, when the Almighty God sent his angel with a message to me straight from heaven. A hand came through the hedge with a little paper and my eye caught the words, 'A Miracle.' John's eyes were wide open now—had he been God's angel that day?"

"Yes," said he, "and was it in such a year at such and such a part of the road, not many miles from Dorking?"

"Why, yes, sir! But how do 'ee know?" asked the man.

"Because mine was the hand that unconsciously put that tract into yours," said the clergyman with awe. "Truly, his ways are wonderful!"

"Well, sir, 'tis a real miracle for you and me," said the man. "That tract showed me I was a sinner. I was sent to the Bible to find the Saviour, and here I am to-day, sir, a sinner saved by the miracle of grace."

"Amen!" said John, "and to think we should have met to-day. I do not think I shall ever forget this gloriously happy Christmas." M. B. GERDS.

Our Soldiers in India.

IT is impossible, in a few lines, to describe the lonely, tempted lives our 60,000 British soldiers lead in India, the vast field there is for work amongst them, and the influence for good these men might be amongst the heathen were they themselves serving Christ. I long to press forward in the glorious work of trying to win our soldiers in India for Christ, and I believe that many would be willing to help me if they only knew of the need—many who have tender and sacred memories connected with the far East.

My co-worker, Miss Ashe, established our first Soldiers' Home in India at Rawal Pindi, in January 1895. There is a garrison of some 5000 British soldiers at Rawal Pindi, and the attendance quickly outgrew the bungalow in which she started work. Now a most suitable Home is being built on a site granted to us through the kindness of the military authorities at Rawal Pindi. Miss Ashe hopes to be at work in this new Home by Christmas. I am most anxious that it should be opened free of debt, but in order to do this I still need about £400.

Not far from Rawal Pindi lie the Murree Hills, where large numbers of our soldiers are sent from the plains each summer. General Sir William Lockhart, who commands the forces in the Punjab, has obtained a lovely site on which to build a home at Murree, and Lady Lockhart has guaranteed to raise 4000 rupees on condition that I collect 8000 rupees (about £540) for this Home. Murree is a very important centre for work, so many regiments can be reached there; and in addition to the coffee-room, reading-room, and meeting-room, which are at present being built, we hope later on to add dormitories to our Murree Home for soldiers on furlough.

How keenly our soldiers at home would feel it if they could not have their month or six weeks' leave once a year. Yet in India they soldier on year after year without a furlough, not because they cannot get it, but because it does not seem worth while to take it when they can only go from barrack-room life in one station to barrack-room life in another. Think of what a cheer it would be to lonely, isolated Christian soldiers, scattered all over India, to have a Christian home to which they could come once a year. And think of what a glorious opportunity it would be of winning the hearts of unsaved men for Christ, and sending them back to their different stations true missionaries amongst their comrades and amongst the heathen.

Miss Ashe writes:—"More and more the conviction grows upon me that it is the monotony and the intense loneliness of a soldier's life out here which drives him into sin. In barracks there is nothing to give him a real touch of home life, or to make him feel that in all this vast land there is anyone who takes a personal interest in him. I do not think I shall ever forget going round the three military hospitals at Rawal Pindi on Christmas morning. As I walked through the special ward the occupant of nearly every bed was either unconscious or delirious. By New Year's Day ten of them had passed into eternity; dying alone in India, most of them wrecked lives, and each one some poor mother's son."

If it were our own son or brother who was away in the far East, friendless, alone, and sorely tempted, would we not long to have a helping hand stretched out to him? Or, if he were dying alone in some military hospital, would we not like to know that a kind, motherly, Christian woman visited him continually, comforting him with tenderest sympathy, and pointing him to the great Saviour? May I not then plead earnestly with you to help me, and to help me speedily to press forward in our great effort of trying to save the souls and bodies of these tempted men.

Canine and Human Madness.—The Animals' Friend for October (1d. 20, Victoria-street, S.W.) contains a very readable article on the Buisson treatment of hydrophobia, with a portrait of Captain F. E. Pirkie, of Nutfield, Surrey, its diligent advocate in Great Britain. This system dispenses with the Pasteur treatment, with its cruelties and failures, the cure being effected by the application of vapour baths. We observe that a Buisson Institute has been founded at Spring Grove House, Upper Norwood, S.E., under the care of an experienced medical practitioner.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

* * We receive so many letters expressing appreciation of these daily notes that, acting on the suggestion of an enthusiastic reader, we shall be pleased to forward reprints of this week's page, post free, to any of our readers who would like to post them to their friends in the desire to bring the Homily under their notice. The commencement of the Psalms next month forms a favourable opportunity for this. All wishing to join the Bible and Prayer Union (concurrently with whose Readings these notes run) should write for card of membership to Rev. Thos. Richardson, St. Benet's, Stepney, London, E.

"THERE IS A SPIRIT IN MAN, AND THE BREATH OF THE ALMIGHTY GIVETH THEM UNDERSTANDING."—

Job xxxii. 8.

ELIHU had waited whilst the three elder men said all that was in their hearts. He now excuses his youth and demands audience, because so conscious that the breath of inspiration had entered his soul. Wisdom is not with age; but wherever the heart is freely open to God, He will make it wise. We have received not the spirit which is of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know.

George Fox tells us that though he read the Scriptures which spoke of Christ and of God, yet he knew Him not till He who had the key did open. "Then the Lord gently led me along and let me see his love, which was endless and eternal, surpassing all the knowledge that men have in the natural state, or can get by history or books. I had not fellowship with any people, priests or professors, but with Christ, who hath the key, and opened the door of life and light unto me. His one message was the necessity of the Inner Light, the inward witness of the Spirit, his secret revelations of truth to the soul."

This distinction needs to be deeply pondered. We have been trying to know God by the intellect, by reading the Bible intellectually, by endeavouring to apprehend human systems. There is, however, a deeper and truer method. "There is a spirit in man!" Open your spirit to the Divine Spirit as you open a window to the sunny air. Instantly God enters and fills. The Spirit witnesses with our spirit. The inbreathed life of God gives us light. We know by intuition, by fellowship with God, by direct vision, more than the wise of this world.

"IF THERE BE WITH HIM A MESSENGER, AN INTERPRETER."—Job xxxiii. 23.

God is greater than man, and by his love seeks to hold man back from his purpose. Sometimes He comes in the visions of the night, sometimes in pain and sickness. But we are too dull to understand the inner reason of God's endeavours to deliver us from the brink of destruction, and therefore we need an interpreter, one among a thousand, to explain the meaning of his dealings, and to show us the way in which we should amend our ways. How often has the sick visitor, the minister, the friend, interpreted God's purpose, enabling us to see light in his light. There are few higher offices in this world than to act in this way between God and our fellows.

To perform this function, however, we need to understand two languages; the one of the throne obtained from deep and intimate converse with our Father, the other is our native language of pain and sorrow. Each must be spoken perfectly before we can interpret:—

"And to the height of this great argument
Assert eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to man."

But, as Bunyan truly says, the best Interpreter is the Holy Spirit. As soon as the Pilgrim has passed the Wicket-gate, he is conducted through the Interpreter's House by the Interpreter Himself. Are you perplexed as to the meaning of God's word, the dealings of God's Providence, the mystery of God's moral government? Ask the Holy Spirit to interpret for you, and show God's uprightness.

[1861]

"THE EAR TRIETH WORDS, AS THE PALATE TASTETH MEAT."—Job xxxiv. 3.

At the door of our digestive system stands an ever-watchful janitor, tasting every substance that enters, passing much, but always prepared to reject what is unwholesome and deleterious to health. We should often swallow hurtful things that might breed disease and death, if it were not for this useful and divinely-given sense. What the palate is to the body, the ear, Elihu says, is to the soul. In a moment we can tell whether words read or spoken are wholesome or not.

What a proof this is of inspiration. We may not be able to define in so many words what we mean when we say that the Bible is inspired as no other book is; but the ear detects a Divine accent and quality, which assures it instantly that every word deserves to be received with thanksgiving, as wholesome, nutritious, and life-sustaining, and specially of God.

What a test this is to literature generally. There is plenty published in the present day which is mere garbage, offal, husks fit only for swine. Directly we read the ear assures us that its consumption will injure us. Let us turn away with nausea, and eject with holy disgust.

The ear is capable of being rendered exquisitely sensitive to the slightest variation between the voice and its accompaniment. Oh, for similar delicacy to detect words which are not in perfect harmony with truth, purity, and charity.

"NONE SAITH, WHERE IS GOD MY MAKER, WHO GIVETH SONGS IN THE NIGHT?"—Job. xxxv. 10.

Do you have sleepless nights, tossing on the hot pillow, and watching for the first glint of dawn? Ask the Divine Spirit to enable you to fix your thoughts on God, your Maker, and believe that He can fill those lonely, dreary hours with song.

Is yours the night of doubt? A holy man tells us that once as he was sitting by the fire, a great cloud came over him, and a temptation beset him to think that all things came by nature, and as he sat still under it, and let it alone, a living hope arose in him, and a true voice said, "There is a living God who made all things." And immediately the cloud and temptation vanished away, and life rose over it all. His heart was glad, and he praised the living God. Was not this a song in the night?

Is yours the night of bereavement? Is it not often to such God draws near, and assures the mourner that the Lord had need of its beloved, and called "the eager, earnest spirit to stand in the bright throng of the invisible, liberated, radiant, active, intent on some high mission"; and as the thought enters, is there not the beginning of a song?

Is yours the night of discouragement and fancied or actual failure? No one understands you, your friends reproach, but your Maker draws nigh, and gives you a song—the song of hope, the song which is harmonious with the strong, deep music of his providence. Be ready to sing the songs that your Maker gives.

THURSDAY, November 5.

"BEHOLD, GOD IS MIGHTY, AND DESPISETH NOT ANY."—Job. xxxvi. 5.

What entrancing assurances are contained in this and the preceding sentence! To think that in all our wayfarings through this world One that is perfect in knowledge is always with us, and One that is mighty is pledged to bring us through. Nothing could be desired beside. This makes prayer new. It is a child's confidential whisper to the One who is attent to the lowest murmur, who cannot forget, who will not relinquish a purpose which He has formed though years pass, and who is able to do exceeding abundantly.

It is because God is so great that He despises none. If He were less than infinite, He might overlook. The boundlessness of his being has no ebb, fails of no soul He has made, and is as much at any one point as if He had no care or thought beside. In fact, those that man despises stand the best chance with God. Just because no one else cares for them He must; just because no one else will help them He will. This is necessary to his nature.

When a philanthropist adopts a certain lapsed section of the community, he does so because no one else will. It becomes a matter of honour with him that none of these, outcast by all else, should miss his help. And God has constituted Himself Champion, Guardian, and Saviour of all who have no help from their fellows. Friendless, forlorn, helpless, despised, He recognises and meets the claim of their urgent necessity.

FRIDAY, November 6.

"MEN SEE NOT THE BRIGHT LIGHT WHICH IS IN THE CLOUDS."—Job xxxvii. 21.

The world owes much of its beauty to cloudland. The unchanging blue of the Italian sky hardly compensates for the changefulness and glory of the clouds. Clouds also are the cisterns of the rain—Earth would become a wilderness apart from their ministry. There are clouds in human life, shadowing, refreshing, and sometimes draping it in blackness of night, but there is never a cloud without its bright light. "Behold, I do set my bow in the cloud!"

If only we could see the clouds from the other side where they lie in billowy glory, bathed in the light they intercept, like heaped ranges of Alps, we should be amazed at their splendid magnificence. We look at their under side, but who shall describe the bright light that bathes their summits, and searches their valleys, and is reflected from every part of their expanse? Is not every drop drinking in health-giving qualities, which it will presently bring to ground?

Oh, child of God! If you could see your sorrows and troubles from the other side; if instead of looking up at them from earth, you would look down on them from the heavenly places where you sit with Christ; if you knew how they are reflecting in prismatic beauty before the gaze of heaven, the bright light of Christ's face; you would be content that they should cast their deep shadows over the mountain slopes of existence. Only remember that clouds are always moving, and passing before God's cleansing wind. "Bright skies will soon be o'er me, where the dark clouds have been."

SATURDAY, November 7.

"CANST THOU BIND THE CLUSTER OF THE PLEIADES?"—Job xxxviii. 31.

The seven stars of the Pleiades always stand for the sweet influences of spring; Orion for the storm and tempest. In this sublime catechism, Jehovah asks Job if he has any control over the one or the other. As it is with the year, so with our life.

There are times when the PLEIADES are in the ascendant. The winter is over and gone, the time of the singing of birds is come. Doves coo their love notes in the trees, and the flowers gem the soil. Days of hope, of radiant light, of ecstatic joy! Days in which God seems to be making a new heaven, and a new earth within us! Days when our Beloved shows Himself through the lattice-work, and says, "Come, my beloved!" Oh, tender influences of the Pleiades, we would that ye might ever stay, filling us with immortal youth! When God bids them shine no one can bind them. When He gives joy, none can give sorrow. No mortal man can restrain the outburst of Nature's spring. You might as well stay the resurrection of the Son of God and his saints!

But Orion has his work as well. Storms come; the drenching rain veils the landscape; the mighty billows are lashed to fury. But all works for good. The blast in the forest snaps off dead wood. The rain fills up the wells. Frost pulverises the earth. When God binds Orion, man cannot unloose him, "no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." But when the Almighty unlooses Orion, like another Samson, He does his work of devastation, before which we must find refuge in the cleft of the rock.

Anah, the Ass-Keeper.

By REV. CHARLES BROWN, Hornsey.

This is Anah who found the hot-springs in the wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father.—Gen. xxxvi. 24, R.V.

I DARE SAY Anah is a perfect stranger to most of my young friends. He was a stranger to me until recently. One day, as he was keeping asses in the wilderness, he made a most valuable discovery, through which he became quite famous.

Now I am interested in Anah, first of all because he had very ordinary duties to perform when he was young, quite as ordinary as any of ours. His business was to see that none of the animals were lost, and that they found the best pasture possible. Sometimes the silence and the loneliness would be almost unbearable; perhaps now and then he might be favoured with a view of a caravan of merchants, with their camels and huge bundles, passing in the distance, but you may be sure that he spent whole days and weeks without seeing a soul—with no company but his father's asses. Now, most of us like company, and should probably be perfectly miserable to see no one all day, and have to guess the time by the sun, to be alone among rocks and caves when the sun set and darkness fell—why, we should want to run away to the first village or city to find someone to speak to. Yet we have no sign that Anah grew weary of his work; apparently he did it patiently, thoroughly, and I think cheerfully too.

Now, I should be very sorry to discourage anybody who is dreaming dreams and seeing visions about a great future for himself—a future in which he is going to be something and somebody; dreams of future excellence and greatness are good and not bad. Anah, the ass-keeper, became famous as the well-finder, only let us remember that he kept his father's asses first. So, too, the first thing we have to do is to get up at the right time in the morning, to be in time for school—to do thoroughly the ordinary lessons or duties of the day. You must for the present perform ordinary duties. Do not complain if they are difficult, but seek strength to do them faithfully and well.

I am interested in Anah, secondly, because he did this lowly and uninteresting work for his father. In the times and the country in which Anah lived filial duty was practised a good deal more than it is now-a-days. The son was the father's servant very often, and was expected to do all kinds of drudgery. The father was a kind of king among his sons, not only in their childhood, but after they grew up and married too.

It would be a good thing if we could remember and realise something of what we owe to our parents. Some young people think themselves a great deal cleverer than their father and mother, and perhaps some of them really ought to be, for they have had many more advantages. But, however clever a boy or girl may be, it is very mean and detestable to scorn parental authority, to rebel against their father's wish or their mother's advice. Many of them would never have lived long enough to be clever if their mother had not denied herself of many a day's pleasure, and many a night's rest, in order that they might be properly cared for; and they would never have had the books and the comforts and advantages which they enjoy to-day, if years ago their parents had not stinted themselves in lots of ways for their sakes. So whatever you do for them, you can never do half as much as they have done for you.

It is a splendid thing when a young fellow stands up for his parents, and will do what he can to help and comfort them. Above all, remember that parental authority is ordained by God, who said, "Honour thy father and thy mother," and "Children, obey your parents"; and when anyone is daring enough to slight the law of God, it is a thing to be ashamed of and sorry for, and not to boast of.

I have an idea that Anah was proud to do his lonely and humble work because he was doing it for his father, and he would have a deeper interest in it than if he had been doing it for anyone else in the world.

Then, thirdly, I find that while Anah was doing his duty to his father he made a great discovery. He found the hot-springs in the wilderness. Doubtless there were great healing and medicinal properties in these springs, and many disorders can be cured by such means better than by any other. We are told in another place that Anah was called "Beeri," the "well-finder" or "the man of springs"; so it is evident that this was an important discovery, and that by it Anah became a benefactor to his fellow-men. We may be sure that Anah is not put into the Bible for his own sake, or as a reward for himself, but for the encouragement and instruction of those who should read about him, Let Anah, therefore, be our teacher, and we learn:—

(1) That the greatest and most valuable discoveries in life are made by those who do thoroughly their daily, simple duty. Those who will not do lowly tasks, who are always looking for something very great and will do nothing if they cannot do that, never discover anything worth discovering. Those who will begin at the top, often end at the bottom; but those who say, "We don't mind what we do if it is right and honest and useful," and who do it with all their heart, become trusted by and by to do great and honourable things.

Many of the men described in the Bible who were called to fill the highest posts were doing very ordinary work. Moses was keeping the flock of Jethro, when he saw the burning bush and heard the call of God. Gideon was threshing wheat, when the angel called him to a deed which made him immortal. David kept his father's sheep before he was called forth and anointed king. Elisha was ploughing in a field, when he received the summons to succeed Elijah as the prophet of Jehovah to Israel. John and James, the sons of Zebedee, were mending their fishermen's nets when Jesus invited them to become his disciples.

And if we read the lives of many eminent men in modern times we find that in early life they performed lowly duties and moved in humble spheres; and often, while doing some trivial thing, they made a great discovery. Hugh Miller, the celebrated geologist, was a simple workman, and it was while working as a labourer in a quarry that he discovered the fossils which started him on his eminent career. Generally speaking, idle people who scorn what is lowly never find anything worth finding. If men—or boys and girls—are not content to do little things well to begin with, they are not fit afterwards to do greater things, and they rarely find them.

(2) Let Anah teach us also that people who are willing to do lowly and simple duties will confer benefits and blessings upon others. Even though we may not make any great discovery, yet if we do heartily and thoroughly whatever duty comes to our hand, we shall be of some use in the great world, and someone will be the better for our having lived. Better still, the eye of God, the great Task-master, is upon all who are living thus; and if they find nothing else, they find his favour, which the Psalmist says is "better than life."

People are wanted everywhere who will do common things well—who would rather keep asses in a wilderness, and thus be useful, than waste their time in idly waiting and longing for some great thing to do, or live a showy and useless life. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." Then at last Jesus will say to you, "Well done, good and faithful servant! thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A Word to Boys.

Two boys named Harry and Tom were playing about in school, and in jumping over the master's desk Harry accidentally upset the ink over the books and papers. He was very much frightened, and said, "I shan't tell, and don't you, Tom." Presently all the boys assembled and the master came in. Directly he saw the books and papers he called out, "Who has upset the ink?" Silence. Again he spoke, but no one answered. "Now, boys," he said, "I will find out who made this mess, so you had better confess." He looked at all the boys, and Tom became very red in the face. "Was it you, Tom?" "No, sir." "I am afraid you are telling me a lie, and I shall thrash you." And he did, most severely. Tom bore it unflinchingly, knowing that he was innocent, while Harry sat and saw poor Tom having the punishment he himself so richly deserved.

Now, boys, let me beg of you that whenever you do wrong own it, and be brave and true. God knows when man does not, and we are accountable to Him. Do the right, and right will prevail. M. A. W.

Personal.

I HAVE been as disappointed as many of my young friends at the unavoidable delay in their receiving the prizes and certificates. I hope, however, that all will have been delivered some days before these lines are read, and that the pains taken to make them attractive will compensate for the anxiety.

The Swallows.

How I love to watch the swallows,
Mother, as they come and go,
'Twixt the shadows and the sunshine
Sporting ever to and fro.

Yes, my darling, sun and shadow
On our path in turn will rest—
And we, too, like sportive swallows,
Ever love the sunshine best.

Mother, how the swallows twitter,
On our roof, at early morn!
Are they glad to find a welcome
In the home where they were born?

Yes, my darling, they are singing
With a glad heart evermore.
So should we, too, praise our Maker,
Who hath made our cup run o'er.

Mother, do they spend the winter
In a land far, far away,
Where the wintry snows fall never,
Nor the fountains cease to play?

Yes, my darling, safely guided,
From the sunny south they come.
So may we, life's journey ended,
Safely reach our Heavenly Home!

An Ideal Realised.

WE all have, or ought to have, our ideals, but how seldom, if ever, we realise them; though, indeed, they may not be pitched unduly high. The ideals which Mrs. A. R. Simpson, of Edinburgh, in her latest little book* sets up and sets forth, are by no means unattainable points towards which we may strive in vain. She shows in many a fresh, stimulating train of thought, and in finely-polished diction, how the upper levels of Christian life may be reached and retained. The chapter on "The Missionary Ideal" is of great interest; but all are alike good and helpful. The book, which is attractively produced, has our warmest commendation.

Exactly a year ago it was our mournful duty to chronicle the translation by death of Reginald Radcliffe. A chapter in Mrs. Simpson's book is devoted to some recollections of Mr. Radcliffe, who was one of the two Christian friends, now departed, whose lives in the author's view were "ideals realised." The other was Frances Ridley Havergal. It will not be unfitting if, at the close of a year of our brother's life "in the presence of the King," we quote some parts of Mrs. Simpson's interesting record.

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

"The fair memories of Reginald Radcliffe are very distinct, and we stand in transition years, for surely fairer things are coming. He is already among the fairer things, and his passing away has caused a strange blending of then and now. When asked by us to write a motto in a book, he wrote the one word 'Nigh.' It was the keynote of his life.

"The first sight of him we had was at Perth in 1860. We played in an attic room at Springland with the stranger children who had come from Liverpool, and whose missionary names, Brainerd and Heber, remained with us. Below was the tower on the river's brink where Mr. Radcliffe loved to be alone with God. We remember taking our place with mother and grandmother on the day in August of the great open-air gathering, on the raised wooden seats on the South Inch, and well remember the power of the addresses by Mr. Radcliffe and others. What struck the child mind was that there stood a man who, when he prayed, believed in God, and got what he asked, and saw the Spirit descend. He asked the anxious to adjourn to Free St. Leonard's, which scores of men did, while the women went into a tent near. Night after night for many weeks after we helped our grandmother in the work in the sideroom, as she could not overtake the many seeking help. The power of the Lord was present to heal, and the talk between the evangelist and his hostess going home in the cab was like chapters of the Acts lived over again.

"Some ten years later our father engaged rooms in the hotel at Cannes for Mr. Radcliffe. To the proprietor and his visitors the salon was just a number on a floor; to those who heard it given out at the meetings which he soon began to hold it was to be a trysting-place for heaven. To the girl of eighteen there again came the vision of the ideal realised—a worm threshing mountains. He had faith in God, and God did not disappoint him. The excursions of that winter are dim, the friendships then formed are mostly severed, but the power of God seen and known remains a part of the Eternal with us. The printing of the bills, the practising of the choir, the old hymns that had a new zest in French dress, the little meeting for prayer, the blue blouses of the French ouvriers, and the walk home in dark nights over muddy fields—now all built over by hotels—are all memories, but the personality of the man and the presentness of his God are the most vivid...

"In the autumn of 1884 we slept for a night under the same roof in Copenhagen and did not know till he had gone. He was at his old work, on the old errand, but we only saw the name posted up as we passed out for our drive next day. In December of that year he came to Edinburgh, bringing Stanley Smith and Charles Studd to address our students, and so to begin the movement in our University which has borne such wonderful fruit. Here was the Scottish fountainhead of the Students' Liverpool Convention. A year later he was again with us, among his companions being two other Cambridge students. And did not the Lord let him slay more in death than even in life, when hardly had he left us there was held in his own city the greatest Student Conference on Missions that has ever been seen? In our quiet harbour the great waves have come as from the broad Atlantic, and we feel as if we must slip our moorings and put to sea, lest we or any near to us miss the meaning of this tide of blessing.

"The Hall of Light."

DEAR SIR,—“To the Lady Teacher, the Hall of Light for the Blind, London.” Such was the heading of a letter lately sent by a blind Chinese Christian lad to the honorary secretary and members of Somers Town Blind Aid Society. This letter, written in Chinese Braille type, translated for us by Miss Lillias Graham, proved clearly how truly the writer had learnt to know Christ in Miss Graham's School for the Blind at Chin chou, a school where many are now in training to carry in future, but not distant, years the light of the Gospel to their "own people."

Out of their poverty the members of Somers Town Blind Aid Society contribute annually sufficient for the support of one of these Chinese blind lads. The letters of this boy are a source of encouragement and delight to all the godly among us, and we forcibly felt how this Chinese laddie poetically, beautifully, and most truthfully expressed what we have striven to make our mission, and what, by God's help, it still is, to the blind in London. The happy, beneficent gatherings held within the hall from week to week have truly brought "light" where all before was darkness, and have cheered and strengthened the hundreds of blind who crowd our space.

To plead for loving gifts and helpers, to maintain our "Hall of Light" in full efficiency, is the object for which these words are penned. As the days pass on, old helpers pass upwards to the higher service, and the need for new and generous aid presses keenly. If any ask how we seek to bring "light to the blind," we have a ready answer. Recognising that spiritual and moral blindness is infinitely sadder than that which is physical, our chief aim is to bring spiritual light. Realising also how, in mental matters, the blind are shut in from many a means of knowledge open to others, we seek to bring them intellectual food. Knowing, moreover, how the physical reacts on the spiritual, we seek to minister to all our members, judiciously but substantially in temporal things. The means used are simple and natural: we "visit them in their affliction," teach them of Christ, provide healthful entertainment, give pensions, medical advice, arrange visits to the seaside for the weak and ailing, give clothing, money, food, etc., and ever, when in any way practicable, stimulate self-help.

All the work is voluntary, expenses a veritable trifle, and help only extended to well-tested cases. Ladies to visit the blind, friends to entertain, and garments new or old, and orders for such goods as the blind can supply—all these and much more is needed, as well as prayer. Friends are warmly invited to come and see our gatherings; we can promise that the sight will touch to its depths the kindly heart.

Information will be gladly given by the President, Dr. Oswald Dykes, 38, Coolhurst-road, Crouch End, N., or by Yours faithfully,

Lord Mayor's East End Banquet.—The banquet given for the past ten years on Lord Mayor's Day to the poor of the East End of London has now become an annual feature, and they look forward to it as much as the City magnate does to his at the Guildhall. The feast is followed by an entertainment and music; the invitations are distributed to the very poorest, irrespective of creed or denomination. The Lord Mayor-elect, Mr. Alderman Geo. Faudel Phillips, has very kindly sent £20, Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Rogers and Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Ritchie have each given £5. The charitable public have always supplemented the amount given by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and we trust they will again assist us, so as to enable us to entertain at least 2000 guests on November 9. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Fredk. N. Charrington.

Melbourne.—The convention recently held in Melbourne in connection with the Students' Christian Union was a success far beyond the dreams of its promoters. There were present some fifty-five delegates, both men and women, from the Universities of Sydney, Adelaide, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and 233 delegates from thirty-four Victorian educational institutions. The outcome of this convention is that the various Christian unions of the colonies have formed themselves into an Australasian Students' Christian Union. The headquarters of the movement, for the present, have been fixed in Sydney. —N.Y. Observer.

"The Christian" Almanack.

WITH this issue every subscriber and purchaser should receive a copy of THE CHRISTIAN Almanack for 1897. We trust and believe that our readers will deem it as attractive and interesting as any of its predecessors. With respect to the selection of daily motto-portions, we need only say that they have, as ever, been chosen after prayerful consideration, and with a view to the highest spiritual profit. May these choice morsels from the rich storehouse of revelation come to the hungry soul, like the manna of old, fresh as from the hand of the bountiful God, morning by morning.

Following our recent custom, we have provided a series of illustrations, setting forth in pictorial dress some incidents in the life of a Bible character. In the accompanying sheet each picture represents a striking or pleasing chapter in the history of the great Christian Apostle Paul. They extend from the period of his passionate and persecuting youth, to the time when "Paul the aged" sojourned in Rome, a prisoner for the sake of the Gospel, but, nevertheless, a preacher or exemplar of that same Gospel to "all that came in unto him," both by lip and life. Making all allowance for artistic imagination, we think the sketches portray graphically to the mind, through the eye, the events to which they refer, and help to suggest the lessons which they are fitted to teach. Some detailed words of comment are offered to the reader.

The first picture shows Saul as a consenting and approving party, if not an active accomplice, in the killing of the protomartyr of the Christian faith. The blood of the sainted Stephen was on the skirts of this fanatical young rabbi. Whatever Paul—or Saul—set his hand to do, he did it with his might; so in the persecuting era of his life he seems to have excelled all his contemporaries in the intensity of his anti-Christian zeal and relentless cruelty. History has often shown since, as it did then, that converting grace can turn the worst into the best. Stephen's violent but triumphant death afforded also a grand illustration of the truth of the proverb that "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church."

In the second picture the persecutor has become the persecuted, and is closely following the footsteps of Jesus Christ, inasmuch as his own kinsmen in the flesh were watching for an opportunity to kill him. But his time was not yet come, and God opened a door of deliverance. Picture three, with its miracle of healing, also brings the Master and the disciple very near each other. There are disciples among us now who believe and who affirm that gifts of healing are still bestowed on believers. One thing is certain—we may not set any limit to the wonder-working power of God, though it may not in every instance be his will to heal, but rather to teach the lesson of faith and patience through the trial. Let not one judge or condemn another in such a matter. The reader of Acts xiv. should not overlook the clause, "Paul...perceiving that he had faith to be healed." The faith of the sick one is as essential a condition as that of the healing agent.

The panels forming the central row of illustrations all testify powerfully of Paul the Preacher. No modern evangelist has had such marvellous and varied audiences as had Paul—the crowd of cultured Greeks on Mars Hill, the solitary, conscience-stricken jailer at Philippi, the wearers of the purple at Cæsarea. To all—refined and rough, high and low, Jew and Gentile—the courageous apostle declared the same Gospel, as the power of God unto salvation. We have no other Gospel to proclaim, whether to king or beggar.

In his experience as depicted in picture seven, Paul proved the truth of our Lord's promise to his apostles that He would interpose for their preservation and deliverance from perils encountered while engaged in his service. That chapter in the history of Christ's Church is not yet closed. Those brethren who have been recently preaching the Gospel in the open air in Ireland have perfectly wonderful stories to tell of the way in which they have been preserved from physical hurt, under circumstances very similar to those in which Stephen met his death.

The two last pictures, fittingly enough, are of a less dramatic type. They present the great Apostle, not amid exciting and tempestuous scenes, but receiving the sympathy and comfort of his fellow disciples. Such tokens of brotherly love and kindness must have been peculiarly welcome to the veteran warrior. There is no mere earthly tie so binding and so indissoluble, as a common faith and a common love exercised towards the one Lord and Saviour. It stands the severest tests, and bridges the widest chasms whether of position or of possession.

Mrs. Ingalls, Burmah.

THIS week we give a portrait of Mrs Ingalls, wife of the late Rev. L. Ingalls missionary to Burmah of the American Baptist Missionary Union. For forty-five years this lady has been engaged in Christian work in the East, going through troublous times and surmounting many difficulties. When visiting Great Britain she has made many friends, to whom a brief outline of her career will be particularly acceptable.

Born in 1829, our friend went to Burmah in 1851 with her husband, whose decease she was called upon to mourn five years later. In the course of that short period she had much endeared herself to the people, who begged her not to leave them. She was thereupon led to give herself up for Burmah, and having taken her little daughter to America, she resumed her missionary labours, in the spirit often expressed in her letters, "Here is my work, and here I expect to end my journey when the Master calls."

Settling in Thongze, a district a hundred miles from Rangoon to the north, she entered upon an important sphere with the help of a native preacher and his family. This region was reached by a canal boat voyage lasting many days, and when on the spot Mrs. Ingalls discovered that, generally speaking, the people had never before seen a white person. For many years she was the only foreigner, but at length Miss Kate F. Evans went out as a helper, especially to take charge of the educational department of the mission. As in other fields, the Word of God has been attended with blessed results in Lower Burmah, a goodly number of Buddhists having been converted. From among the converts some have been trained as pastors and preachers, others as colporteurs and Bible-women.

Burmah has long had an evil reputation as a land of dacoites, and the depredations attending these expeditions have at times been more than disquieting. One year, when dacoits were specially active, a placard was affixed to the Thongze Chapel, putting a value of 10,000 rupees upon the head of Mrs. Ingalls. However, God did not allow "unreasonable and wicked men" to carry out their designs. Writing of those days, Mrs. Ingalls says: "Though I had great trouble for over six months, no harm came to me; I was not captured, and not one of the Christians was murdered, though some of their heathen friends were beheaded, or burnt with kerosene oil, or badly mutilated."

In storm and sunshine Mrs. Ingalls has toiled, and is widely known among the people as the missionary lady who, in 1867, made the presentation of Queen Victoria's English Bible to the Queen of King Mindone, along with the Burmese translation of Dr. Judson. One of the many excellent enterprises which Mrs. Ingalls has promoted is the establishment of free libraries for the employes of the State railway in Burmah, and the placing of sheet calendars and Scripture texts at railway stations. American friends send ready aid in support of the mission work, but the Christians of Great Britain are looked to for books and papers for the railway department. Mrs. Ingalls is always glad to hear from those who are interested in this very useful work, also to receive parcels of literature suited for the purpose which is so near her heart. Address her at Thongze, Lower Burmah.

The Mildmay Jewish Mission Band.

THE towns that have been visited by the Band this year are Grimsby, Middlesbrough, and Stockton; at this moment the members are in Edinburgh, next week and the week following they will be in Glasgow and Motherwell, and then, after some village work, they return to London. They have had invitations to other places, but these will probably be postponed to next year, as the gifts sent in for this special evangelistic effort will have been expended. In every town visited, the Jews are systematically sought out and evangelised from house to house, while at the same time they are invited to regular Gospel meetings for both Jews and Gentiles.

We have for some time had a small workshop for Jews, but have now gone into better premises in 745, Commercial-road, opposite Limehouse Church. At present we have but eight Jewish hands (all of them professing Christians) who are seeking to earn their living by honest work, while we are seeking to help them to help themselves. We would like if possible to make this institution pay its own way from a business point of view. We make, repair, and alter clothing, ladies' and gentlemen's; and there is also a department for the making and repair of boots and shoes. Orders will be promptly collected from any part of London, and as promptly delivered, while reasonable charges will be made.

The Gospel in Ireland.

HANDBILLS, not printed, but written and copied with the holograph, giving particulars as to Rev. T. Connellan's meetings, are being dropped into every letter-box in Dublin by a band of young men, all converts from Rome. The meetings are very well attended and the proceedings are most quiet and orderly. Among those in constant attendance of late has been a young lady in a business house in the city. Her mother called at the Presbytery and informed the parish priest that her daughter had given up going to mass and confession. One of the curates called upon the young lady referred to, when an interesting dialogue took place. At the close of the conversation, in which the young lady proved herself a match for the ecclesiastic, the latter, taking up his hat, said, "Of course, you are welcome to become a Protestant, but I warn you that you will regret it when it is too late. Will you call over to the Presbytery, and I will show you how wrong you are?" The reply was, "No, sir, I have no business at the Presbytery. There is your own Bible, show me my errors if you are able."

This is a specimen of many similar cases. The priests are opening the eyes of their flocks by their own intolerant conduct. The following is a case in point reported in The Weekly Independent:—"Canon Greely, P.P., of Newport, county Mayo, has from the altar ordered a boycott against a Roman Catholic young lady because she was appointed to the vacant office of post-mistress, instead of the candidate favoured by his reverence. She was turned out of her lodgings in consequence of this, and finally had to take shelter in the house of a Protestant. Notwithstanding the intimidation, the young lady has secured an office, and is carrying on the postal business to the satisfaction of everyone, with the exception, perhaps, of Canon Greely and his satellites."

The Roman Catholic bishops met last week at Maynooth, and put forward a claim for a Roman Catholic University, fully equipped and lavishly endowed. They do not scruple even to hint at a return to lawlessness if their demands are not granted.

Wreck of the "Dayspring."

DEAR SIR,—The many friends of the New Hebrides and of the venerable Dr. John G. Paton, will sorrow with us, and pray for our Mission in the great disaster that has befallen it. Our mission vessel Dayspring, so recently built and sent out to the islands, is reported a total wreck! Reuter's Agency cables from Sydney as follows, under date October 22:—

Missionary ship Dayspring struck on a rock to the north of New Caledonia and was totally wrecked. Her complement consisted of seventeen men, all of whom took to the boats. The captain and seven men were saved, but it is feared that the rest were drowned.

Apparently there were no missionaries on board on this outward voyage. Our vessel was carrying three months' supplies for the Mission stations, and the mails, etc., all of which are lost. No doubt the friends of the Mission in Australia will at once charter a ship to carry food to the lonely workers; and of course our needs do not die with the ship. We fear for the aged missionary upon whom the blow will come with crushing force, and we beg for him the prayers and sympathy of every friend of this most difficult island mission.

We may be permitted to add that the news of the disaster has stirred one friend to send us £1000 "with a full heart to commence or buy another ship at once," and in the hope that others will be led to help. We are not aware of the sum for which our vessel was insured in Australia, nor do we know what future course will be recommended by the missionaries—the next step being absolutely at the discretion of the synod and churches interested. Should any friends of the work, however, be led to send money towards a new vessel we will gladly receive all contributions on Dr. Paton's behalf, with the condition, as before, that should the scheme not be completed the money will be returned by us to the donors, or used as they may direct.

On behalf of the John G. Paton Mission Fund, yours faithfully,

JAMES PATON, B.A.

Home of Industry Workers.

THESE delightful and profitable monthly meetings have been resumed, after a break during the holiday season. To many their suspension seemed a distinct loss—the opportunity afforded by these gatherings of Christian fellowship and of greeting workers from distant parts being highly prized. Miss Macpherson, who has spent her "holiday" time in hard work, speaking and testifying, and pleading the cause of the children, seemed in good spirits, surrounded as she was by trusty friends and faithful helpers.

Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, who presided, read Ps. lxxii., and called for a season of earnest prayer for missions at home and abroad.

Mrs. WILLIAM MERRY, who has just arrived from the other side, spoke of the goodness of God in providing homes for the 150 children who have this year crossed the Atlantic. God has heard prayer and opened the way even in certain instances when difficulties seemed likely to arise. Amongst the incidents specially mentioned were two little Jewish boys who have found what appear to be happy homes in answer to distinct prayer. Similarly, the hand of the Lord has been on all the work. The reports sent in by the visitors are full of encouragement. Prayer is desired for the little waifs now being gathered into the Hackney Home in order to be trained for next year's party.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN followed with an address on "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness"; an exposition of the deep teaching presented by our Lord's baptism—the Sinless One submitting to a baptism which meant confession of sin, and this for a great and gracious purpose. We need, said Mr. Morgan, in closing, to take up the events in the life of our Lord on earth, and study closely their special significance.

Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND, who was received with much warmth after his serious illness, testified to the goodness of God while he lay apparently at the gates. In answer to definite and united prayer the Lord had spared him yet awhile, and he longed that these "added years or days" might be more fully devoted to his service. A few weighty words followed on "To me to live is Christ," and the union of the believer with his great head, so close and intimate that while Christ personates the believer before God, the believer personates his Lord on earth among men. How necessary then to take heed to our ways, that by his grace we may set before men a faithful reflection of the Saviour and not a mere caricature.

Miss TREGELIUS spoke of her longing to go to North Africa, telling how the Lord had laid the call on her heart, and how much she felt she owed to the training in the Home of Industry.

Mrs. TURNER spoke of work in Tunis, and urged special prayer for Moslems, who have been so greatly neglected in the past.

Two brethren and two sisters from China were introduced to the meeting, and Mr. Easton, on their behalf, called for prayer for China. The proceedings were then concluded with a time of earnest waiting on God for the many missions and missionaries who had been mentioned.

Needy Fields.—Writing from Hoti Mardan, Punjab, Mr. W. H. Dowling says:—"Malakau, Chitral, and Kafiristan are places where the Gospel has never yet reached. Kafiristan alone has a population as large as India, 300,000,000, and there are the small places besides. Last year the Ameer of Cabul marched into Kafiristan and took 600 prisoners. The men he forced to become Mohammedans, and the young women were forced into his harem. This year he marched in and took the place. Here are these immortal souls, with no one to take the Gospel to them."

Mr. Lane's Missions.

BOURNEMOUTH.

A UNITED Evangelistic Mission has been conducted in Bournemouth by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the Bournemouth Nonconformist Council. The Mission opened on Wednesday, October 7 in the Punshon Memorial Church, Bournemouth, with a united meeting for Christian workers, which was followed by a communion service. On Thursday, October 8, Mr. Lane began his work at West Cliff Tabernacle, Westbourne; on Tuesday, October 13, it was continued at the Wesleyan Church, Boscombe, and on Sunday, October 18, the final series of services were commenced at the Richmond-hill Congregational Church, Bournemouth.

Mr. Lane's services, both at the Bible readings and at the evening services, were greatly enjoyed. The attendances at the services increased almost nightly, and at the last service on Wednesday evening, October 21, upwards of 1000 people stood to testify their gratitude to God that Mr. Lane had been sent amongst them. Towards the close of the mission, when all the churches of the borough united in the centre of the town, there were a good many professed conversions.

Mr. Lane has won many friends by the homeliness with which he has conducted the services, by the direct forcible appeals to the conscience and the tender appeals to the heart that he has delivered, by his evident sympathy with the work of the churches and by his own simple, manly, brotherly, Christian personality. W. V. R.

BAYSWATER.

Mr. W. R. Lane began on Sunday, in connection with the Bayswater Y.M.C.A., a mission to men. Considerable effort has been put forth to reach the young men in Whiteley's and other business houses and induce them to attend. The meetings are being held in Paddington Baths Hall—a large building to fill with "men only." Both afternoon and evening, the attendance was most cheering. The evangelist, who seemed full of power and vigour, spoke with much earnestness and solemnity. No special attempt (being the first day) was made to secure open confession, but there were evidences of coming showers of blessing.

Mr. McNeill in Middlesbrough.

THROUGHOUT the first week of his mission Mr. McNeill has maintained a high level of Gospel address, and has been heard by large audiences. Probably his most impressive utterance was upon the well-known text, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." He said his text occurred in a letter sent by our Lord to a certain address. It was important to see that it was delivered at the right door. Our Lord's message was not to the outcasts in the slums, but to a church. The speaker made everyone who cared for the spiritual life of his own church ask whether his church had Christ within it or not. He made every individual press the question further and ask whether Christ had a place in his own heart.

Another very effective address was upon the closing verses of Luke ix. He was especially happy in rousing the sympathy of his audience towards the man who said, "I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," and made many wish to travel the same road after Christ.

The mission closes on Friday, 29th inst. The evangelist has won many friends in Middlesbrough, who will follow him with interest and sympathy, and welcome him whenever he returns.

Jewish Boys and Girls.—New premises for the London mission schools for Jewish boys and girls were opened at Streatham Common last week by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Prebendary Webb-Peploe preached at a service held in connection with the opening in Immanuel Church, Streatham.

Pastor Chiniquy.—The Stratford Conference Hall was crowded on Monday week, at a Protestant meeting arranged in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Dr. Grattan Guinness presided, Pastor Chiniquy, who met with a very hearty reception, gave an address of over one and-a-half hour's length on his work in the Church of Rome, especially as the "apostle of temperance," and the reasons which led him to come out of that church. A strong local centre of the Protestant Alliance is being formed at the hall.

The Aberdeen Mission.

ON Friday, October 16, Mr. C. Inglis concluded a week's mission (which most of us felt was all too short) in the Free East Church. The mission was a continuation of the evangelistic campaign planned by the Free Presbytery, and which is to be carried on till the end of November.

The Free High Church and the East Church form together one building, and accordingly the two congregations united in the week's services. Mr. Inglis spoke in both churches on Sabbath, Oct. 11, but his mission proper began at the evening meeting on the Monday following. From the first the attendance was most encouraging and the interest unmistakable. There had been much prayer offered beforehand in prospect of the meetings. The blessing of God was looked for, and it was not denied.

Mr. Inglis presents the Gospel with great simplicity, earnestness, and power. His addresses are clear, pointed, richly and aptly illustrated from a wide experience of Christian service and knowledge of human nature, and they are never too long. His own warm and hearty manner has much to do with winning the sympathy of his audience, but it is evident that in all the work he relies on the promised power of the Holy Spirit. His method of conducting the after-meeting is characteristically decided, and this at first seemed to meet with some resistance. But it was interesting to see how, as the attendance increased and the interest deepened, this apparent resistance largely gave way. The turning-point seemed to be reached on the last night but one; and on the last night of all, after an unusually solemn service, there was a warm response given to the invitation to remain for the second meeting. The hall adjoining the church was filled with Christian workers and inquirers, and after this meeting was dismissed a large number of those who sought salvation returned to the church, where they were met by the ministers and other friends ready to help them in their desire to close with the Saviour so earnestly offered for their acceptance.

Mr. Inglis also conducted a short series of afternoon Bible readings during the week. These were well attended and much enjoyed.

We feel thankful to God for our friend's visit and for his short mission among us. It has been awakening, stimulating, and encouraging. We know that many have been powerfully improved by the truth, some effectually convinced of sin, and still others, we believe, have been brought to decided acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as Redeemer and Master. But beyond all that we can see we are sure there is much that remains known as yet to God alone.

(REV.) CHARLES H. TODD,
Free East Church.

Rev. H. W. Bell, of the Free High Church, Aberdeen, also writes:—

We have had boundless cause for thanksgiving in connection with the whole effort. The unity and heartiness of ministers, office-bearers, and congregations in the work has been remarkable. We have taken every step in the spirit of earnest prayerfulness, and we have had distinct and remarkable tokens of Divine guidance.

Mr. Inglis is to be followed by Mr. Frank L. Smith, of New York, and he again by Mr. Gipsy Smith. The services in the rural charges will be conducted by Mr. Thomas Binnie, evangelist under the Home Mission Committee of the Free Church, Rev. A. Hardie, of Newbattle Free Church, and the Messrs. Stewart, of Edinburgh.

The work hitherto has been most encouraging. We have had nightly audiences numbering hundreds, the addresses have been very powerful and impressive, and the results, in numbers of professed conversions and in the quickening of believers, have been very gratifying. It has been a time of marked blessing; and the tide is deepening as it flows onwards. Many, we are persuaded, will bless God for the services with which our community has been favoured.

Mr. Inglis sails on Saturday for the United States, hoping to labour during the winter in New York, Chicago, Winnipeg, and British Columbia. He hopes to return home in March and April.

Farningham Boys.

THERE was a capital muster of the lads from the Homes for Little Boys, at the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, when over 400 of them delighted a large concourse of visitors with music and song, as well as musical drill. The entertainment reflected great credit to both the teachers and their young pupils, for it was evident that only hard work and serious application could have produced such a pleasing result.

Nor were these a picked or selected few, since they represented four-fifths of the inmates, who are equally proficient in various branches of useful and practical industry. The Homes might rather be called "the Villages," for at Farningham and Swanley the colonies of lads are boarded in cottages which present a striking appearance in the landscape. And here all sorts of trades are taught and practised, heads and hands contributing their share to the possibilities of these young lives.

Addressing Saturday's gathering, at which he presided, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH expressed his warm sympathy with the object of the Homes, and remarked on the enormous increase in the population of England every year, which led to innumerable children being left destitute and uncared for. Still, one of the most remarkable features of the age was the strong philanthropic movement, and a very general tendency to help the unfortunate, who, if given the chance, were fully competent to turn out honourable and useful citizens. Indeed, in these lower grades of life men had been found, and were being daily found, whose intellects were as keen as those born in a more fortunate sphere. His grace considered that the Swanley and Farningham Homes were bright examples of the movement he had alluded to. Canon Wilberforce and Rev. Alexander Connell also spoke.

The Duchess distributed a large number of prizes to boys who had achieved distinction in various ways. The only depressing item in the proceedings was the announcement that there is a debt on the Homes of £3000, and that an additional £2000 per annum is required in regular subscriptions to carry on the work. It is a thousand pities that the managers of such an admirably-conducted institution should have any anxiety on that score. The secretary is Mr. Wm. Robson, and the London offices are at 25, Holborn Viaduct.

Mr. Nix at Princess's Theatre.

LAST Sunday evening Mr. Josiah Nix, of the Regent-street Polytechnic, began the second series of winter Sunday-evening services for the people at the Princess's Theatre, Oxford-street. The place, needless to say, was crammed absolutely from floor to ceiling with a congregation unaccustomed largely to attend any church or chapel. From the vantage ground of the reserved Press box the spectacle was a most cheering and inspiring one.

As before, Mr. Nix has invoked the aid of the lantern in his presentation of the Gospel message. A very full and free Gospel our earnest-minded brother proclaimed, but he also set forth in very graphic and forceful terms some of the besetting sins that ruin the lives of men and women, and prevent them from becoming disciples of Jesus Christ. The subject was "More than Conquerors," and it was handled in an intensely interesting fashion. Perfect attention and stillness prevailed throughout, and it could be seen that the arrows shot at a venture by the preacher were finding their way to many a mark. There was a large and very hopeful after-meeting. A most auspicious start was made for the season.

We could not help wishing that all the large theatres and halls in London could be used in the same way on Sunday evenings through the winter. If the same means were adopted to attract the careless masses they would doubtless be filled.

Clapton Mission.—An interesting series of services has been held at Clapton Park Tabernacle in connection with the completion of twenty-one years of home missionary work by Rev. Thomas Jackson. The public meeting on the Monday was a most inspiring one. Mr. Jackson stated that during his London ministry he had received upwards of 2000 persons into church fellowship, had established seven Sunday-schools, temperance societies, and seven Bands of Hope, besides other efforts for the social well-being of the people.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—I find many of God's dear children do not use the "Lord's prayer." I seek for light on the subject; perhaps some correspondence on the subject in THE CHRISTIAN would be helpful to many. In Matthew's Gospel our Lord seemed to teach the multitude to use those words. In Luke he addresses his disciples only. I find some shrink from the clause "Forgive...as we forgive," as implying a condition for the forgiveness they seek, which as children of God they already have through the finished work of our Saviour. I do not mean that we do not always need forgiveness and cleansing for the daily defilement of our walk down here. I am truly anxious to know the mind of the Spirit in the matter, and I think perhaps some of your readers may be able, by their suggestions, to teach me what I fail to find for myself.—Believe me, yours faithfully,
M. T.

PAUL AT ATHENS.

DEAR SIR,—I was sorry to read the opening paragraphs of a paper, p. 12 of your last number, containing reflections on the preaching of the Apostle Paul had proclaimed "Jesus and the resurrection" (Acts xvii. 18). And then, speaking to idolaters who thought he was announcing some new demons, he proclaims the true God, creating, life-giving, upholding, appointing, and not far from us. With knowledge of God, we ought not to have unworthy thoughts of Him who made us. And then he seeks to awaken further by the truth of the judgment to come. Nor was there the absolute failure—"no fountain, no rill, only defeat."

Why, if any man stood up in the midst of idolaters, and at the end let there be a Dionysius, a Damaris, and others with them, who believed, who would not bless God for that, however sorrowful over others? It always is so, that, as in Acts xviii., some believed, and some disbelieved. I regard the entire preaching at Athens as a marvel of spiritual wisdom, grasping the scope of truth as applying to the hearers, which modern speakers would do well to follow.—Yours,
J. V. S.

"Northfield in New York."

UNDER this heading The N.Y. Tribune of October 6 says:—At the Northfield Conference last August Mr. D. L. Moody was invited by the New York, Brooklyn, and New Jersey pastors and missionaries in attendance there to hold a series of meetings in New York this fall for the deepening of spiritual life, that the people unable to attend the helpful meetings in Northfield might have an opportunity of sharing in the blessings received there. Mr. Moody has consented to speak in Cooper Union every day for a week, beginning on November 9. Yesterday he met the clergymen and other Christian workers who are interested in the proposed meetings, which are to be in no sense evangelistic, as that term is usually employed.

The meeting was held in the Marble Church, which was filled. So important does the Presbytery believe the coming meetings to be, that it appointed a committee to attend the meeting, and express to Mr. Moody its deep interest in the meetings, and the loyal co-operation of the Presbyterian pastors in carrying them on. Mr. Sankey, for a quarter of a century Mr. Moody's colleague, led the singing, and sang two or three solos. Mr. Moody is to speak every day this week in Plainfield, N.J.

Deptford Broadway (says a correspondent), formerly the stronghold of atheism and anarchy, is becoming morally purified, and we are getting a powerful hold of the men. £21 was recently collected among working-men at open-air lectures for the Miller Hospital.

Ealing Convention.—Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, the Convention was well attended, and greatly appreciated by many who received instruction and profit from the addresses of the four days. The meetings were presided over by Colonel Phayre. Among those who gave addresses were Revs. J. G. Train, F. B. Meyer, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, H. G. Thwaites, A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, Marcus Rainsford, jun., and G. H. C. MacGregor. Friday was occupied with missionary addresses, when Rev. P. B. Johnson gave interesting details of the successful work of the Irish Church Missions, Rev. J. Wilkinson of work amongst the Jews, and Rev. G. F. Easton and Mr. W. B. Sloan of the operations of the China Inland Mission.

Advent Conference in Norwood.

THE spirit of expectant prayer was fully rewarded with the many who gathered at the Conference held in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week.

At the opening meeting a brief introductory address was given by Pastor Fuller Gooch. Rev. C. G. Moore spoke of the blessings God has for his children in his givings and withholdings. "The practical value of acquaintance with Second Advent Truth" was the subject taken by Rev. J. E. Linnell. He warned his hearers of the danger of spiritualizing the Word of God so as to lose sight of its true meaning.

At the evening meeting Revs. T. George, G. Turner, and J. J. Luce gave helpful addresses.

On Wednesday afternoon "Present-day Judaism, a Fulfilment of Prophecy," was the theme discussed by Rev. Francis L. Denman. He pleaded for more prayer for the Jews and more earnest testimony to all that the Lord is at hand. Pastor Fuller Gooch read a paper on "The Apocalypse as distinguished from the Parousia," which created very considerable interest as an exposition of the dual aspect of the Lord's return. Rev. J. G. Train spoke of "The faithful and wise servant, whose watchfulness leads to fidelity." Rev. Lindsay Young and Dr. R. Anderson gave excellent and practical addresses at the evening meeting. The former took as his subject, "Christendom and its Doom," calling attention to the growing spirit of worldliness and unbelief. The latter dealt with "The Personality of the Man of Sin."

The meeting on Thursday afternoon was addressed by Revs. R. Middleton and John Wilkinson, and Dr. R. McKilliam. In the evening, Rev. E. Brewer spoke on "The Firstfruits and the Harvest." Rev. W. R. Mowll gave the closing address. In speaking of "As it was in the Days of Lot," he gave four characteristics which likened those times to our own—indifference, ignorance, infidelity, and impurity—all indications that we are nearing the end. An earnest appeal was made to the unsaved to flee from these things, and to accept the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Kilburn Hall.

THE sixteen days' mission conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission, was brought to a close by a series of three meetings on Monday last, October 26. It has throughout been a time of remarkable blessing, and overflow meetings have had to be held on some occasions. Large numbers of inquirers have been dealt with by the workers, and over 200 names have been handed in by those professing to receive Christ as their Saviour.

Mrs. Baeyertz's addresses have been characterised by manifest power from on high, and many believers testify to having received great spiritual blessing, resulting, it is trusted, in more consecrated lives.

A social gathering of converts is to be held at Kilburn Hall this evening (Thursday), and Dr. R. McKilliam is to follow up the mission with a special address on Sunday evening next, at Kilburn Hall.

Mexico.—A general assembly of Evangelical workers in Mexico is to be held in the capital next January. Matters of great interest are to be discussed, such as self-support in mission churches, educational methods and medical missions.

Portsmouth.—At the Welcome Mission a five days' convention was held, Oct. 11-15. The subject was "Christ-likeness" in life and service. Each day the attendance was very good, and many were strengthened for active service. The speakers included Rev. A. D. Cope, of Southampton; E. L. Hamilton, Bath; J. Gregory Mantle, Brighton; L. Railton, of Bristol, and others. It is proposed to continue this work by a monthly meeting during the winter. Mr. Hogbin asks the prayers of Christians for guidance.

Sheltering Homes, Liverpool.—On Friday last the annual tea to Christian workers took place at Mrs. Birt's Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street. The guests numbering over 200, represented all parts of the city, and all denominations, and were drawn together by their interest in Mrs. Birt's work for the children of Liverpool. They were the Liverpool Scripture Readers and their wives, Seamen's Missioners, the town missionaries (some delegated to visit the public-houses, others the lodging houses), School-board visitors, Bible-women, district nurses, and representatives from many other homes, hospitals, and agencies at work in squalid Liverpool. Two hundred children have been admitted to the sheltering home; 130 have been placed in Canada; 200 widows are helped by a weekly sewing class and dinner; 5000 ragged children received a Christmas treat.

Armenian Relief.

SIR,—There is a pressing need of clothing and bedding for the destitute Armenians of Constantinople, whom the late disturbances have deprived of everything, and whose sufferings will be terribly aggravated this winter, unless their needs in this direction are promptly supplied. The Armenians of Constantinople wear European clothing, and the following is a list of suitable articles: Old men's underclothing, both cotton and woollen; shawls, jackets, plain dresses, stockings, men's clothing of all kinds, and unmade materials, however coarse and plain; black and navy blue serge and dark flannels are recommended. The carriage of the goods will be free, but there will be the expense of duty and packing-cases, and to meet this, friends who desire to help in this cause are asked to remit a small sum with the clothing.

Parcels should be marked "Armenia," and sent carriage paid to Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, London, E., who has kindly consented to receive, pack, and forward any such that may be entrusted to her.—Faithfully yours,

MARY HICKSON, Hon. Sec. W.A.R.F.

In answer to the query of a correspondent as to what would be the cost of emigrating one Armenian from Turkey, Lady Henry Somerset writes:—

"I should say that £5 would emigrate a refugee from Constantinople to almost any port except America, where of course the requirements in the way of money for the refugees is considerable. Five pounds would place an emigrant in safety either in England, in Cyprus, or any other place of refuge, and give him a start."

Our Soldiers at Shoeburyness.

In a tiny room at Shoeburyness a band of Christian soldiers is gathered every evening for Bible reading and prayer, and most earnestly are they pleading that soon they may have a Soldiers' Home.

When their day's work is over our soldiers do so need a bright, happy "Home" which they can look upon as altogether their own, where they can write their letters, read the papers, obtain cheap refreshment on temperance principles, and, above all, where they will meet with true sympathy, and be told of Jesus the "Mighty to save." As I write there passes before my mind, one after another, soldiers who have come into our Home at Woolwich quite careless and godless, who now are serving Christ faithfully at home and abroad. And in Shoeburyness, too, there are men who are drifting downwards, just needing a helping hand and the influence of a Christian home to win them for Jesus. At present there is nowhere in the town for soldiers to go in the evenings but the public-house; and the little room already mentioned is so small as to be crowded when ten or twelve are in it; and is only provided pro tem. by some ladies interested in soldiers, as a sort of prayer-room for the Christians.

As there is not a house to be got in the town, a piece of ground has been bought, and it is proposed to build a home as soon as the £1500 which is needed to build and furnish has been collected.

Miss Shubrick, who has been asked to undertake this new home as a branch of her Soldiers' Home at Woolwich, will receive gifts.

Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich.

Indian Christian Union.—The first anniversary of the Indian Christian Union of Great Britain was held on Thursday in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall. Rev. H. S. Puri, of Benares, welcomed the visitors on behalf of the Union. The report of the past year's work was read by the hon. secretary. Among those who spoke were Mr. Eugene Stock, Rev. Mr. Shirreff, late of Lahore, Punjab, Rev. Mr. Carr, and Mr. E. B. Evans. The words spoken by these gentlemen were very encouraging and sympathetic. The president, Rev. Dr. S. D. Bhabha, brought the proceedings to a close with a very thoughtful address explaining the aims and objects of the Union.

Chester.—A series of special services in the Baptist Mission Lecture Hall were brought to a close by a meeting, when a retrospect of the work since it was commenced in August last was given by the secretary, Mr. T. Bellis, from which it appeared that the Sunday services are well attended and growing in interest. The Sunday-school already numbers some 120 scholars, with two good senior Bible-classes. The work among the lodging-houses is well sustained. Mrs. E. H. Jones presides over a large mothers' meeting. A Band of Hope and evening classes for the girls in our factories are about being commenced. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Johnson, Bailey, and Ayatt.

Union Church, Grahamstown.

THIS native church was founded by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society in the early part of the present century. About forty years ago it became self-supporting. It is just fourteen years since I went out to South Africa to take charge of this church. By the blessing of God the work has continued to prosper and grow, so that I have now four churches under my care. Two of the branch churches are about forty miles distant (in different directions) from Grahamstown. The other one is on the Kaffir Location, just outside the town. Our church members number about 600, and, as circumstances oblige us to make the conditions of membership very strict, these 600 men and women may be considered as sober, industrious, honest and consistent Christians.

That they appreciate their Christian privileges is proved by what they have done and are doing for themselves. At Alexandria, one of the branch churches, some of the people have to walk fifteen miles to attend service; and in another district, we have been obliged to build a small chapel on a farm, as it is so far that the people can only get to the village church on Communion Sundays, that is once in three months, and then they have to start on Saturday night. As regards the parent church in Grahamstown, the people raise £400 annually, on an average, for church and school purposes, besides contributing towards the spread of the Gospel in other parts of the country. In addition to this annual contribution for ordinary expenses, they have, during the fourteen years of my pastorate, raised a large amount of money for special purposes.

Now we are compelled to face the expense of building a new church, and for the following among other reasons:—

(a) The old church is too small; (b) it is situated a long distance away from where the bulk of the people reside. As the people are poor, we cannot honourably—not even honestly—go into debt, and as a new church (plain but substantial) will cost nearly £2000, I am endeavouring to raise £800 in England towards this amount. The people themselves will do what they can, but owing to the hard times caused by drought, locusts, and other plagues, they will not be able to do as much as they have done in past and better times.

I am, yours faithfully,

SAMUEL J. HELM.

Manchester Street Children's Mission.

THE twenty-seventh annual meeting of this Mission was held on Thursday at the Town Hall. The Lord Mayor occupied the chair. From the twenty-seventh annual report it appeared that the committee began the year with a debit balance of £52 17s. 9d., and that this had been increased, at the close of the financial year, to £160 0s. 5d. There were also outstanding liabilities for contracts for alterations and improvements to the old mission premises which would increase the adverse balance to about £500. This large extra expenditure had been absolutely necessary through the increase in the regular attendance at the mission services, meetings, and Sunday-school classes, there being now an average attendance on Sundays throughout the year of nearly 1100 men, women, and children. The various night meetings held throughout the year were well attended, and showed a continuous increase. The old cottages adjoining the mission had been pulled down, and the site was in the hands of the contractors for a building to provide further home accommodation, and particularly for the rescue of young girls. Information was given about the prisoners' aid, the lads' brigade, the boys' home, and the men's Bible-class.

The Central Hall Gospel Mission, Swindon.—becomes of greater importance than ever, through the rapid increase of population, Swindon and its environs now numbering about 40,000, which it is said will be shortly augmented by several thousands more, as the G.W.R. directors contemplate the removal from Reading to Swindon of the coupling and gear works. The difficulty of ways and means has often led the workers to consider the possibility of continuing the work and keeping open the only unsectarian mission hall in Swindon. The spiritual growth of the town is sadly behind the material, and needs such a work as this mission is accomplishing. We are in great need of suitable class-rooms, which could be provided for about £50. We are much hindered in this important work for lack of funds. Mrs. Brown's young women's Bible-class has to be held in the hall where the Sunday-school is carried on, and this is crowded, as there are 268 scholars on our register. These classes would rapidly grow with convenient rooms. The work is most encouraging in its several departments. We have had, during the past three months, fifteen precious souls won for Christ.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.—1 Kings viii. 54-63.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Hab. ii. 20.

THE building of the temple occupied a little more than seven years (vi. 37, 38). When all was completed, and the ark was brought, with due solemnity and rejoicing, into the Most Holy Place (2 Chron. v. 2-10), then God took possession of the temple as his own (2 Chron. v. 11-14). A bright cloud, the symbol of the Divine presence, filled the house, "so that the priests could not stand to minister."

At the dedication ceremony all Israel was represented (1). The occasion was one of great gladness. None would be absent unless compelled. All the past history of the nation seemed to be culminating in this.

For the ceremony Solomon had erected a platform in the court of the temple, near to the brazen altar. Upon this platform he first stood to address the people, then kneeled to offer his dedication prayer (2 Chron. vi. 13). This is the first occasion on which we read of kneeling in prayer.

The prayer itself anticipates the possibility of various forms of affliction visiting the people: but in every case the famine, the pestilence, the defeat, the captivity are attributed to their sins. (See 33, 35, 46). God was their defence against all these evils, but their sin would displease Him and lead to chastisement. In every case their deliverance depended on their return to Him in the spirit of penitence and prayer. It was a most comprehensive prayer, taking in even the stranger (41-43). As in every time of true religious revival, the missionary spirit was manifested.

The verses of our lesson deal particularly with the benediction which followed the prayer (54-61). Observe how he connects their present joy with the Divine promises (56). To what words of Moses does he refer? (See Deut. xii. 9-12; Lev. xxvi. 3-13). In the rest, and peace, and prosperity they now enjoyed; and in having a house in which God could dwell among them, these words, and others, were now fulfilled. For centuries they had waited; but the set time was now come, and Solomon can testify: "There hath not failed one word of all his good promise." Apply the lesson now to every promise He makes to us. All are spoken by a God who cannot lie. Are you learning to trust them?

See next how he joins together future prosperity and future obedience (57, 58, 61). The rapture of their present service does not secure their future blessing. Indeed, the very exalted favour they now enjoy brings with it an increased responsibility. God's promises are not unconditional. It is only the "willing and obedient" who are "doers of the word" that are blessed. Does the condition seem too difficult? But note how it is made possible: "The Lord our God be with us...that He may incline our hearts unto Him" (57, 58). He gives what He commands (See Ezek. xxxvi. 27). Apply two lessons: Don't expect blessing except on the line of obedience. Don't attempt to obey except in dependence upon a present living Saviour. The whole of Christian living is in these two lessons.

And note, next, how he sees their blessing to be connected with the blessing of other people (60). God did not choose his people for their own sake only, but that they should be his witnesses to the surrounding nations. This is true of his people to-day. From his Church the light must go forth to all the world. And only when his people are enjoying his full salvation are others likely to be blessed through them. (See the connection in Psa. lxxii. 19, 20; Ezek. xxxvi. 23; Psa. lxxvii.) Again, apply the double lesson:—God saves you that through you others may learn of Him (Matt. v. 16). Your influence upon others depends, not upon your gifts, but upon your grace. An obedient life, in which God's presence is a reality, is the most effective witness.

Following this benediction came another remarkable sign from God (2 Chron. vii. 1-3). To describe it is impossible. Probably the bright cloud which had rested over the Most Holy Place became more bright and dazzling, while fire leapt forth and consumed the sacrifices upon the altar. Priests and people were alike awed into worshipful silence.

Why should we seek to make real to ourselves the whole of this dedication ceremony? For this reason above all others,—that our being is now the temple of God. Our body is the outer court; our soul, with its affections, and thoughts, and desires, is the Holy Place; our spirit is the Holy of Holies, intended to be the dwelling-place of God.

We belong to Him by strongest claims. But there must be on our part an act of dedication. Have we made it? (See Rom. xii. 1.) No visible sign accompanies his entering to take possession of us; but the fact of the Divine indwelling is as real as though we could see the glory. How should we treat our being if it is the temple of God?

University Notes.

[By OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE special service for undergraduates on the first Sunday of term at St. Peter-le-Bailey Church was largely attended, about 350 being present. An excellent sermon was preached by Canon Taylor Smith.

The meeting on Saturday evenings for university men, which has been conducted for so many years by Canon Christopher, is still carried on. Many can thank God for blessing received at these meetings.

We had our Bible Society anniversary last week. The Bishop of Honduras told us how much he valued the help received from the Society in Central America, and how much good flowed from it. We also had the privilege of hearing Rev. Denis Kemp, who has been for nine years a Wesleyan missionary at the Gold Coast, and has recently returned from Kumasi, Ashanti. Among much that was valuable, he reminded us how the effects of the slave trade are still felt by those engaged in Christian work, and probably will be for generations. The other speakers were Professor Burrows, the Principal of Mansfield College, and the Rector of Exeter College, who presided.

The Y.M.C.A. have commenced their winter's work. There is a weekly preparation class for preachers and many other classes and clubs.

Bishop Tugwell, from West Africa, addressed the University Missionary Union last week. Missionary interest is growing in Oxford. Another Oxford curate has been accepted by the C.M.S. for work in India.

CAMBRIDGE.

THE University sermons this term have been powerful and helpful. On Oct. 4 and 11 they were preached by Dr. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, from the double text, "Ye are not your own"; "All things are yours." He dwelt in his first sermon on the consecration of life necessary to ensure a Christian career at the University; and in the second on the glorious privileges given to his student followers.

The evening of Sunday, Oct. 11, was the date of the "Freshmen's" sermon in Holy Trinity Church. The preacher was Rev. W. Taylor Smith, who delivered a most stirring sermon from the text, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." The importance of an early choice and a decided and open confession was the main point of the discourse.

On October 18, Rev. F. S. Webster preached in the evening at Holy Trinity Church, and Canon Body addressed a congregation of university men on the subject of prayer.

The first of the Friday evening meetings of the C.M.U. and Missionary Bands was held on October 23, and took the form of an annual meeting. A short Bible-reading preceded the address which was given by Principal Moule. He described the small and uphill beginnings of the C.M.U. and the origin of the later institution of Missionary Bands. At the present time, thirty-nine years from its foundation, the Union meets in the Henry Martyn Memorial Hall, its own premises.

The Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union has published a strong list of speakers for the Sunday evening meetings in the Guildhall. The members of the C.I.C.C.U. assembled for the first time there last Sunday to hear Dr. Lefroy, Dean of Norwich, who delivered a most striking address on the horror of sin, from the aspect of its power, and the slavery it induces apart from the mere consideration of its punishment. The one remedy for this disease, this morbid slavery, is the one essential of our religion, a childlike faith in the blood of Jesus.

Sydney.—The Protestant churches of Sydney and its suburbs have been taking active steps in the prosecution of a crusade in the interests of social morality, and the pulpits have been giving forth no uncertain sound on the subject of gambling. The practice of this vice has become general, and its ramifications widespread.

Gospel Tent Mission.—At Barry Dock the tent has been put away for the winter, and the nightly services are held in the Mission Hall, Merthyr-street. The past few months have been a gracious season of soul-saving. Sailors of different nations find out the hall, and thoroughly enjoy the bright singing and service. The work at Brynmawr is still advancing. At Garnfach the friends from the Brynmawr branch started special meetings, and the interest awakened is gratifying. We need clothing for the destitute cases coming under our notice, also help in tracts and funds would be gratefully received by yours faithfully,

Mission House, Weston Hill,
Barry Dock, South Wales.

GERALD COULTAS.

Scottish Notes.

Mr. WILLIAM BURNSIDE, evangelist, has been holding a series of meetings in Blairgowrie.

Dr. Forsyth, of the Established Church, Abernethy, has celebrated the jubilee of his ministry.

The veteran Dr. Aird, of the Free Church, Creich, will preach his farewell sermon to his congregation on November 15.

On Sunday week a farewell service in connection with the departure of Miss Mary Scott, Rosebank, Crieff, for Darjeeling, India, as a missionary associated with the Church of Scotland, was held in the parish church, Crieff.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Working Men's and West of Scotland Sabbath Protection Association, which was held last week in the Religious Institution Rooms, the annual report stated that during the past year there had been a great increase of tram cars and omnibuses on the Sabbath day. The running of brakes and omnibuses to country districts was another great means of desecrating the Lord's Day. All the leading railways in Glasgow run morning and evening trains on Sabbath. Few people in Scotland realised what a large amount of Sabbath desecration there was in this connection.

The session of the Glasgow Free Church College was opened last week with an introductory address by Professor George Adam Smith. Principal Douglas presided, and there was a large attendance. Professor Smith, in opening his address, said he brought to the students the greeting of Professor Drummond. One reported with hesitation upon an illness so prolonged and variable as that by which Professor Drummond was still crippled, but he might say that since midsummer there had been progress not only visible to his friends, but certified by his doctors. If this were sustained during the winter, by the beginning of next session they might welcome him among them. Dr. Candlish also was laid aside, but arrangements had been made with Dr. McCrie, of Ayr, and Dr. Henderson, of Crieff, to carry on his classes.

A public missionary meeting, under the auspices of the Glasgow Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church, was held last week in St. Andrew's Hall. There was an attendance of over 2000. Rev. James Rennie, Moderator of Synod, said the missionary spirit had been bound up with and had characterised their whole life and history as a church. Were they to credit the representations of some recent critics they should have to believe that the only result of a missionary's labours was spoiling good savages by making them bad Christians. Of course they knew better; but these forms of hostility let them see the need there was both of courage and caution in the carrying on of their mission work. Rev. W. R. Thomson, Training Institute, Old Calabar, described the missionary enterprise at work in that region. Rev. Dr. Albert Goodrich, Manchester, defended foreign missions, and other addresses were delivered.

Irish Notes.

THE Presbyterian Orphan Society has added 208 children to its list, which was previously a large one.

Mr. C. H. Yatman has been conducting Gospel meetings in Woodvale Hall, Belfast, during the past fortnight. Several have professed decision for Christ.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken is at present conducting evangelistic meetings in St. Thomas's Church, Belfast, and is being assisted by Rev. Jas. Stephens, who holds services for children.

The Jews in Russia.—It is reported from St. Petersburg that several prelates of the Orthodox Church are urging the Government to prohibit Jews, both in towns and villages, from carrying on trade on Christian holidays. Their efforts are believed to have every prospect of success.

Soldiers and Sailors.—Writing from Chesnut House, Thicket-road, Sutton, Miss E. Savage says that Miss Kelly (at present residing at Chesnut House) carries on a correspondence with soldiers abroad, and occasionally with sailors, sending Gospel letters, booklets, and periodicals by post. Parcels of these are sent on board troopships to be distributed during the voyage; in each a printed slip is inserted with her name and address for any who would like to write for a letter or book. Many letters are received in response, and many apply for books and periodicals. The postage and cost of books are necessarily heavy, and unless friends help her in the work many must be refused. Help in money is more useful than gifts of tracts, which need to be selected by one who understands the class of readers and their needs. Miss Kelly receives many letters full of encouragement as to the results of the work.

The Y.M.C.A.

GLASGOW UNITED ASSOCIATION.

The seventy-second annual meeting of the United Association in Glasgow took place on Friday in St. Andrew's Hall. There was a crowded attendance. Lord Overton, who presided, opened with a vigorous speech, in which he said that very much of the future of the country depended on the field of work in which Y.M.C.A.'s were engaged. Upon the young men depended the commercial, the political, the social relations, and the moral and spiritual character of our beloved country. A volunteer officer told him the other day that there would never be an adequate reserve force until conscription had been enforced. Well, it might be said that the same principle was applicable to the spiritual army of young men. They wanted, considering they had such a glorious leader, to make conscription universal, at least in Scotland, if not elsewhere. These volunteers would in the fine buildings in Bothwell-street get classes to instruct their minds and a gymnasium to strengthen their bodies. They would be able to form good companionships, and, above all, they would get spiritual blessing, and they would be enlisted into the Master's happy service.

Mr. W. M. Oatts said the membership of the Association was 8880. Two hundred and thirty fellowship meetings were affiliated, with an attendance of 4142 young men. One hundred and sixty-five members were studying for the ministry or mission field. Evangelistic services were held in six different sections, having 362 volunteer workers. Rev. James Paton spoke on the subject of purity, temperance, and missions in the New Testament sense. A rousing address followed by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, while Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., also spoke.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Conference of the South Wales District Union, held at Llanelly, on Tuesday, proved most successful.

The Trowbridge Association has been engaged during this month in a "membership campaign," and has already added the names of over one hundred young men to its roll.

The report of the German Association and Home, 28, Finsbury-square, shows a large amount of good work amongst young men, coming as clerks, waiters, and so on to London.

The educational classes in connection with the Glasgow Association were resumed on Sept. 7. About 1500 students have enrolled in the various classes, and about as many more in the sectional rooms.

The South-Eastern Metropolitan District Union Conference was held at the Clapham Junction Association on Monday week. Mr. F. W. Lawrence, the president, occupied the chair, and the proceedings were of an enthusiastic and helpful character.

In consequence of the revival in the North, Mr. Bell has been sent by the Scottish National Council to Wick and Mr. Wright to Stornoway, to try and gather into Associations the young men who may have been brought to the Saviour during the last few months. They will also visit various other places on their way back.

The inaugural reception given by the president of the Birkenhead Association was one of the largest ever held in connection with the Association. Nearly 100 new members and associates have been enrolled since the opening of the season and the work in each department shows most encouraging signs of progress.

At the annual meeting of the Southport Association, Mr. Theo. Davies promised £500 for the construction and equipment of a gymnasium, provided the adverse balance of £160 against the Society be wiped out before Christmas. Revs. E. J. Kennedy, J. Denton Thompson (rector), A. Scott, Mr. M'Innes, and Colonel M'Fie addressed the meeting.

The Exeter Hall Association is organising a band of workers for a special effort in behalf of the great number of young men exposed to the temptations of the London streets during the later hours of the evening. An excellent work is also in progress for boys, for whose benefit a suite of rooms has been fitted up in the basement, consisting of a games' room, a reading room, and a fret-work and carpentry shop. Mr. H. Conder, of Bombay, has evinced a great interest in this department, which Mr. F. W. White had in charge. Some eighty lads attended a meeting held in the early part of this week.

The South-Eastern District Union held its annual conference at Ramsgate on Thursday. Rev. C. Lewis Williams conducted an early devotional service, and the business session was presided over by Mr. W. F. Pygott. The reports from the various associations represented were, as a whole, distinctly encouraging, though at several centres the work was shown to need revival. The annual meeting of the Ramsgate Association was held in the evening, Col. Russell, R.A., occupying the chair. Addresses were given by Rev. W. Senior, Mr. R. Burn, Mr. W.

Langton, etc. The secretaries presented a gratifying record of the year's work.

The new premises of the Hammersmith Association at 11, The Grove, were formally opened by the president, Sir George Williams, on Friday last. Sir George Williams, after inspecting the premises, took the chair. Mr. Lydall, the treasurer, was glad to say that after meeting the expenses of the dilapidations at the old premises, of moving and fitting up the new premises, they were free of debt owing to the donations of members and friends. Funds were much needed, however, to carry on the work. The chairman then declared the premises open. Addresses were given by Dr. J. H. Gladstone, Revs. F. J. Harvey and A. Shrewsbury, and Mr. J. Murray.

The new building of the Sunderland Association was formally opened on the 19th inst. by the Lord Bishop of Durham, who expressed his confidence that the enlarged opportunities for usefulness created for the association by its entrance into its new and more commodious premises would enable it to make its influence felt upon the future of their town. Mr. C. S. Wilson, president of the N.-E. District Union, occupied the chair, and Mr. J. C. Moor presented the business statement on behalf of the Sunderland Committee. Mr. James Laing, J.P., D.L., presided over the evening meeting held in the Assembly Hall, when there was a full attendance, and at which, in addition to addresses given by Mr. W. H. Mills and Rev. J. Smyth Wood.

The Eastern District Union held its annual conference at Needham Market on the 20th and 21st inst. The business sessions of the conference were presided over by Canon Garrett, of Ipswich. Subjects of much practical interest in regard to the work of the district were discussed with earnestness and intelligence, and resolutions involving a forward movement in the work were adopted. The conference which, both in its representative character and usefulness, was believed to be the largest and best that had ever been held in the Eastern Counties, was brought to a successful conclusion by a joint annual meeting of the Needham Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. This was a crowded and enthusiastic gathering, and was presided over by Canon Garrett, addresses being delivered by Mr. Seagram, Mrs. Lloyd, Mr. Arthur Midgley, of Saffron Walden, and others.

The Y.W.C.A.

INDIA.

During the autumn in answer to definite continuous prayer, the World's Committee have been enabled to arrange for five Y.W.C.A. workers to proceed to different parts of India. Miss Mary Hill from U.S.A. sailed for Madras, and Miss Ormonde from Perth to the Bombay Presidency. Three others will follow on November 20.

Meanwhile news comes of needed help in the three homes in the Presidency towns, as new calls come on the time and strength of each worker, and invitations to start similar work in smaller towns and districts. The work in one place has been closed for want of workers, and it is languishing in other places through the removal of secretaries.

Those in charge of the Home in Free School-street, Calcutta, are anxious for the continued interest and support of friends at home.

Sept. 17 and 18 were observed as quiet days by friends of the Association in Simla. It was a season of happy fellowship and of much spiritual refreshment.

All offers of personal help or inquiries as to Y.W.C.A. work in India should be made to the Correspondent for India, World's Office, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, London, W.

BRIEF NOTES.

A series of eight lectures on "First Aid to the Injured" is being given by Miss A. C. Sutherland at the Y.W.C.A., 355, Clapham-road.

The monthly address in connection with the series promoted by the Blackburn branch for the Deepening of Spiritual life was delivered by Rev. Thomas Cook.

The annual meeting of the Lochlee branch was held at the Free Church Manse on the 15th inst., when an address was given by Rev. James Paul on "Responsibility."

The annual meeting of the Harrogate branch was held in the Church Institute on October 19. There is a deficit of £20 in the balance sheet; the report was otherwise a satisfactory one.

The annual sale of work in connection with the Southampton Y.W.C.A. took place at the rooms, 3, Portland-terrace, on the 13th and 14th inst. A week's mission has been conducted by Miss Naish, of Weston-super-Mare.

The Oban Y.W.C.A. held their first winter meeting on 5th inst., in the hall of the Congregational church; over 100 were present. Miss Pollock gave a most interesting account of work in the Gordon Memorial Mission, Natal, where she had herself worked, and showed many African articles of dress, etc. Mrs. Corson, who occupied the chair, spoke a few words to the members as to how best to help on the Association.

The tenth annual meeting of the Richmond branch was held in the College Hall on the 16th inst. There was a large attendance. Captain Tottenham occupied the chair, and in the course of his remarks referred to the desirability of obtaining new premises, and hoped that by next year they might have a suitable building. The secretary's report showed the association to be in a flourishing condition. Forty-three visitors had passed through the home, and a profit of £22 realised. Forty-eight members were enrolled during the year, and there were now 230 on the books. The Girls' Home Mission work was progressing favourably, and the Tract Mission had distributed over 11,000 tracts.

Christian Endeavour.

The fourth anniversary of the Edith Grove C.E.S. showed very marked progress.

Interesting meetings have been held at Sutton St. James, Lines., in celebration of the anniversary of the Baptist C.E.S.

The fourth anniversary of the Osmaston-road Society, Derby, was celebrated on October 5, and continued by a series of devotional meetings during the following week.

The fifth anniversary of the Y.P.S.C.E., in connection with the Haven Green Baptist Church, Ealing, was held on October 12.

The third anniversary of the Society connected with the Congregational Church, Edgbaston, was celebrated on October 4 by a special service. The Endeavourers numbered some 250.

The North-East London Union held its annual meeting at Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington-road. The report showed that three new societies had been started under the influence of the Union. Twenty-eight societies are affiliated with it, which comprised a total of 1326 members, being an increase of 291 over last year.

The South-West London Union held last week its autumnal Convention. In the afternoon a conference of ministers was held. Rev. J. Alford Davies gave an address on the Christian Endeavour, its aims and achievements. The evening convention was presided over by Mr. J. H. Freeth, and Revs. J. Tolefree Parr and James Douglas gave addresses.

The Christian Endeavour convention of New Jersey was held at Plainfield on October 7—9, with over two thousand delegates in attendance at its opening session. The Jersey Cycle Academy was used for the meetings, and the overflow was accommodated in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church. The New Jersey convention was happily associated with the evangelistic work of Mr. D. L. Moody, which began on the previous Sunday, and whose meetings were unusually well attended, and were productive of great good. They were supplemented by the energetic work of the Endeavourers, who held several services, among which were some during the noon hours for working-men at two printing-press manufactories and the tool works. Mr. Moody consented to preach the sermon and lead the services at the closing consecration meeting.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—Mr. James B. Wookey preached to a crowded congregation on Sunday evening in Chesterfield. The collection for Dr. Barnardo's Homes amounted to over £12. A large number of anxious seekers filled the vestry. Next Sunday Mr. Wookey will be at Derby.

The recent elections in Hungary are said to have been a heavy blow to the clerical party, i.e. the Roman Catholic party. The country is flourishing greatly in a material way, and seems determined that the bigoted and reactionary party which is rampant at Vienna shall not also hold sway in the other half of the Austrian empire. A time like this ought to be propitious for the activity of evangelical Christians. The sowing of the seed in cities and villages by means of tracts and portions of Scripture ought to be carried forward with vigour, for whatever the political future may be, the seed will spring up again. Besides which, the truest safeguard of a nation from priestly domination and political slavery is in an intense religious life fed and sustained by God's Word.

The tortuous ways of diplomacy have been strangely illustrated by the disclosures made by Prince Bismarck regarding the secret treaty made with Russia during his term of office. The very revelation of the existence of such a treaty years after its term had run out is enough to peril the goodwill of those countries who had formed open treaties with Germany, and which are still in force. The bare statement of this fact emphasizes the extraordinary instability of European relations, and the danger of having men at the helm of affairs who have little principle and boundless ambition. When nations entrust their affairs into the hands of such men, who form alliances entirely unknown to the people over whom they rule, they are in the grasp of unknown forces. Truly there is as much need as ever to "make supplications and prayers for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty" (1 Tim. ii. 1, 2).

The open manner in which gambling has been indulged in during the campaign preceding the Presidential Election in the United States is a public scandal. The newspapers have given publicity to the odds from day to day, and the prospects of the two candidates have been gauged more by these quotations than by almost any other indication of public opinion. When grave contingencies in the future of nations are turned into food for the gambling passion it is a bad sign at best; but the colossal scale on which the evil seems to have extended through the American community suggests melancholy reflections. It is not only the intense excitement which the habit leads to, it interweaves into an already complicated situation an extraneous and artificial passion which would sacrifice the welfare of a people on the altar of private greed.

Lord Dufferin expressed, no doubt, the general feeling when he said, at the banquet given to him and Lady Dufferin at Belfast, that in spite of Christianity and civilisation and of all other forces that make for a higher life among the nations, still the dominant factor in human affairs is force, and not right. Yet that impression may be stronger on the minds of the class of men to which he belongs than it is upon the minds of many who move in humbler circles, and have chiefly to do with making those conditions of thought and life which eventuate in great national and international changes, amounting to peaceful revolutions. Diplomats know diplomats; whether they know the peoples is not so apparent. Men who do believe in right go working on quietly from generation to generation, until at length the great men of the earth are compelled to recognise their work. Thus Lord Dufferin himself confesses that "a consolatory idea" has recently emerged above the horizon in the shape of international arbitration. There may be other good things below the horizon which will presently mount into view.

Mrs. Humphry Ward thinks that criticism of the Bible should cease; we do not want criticism or rationalism, we have abundance of them; it is "enthusiasm, faith, imagination" we want. The new things criticism has given want their language. From which words we gather that those in the ranks of Evangelicalism who are going towards the critics had better halt; and that the soul wants something better than denials and doubts. For ourselves we believe it wants "faith, hope, and love," and as for a new language there is none better than our mother-tongue in the Bible.

For those who are interested in seeing how old truths can be re-stated, "Evil and Evolution—an attempt to turn the light of modern science on to the ancient mystery of evil" (Macmillan & Co.) will be an acceptable book. It does not treat of the origin of evil, but of evil as existent in this world; and by employing the discoveries of science shows how probable it is that the fine balance and adjustment of things has been disturbed by some evil power; in fact, comes to the conclusion stated in the Book of Genesis. Some will repudiate the writer's theology, and some assail his reasoning, but no thoughtful mind which is pressed with the great questions of our times can follow him from point to point without obtaining help.

There is a powerful vindication of the old truth that God made his universe "very good"; and that "an enemy" has spoiled its beauty and jarred its music; but that even now it is "inexpressibly sublime in its harmony, its beauty, its manifest beneficence of design." But he who is now the enemy was created perfect. Moses and the prophets, and the Lord Jesus and his apostles give us reliable information as to the fall of the Shining One, his baleful history, and his final doom, when his iniquity shall be full.

We have always felt that the assertion, now so commonly made, that this age has "rediscovered Christ," is very self-complacent and very disparaging to ages which have gone before. Principal Scott, of Lanchashire College, thinks so, and has taken occasion to say, that surely in every age there have been those to whom Christ was as real as He is to anyone now; and their devotedness to Him would not have been one whit increased had they been in possession of the results which have flowed from the concentration of inquiry on the person and work of Christ in the present day. It is, to say the least, a remarkable thing that this age, which is so largely a combination of worldly struggle for money and of worldly pleasure in spending money, should regard other ages as knowing so little of Christ, though they had men and women who loved Him unto the death. Our age has its own good points, but its indebtedness to the past is immeasurable.

The essence of saving faith is not assent to a proposition or a dogma; it is trust in a living Person. It is an act not of the understanding, but of the will and heart. The trust asked for by Christ is the bond that unites souls to Him, so that his life becomes ours, and we share in his power, and purity, and grace. We must get away from the frigid air of belief, and breathe the warm atmosphere of trust, and we shall know more in a day by this upgiving of the soul into his hands, than by years of intellectual argument and inquiry. It is through the poverty of the English language that the words, "Ye believe in God, believe also in Me," fail to carry the weighty meaning which they contain in the original. There they are heart-words, and carry with them all the wealth of sentiment and adoration, which they bear to all who have experienced the reality they indicate.

The wonderful accessibility of the Saviour to all who desired to meet Him and needed his help is one of the most striking features of his earthly life. He did not love intermediaries, and He rebuked his disciples when these stood between Him and direct contact even with little children. He denied Himself to no one; the lost sheep of the house of Israel, the woman of Samaria, the Magdalene of the street, the proud Roman, the inquisitive Greeks, the messengers of John—all had access to Him. He is still the same; the one mediator between God and man, graciously open to all, and able to meet the needs of all. When Pope and priest, virgin or saint, are set up as avenues of approach to Him, and we are denied access to the source of blessing except through these official channels, we will have none of them. The way is open in and through Christ to the holiest, and the poorest and weakest are as welcome—if possible more welcome—than the noblest and best. The one condition of access to Him is that we should feel our need of Him and his grace.

The Hon. Mrs. A. T. Lyttelton said at the Women's Conference that she hoped the modern woman had learnt that the old forms of philanthropy were not quite out of date. That is not the only good thing which the Conference seems likely to do, for its subjects of debate and the way in which they were handled were well calculated to train both mind and heart for the work of life among things common and homely, and also among things lofty and difficult. The opinion of thoughtful and cultivated women on courtship and marriage, on pocket-money, on sanitation, and on the Armenian atrocities, is worth knowing. It will do its share in influencing the country for good, and will, no doubt, extend also to our colonies.

There is an alarming increase of lunacy in London. About 600 are added to the certified list every year of those under the care of the County Council. If the present rate goes on, there will be 15,866 of these unfortunate individuals under restraint by the end of the century. It is growingly difficult to provide accommodation for them. At a recent meeting of the County Council, it was stated that nine-tenths of the lunacy cases in London are the result of drink, and one of the councillors not inaptly suggested that the Government ought to pay for asylums out of the revenue it derived from the traffic. This result of the drinking habits of the community is dreadful to contemplate. And yet it is only one out of countless others which cannot be tabulated, but which bring unspeakable misery, ruin, and moral degradation in their train.

"A Short History of Christianity in England," by Mr. Howard Evans (James Clarke and Co.), presents us with a wonderful pennyworth of valuable information concerning the origin and development of Evangelical truth in this country. Its purpose is to give, in the shortest possible compass, the salient points of the conflict with priestcraft and sacerdotalism from the earliest times. The true story of the Reformation is told in clear terse language, and the successive steps by which toleration and freedom of worship were secured in this country. It is instructive reading in view of the insidious growth of sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism.

In a list of favourite books among American boys, given by a gentleman in New York, who has had exceptional opportunities to know the facts, we note the entire absence of religious works. Out of twenty whose titles are given, there are only two biographies, three are books of sport or athletics, the rest are almost without exception stories of adventure and peril. "Pilgrim's Progress" is no longer mentioned. What is true of America is largely true of this country. Do parents, guardians, and teachers fulfil their duty towards the boys who are under their care in this matter?

"Everywhere—Preaching."

EVERY Christian journal should be, above all else, a missionary organ, because the Church of Christ is before everything else a missionary organisation. No Christian Church fulfils its purpose in the world unless it sets the first things first—the promise and the commission of the risen Saviour: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." This is the first principle of the Church's life, and the mainspring of true Christian activity.

The first and surest symptom of deadness in the Church at large, or in any individual church, is indifference to the privilege and responsibility of being witnesses of God to our fellow men. The first and surest symptom of renewed life is that out of the inmost being of the believer flow the rivers of living water, which proceed from the throne of God and of the Lamb, to give life unto the world. The world's great need is to know God. The chief desire of the evil one is to blind the eyes of the unbelieving, lest the light of the knowledge of the glory of God should shine unto them in the face of Jesus Christ. It is the work of God, by his witnesses, to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God.

When the Son of God had finished the work which He had given Him to do, He had revealed the Father, "The only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him"—"He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." For this purpose God gave Him to the world. He belongs to every one of the human race; He is God's loving gift to mankind. He tasted death for every one. He is the propitiation for the whole world. He died, the Just for the unjust, to bring us to God. When He emptied Himself, and humbled Himself, and became obedient to the death of the cross, He was revealing the righteousness of the meek and lowly God, the God of all patience and of all grace, the only wise God our Saviour. And the exceeding greatness of his power was made manifest when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in heaven; far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but in the age to come—that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things above, beneath, and on the earth, to the glory of God the Father.

His first name in heaven is the Faithful Witness. This is the inscription on the first of his many crowns. And because He is the Faithful Witness He is the Firstborn from the dead and the Prince of the kings of the earth.

As He is so are we in this world. God gave Him for a witness to the peoples; to the elect nation God said, "Ye are my witnesses that I am God"; and with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Jesus called disciples to make them apostles: "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He would thrust forth labourers into his harvest." "Lift up your eyes and see that the fields are white already to harvest; and he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal that He that soweth [the Sower is the Son of man] and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

The Lord of the harvest answered that prayer for labourers on the Day of Pentecost; but although in Jerusalem the apostles with great power gave witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all, it required a great persecution to push the disciples out of the city into the country, out of Jerusalem into Judea; but when the persecution came they were all scattered abroad throughout Judea and Samaria (except the Apostles) and went everywhere, preaching the Word.

Peter passed throughout all quarters of Judea and Samaria, but although the Spirit of Christ had overcome in him the antipathy to any dealings with the Samaritans, it required a trance at Joppa and a vision at Casarea to overcome his conservatism towards the Gentiles. But God so overruled and wrought that the Acts of the Apostles ends with Paul settled for two whole years in his own hired house in the Metropolis of the Gentile world, preaching the Reign of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

The inclination of the Church to settle down and enjoy itself either in a worldly or a spiritual way, leaving the great world unevangelised; and God's yearning desire that the good tidings of his love-gift to the world should be spread through all the nations, have continued through the ages. In these last days the revival of missionary interest is the brightest sign of the times. How to put that interest into action according to God's will is the most important problem in the world, and, like the keystone of the arch, this, if rightly solved, would hold other things in their appointed place. The Prospect in Mexico.

MR. ECLON HARRIS writes:—"There is evidently great awakening going on in this Republic. Men are turning from their idols, and we feel a measure of responsibility to point them to Jesus the Christ of God. Even the Catholic Bishop of Tamaulipas has said publicly that the apparition of the Virgin to Juan Drago is a farce. A council of bishops was held a few days ago in Mexico City to consider the question. The Pope's Legate was present. The final decision was that the story of Guadalupe must be believed in all its details. All the papers are taking it up and the whole country is divided under the names of Apparitionists and Anti-apparitionists. The foolish arguments of the former are only increasing the ranks of the latter.

"As is ever the case in such circumstances, many doubtless will become infidels, but we trust that not a few will seek for something better, and we will endeavour to tell them of Him who once appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and who shall yet appear the second time apart from sin unto salvation."

Glasgow Railway Mission.

THE eleventh annual conference of the Glasgow branches of the Railway Mission was held on Oct. 24 and 25. The delegates from railway mission meetings in different parts of Scotland met in the Waterloo Rooms on the Saturday afternoon. Encouraging reports were submitted, showing that the Mission is making solid progress.

On Saturday evening a social meeting was held. The hall was crowded. Mr. A. B. Munro, Hon. President, was in the chair, and referred to the good work done by the Mission during the past year, and pointed out that in Glasgow two new branches had been opened with encouraging results. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Colville, M.P., Rev. John Urquhart, Mr. Logan, and Mr. R. Nixon, Gen. Secy.

On Sabbath a large gathering was held in St. Andrew's Halls to hear addresses from Rev. D. M. Macintyre (Finnieston Free Church) and Mr. R. Logan. The conference subject was "For me to live is Christ." Many delegates expressed themselves as having received great help from the Conference, and they will return to their centres with renewed interest in the work.

Prayer for France.

FOR some weeks it has been laid on my mind to write you on a subject which, to me, is one of vital importance. I would have done so ere this, but have been hoping that someone more influential than myself—someone who is known in religious circles in England—would do so. What I allude to is the advisability of forming all through England a guild or association composed of Evangelical Christians of all denominations, for the purpose of offering daily, persevering prayer to God that the efforts of Jesuits in disguise, and Jesuits without disguise, may be frustrated, and that all schemes and deep and craftily-laid plans for leading our dear fellow-countrymen towards Rome and its false teachings may be rendered sterile.

I tremble when I read or learn of the persistent efforts of those whose aim seems to be to extinguish the Gospel lamp in our land, and to replace it by the thick darkness of Popery. I have strong faith in the promise made in Matthew xviii. 19, "Again, I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven;" and firmly believe if English Christians, ministers and others, took up my suggestion we would see the Lord's arm made bare in the defence of his own blessed truth and of his Holy Word.

I am deeply thankful to know the Christian Press keeps the subject of Papal aggression before its readers, but it is not enough in my opinion to speak or write of what the enemies are doing. We should pray unitedly, systematically, and perseveringly, and God will assuredly hear and answer, for He is jealous for his truth. Experience has taught us that when we pray earnestly on any subject the mind becomes inventive in the use of means.

I believe the thought laid before you in this paper comes from God. If it does, many Christians will no doubt feel drawn to respond thereto. My hope and prayer is that some one will be found to suggest a practical plan. Should nothing come of this, I shall at least have the satisfaction to know that I have obeyed what I think to be a Divine impulse.

A FRENCH MISSIONARY.

Brittany, France.

Home Visiting in Spitalfields.

IN a report on his home-visiting work, Mr. James Sharpless says:—"We often wish we could do more for the comfort and well-being of God's suffering children. Some are confined in small, uncomfortable rooms, yet they look on the brightest side of things, having the Saviour's presence to cheer and sustain them.

"Visits to the hospitals and infirmaries are continued as usual. We cannot tell where the good seed falls, but it is sown in faith and watered by prayer, assured that it will not return unto Him void. The poor suffering patients are always pleased to have a visit and a little talk about the good things. Several who have been visited for years have passed away, leaving bright testimonies of their steadfast faith in Christ—joy and peace filling them through believing in the Lord Jesus. These and other tokens of the Lord's saving power encourage us to persevere and go forward. This kind of visitation and personal dealing is very trying and difficult to the worker, yet it has, by God's blessing, often proved fruitful. Personally, I should prefer a change of locality for Gospel work if He opened up the way. After thirty years' close and continued plodding among the East-end poor one feels all the worse for wear and less able to bear the burden and heat of the day."

Communications to Mr. Sharpless should be addressed:—14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, London, E.

The Grammar of Christ's Gospel.

By SAMUEL PEARSON, M.A.
(Of BROUGHTON PARK CHURCH, MANCHESTER.)

MANY Christian people get into trouble of various kinds because they did not begin the Christian life according to the directions laid down in the New Testament. Sometimes a boy at school does not get on well because he has not been well grounded in the grammar of the languages which he is trying to learn. It is necessary to learn the grammar of Christianity, and sometimes to relearn it. And that grammar is taught by Christ Himself, to whom we must ourselves go for the words of Eternal Life. I propose to state as simply as possible what are the lines along which all have to walk, who want to become like Christ, that is, to be real Christians. In Luke i. 2 we read of "Eye witnesses from the beginning." In Heb. iii. 14 we are told to "Hold fast the beginning of our confidence."

I.—LOOK AT JESUS.

Some miss a road because they do not look for it, or examine the sign-posts. We cannot understand Christianity unless we give our minds to Christ. There comes a time in the history of the youth when he learns to think. He not only goes to work, and does his daily duty, but he asks a reason why. His thoughts have an enormous influence on his life. And they should be voluntarily directed to Jesus.

The coastguardsman has a telescope with which he examines every vessel which heaves in sight; especially does he direct his glass to the large ones that he may know what they are. You stand on the coasts of time, the Bible is your telescope; bring it to bear on the life and character of Christ. Read about Him. Hear his work explained. Listen to his claims. Understand why He came into the world.

All this may seem so elementary that you almost turn from the advice as unnecessary. But to no one is the advice unnecessary; the most able and the most simple alike need it. For unless we attend with the mind we cannot be saved. And it is for lack of this attention that we find so many going wrong, living wrong lives, thinking wrong thoughts of God; and stumbling along ways of darkness, doubt, and death.

This is corroborated by the way in which Scripture deals with us about Christianity. It has pivot words, startling words, arresting words. John the Baptist began his ministry with one word, Repent. It was like the firing of a signal gun. Its report was heard all over Palestine, so that everyone for the moment was startled into attention. He continued the ministry with a second word, Behold. It was like the cry of Moses to the serpent-bitten Israelites, "Look and live!"

Christ Himself said "Hear." If you have an ear, open it. Often He began a sentence with "Truly, truly:" so as to make men feel the importance of what He was about to say. Then He worked miracles, not for his own pleasure, nor primarily for the benefit of those who were healed, but that the work might startle men to hear and receive the word. And at the end He gave his disciples bread and wine, and as they ate and drank they were to remember Him.

This is very important when we remember that our thoughts, fixed and attentive, determine what we do and become. No one can look every day on Christ without being the better for it. A good mother is a constant inspiration. Virtue flows out from her to the sons and daughters, because they are perpetually looking at and up to her. If you want to be one of the household of faith you must be an eye-witness of Christ from the beginning. You must consider Him, go and dwell with Him, ponder over what He says, and let your thoughts dwell sweetly on his name.

II.—FOLLOW JESUS.

If men find Christianity a difficult religion to understand it often is because they do not do what Luke did, "Trace the course of all things accurately from the first."

What are the main difficulties with men? They often arise from the character of professing Christians. The inconsistencies of Christian people are urged (not always honestly) as a reason why men should not take up the cross and follow the precepts of Christianity. The answer to all such difficulties is that we are called upon to follow Jesus Himself. Some men will say, "I find money worshipped by Christians as much as by others." Another will say, "I find war advocated and passions appealed to by Christian men as much as by others." Another will affirm that sharpness of dealing is as common among Christians as among worldlings. The sufficient reply is that you are called to obey Jesus, not his followers; to take commands from the Captain of your salvation, and not from his subordinates.

Others find speculative difficulties stand in the way. They cannot understand Trinity in Unity, nor reconcile Deity with Humanity in Christ; nor explain to themselves why any Atonement was necessary. But they forget that these things do not come in the beginning, either as a matter of history or as a part of the Christian's experience. The first thing is actual obedience to Christ: the doing something which would put us into friendly relations with Him.

Others again have much to say against the Churches. They are honestly perplexed at the irreconcilable pieces of advice offered to them. One says, "You must be baptized and confirmed in order to be a Christian;" another says, "Be careful to partake of the Holy Communion at the right hands;" another says, "There is only one Church, and if you are outside it you cannot be saved." It must be said that if we trace these ideas back we do not get to the beginning, but only to something that came after Christ, to heathen mixtures with Christianity, or to mediæval ignorance. Or at best, we may say that while there are Churches many and opinions manifold, there is only one Mediator, one Redeemer. And if we go back to the beginning we shall find Him, we shall see Him, and we shall hear Him say, "Follow Me."

Another Autumn.

CHILLING, cold, and dark, and drear,
Saddest season of the year,
Fading freshness, listless leaves,
Littered land, and sheltered sheaves.

Now and then a lonely lay,
Breeze-borne, sweetly floats away;
'Tis but furtive, farewell tone,
Trilled by yonder bird alone.

Darker day, and noisome night,
Murky through autumnal blight;
Hazy distance, dim and gray,
Deeper towards the close of day.

All portend the wintry blast,
Looming leeward, fleet and fast.
Softly fall the leaflets down,
Tinged with shades of red and brown;

Dying leaves suggest no ill,
Bronzing beauty tints them still.
Rustling murmurs midst them say:
"Ye, like us, shall pass away!"

Shall we catch this cadence sad
When "Our Father" makes us glad?
Rather raise a rich refrain
For the fruits of earth again.

Yea: and for the promised land,
Where the golden harvests stand;
Where the fruit is gathered in,
Never to be plucked by sin;—

Midst autumnal tremors trace,
That ye may be saved "by grace,"
And "through faith," when autumns cease,
Share Christ's Harvest Home in peace.

The Month & its Lessons.—II.*

NOVEMBER.—The Foggy Month.

NOVEMBER is called by the Jews "Chisleu," and the present name "November" intimates its position as the ninth month of the old Roman calendar. Our forefathers called it Sleety-month, Slaughter-month, and Foggy-month. The weather generally is a mixture of frost, snow, rain, and fog, which makes it one of the most dreary months of the year. As one has written:—

Fittful winds about us sigh,
Withered leaves about us lie,
Emblem of our own decay
When the soul has passed away.

NATURAL FOG AND SPIRITUAL FOG.

White fog is obstruction, so is ignorance, Eph. iv. 18.

Black fog is unhealthy, so is unbelief, 2 Cor. iv. 4.

Day fog is gloomy, so is uncertainty, 2 Cor. iii. 14; 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

Night fog is dangerous, so is carelessness, John xii. 35, 36.

Thick fog is blinding, so is prejudice, John i. 46, vii. 41.

Heavy fog is depressing, so is fear, Heb. ii. 15.

Lifted fog is blessing, so are light and hope, Eph. v. 8; 1 Thess. v. 8.

The fogs of sin (says Mr. Luff) are like fogs of winter—darkening, destroying, defiling, distressing. They hide the beams of the sun of righteousness, and blot out all the stars of promise; they choke the breath of prayer, and depress souls to the verge of spiritual suicide. So defiling are they that only the blood of Jesus can restore whiteness, and so destructive that thousands of souls are for ever lost in the darkness.

November is Nature's wet blanket—anticipation of winter, more gloomy than winter itself. The shadow of death hovering over the year. Emblem of the approach of death. Nature at rest, and the most dismal month of the year.

November is a month in which all down the ages many notable historical events have occurred, but perhaps the best remembered is one which took place over two hundred years ago, called the "Gunpowder Plot." It was a plot formed to destroy the king and young prince, and blow up Parliament. But this awful design was mercifully frustrated by a letter sent to Lord Monteagle. It was read, believed, and acted upon at once, and it saved them. In some respects this letter was like the Bible—God's letter to us. It was a letter of warning, a letter of love, a letter which told them of a way of escape. Such is the Word of God to us. It warns, it guides, and it leads to deliverance and safety all who heed its counsel (Rom. vi. 23; John iii. 16).

The Girls' Guild of Good Life.

THE annual meeting of this useful work amongst factory girls, which was started in the year 1883 at Hoxton Hall, the home of the Blue Ribbon movement, was held there on Tuesday week, under the presidency of the Hon. Conrad A. Dillon. The Hon. Mrs. Dillon presented prizes to the members who had shown proficiency in various classes during the year, which included sewing, knitting, drawing, writing, wood carving, fretwork, music, elocution, musical drill, and cookery.

The annual report gave particulars of the work carried on in these classes, and at the parlour meetings on Tuesday evenings, which were attended by an average of 142 members. Since its formation 3106 members had been enrolled, the actual number on the books now being 450, of whom 111 were new members. The registrar had paid 581 visits to sick and absent members, and the district visiting committee of eighteen girls had paid 1252 visits to their fellow-members. The report also referred to the formation of other clubs in the immediate neighbourhood, and to the success of the "Social Circle." The receipts for the season had amounted to £146, and after meeting all liabilities a small balance remained in hand.

Addresses were given by the chairman, Mrs. Septimus Buss, Mr. J. T. Rae, and Mr. W. P. Goulding, and some excellent music was provided by the "Social Circle" Choir and the Mandoline Band; Miss Mary Williams also sang, and the drill class gave an interesting display.

* From A BOX OF NAILS. By C. Edwards, (H. & Allenscn.)

An Afternoon in Lambeth.—I.

IT had grown dusk. A cold, damp mist was falling, and shaded into softer outlines the gloomy tenements of the narrow street along which I was making my way home. All afternoon I had been visiting in one of the poorest quarters of Lambeth, all afternoon in my round of calls I had been among the scenes of sin and sadness, dirt, and squalor which abound in that densely-crowded centre of our metropolis. As I walked along, the fresh night-air came with reviving force and cooled my tired brain. I was not physically tired, but rather possessed by that feeling of limpness and emptiness which all of us know at times, when those with whom we have been have drawn heavily on our spiritual strength and spiritually it has been nothing but "give, give, give."

Out in the calm of God's air my mind turned to the various characters and homes I had come from; problems connected with each flitted before me, and the scenes I had left re-enacted themselves before my eyes. Let me share some of them with the reader, not for any special interest they may have, but because they suggest and make us think over questions which it is good to clearly face and to dwell on.

Go back to the first door where I had knocked that day. It was the home of a woman who had sent for me—for what reason I knew not. She had lately come to a class I held, and was as yet almost a stranger. Up the narrow, creaking stairs I went to an untidy room whose only occupants were my friend and a large black cat. For a time I could not make out why she had wanted me; then of her own accord she turned the conversation into a distinctly religious channel, and asked a number of intelligent questions regarding the joy of a Christian's life. We had a long and interesting talk, she apparently in great anxiety of soul and conscious of the lack of this element of joy in her own life.

Now and then her questions came so glibly and were so well put, that a suspicion "Is she real in all this?" flashed across me; but I instantly dismissed it as ungenerous, the woman appeared so intensely in earnest. I heard the story of her yearnings for someone to lead her into fuller light—of an unsympathetic husband, etc., etc. I strove to discover wherein lay her hindrance to peace and joy, and suggested she had not surrendered her whole life to God, and accordingly was in that miserable state of betweenness. But while I spoke I was conscious that my words fell on dull ears, moreover, though I prayed that the right words might be given me I felt that nothing was granted, and that I was working without power.

I left the house wondering, and dissatisfied with my failure. A few yards away, coming across a wise and experienced friend, I besought him to visit my woman, and told him the case. When I mentioned her name and address, to my utter astonishment he burst into a laugh. "Don't you know her?" he added. "She is a regular old sponger—tries that trick (anxiety of soul) on every new comer. She has traded on this for ever so long. It is material help she is after, and she tries to enlist interest in this manner." Now I understood why my prayer for words in that room had not been answered, at least it had been, but very differently from my fancy, and clearly in the unmasking of the soul from whom I had come. How loathsome it all was! That these people should come to our religious assemblies, learn the shibboleths of religious phraseology, and then make capital out of their proficiency in such a fashion! Saddened and disgusted I turned away. Were there many like this woman?

A few steps further brought me to house No. 2, and here I was prepared for the scene I knew would meet me. In a room bare of all but a bed, a broken chair, and a table, lay one who years ago had been a fair, bright girl and a Sunday-school teacher. Now bloated from drink, and with a body repulsive in its rags and dirtiness, she lay on the bed stupid and apathetic. "Have you any money for me this week?" I asked. "No, Miss, not to-day...its worse than ever," was the answer I got, and with a half sob she turned away her face. "But surely you can spare just a penny or so?" Then after a silence broken by whining complaints the two precious coins I wanted were handed to me.

Every week for some months I had tried to induce the poor soul to save from drink a few coppers and let me be savings bank for her, giving her, I must confess, far too high a rate of interest to satisfy a political economist! Thus we had gone on; some weeks I had a ray of hope that she was really lifting herself out of the depths, at other times and this afternoon there would come a terrible relapse, and it seemed as if one had to begin all over again. "I've got so low, I can't get up," was the listless apathetic cry that always rang with a hopelessness in my ears. The trouble was not only drink, but debt. Money was lent her regularly by those who sold her drink on the understanding she would buy the latter from them, and now these debts had, unknown to her husband, become a heavy chain on the wretched woman's life.

What can one do in such cases? I asked myself the question standing by that bed, and I ask it now. Pledge signing—that was useless, I felt. I had tried it with her again and again, getting her to sign for a day, two days, over a holiday and other short periods, but always when the temptation presented itself, and when there was no friend by to exert a counter-influence, she fell back—her will power seemed gone, and the only chance I knew was in the handing over of her life to the One stronger than the strong man. Alas, that the poor dulled perception seemed scarcely able to take in!

For such a case as this I query if there is any remedy save in the removal for a lengthened period into entirely fresh surroundings, where good influences could work uninterruptedly till the will-power had in some degree regained its normal strength. But where is such a Home?—a Home for persons too poor to make payments other than the merest trifles?

Between this door and that of a still sadder, I paused for a moment's glad relief to say a word of cheer to a soul whom I rejoiced to know was learning her Magnificat. "Ah, miss, I'm that happy I don't mind anything," were the words that greeted me. "It's all along of that blessed meeting that I'm a changed woman," she continued. "In the mornings when I wants to lie a bit longer, I think of them words about the Shepherd coming and leading his sheep out of the fold, and of Him going before all day, and then I'm up in a moment, and all the troubles that come, why He's there to tell them to, and it's all so different." The voice rang true, and the light on the face bespoke the peace that passes all understanding.

FAITH.

Work in Inland China.

DEAR SIR,—I recently received from a missionary travelling through the Ting-chiu region a letter in which he said he had come upon one of our stations, and it was like an oasis in the desert. He was well treated, and gave encouraging words as to the workers.

In the same afternoon, the overworked pastor of the district came to a union prayer-meeting, and told the following cheering news:—(1) The numbers of Christians and adherents are increasing to a gratifying extent. (2) There are more preachers. This is because those who love the truth join in making it known to others. (3) There are more readers of the Bible. Happily, the knowledge of the written language is greater in Ting-chiu than in some other places. Even coolies know a little. During the Sunday lessons, if anyone cannot follow, it is considered a cause of distress. (4) The value of healing has been proved. The multitudes of sick appreciate any help that can be given, and they are capital patients. (5) There is less of persecution and better understanding of our intentions. (6) The opportunities are increasingly good for spreading the Gospel. Lack of men and means are the drawbacks.

An Industry for Cripple Girls.

CERTAIN easy-going and well-to-do Londoners must have been actually startled by learning that there are as many child cripples of the poorest class in London as would populate a moderately-sized town. The spring and summer months, which have just passed, have been a kind of festival for such suffering little subjects in more ways than one. The noble work of the Ragged School Union among this oftentimes helpless and always needy class in their own homes, has resulted in untold good. But notwithstanding seasonable hampers, country holidays, and visitation in their homes, these cripples still remain in a helpless state unless something is done to benefit them in a permanent way.

For years past this urgent need has been met by the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission. Young girls of the cripple class, who, despite weakness and deformity, are under the necessity of earning a livelihood, are taken in hand and taught an industry. For such to depend upon flower-selling to obtain food and shelter is a hopeless prospect. They need, once and for all, to be removed from the streets. Such girls cannot be trained for domestic service; they are not strong enough for factory work, and their affliction, which obliges them to be frequently absent from duty, prevents even kind-hearted employers from teaching them a business. The natural tendency is for such to suffer, to drift nobody knows whither, and at last to perish. One aim of the Flower Girls' Mission is to gather such from the streets, to give them a Christian training, and then to teach them some light and profitable business. The Mission actually teaches these rescued cripple flower girls to make artificial flowers, and being thus enabled to earn their living, they are no longer a burden to themselves, a perplexity to friends, or dependent upon charity.

The appeal of these little workers for encouragement in their endeavour to help themselves will no doubt meet with a ready response from those who have sympathy and taste to appreciate what such cripple girls are capable of producing. To watch them at work, and to contrast their present condition with their former deplorable state in the streets, is to have the most powerful plea of all come home to the heart. Friends will also remember that flowers in the home not only have a brightening effect, but that to buy them of those who employ such rescued girl workers as have been described is to brighten lives that at one time seemed to be hopelessly blighted. Mr. J. A. Groom, the founder of the mission, and for over thirty years its honoured superintendent, will thankfully welcome contributions, and receive orders for artificial flowers, plants, ferns, etc., at 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Work Among the Lepers.

MOST cheering news is to hand from Miss Mary Reed, that devoted missionary. In the asylum under her charge at Chandag, in the Himalayas, she has now from eighty to ninety poor afflicted inmates, who, if not under her kind and sympathetic care, would be miserable outcasts, as so many thousands of their fellows still are. Miss Reed's letter is full of thanksgiving for the strength given her to extend her Christlike work, and for the evident blessing that rests upon it. Her own health is wonderfully maintained, as she says, in answer to prayer alone, as she uses no medical means in her own case, though applying the usual remedies to her patients.

In addition to the windmill and stables (for which the funds were contributed by readers of THE CHRISTIAN), a new chapel is being built at the foot of the hill, near the male quarters, as many of the men and boys are not able to climb the hill to the service. It is hoped to dedicate this new chapel on Christmas Day, and Miss Reed would be grateful for contributions towards finishing and beautifying the place where the lepers will listen to the words of Him who alone can cleanse them, as well as for the feeding and clothing of her large and helpless family.

The committee of the Mission to Lepers, who are responsible for the maintenance of this and twenty-six other Asylums and Homes, have just commenced work in several new centres, but have been compelled reluctantly to refuse other openings from lack of funds. "KNOWEST THOU?"—Job xxxix. 1.

THE catechism of this chapter is designed to convince man of his ignorance. How little he knows of nature. Even though centuries of investigation and research have passed, there are still many questions which baffle us. And if we know so little of the Creator's handiwork, how much less do we know of Himself, or the principles on which He acts.

The knowledge of God is not intellectual, but moral and spiritual. Things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, are made known to Love and Obedience. Let the love of God be shed through the heart, and the will of God be the ruling principle of life, and there will be given a knowledge of God which the research of the investigator could never gain. "We have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given us of God...they are spiritually discerned." Knowest thou?

Dost thou know the exceeding greatness of his power, which He wrought in the Resurrection of thy Lord, that it is all around thee waiting to do as much for thee also, lifting thee, deadweight as thou art, to sit in the heavenlies?

Dost thou know the hope of his calling to a life within the veil, with the veil behind thee, and the light of the Shekinah ever on thy face?

Dost thou know the riches of his glorious indwelling, that He is prepared so to infill thee, that thou shalt partake of the very life wherewith He liveth and reigneth evermore?

Thou mightest never be able to acquire a knowledge of nature, but thou hast every facility for knowing things which are hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed to the poor in spirit and pure in heart.

"BEHOLD, I AM OF SMALL ACCOUNT; WHAT SHALL I ANSWER THEE? I LAY MINE HAND UPON MY MOUTH."—Job xl. 4.

What a different tone is here! This is he who so vehemently protested his innocence, and defended himself against the attacks of his accusers. The Master is come, and the servant who had contended with his fellows takes a lowly place of humility and silence.

The first step in the noblest life, possible to any of us, is to learn and say that we are of small account. We may learn it by successive and perpetual failures which abash and confound us. It is better to learn it by seeing the light of God rise in majesty above the loftiest of earth's mountains. "When I was young," said Gounod to a friend, "I used to talk of 'I and Mozart.' Later I said, 'Mozart and I,' but now I only say 'Mozart.'" Substitute God, and you have the true story of many a soul.

The next step is to choke back words, and lay the hand on the mouth. Silence and meditation! Not arguing or contending! Not complaining or murmuring! Not cavilling or criticising! But just being still—still, that you may feel God near—still, that you may hear Him speak. "Take heed of many words," said George Fox; "keep down, keep low, that nothing may reign in you but life itself."

The greatest saints avoided, when they could, the society of men, and did rather choose to live to God, in secret. A certain one said, "As oft as I have been among men I returned home less a man than I was before. Shut thy door upon thee, and call unto Jesus, thy Beloved. Stay with Him in thy closet, for thou shalt not find elsewhere so great peace." How good it would be to lay our hands on our mouths rather oftener, whether in talking to our fellows, or in the hour of secret prayer.

"WHO THEN IS HE THAT CAN STAND BEFORE ME?"—Job xli. 10.

The first catechism had been on Job's knowledge; now it turns on his power. The pivot of the one was, knowest thou? of the other, canst thou? If a man cannot stand before one of God's creations, how much less before the Creator! If we dread the wrath of the enraged crocodile, what shall not be our dread before the wrath of the Eternal? Canst thou stand before Him? Canst thou strive against Him, with any hope of success? Canst thou force thyself, unbidden and unfit, into the presence of the Most Holy? Thou couldst not intrude on an earthly sovereign; how much less on Him, in whose sight the heavens are not clean?

Eternal light! eternal light!
How pure the soul must be,
When placed with thy searching light,
It shrinks not, but with calm delight
Can live, and look on Thee.

But Jesus can make it possible. Through Him we draw nigh to God. We have boldness to enter into the Holiest of All by his Blood. We may, through Him, be able to say, with Elijah, "Thus saith Jehovah, before whom I stand." Jesus is the minister of the heavenly sanctuary, and in virtue of his office He is able to bring us in to, and maintain us in, the Most Holy Place. He comes out to take us by the hand, and then, having fulfilled in us the good pleasure of his will, He brings us in and places us before the face of God for ever. Like Solomon's servants, we evermore stand before the king.

The sons of ignorance and night
May dwell in the Eternal Light,
Through the Eternal Love.

WEDNESDAY, November 11.

"NOW MINE EYE SEETH THEE, WHEREFORE I ABHOR MYSELF, AND REPENT IN DUST AND ASHES."—Job xlii. 5, 6.

This is the clue to the entire book. Here is a man, who was universally known as perfect and upright, one that feared God, and eschewed evil; who abounded in beneficent and loving ministries to all who were in need; to whom respect and love flowed in a full tide. He was not conscious of any failure in perfect obedience, or of secret sin; indeed when his friends endeavoured to account for his unparalleled calamities by suggesting that there was some discrepancy between his outward reputation and inward consistency, he indignantly repelled the charge, and repudiated the impeachment.

But there were inconsistencies and failures in him that needed to be exposed and put away before he could attain to perfect blessedness and enjoy unbroken peace. If man could not discover them, and if Job were unconscious of them, they were, nevertheless, present, poisoning the fountain of his being, as a hidden cesspool, whose presence is undetected, may be doing a deadly work of undermining the health of an entire household. So God led this man into his presence, and, like Isaiah, Ezekiel, Peter, and many others, he at once confessed himself vile. The light of the great white throne exposes all unsuspected blemishes.

Have you ever seen God! Oh! ask for that vision, that you may know yourself. In proportion as we know God, we abhor ourselves. Then Jesus becomes unspeakably precious. Through his death we pass into the true life, and begin to intercede for others. We never have such power for the blessing of the world as when we lie most humbly at the feet of God.

THURSDAY, November 12.

"WHOSE LEAF ALSO DOETH NOT WITHER."—Psalm i. 8.

"If a man abide not in Me," said our Lord, "he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered." The same thought is here. Thrust down your rootlets to the oozy river bed, and there is no doubt about your continuing earnest, patient, God-filled. The sun of temptation may strike you with sword-like beams, but you will have a source of supply which they cannot exhaust. The secret of an unwithering beauty is in the Word of God, delighted in and meditated upon day and night. And what is the Word of God, but the life of God, translated into human speech?

Wean yourself from all beside, and learn to feed on God. Withdraw your rootlets from men and things, and let them travel to the river of God, which is full of water. Close other doors, and open those that lead out on to the terrace, whence you may behold the farspread landscape of what He is, and is willing to be to us all.

Note that word meditate. The root must lie in contact with the stream, and the soul must steep itself in the Word of God. We must give the truth time to enter and pervade our souls. We must have retreats, shut away from the rest of life, up and down which we may go. These retreats are oftener found within the temple of the soul than without. Just as in the temple of old, there was Solomon's porch, where Jesus walked, so in that within.

How good the heart's still chamber thus to close
On all but God alone—
There in the sweetness of his love repose,
His love unknown!
Oh, rapturous solitude in glades of Paradise,
And, as in olden days, God walking there.

FRIDAY, November 13.

"THIS DAY HAVE I BEGOTTEN THEE."—Psa. ii. 7.

The Holy Ghost tells us that this was addressed by the Father to the Son in his Resurrection. (See Acts xiii. 33.) It was from the grave that our Lord stepped up to his mediatorial throne, whence all the hatred of his foes has had no power to dislodge Him, and never shall have. Death is a birth into the true life. Jesus was the Firstborn from the dead; we too are to be born out of the darkness of the grave into the Life Immortal.

"There is a beyond, and he who has once caught a glimpse of it is like a man who has gazed at the sun. Wherever he looks, he sees everywhere the image of the sun. Speak to him of finite things, and he will tell you that the finite is impossible and meaningless without the infinite. Speak to him of death, and he will call it birth; speak to him of time, and he will call it the mere shadow of eternity."

But is it not wonderful that He has begotten us also unto a living hope by the Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead to an incorruptible inheritance? We are the sons of the resurrection.

Do not wonder then at the hate of men. They will rage, and imagine vain things. They will take counsel together. It cannot be otherwise.

Yet it was well, and Thou hast said in season,
"As is the Master shall the servant be";
Let me not subtly slide into the treason,
Seeking an honour which they gave not Thee.

No, thou mayest expect to be bruised by thy brethren, and hated by the world. But at such times Christ will come to thee, and give thee fresh accessions of his resurrection life, carrying thee into the hidden house of his abiding, and confirming the weak knees and the heart that faints.

SATURDAY, November 14.

"BUT THOU, O LORD, ART A SHIELD FOR ME; MY GLORY, AND THE LIFTER UP OF MINE HEAD."—Psa. iii. 3.

Oh, my soul, hast thou made God thy glory? Others boast in their wealth, beauty, position, achievements: dost thou find in God what they find in these? Thou needest safety from the shocks of time and change: is He thy shield? Thou must have something outside of thee, to complete thy blessedness: is He thine ideal?

Nothing resting in its own completeness
Can have worth or beauty: but alone,
Because it leads and lends to further sweetness,
Fuller, higher, deeper than its own.
Life is only bright when it proceedeth
Towards a truer, deeper life above;
Human love is sweetest when it leadeth
To a more divine and perfect love.

God around us as a shield, God above and within us as an ideal, God lifting up the tired and sorrowful face. This is David's threefold conception of his relation with God. All around men were filled with wrath at him. He heard their harsh voices, and what they said. Nevertheless he comforted, and stayed his heart with the words, But Thou, O Lord. Ah, what an instant change they make.

We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear.
We kneel, how weak—we rise, how full of power!

That Extra Penny.

By Mrs. E. M. WHITEMORE

WITH a hop, skip, and a jump, Baby Louie bounced into my room early one morning, and after touches and little thumps finally aroused me. With an air of importance, he informed me that it was "Wash-ing-ton's birthday." As I was not yet quite wide-awake I felt that it made no difference at that moment whose birthday it was. But, determined to make me understand, he exclaimed, in an excited and comical tone of voice, "Oh, mamma, I want to have a flag, please." In reply to my question, "How much would one cost?" he answered promptly, "Well, I could buy a very nice one for five cents; but oh, mamma, I could get a beauty for six cents."

While counting the coins into his little hand, a thought entered my mind. "Louie," I said, "suppose that instead of getting that beauty of a flag for six cents you get the other, dear, and give the extra penny to dear Jesus, for Africa. How would that do?" The little up-turned face looked for a moment as if it would not do at all, so, stooping down, I kissed the little fellow, and dropped the last cent into his hand. To my surprise and amusement, he walked around the table three or four times, seemingly lost in contemplation, with brow contracted, and his little head bent over on his chest.

Finally he went out, but returned half an hour later, holding a small flag in one hand, while the other hand was closed. He then asked for his small "bank," saying, "I want to drop my cent in for Jesus, mamma; I did not buy that beauty of a flag." Taking him in my lap for a moment, I said, "Darling, did you do that because mamma told you to do it?" With his eyes expressing all the love of his little heart, he threw his arms around my neck and said, "Oh no, mamma dear, I did it for dear Jesus' sake, because I love Him."

"Well, darling," I continued, "after all it is only a halfpenny. What could it do?" "Why, mamma," he replied, "couldn't it help tell the heathen a tiny little bit about Jesus?" I replied, "Yes, my precious child, and we will just commit it to God and ask his blessing upon it."

This we accordingly did, and in less than six weeks over sixty-four dollars were added to that cent, and dedicated to the spread of the Gospel in Africa. A week later, being invited to address a foreign missionary society in hopes of raising money for their board, I felt prompted, as an illustration, to tell this little story, in the hope that if any of my hearers were accustomed to give without really feeling it they might be prompted to ask themselves, "How much can I give to really feel it?" as that little fellow did. Weeks after, while seated in church one Sunday morning just before the service began, the sexton brought a long narrow box with an envelope addressed to my little boy. To this day, we have never discovered who the donor was, making it all the more to each of us as direct from God. The card bore these words, "To the little boy who gave his extra penny to dear Jesus for Africa." Enclosed were three new dollar bills, while the box was apparently filled with beautiful cut flowers. On reaching home he made small bouquets for different members of the family until only two or three flowers remained. Upon removing the last of these he discovered a parcel. In a second the string was untied, and out from the bundle fell a beautiful silk American flag. Trembling with pleasurable excitement for a moment he stood very still, and then said:

"But, oh, mamma, I did not get that extra penny to Jesus for Him to pay it back."

I answered, "No, my darling, but that is just the reason He did. He knew you did it just for Himself in love."

"Well, but, mamma, it is ever so much nicer than that beauty of a flag I wanted would have been."

"Yes, my darling, that is like Jesus, too. He never gives us what we think would just satisfy us, but gives us something far more in worth to prove how willing He is to please us when we fully trust Him."

In an emphatic though somewhat ungrammatical manner he added, "But just see, He let the penny grow, mamma, dear, till it grew, and grew, and grew into this great big flag." Then, as he held it in his outstretched arms, his eyes resting on it in admiration, he exclaimed, "And oh, its ever so much nicer than the one I gave up for Him!"

May this little incident stimulate others into a quicker obedience to the promptings of God's spirit, when the opportunity is offered either to relieve the wants of others or to help in spreading the Gospel abroad especially, and thus obey the last commission of our blessed Lord. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

And children of a larger growth may surely learn this lesson, too; and how many anxious moments might be prevented!

Going to School.

I MET a little maiden fair
One morning in September;
Her sunny face and winsome air
I ever will remember.

"Where are you going, little girl,
So merrily this morning?
Your bright blue eyes and golden curl
Your pretty head adorning."

She paused just long enough to say,
My ignorance almost scorning:
"Why, I am six years old to-day,
And school begins this morning."

Then off she ran, without a word,
To learn the lessons given.
May I be just as ready, Lord,
For lessons sent from heaven.

I ever would thy pupil be,
And still in knowledge grow,
Till I attain to my degree,
And quit this school below.

German and Swiss Women.—The annual meeting of the members of the Servants' Institute and Union was held at the Institute, 21, Baker-street, W., on Thursday afternoon last. Mr. John Shrimpton, who presided, stated that this work had been greatly blessed of God to the conversion of a number of German and Swiss young women. The religious meetings from time to time were well attended, and the Superintendent (Fräulein Hug) was greatly cheered with the results to her work. More than 2000 of these young foreign maidens have been benefited through this Union. The spacious rooms were well filled, and addresses were given by Pastor Faber, of Berlin, Pastor Kuhlner, Pastor Reedrich, and Herr Müller. This Institute is in connection with the Homes for Working Girls in London.

Mr. McNeill at Middlesbrough.

(By OUR OWN REPORTER.)

LAST Friday evening saw the close of Rev. John McNeill's spell of service in this industrial centre. In the opinion of the best informed, the town, during the past two weeks, has received a very large and decided access of spiritual life and impulse. It is not easy to differentiate these seasons of special effort where the evangelist is the same. Human nature in the last resort is a somewhat monotonous quantity, and there is only one root prescription for the cure of its manifold ills. At the same time, Middlesbrough would seem to be a typical field for the evangelistic preacher. Its growing population is mainly of the great toiling "middle class" (so called), which constitutes Britain's industrial army, and is the producer of her national strength. On these the problems of our competitive modern life press most heavily. Mr. McNeill's mission has proved that the Gospel of Jesus Christ, when properly presented, is fully equal to the needs and circumstances of this class. In view of that fact, we can well afford to ignore the croakings of the pessimistic critics, who say that the old truths concerning salvation have lost their ancient power.

The meetings held in the Temperance Hall have been attended night after night by large and interested crowds, whom the preacher has enthralled by his really remarkable expositions. For all those who are familiar with Mr. McNeill's work must admit that, as an evangelist, he is sui generis. On the sterner sides of truth he is as strong and unbending as the most confirmed Puritan could desire. But he sees keenly that while some will only respond to the whip of the law, many more can be savingly reached by way of the affections, or through the sweet reasonableness of intellectual conviction. So in all his addresses there is a fine blending of dogma, of flawless argument, and of moving pathos, with a due admixture of playful raillery and wit. It is not to be wondered at, as one clerical friend remarked on the closing evening, that, though the discourses usually extend to an hour or more, they seem only to have lasted about twenty minutes.

Presumably, Mr. McNeill repeats his addresses substantially at different places; but they wonderfully well bear rehearing. Through added meditation, and from the special circumstances of their successive delivery, they undergo a process of evolution, which keeps them perennially fresh even for the speaker himself. In the three closing discourses of the Middlesbrough Mission, which I was privileged to hear, he was mightily helped by the Divine Spirit, so that his words came home with manifest power. On the last evening but one the theme was "The great refusal" of the rich young ruler, who "could not bear the wrench that would have set him free" and made him the partaker of the eternal life which he craved. It was a singularly impressive unfolding of the power of worldliness in enabling a man to resist the call of Christ, and also of the powerlessness of mere legality as an instrument of salvation. The closing appeal to the hearers to "hang on to Christ," and not to "go away," as did this young Jew of such fair promise, was irresistibly pathetic, and calculated to bring halting souls to the point of decision.

The afternoon address of the last day was on Daniel's courageous fidelity to conviction and to God in the face of opposition. Mr. McNeill quoted the saying of Matthew Arnold, that "Conduct is three fourths of life," and remarked that he would accept the dictum provided it was conceded that the remaining fourth is the credal basis of life. Because Daniel believed in his God he could afford to disregard the plottings of his enemies, and the results justified his faith. If he could hold on to God, in all circumstances, amid the dimmer light of the old dispensation, how much more should we get such a firm grip of God in Christ as will enable us to cleave to Him, even if everything else should go. The description of how Daniel disdained, though a Jew, to meet craft with craft, or to take counsel of "Mr. Facing-both-ways," and simply trusted in God to deliver him, carried with it a telling rebuke of the crookedness and compromise of much of our present-day Christianity. The last address of all on Friday evening to a densely-crowded company, was appropriately on the Apostolic injunction to "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." For an hour he held the rapt attention and evoked the spontaneous responses of the congregation, as he expounded this pregnant passage. People are afraid that they will not last. The question is, "Will God last?" If He is the worker, and if He lasts, what further security is needed? It was at once a searching, a strengthening, and an inspiring utterance. The hearts of the people seemed to be melted and fused as into one.

Before the address there were some hearty testimonies from representative gentlemen on the platform—ministers and others—as to the rich blessing to the churches and to the town that had accompanied the mission. Ardent thanks to God were uttered for having brought Mr. McNeill to the town, and also to the evangelist for having drawn together the Christians of various names, and for his uplifting messages day by day. None was warmer in his speech than the venerable vicar of Middlesbrough, who set an example to the other clergy in the town, which they apparently did not see their way to follow. The evangelical Nonconformist Churches were solid in supporting the effort, and doubtless they will reap the benefit.

Without wishing to question or belittle the methods of others, Mr. McNeill feels increasingly led to throw his whole force into such a clear and unmistakable setting forth of the Gospel message as will shut the hearer up to immediate decision, without the pressure of the after-meeting. In this Middlesbrough Mission he adopted the plan of issuing cards, printed so that the receiver may state whether blessing has come to him (or her) as a Christian revived, a backslider restored, or a careless one brought to decision. The cards returned during the mission revealed many interesting and encouraging facts, in all of the three departments mentioned. One instance among those referred to on the last evening was that of a drink-seller in the town, who told of his conversion, and of his desire to relinquish the business. The drink is a baneful factor in the life of the town, and one could but wish that other publicans had been influenced in like manner.

It is interesting to note that letters continue to reach the evangelist from those resident in this country, expressing thanks for the conversion of relatives at the Antipodes and elsewhere abroad, through his ministrations in those distant lands. In this connection I may state that a very cordial requisition has come to Mr. McNeill from pastors and Christian workers in Calcutta, inviting him to conduct missions in some of the larger Indian cities during the cold season at the end of 1897. If he should feel able to respond to this call, a hearty welcome will await him in our great Dependency. He was also pressed to go to New York for a share in special Gospel effort to be undertaken there during the present month, but engagements made for visiting Lancashire and Yorkshire this winter precluded any affirmative answer to the American invitation. Mr. McNeill has left in Middlesbrough many warm friends who will pray for a rich blessing on all his future labours. After a few days' much-needed rest he resumes work on Sunday next in Bradford, where, as it unfortunately happens, a Parliamentary election fight is now in progress.

Baptism of a Spanish Jew.

THE Spanish Jews have been styled the aristocracy of the Hebrew race. Their history has had its own special chapter of persecution; and wherever descendants of the Sephardim (as they are called) may be found, they are accorded the distinction of honourable prestige. From all sections of the Jewish people the Church has continually received converts and workers; and it is a pleasure to call attention to the baptism of a young man of the Sephardim, a member of a family now residing at Adrianople.

Leo Levi's ancestors were among the thousands of Jews who were driven out of Spain by the Inquisition, four centuries ago, and like others, they found ready asylum in the then extensive dominions of the Sultan of Turkey. In the city of Adrianople the British Jews Society has a valued worker in Rev. L. Rosenberg, who, with his devoted wife, has been the means of bringing many a child of Abraham to a saving knowledge of Gospel truth. Leo Levi's father some years ago visited England, and there witnessed a type of Christianity which was agreeably strange to him. He was struck with the character of the Christians and their religion, and so, after his son had gone through a college course at Constantinople, he sent him to Mr. Rosenberg, in order to give him the advantage of high moral influences. The young man became convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and found in Jesus the Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets did write. With the full and active countenance of his father, he then came to England, and hopes to qualify for mission work among his Jewish brethren.

The new convert, having enjoyed the blessing of residence in a Christian home, has, at length, publicly confessed his Saviour and Lord. He was baptized recently in Wesley's chapel, City-road, the deeply interesting proceedings being conducted by Rev. W. J. Brown, superintendent minister, assisted by Revs. M. Nachim and A. Sternberg, missionaries of the British Society. The young man gave intelligent and ready answers to the questions that were put to him as to his faith and hope. Many will read with sympathy his story as it is told by Mr. Sternberg in the November issue of The Jewish Herald.

MANY English come to Wiesbaden to enjoy its beauties and healing waters, and do not know of our work and our pressing need. In former years we received much help and sympathy from the Lord's children in England, and I hope this letter may stir them up to renew their assistance, as our need is increasing with the population of the town, and also the difficulties, so that we shall have to stop, or at least give up some part of the work if Christian love does not come to help us.

For sixteen years we have been using a large mission-hall, where various meetings are going on; also there is a Sunday-school, with about 1000 children, mothers' meetings (about 120), Bible-classes for young girls (about 170) connected with the Y.W.C.A., etc. For six years we have had a Y.M.C.A., with about sixty members, for whom we had to buy a house, as no one would let rooms for the purpose. The house is not yet paid for, and the debt is a heavy care and weight on our minds, as it gets more difficult every year to pay the interest. Almost all the members are from the working classes. In a little hall there is a second Sunday-school (200), besides regular meetings for soldiers, apprentices; Bible readings and prayer-meetings for the members. These also take an active part in open-air and evangelistic meetings, regular distribution of papers and tracts. A Bible stall, with Bibles and Christian literature for sale, was recently opened.

We had to open some years ago a home to take in the "friendless and fallen"—the poor girls living a life of sin, who have been put into prison, but who come out worse, and utterly lost, without a helping hand. More are asking for admittance, but the refuge is very small, holding only thirteen; and it is very hard to say, "No room," in such cases. Mission work is as yet not taken up or supported by our churches, so that God's servants, whom He Himself called to his work, are dependent on Him alone and on such help as He is willing to send.—

Yours sincerely,

Th. ZIEMENDORFF,

Pastor.

Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier.

WE give this week a portrait of one who, for a long period of years, has laboured on the high places of the mission field. Not many pioneer workers have had such a wide experience, and been enabled, at length, to reflect upon great deliverances and achievements, and to formulate plans for still bolder service for the future. The subject of our present sketch is introduced, not only because of his past work, but also out of a lively interest in a new undertaking which is now engaging his energies.

THEOPHILUS WALDMEIER is a native of Switzerland, and, as his portrait clearly shows, a man of mature age. As a young man he studied at the well-known Mission College of St. Chrischona, near Basle, and in 1858, with other missionaries, went to Abyssinia, to take up work which had been begun by Dr. Gobat, then Bishop of Jerusalem. King Theodore received the party kindly; and for seven years our friend toiled for the religious and social elevation of the people. The Scriptures were circulated, and schools were opened for the young; and side by side with all-round evangelistic endeavour, a flourishing mission to the Falasha Jews was carried on by Dr. Stern and Mr. Flad.

In 1865 political differences arose between Abyssinia and England, with the result that the King altered his attitude to the missionaries, looked upon all Europeans with suspicion, and put many into prison. Though a particular friend at court, Mr. Waldmeier fared little better than the rest. The situation was critical in the extreme, and in Christian circles throughout the world prayer was made to God for the outstretching of his delivering arm. In 1868, when very little expected, the prison doors were opened, and Mr. Waldmeier still hears the echo of the words of the despairing monarch, "You Europeans, all of you, were going to be executed or tortured to death, because of the English army that has come to kill me and take possession of my land; but just this moment God has changed my heart, and I give you your freedom. Go to your English brothers, who were sent to deliver you. Farewell."

The British Envoy (Mr. Hormuzd Rassam) and his party, along with the missionaries, at once obeyed the welcome order, which, while it meant a cessation of Abyssinian horrors, was also the signal for rejoicings at the British camp, where the captives were most kindly received by Sir Robert Napier (afterwards Lord Napier of Magdala). Twenty-four hours later, being deserted by his soldiers, and just before the English troops entered Magdala, King Theodore took his own life. The experience of the missionaries has been expressed by Mr. Waldmeier in the words, "We were as in a dream—our mouth was filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing; then said they, the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Those who desire more particulars of this stirring period of Mr. Waldmeier's life are recommended to read his BIOGRAPHY, to be had from Partridge & Co. (price 1s. 6d.).

After a short spell of work at Beyrout, in connection with the British Syrian Mission, founded by Mrs. Bowen Thompson after the frightful massacre of Christians on Mount Lebanon in 1860, Mr. Waldmeier set about establishing a mission in a specially-needy district of Mount Lebanon. In spite of determined opposition on the part of the Maronite clergy, he started the Friends' Syrian Mission at Brumana. Curses and excommunications were fulminated, meetings were proscribed, and all possible hindrances put in the way; but love of Christ constrained the worker, and Christian love won the people. Superstition and ignorance being overcome, the way was prepared for the manifold operations of which Brumana is now the mission centre. From a very small beginning—fanaticism being so great that the missionary was even grudging the use of a miserable house of two dilapidated rooms—there has sprung, under the Divine blessing, a flourishing mission colony, appropriately named Ain Sulaam, "The Fountain of Peace." There are seven large and substantial buildings, charmingly situated, serving the purposes of a ministry which many of the people have learned to value very highly.

Without going into minute details, we may mention that the premises include two large boarding schools, a hospital (the only one on Mount Lebanon), a dispensary, a doctor's residence, superintendent's house, and chapel. This nest of buildings is the centre; in the villages around there are numerous preaching stations and schools. The staff consists of eleven English and seventeen native workers. Looking round upon these, working harmoniously and successfully, Mr. Waldmeier has at length been led to relinquish the superintendency, after a service of twenty-three years, in order to dedicate the remainder of his life to a cause which the Lord has laid very heavily upon his heart.

Wherever he has gone in the East, Mr. Waldmeier has observed the sad condition of the poor insane. Those who are mentally deranged should at least reckon upon human pity; in the East, they lack this, and are barbarously ill-treated. Imbeciles, maniacs, and epileptics might well be assured of gentle care; as a fact, throughout the Orient they are cruelly neglected, or driven from society to a worse fate. It is the cause of the insane in their utter helplessness and urgent need, that Mr. Waldmeier is now taking up, and it is believed that his proposed model asylum, to be erected in Syria, though it will be the first Home of its kind in the lands of the Bible, will soon be followed by others in different parts of the Orient. During the past thirty-five years, since Christian government has been enjoyed in the Lebanon, many excellent educational and evangelistic institutions have been founded in Syria, and this new one will be as welcome as the most excellent of them to all sections of the community. By way of giving stability to the proposal, an executive committee was formed in April last at Beyrout, the members including professors of the American College, missionaries, physicians, and others, Drs. Wortabet, Jessup, and Van Dyck, men of name and fame, among them. The Asylum will be available for patients of all classes and creeds; the work will be carried on in the name of Christ, and the Gospel will be taught in its simplicity.

Thus it is hoped to revive in the East the mercifulness of Christ in dealing with the insane.

He "had compassion" on the demonised, and lunatic, and those mentally deranged. As He took in hand, for miraculous healing, cases of those possessed of demons and bound by the devil, we read that "the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David?" Those who are promoting Mr. Waldmeier's important undertaking, and praying for its great success, may rest assured that even now, when the nineteenth century is nearing its close, mercy such as Christ showed will provoke a like amazement, and suggest inquiry as to the constraining cause of kindness being extended to the unloving and repulsive. For the Gadarene demoniac Jesus did "great things"; in the countries of the West, his servants, and medical science pursued under Christian influences, co-operate in alleviating the sufferings of the insane, whether demonised or not. But in the East, as we have said, a harsher rule has prevailed, and the unfortunate lunatic has been subjected to a "cure" that has either hastened death, or made life a woeful burden.

In "the Unchanging East" maniacs are treated to-day substantially as they were two thousand years ago—put in chains, beaten, and otherwise dealt with in a way calculated (even though not so designed) to make recovery impossible. In a booklet entitled APPEAL FOR THE FIRST HOME FOR THE INSANE IN BIBLE LANDS (Headley Brothers, 14, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.), Mr. Waldmeier describes the processes of healing and exorcism, in each case falsely so-called. Whether placed in filthy convent cells, or confined in dark caves away from the abodes of men, the patients are roughly handled, chained down, and subjected to shocking tortures. When fits come on, cold water is poured over the wretched sufferer; in other cases, incantation by the priest is accompanied by the victim being held head downwards and fumigated! When the patient dies, the priest is entitled to a thankoffering no less than he would be if the "cure" was less open to question.

It is to put a stop to these abominations, and to show a better way of dealing with the many victims of insanity, in whatever stage of the malady they may be found, that Mr. Waldmeier is consecrating his remaining years. The Asylum will be a home; the treatment will be loving and scientific; natural means will be used, and spiritual truth and life brought to bear. During a tour of Switzerland and Germany Mr. Waldmeier explained his scheme to audiences that showed deep interest, and several local committees were formed to promote the enterprise and then maintain its work.

In few words, the proposal is to erect on Mount Lebanon a Home for forty men and forty women. The institution will be on the most approved plan, and, along with the site, will cost about £10,000. A specialist will be engaged as resident physician, supported by a staff of duly qualified men and women nurses. The executive committee at Beyrout will guide the affairs of the Home, in the interests of which Mr. Waldmeier will give his knowledge and experience as business superintendent. Mr. R. Drummond Hay, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Beyrout, in a recent note to Mr. Waldmeier, said:—"Your design, which has my keenest sympathy, cannot fail to commend itself to all who are interested in the welfare of this country, and, indeed, to all actuated by the desire to do what in them lies to relieve the misery of their fellow-men." We are glad to see that men of weight in Great Britain have given their adhesion to the work, and that Sir Richard Tangye, 35, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., has consented to act as treasurer in England.

In the APPEAL already referred to, we read that a leading British physician, a specialist in mental diseases, who was lately in Syria, declared at the first committee meeting that "The mere erection of the Home would be a most powerful sermon, preached without words, to the whole Orient." That being also our firm conviction, we trust that Mr. Waldmeier will meet with every encouragement in his enterprise. Letters may be addressed to him at 1, Cowper-street, Finsbury, E.C.

Barcelona Cottage Hospital.

WHEN, almost fifteen years ago, the Protestant Cottage Hospital at Barcelona was opened, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN were the first to lend a helping hand; but little by little their interest has abated, and scarcely any help is now received from them. Other Christian friends have also lost their interest; the troubles, sufferings, and difficulties of the poor Protestants in Roman Catholic countries no longer touch the heart of England.—England is at present too much under the deadly influence of Rome. Other warm friends have died, and no new friends have taken their places.

Already the last few years the expenditure has exceeded the income; but owing to a small reserve fund we have always been able to close the year without debt. This fund, however, is now completely exhausted; only a few gifts have been received this year, and although not only the three Spanish Protestant congregations at Barcelona, but also the foreign residents there, have done their utmost, the directors have found it necessary on Oct. 1 to close the hospital temporarily for want of funds to carry on the work.

There are, to my knowledge, only three Protestant hospitals in the whole of Spain, and it is unspeakably sad that this, the oldest of them, which has been of untold blessing, not only to Protestant Spaniards, but to Protestants of all nations and denominations, has now been closed because we have not been able to raise the comparatively small sum of £300 a-year among the millions of Protestants in England and Germany. For years I have refrained from making a public appeal for help, but now I appeal most earnestly to all those who have still a heart for the sufferings of the Protestants in Spain to enable us to reopen this their only refuge in times of sickness in Barcelona, for Rome, who is now again omnipotent in Spain, changes not. Are there not among the many thousand readers of THE CHRISTIAN 300 able and willing to subscribe £1 yearly in all order to secure the continuance of this good work? But even the smallest gifts are very welcome. Further particulars will be gladly given by me, and reports sent.

THE EVANGELIST.

How Not to be Saved.

I.—"A BIT AT A TIME."

IT was during a mission. The Spirit of God had appealed to the consciences of many. The evening service was over, and the missionary was passing from pew to pew to converse with those who still remained in the building.

An old man, with white hair and bent back, could not fail to attract attention. His seamed hands covered his face, but failed to stem the tide of his tears, for they oozed through his fingers and fell on the floor.

"Are you saved?" asked the minister in a gentle whisper.

"Oh, no," he replied. "I wish I were; I do want to be saved." You do not know what a sinner I've been."

"Never mind. If you are a great sinner you have a greater Saviour."

"Oh! it's impossible I can be saved all at once," he urged in a despairing voice.

"Behold, now is the accepted time." "He is able to save to the uttermost."

"Nay, nay. I cannot be saved all at once. I got a bit forgiven last night, and you shall do a bit more for me to-night if you'll be so kind, and I'll get a bit more forgiven to-morrow night, but I cannot expect to have the last bit forgiven till I die."

The idea was so rooted in his mind that the hour was very late before he saw the all-sufficiency of Christ to forgive everything at once, and that by an appropriating faith he could make this his own without delay—

"He that believeth on the Son HATH everlasting life."

II. WILL YOU CONVERT ME?

"Can you spare a minit, maister?"

The speaker was a stalwart young man, whose anxious face was quite out of keeping with the rest of his healthy appearance.

"Certainly," said the minister.

"I was in your church last night."

He stopped and seemed to find it difficult to proceed. He was so nervous that he had hardly breath to speak. After a moment, he continued:—

"The fact is, maister, I do want to be converted. I hadn't a bit o' sleep last night for turnin' over what you was sayin'."

"Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," said the minister earnestly.

"Bless you, I heard that theer since I was a little chap no higher than your elbow. Ma mither taught me real well. But it just goes in at t' one ear and out at t' other. So I thowt I'd coom and ask you to convart me, if you will, when you have a bit o' time."

"Will you come with me home?"

"Yes, I'll come. But you'll have a tough job."

He was an intelligent young fellow, but it was some time before he grasped the fact that to accept Christ must be his own act; that no one else could do more than point out the way. At last, however, he said, "I see, I must tak' it."

He did, as simply as if he saw the Son holding the great gift toward him with his own blessed hands:—

"The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"Harden not Your Hearts."

ONE of the most remarkable illustrations drawn from nature in ancient prophecy is that in Jer. viii. 7, deduced from the migratory instinct in birds. "The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times . . . but my people know not the judgment of the Lord." During these autumn days the last of our summer visitors is leaving us. The dread of winter behind them, the call of summer in front of them in the sunny south, quickens their hereditary instinct, and they fly away because they dare not stay. Thus, too, is the soul driven to God, both by the dread of impending judgment and by the call of Divine love and the blessed promises of the Gospel.

But the trouble is that while birds cannot but obey their instincts, man can violate his. To be able to say "I will not obey" is to fall below the brute who can only say "I cannot help obeying." And yet men ignore the judgments and ordinances of God, and turn a deaf ear to his most winsome appeals. Though the way of life is the way of safety, and all our higher nature yearns towards the invisible hand of God, it often happens that a bird has more strength of will to overcome the perils of migration than man has to start upon the heavenly race. The penalty of this is to lose the finer instincts, and to sink into an ignoble contentment with this world, disturbed only by the imperative and awful voice of death. As imprisoned birds of passage after a time lose their passion for flight, and become mere cage-birds, so men who neglect the influences of the Spirit lose the light they have, conscience grows seared and silent, and they become deaf to all heavenly voices. Therefore, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags.

Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

Schools in Poona.

To all who are interested in the progress of Christian education in India the name of Mrs. Sorabji must be familiar as the founder of the Victoria High School in Poona. It is perhaps not as well known that for many years schools have been in existence for both Marathi and Hindustani children among the very poorest and most neglected inhabitants of that interesting city. At present the schools are held in small rooms, wholly inadequate to their needs, badly built and ventilated, and having the disadvantage of being in a noisy and crowded part of Poona, with busy streets on either side.

Miss Lena Sorabji, who has for many years devoted herself to the work of teaching her fellow countrywomen, has been spending some months in England. On the eve of her departure to resume her work, she received notice of a house exactly suited for the schools, and where there would be room for a workshop and rooms for resident Indian Christian workers and Bible women. About £500 would be needed, which would be supplemented by a building grant from the Government. There are upwards of 200 children in attendance.

Miss Sorabji writes:—"If the schools were not for missionary purposes, funds could be obtained without much difficulty from the many Indian princes and chiefs, who are willing enough to help purely educational work among the poor; but since Christ is the foundation stone of our work, we must look to his followers to help us for his dear sake, who said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me.'" Prophetic Conference

AT MILDMAY.

A CONFERENCE on "The Second Coming of Christ" was held at Mildmay last week in the Conference Hall. There were three meetings daily, Tuesday to Thursday, besides an early gathering for prayer each day, and an observance of the Lord's Supper on the third day. The topics of conference were not strictly limited to the titular subject. First, there was consideration of the Inspiration of Scripture, with reference to history as well as prophecy; then God's Purpose in Israel was the subject of thought; and finally, the Lord's Return, personal and premillennial, the object of hope and of lively expectation, was presented by well-known teachers.

THE INSPIRATION OF SCRIPTURE.

The Hon. R. MORETON presided over the opening meeting, and after praise and prayer, and the reading of portions of Psalms i. and cxix., Principal WALLER, D.D., of St. John's Hall, Highbury, spoke on the testimony of prophecy to the Divine authorship and character of the Bible, with special reference to the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures. To consider the Bible's testimony to itself is not to argue in a circle, because the Bible is at once a book of history and prophecy—history and doctrine. All doctrine is taught for God, and in the words of God; and in the larger sense, prophecy includes all that is spoken by God's servants, and in his name for Him. When we examine the Bible we cannot take the history from the prophecy, and untwist the two, for they are inseparably entwined. The side called prophecy is turned towards God, and is the Divine side: the side called history is turned towards man, and is the human side. History is not an element of personal knowledge, but of belief or testimony; and the case is the same with Scripture history as with secular, only that it has been sifted and searched, and no other history has been, and has thus been abundantly corroborated.

Passing on to consider prophecy more strictly, the speaker defined a prophet as a forthteller, and not, as used to be thought, merely as a foreteller. But, apart from definition, there is the question, What is a prophet? Assuredly, part of the work and character of the prophets was to foretell things to come. God made his will known to them, and they announced his purposes beforehand. "I will put my words into his mouth" constituted a prophet; and the test applied was, "if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken" (Deut. xviii. 18-22).

and a coming to pass of the thing foretold, were the test, and there are no prophets among us to-day in that sense.

Having examined the acts and words of the prophets of Israel, those named in the history and those who left writings, the speaker showed that, by the nearer predictions being fulfilled, a faith was afforded in the word which was spoken regarding the remoter and more wonderful events relating to Christ and God's kingdom. Going into detail, he maintained that the wildest forger could not have written Dan. iv. and have put into the mouth of Nebuchadnezzar the words given in his letter to the nations. Thus the testimony of prophecy rests on the historical veracity of the Bible, and the certainty of that is being shown every day by the archaeological discoveries in the East. There is no imaginable reason for receiving the common facts of history which does not also compel us to believe that every word of the prophets will come true. It is the same with the New Testament, the great Prophet of which was always foretelling events, even to the details of his own death; and as the time drew nearer the words grew clearer, his truthfulness as a prophet being thus shown, with its bearing upon his remoter predictions, as well as the great prophecy of his coming again in power and great glory.

Again, there were prophets in New Testament times (Acts xi. 27, 28; xiii. 1); but whatever the word prophet might mean, these men were foretellers. The apocalypse outlines at length events that were still apostles also predicted, and John's in the distant future. The prophets are not only single and separate witnesses, but they all work on a plan. The Gospels are four accounts of our Lord's redeeming work put forth in relation to various stages and needs of the Church. Matthew meets the need of a church of believing Jews; Mark a church of workers; Luke a church of Gentiles; and John a church of Christians, to whom Jewish opposition and persecution is not a matter of much concern. The prophets of the Old Testament have a similar relation to the downfall of Jerusalem:—Isaiah prophesied when the fall of the kingdom of Israel was at hand; Jeremiah when the fall of the kingdom of Judah was at hand; Ezekiel for those who had gone into captivity in Babylon; and Daniel for the Church restored, both for Jews and Gentiles. The Minor Prophets also fall into four groups, corresponding to the others. With Isaiah may be placed Hosea, Amos, and Micah, all of them dated; with Jeremiah, belonging to the time of change—Habakkuk, Zephaniah, and Obadiah; with Ezekiel, as the prophet in the land of the Gentiles—Jonah, Nahum, and Joel; and with Daniel the three prophets of the restoration—Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.

In that grouping, the prophets of the Old Testament harmonised with the Evangelists of the New, and the same phenomenon is seen in the middle of the Apocalypse.

THE CENTRAL EVENT IN THE GOSPEL

of the First Advent, is the exodus to be fulfilled by our Lord at Jerusalem—the story of the cross and the resurrection. So, in the Gospel of the Second Advent, in the Apocalypse, the central facts are the great destruction of the world-power, bringing in the Lord's Second Advent, and the coronation of the King to rule over all the earth. The historic point common to all three is found in Jerusalem:—(1) The downfall of Jerusalem in the days of Nebuchadnezzar; (2) the downfall of Jerusalem in the days of Titus; (3) the downfall of Jerusalem in the siege described in the last chapter of Zechariah, at which the Lord shall go forth and fight against the nations as when He fought in the day of battle. Thus history confirms prophecy, and the Divine authorship and character of the Bible are established.

In conclusion, Dr. Waller expressed the conviction that all prophetic times are times of the Jews, and not of the Gentiles. When the Jews are rejected and under God's displeasure, it is as it was in the journey of Israel through the wilderness. From their leaving Egypt to their arrival at Kadesh-Barnea, we have their times and places distinctly given; after that, or during the wilderness journeyings, there is no information beyond a string of names of places, and for thirty-seven and a-half years we cannot tell where they were at any specific time until they returned to Kadesh, when time is again reckoned.

INTERPRETATION AND APPLICATION.

Dr. BULLINGER followed with an address on "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth." He began by recalling some of the designations of the Word—the "Engrafted Word" to be received (James i. 21); the "Faithful Word" to be held fast (Tit. i. 9); the "Word of Life" to be held forth (Phil. ii. 16); the "Word of Truth" to be rightly divided (2 Tim. ii. 15). He maintained that this division has to do not merely with the matter of Scripture, but also with the outward form. Man cannot improve upon God's Word any more than he can upon the way and plan of God. It is only in the measure that we divide the Word rightly that we rightly apprehend the truth of God. Our Lord's first and last words in his office of prophet had reference to the written Word.

The Apostle's instructions about rightly dividing the Word are addressed to God's workmen, in order that they may study to show themselves approved, and may attain to the truth (2 Tim. ii.). If we do not rightly divide it, we shall have reason to be ashamed. All through the Old Testament the coming of the Seed of the woman is the theme; in the Gospels of the New Testament we have the coming of the King and his rejection. Passing on to the Apocalypse we have the same King and kingdom set up with power and judgment, and the fulfilment of the prophecies of the Old Testament. The Epistles come in between, and fill up a great gap between the rejection of the King and the establishment of his kingdom in power and glory.

It is of the greatest importance to take portions of Scripture with reference to their time and subject. Sometimes the Scriptures concern the Jews, sometimes the Gentiles, and sometimes the Church of God; sometimes the covenant of Mount Zion, sometimes that of Mount Sion; sometimes the covenant of works, sometimes the covenant of grace. A failure to discriminate involves confusion in understanding and distress as to our standing in Christ. Again, the Word must be divided as to its times and seasons, and dispensations should always be distinguished. Interpretation is one thing, and application another. The Sermon on the Mount contains statements which infidels use against the truth, which we may apply to ourselves, but which we should not interpret as addressed to us to-day. The Sermon on the Mount gave the laws of the Kingdom of God, but as the Kingdom is in abeyance the laws are not in force. Since then the Lord has seven times spoken from heaven, and said, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

The speaker went on to hold that, in regard to the resurrection, Scripture says nothing of a general resurrection, but sets out details regarding Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Again, there is no mention of a general judgment, but of judgments for rewards and awards at different times and concerned with different persons and classes.

GOD'S WORD TRUE AND AUTHORITATIVE

In the evening, the first speaker was Dr. ROBERT ANDERSON, who, in the course of an able address on "The Literal Interpretation of the Scriptures," maintained that the existence of a personal God creates an overwhelming presumption for the existence of a revelation. The known character of God, as revealed in nature, would lead us to expect that his revelation would be intelligible to those to whom it is addressed; that is, that God would say what He means, and mean what He says. We should therefore expect literalness of interpretation as an axiom for our guidance. Moreover, he contended that we not only have a right to expect such a revelation, but that it is contained in the Bible.

After dealing with various difficulties raised by objectors, such as the claim made by many for the Church, as the custodian of the Bible, and questions as to the original MSS. and translations, the speaker warned his hearers solemnly that, to lower the authority of the Written Word is in reality to lower the authority of Christ as the Living Word. Dealing with the question of inspiration, he showed in prophetic and other utterances how explicit and constant is the claim "thus saith the Lord," that it is God who speaks, and that "the Scripture cannot be broken." Hence, if it be asked, are these prophecies men's words inspired by God, or we unhesitatingly take the latter position. In closing, Dr. Anderson said:—"We hear of a political meeting in some remote town, but we know that the famous statesman who speaks, is addressing not merely the few people before him, but through them the civilised world. So our Lord is not addressing merely a few peasants of Galilee, but He is uttering words for all the world, for all time, for us here and now. The words that Jesus spake are spirit and life; living, immortal words, which can never die. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

But it is said that we put the Bible above our Master. Nay, but the voice we hear in this Book comes to us from our living, though absent, Lord in the glory, and it comes in the power of the Holy Spirit. This is our power for service, our comfort, our peace and joy, our safety in the midst of sin, sorrow, and temptation, and in the midst of perils on every hand, from robbers who would filch the Bible from us, and from false brethren who would disparage the Bible and tear it in pieces;—our safety in days when the true Christian is so lonely, our safety in the hour of death and in the day of judgment. It is by this Word we reach the living Christ, and by Him we reach the living God; for the Lord Jehovah has become our salvation, and in Him we are absolutely and for ever safe.

Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH, who followed with an address on "The Bible, not Tradition, the Rule of Faith and Life," began with an exposition of the real meaning of tradition, showing how it grew and gained power—something after the fashion of "precedent" in English legal forms. A certain and guarded use of tradition, usually specifically stated, is made in Scripture, but at the same time nothing can be clearer and more emphatic than the warnings given against putting tradition in the place of the Word of God. "In vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men": "Ye have made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." In revelation we see that departure from the Word brings great and terrible denunciations, while is the ground of commendation. (See Rev. i. 3; xii. 18, 19.) Even if we take these words as referring primarily to the book of the Revelation itself, they certainly convey the principle that to add to or take away from God's Word is a heinous sin, which God will not be slow to judge.

We may feel called on to study certain difficulties as to the formation of the canon, but we must remember that so soon as that canon was formed, the Bible, as we have it now, became the absolute rule of faith and practice. The Articles of Religion (vi., xx., and xxi.) are very clear and emphatic on this point; but sacerdotalists, on the one hand, add forms and ceremonies not commanded in the Word; and rationalists, on the other hand, take away from the Word. The speaker went on to examine the claims of the church of Rome, and, alas! of many Anglicans, to interpret Scripture by tradition, or the voice of the church: proving such claims to be false and utterly to be repudiated.

Tradition, he maintained, is not necessary to the interpretation of Scripture, to the authority of Scripture, or to the understanding of Scripture. Tradition, as a rule of faith, is needless, harmful, self-contradictory, contrary to the written Word, and untrustworthy. To lean on tradition is to pollute the stream of truth, to pervert the testimony, to turn aside from God's commands, to apostatize from the Gospel, to weaken faith. Thus in every way tradition takes us off God on to man, and diverts us to wrong lines of thought and action. Let us prize the Bible, hold it fast as from God, stand by it, and see that our children are taught to reverence it as the veritable Word of God.

GOD'S PURPOSES IN ISRAEL.

The subject on Wednesday morning was—"God's Purposes in Israel." Mr. J. E. MATHIESON presided, and, after prayer and praise, read from Heb. ix., verses 24 to 28, remarking upon the significance of the words to Christian Jews, to whom they were originally addressed. In some observations on the great institutions of Israel, the speaker said that, as Calvary represents the Passover, and Pentecost the Feast of Firstfruits, so the Feast of Tabernacles will be celebrated at the Lord's Return, after the entire body of God's elect has been brought in.

The first set address was delivered by Rev. JOHN WILKINSON, who in some explanatory words defined the Israel of his subject as the twelve tribes that God brought out of Egypt (Amos ix. 7). His understanding of prophecy was that the whole of the tribes will be one kingdom, no more divided, on the mountains of Israel, with Jehovah-Jesus as king. The Lord in the midst of them, they shall see calamity no more (Zeph. iii. 15). Jesus was born King of the Jews, and died King of the Jews; and though now not recognised by the Jews He shall yet be crowned King of the Jews.

God's purpose in unconditionally electing and preserving Israel is one worthy of the miraculous origin and history of the people. It is a purpose of universal blessing (Gen. xii. 1-3), and that blessing is the Gospel (Gal. iii. 8) and its diffusion. Deploing the neglect of this fact and its relation to Israel, Mr. Wilkinson expressed a belief that it will be the secondary cause of the return of Christ, through the failure of man to spread the Gospel, consequent upon departure from God's plan. The Jews are the instrumentality which God has chosen for blessing the world, and their evangelisation is a duty devolving upon Christians, if only to repair in some measure the oppressions and cruelties of past times inflicted in the name of Christ, and in recognition of the fact that from them we have the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as well as other great benefits.

Restoration is predicted. The people are to be restored "a second time" (Isaiah xi. 11). Moreover, "from the four corners of the earth," and they were never there until this dispersion; therefore, this prediction was not fulfilled on the return from the Babylonish captivity. Further, "They shall no more be pulled up out of their land" (Amos ix. 15). If they are once to be gathered and not again to be scattered, that must be future. However many the dispersions, there must be a in the land. The Land of Promise covers 300,000 square miles, and it has never been fully occupied in the past. Already the people are settling in colonies, and restoration is rapidly setting in; and, indeed, there is among students of Scripture a general consensus that we are near the end of the times of the Gentiles. The prevalent fear of universal war is a feeling which, though not derived from Scripture, yet confirms it; and before the dawn of universal peace there must be that war, as is foreshadowed all through the Scriptures. With the destruction of the Turkish power, Palestine will be opened up, and blessing to the whole world will follow. The promises regarding "the ends of the earth" and "the uttermost parts of the earth" are all associated with Israel. In the individual gathering in the formation of the Church, as well as in the blessing of the millennial era, the order is "the Jew first," alike in opportunity and in effort. By going to the Jew first we shall get larger blessing than by proceeding on any other plan. While general effort must not overlook Israel, special work among the Jews must not overlook the Gentiles. In this dispensation, as well as in the next, Israel is to be a channel and instrument of blessing to the whole world.

Pastor FABER, of Berlin, spoke on the "Present-Day Attitude of the Scattered People." Israel, he said, is waiting for a coming Messiah, but very few Jews know that Christians also are waiting for a coming Messiah. One of the articles of faith prescribed for the Jews is, "I believe with a perfect faith that the Messiah shall come, and though he tarry I will wait for Him day by day." Hundreds of modern Jews have lost this faith, and we must show that we have not all lost it. They do not know that Christ is the Greek for the Hebrew Messiah; it should be made clear to them. Many Christians (so-called) deny the Scriptures in their entirety, others deny the doctrines, including the return of the Lord, maintaining that the words must be spiritualised; but he declared that no part of Scripture is to be explained without regard to its literal signification.

As points of interest and importance, Pastor Faber said that the Jews were never so ready to hear the Gospel as now; and whereas in the time of Christ they spoke Aramaic they are now making more and more progress in the acquisition and use of their own language—the Biblical Hebrew. The Sacred Tongue is rapidly reviving, and the Hebrew New Testament can be understood without difficulty. Moreover, in Germany the Jewish Prayer Book has been modified in such a way that the portions referring to the Messianic hope, which were expunged years ago, have been restored. There are more Jews in the Holy Land to-day than came back from the Babylonish captivity. Missions to the Jews and the hope of Christ's Return cannot be separated; a man who does not believe in the Second Coming of Christ cannot preach the Gospel to Jews. In Persia he preached in Hebrew, and was easily understood by the Jews. No people in the world will so rejoice in the coming of Christ as Israel; accepting Him, they will bring on a new springtime of Christian love and faith, and from the lips of Jews and Gentiles shall come the song, "Hallelujah—Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The Countess Schimmelmänn's Work.

DURING the last week the Countess has been witnessing for God in Hamburg, not without much adverse criticism from unconverted religionists, but with great real blessing to a large number of earnest seekers. Three of the meetings were held in one of the largest halls in Hamburg, which was thronged with attentive audiences.

On each occasion numbers remained behind for private conversation, and many to tell how they had been leading Christian lives since they heard the truth from the same lips last year. Last evening there was a meeting in the assembly room of this hotel, which was packed to overflowing long before the hour announced, chiefly with middle and upper class people. A very deep impression was manifest, and a large number of inquirers crowded round the Countess at the close, and were most warm in their thanks. J. McC.

Armenian Massacre Relief.—The committee of the Bible Lands or Turkish Missions' Aid Society has voted the following sums from their Armenian Massacre Relief Special Fund, of which Lord Kinnaird is the treasurer, viz.: £900 to fifteen mission centres, as first instalments in relief of the winter distress, including Van and Egin; £200 being assigned to the last-named scene of the most recent massacre. A further sum of £800 has been devoted to four new orphanage enterprises, already commenced in Asia Minor towards meeting the needs of some of the 18,000 children whose fathers were victims in the late troubles. These grants complete a total of £5,800 distributed in relief work by the society.

Convention at Oxford.

THE convention on the deepening of the spiritual life, held last week, commenced with a meeting for ministers at St. Aldate's Rectory. There were about sixty present, including some undergraduates, and an address was given by Preb. Webb-Peploe on Acts xxvi. 18, "Sanctified by faith that is in me." Sanctification, he said, is progressive, and is attained by faith, not by effort; it is not attained once for all, but by faith we are kept moment by moment.

In the evening, at the first public meeting, there was a good attendance, the speakers being Preb. Webb-Peploe and Mr. Walter Sloan. The former spoke on Genesis xiii. 17. Canaan is not a type of heaven, but of an experience to be obtained here of continual victory by faith. Lot represents the compromising Christian, who thinks more of worldly means of "getting on" than of pleasing God; he gives up principles to increase his influence for good, as he fancies, and fails. He ruins his wife and daughters by allowing them to live in Sodom, and is a terrible warning to those who are really trusting in Christ for pardon, yet are not wholly given up to Him. Mr. Sloan took John vi. as his subject, especially the latter part.

During the Convention, services were held at St. Aldate's Church each morning, and sermons were preached by the missionaries. Preb. Webb-Peploe took his subject from the life of Abraham, Rev. Evan Hopkins from Hebrews vii. 25, "He is able to save to the uttermost." Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor took "the fulness of Christ" as his subject. Rev. E. W. Moore drew attention to 2 Chron. xxix., the cleansing of the Temple suddenly, searchingly, and swiftly, from which he drew many helpful lessons.

Looking over the Convention, we feel that there is great cause to praise God; many have learnt the secret of victory and of a life of joy and useful service.

At The Fair.

"DURING September," an agent of the Colportage Society of England writes, "with Commander P. Wolfe Murray, I have been attending some fairs, where we have preached the Word and sold a good number of Gospel books, and we have to praise God for the rich blessings He has given us at these places. At one fair we were greatly opposed by some of the show people. One came up with a big drum and a rattle, and tried to upset the preaching of the Gospel, but God overruled it, and this man helped to draw a crowd for us.

"After we had finished, a patent medicine vendor got on his van and ridiculed us for coming there and talking about the Blood of Jesus; but we made it a matter of prayer, and before we preached again we dealt with those who had opposed, individually, about their souls. The result was that during the remainder of the three days of the fair we were not molested. The medicine vendor in the evening came up to my stall, and I pleaded with him to accept Christ, and sold him a Traveller's Guide. Since then, I am glad to say that he has really accepted the gift of God, and is anxious to work for Jesus."

With reference to the above, a letter from Captain Murray states that this man has become an earnest preacher of the Gospel which he so recently ridiculed. So eager is he now to serve Him who saved him that he has given up his employment, and has been holding missions in some of the villages, and God has already blessed his efforts to the conversion of others. He is receiving so many calls to this, that he has determined now to sell his van, and to devote his life to the preaching of the Gospel, if the Lord will. The van, Captain Murray writes, could easily be made into a capital Bible van, and if any of the Lord's servants who may read this should be desirous of having a Bible van, with horse and harness, or be able to mention it to others who might, would they kindly communicate with Captain P. Wolfe-Murray, Trobridge, Crediton, Devon.

Hyde Park.—The new rules for the regulation of Hyde Park were enforced for the first time on Friday last. No one is now permitted to collect money for any purpose or to take part in any performance or to use any blasphemous expression. Several persons have been arrested for breach of the new rules.

Revival Work in Glasgow.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

BEING hindered from going into the foreign field, as he had wished to do, Rev. John Riddell came to Glasgow as a young man to devote himself to labours for the poor and the outcast. His present church, called "The Wynd," located at the junction of Crown and Cathcart streets, is the third commodious and well-equipped edifice that he has erected among the labouring classes. With a heart full of Christ-like sympathy for the sufferings of the poor, and with the Spirit of God filling him with compassion for souls, God has greatly used him to the salvation of many, and to the building up and training of scores of most efficient and devoted labourers for God, some of whom are in foreign lands and many in this city.

It was a sight to cheer and gladden the heart to see from ten to twelve hundred working people, men, women, and children, filling "the Wynd" on Sabbath week to hear the Gospel. Prayer meetings, Sabbath-school classes, and out-door preaching in front of the church were in progress from early morning until late at night, with a zeal for God, and a tempered wisdom of the Spirit, most gladdening to behold. The fire is burning all the year around at the Wynd, but workers said, "The Weaver brothers brought us a blessing last week, and we are full of praise and gladness." And, indeed, all were so bright and happy that it has been easy work for Mr. Whittle to preach, and for Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins to sing, and very hard indeed for any unconverted one who came in not to yield to the claims of Christ.

A very large proportion of the membership of this church are men and women reclaimed from drink. The present missionary of the well-known Glasgow Mizpah Band, composed of none but men who have been among the victims of drink, and now numbering 550, is one of the Wynd elders. Never has the writer heard such thrilling and unanswerable testimonies to the power of Christ to save from sin as have come during the past week from these redeemed men, and never has he heard such sad stories and seen such sad evidence of the awful curse of strong drink, and the need of Divine power in coping with it, as he has seen in Mr. Riddell's parish of "backland" tenements filled with eleven thousand people, living on an average five in a room. One room, as the only home of father, mother, and children, to cook, to eat, to sleep, and to be sick and die in. Among this mass, in one large section of the district, the room without a drunken husband, father, son or brother, wife or mother is an exception, and in some the drunkenness sweeps the whole family into the awful vortex of vice, squalor, destitution, degradation, and damnation. Oh, it is fearful! May God arouse the conscience of his Church in this land, to the sin of complicity in this hellish business of manufacturing and selling that which is causing such havoc to the bodies and souls of men.

Progress is being made, and men of God are speaking out, and temperance sentiment growing in all the churches, but some recent items in the Evening Dispatch [see "Temperance Notes"], indicate how very far the feeling in this country comes behind what the necessities of the case demand.

Mr. Riddell and men like him in Glasgow are labouring against fearful odds, while brewers, distillers, and dramsellers seem without conscience as to the business in which they are engaged, and the ruling elements in the churches without conscience as to the impropriety and sin of their being admitted to the table of Christ, and held to be consistent disciples of our Lord Jesus, "who went about doing good." Dear editor, you have ever had a consistent testimony on this line, but the need is great for increased vehemence and earnestness. "Cry aloud and spare not."

The hearts of these workers among the lapsed masses of Glasgow are breaking with the awful woes and wretchedness that daily meet their eyes caused by strong drink. Pray for them, people of God, and lend a hand when possible to help them. There are four churches in Glasgow that have abandoned the renting of sittings and devoted themselves to reaching the poor. The Wynd is foremost among them. Three thousand sick were dealt with in its medical mission last year. One hundred and twenty-five were sent out to the country home for the sick provided by good Mrs. Still. Fifteen hundred scholars are in the Sabbath school classes, the communicants number seven hundred, and only one family in the congregation keep a servant. Mr. Riddell is asking God to send him a Christian lady to take charge of a deaconess home, left on his hands by the death of Mrs. Still, and to supply means for the erection of a reading-room and baths, for his district. The men who are crowded into one room must have a place of resort. If the Church does not furnish it the publican will. Lovers of Christ and humanity may be confident that any help sent to ministers in the outlying districts of Glasgow will be sent where it is urgently needed. And if Rev. John Riddell, Wynd Church, is placed upon their list of stated benefactions they will have fellowship with a true man of God, in unwearied and wisely-directed efforts to ameliorate the condition of the friendless poor, to stem the tide of vice, and to lead souls to the Lord Jesus.

The Weaver Brothers have made an excellent impression, wherever they have been in Scotland, and are being used of God in winning souls. They were working last week with Rev. Jas. Paterson in Kinning Park District. Mr. George Clarke (whose Glasgow Missions have been uniformly successful), commenced an important united Mission in the Pollokshields District, on November 1. Mr. Wm. Thomson is at the Finnieston Church. Prayer is asked for all of these Missions.

THE BROTHERS WEAVER.

The current of spiritual life in Scotland at present runs strong. Not for many years has there been so much definite aggressive work carried on, and it is in all parts of the country. Some of the larger Presbyteries in the Free Church, such as Aberdeen, have gone in for a lengthened period of special services. Others, like Edinburgh and Glasgow, are arranging services for a more limited period. The Brothers Weaver have proved most helpful in these services. They began in Glasgow in Cowcaddens Free Church. From the very first night there was manifest blessing. The Lord enabled them both to sing and speak the Gospel in a very able and winning way. They carry with them also the prayerful sympathy of the ministers and workers with whom they so heartily co-operate. The large church was quite filled on Sabbath week, and the week-night attendance and interest increased as they went on.

Some five weeks ago tokens of blessing appeared, and the tide rose considerably during the short time our brethren were with us. The blessing was largest among the young, many of whom have come out for the Lord, and are not ashamed to own him. The last night was one of marked spiritual power. Our great regret was that they could not continue longer than one week, because of other engagements. Our united prayer is that they may be increasingly owned by the Great Head of the church in bringing many souls into his kingdom. WILLIAM ROSS.

Rev. James Paterson, of White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow, also writes:—

The Weaver Brothers concluded a week of special services with us on the evening of Friday last. They came to us beloved for their father's sake. Ere they left us they were also beloved for their own sakes. The services began with a Gospel feast, at which Mr. W. D. Dunn also spoke, on the evening of Saturday, Oct. 24. On the evening of Sunday the church was too small for the crowds that wanted to hear the sons of the late veteran evangelist. On Monday evening more than 400 came. The meetings increased in number till we had somewhere about 600. To see such audiences on week nights was as delightful as it was unexpected. And signs accompanied the word sung and preached. Night after night anxious men and women rose in the face of the congregation and made their way, under the powers of the world to come, into the vestry to inquire the way of salvation. As said one of the workers, "We never before saw such times of blessing." On an average, at least, a dozen each night made profession of having passed from darkness into light. A large number of these were already members of the congregation. Hitherto, they have had the expenditure side of faith. Now, thanks to God's word through the brother evangelists, they have the revenue side as well. God bless the lads and speed them back again, is the sincere prayer of many in White Memorial.

When?

WHEN youth rejoices in its prime,
And hearts are fresh and thoughts sublime,
And corn and wine are given,
Beneath a cloudless summer sky,
From flower to flower we lightly fly,
And in delirious rapture cry—
"The world—the world is heaven!"

When wealth takes wing, leaving instead
No friend, no work, no daily bread,
No fire to light the hearth;
The children trembling, wan, and weak,
Too sad to play, too wise to speak;
The big tears on the little cheek,
"Is this," we moan, "our earth"?

When sin has drunk our life's best wine,
And we at dried-up fountains pine
In craving, hopeless pain;
Beneath a sky with clouds o'ercast,
Amid the sere-leaves of the past,
Our wail blends with October's blast—
"The world, the world is vain!"

When on forbidden seas we sail,
Dancing before sin's treacherous gale,
No God we wish to see;
But when the midnight breakers roar,
With guilt behind and death before,
A wreck on Time's wild, rocky shore—
Then, Lord, we call on Thee.

Yet, wondrous grace, when souls accurst
Have sinned their utmost, sinned their worst,
And heart-chorals all are riven,
That God takes pity on our pain,
Forgives the sin, removes the stain,
Bestows a joy we failed to gain—
The true joy of true heaven.

Gospel Tent and Bible-Carriage Work.

DEAR SIR,—The dry season of the early summer favoured our operations, so that, although we have had three tents in use, no casualty has taken place to hinder the Gospel services being conducted every evening. We gave special attention to the most needy villages, and have not been without witness to the power of the Gospel of Christ in the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of saints.

Our large Bible-carriage, with two workers sleeping in it by night, has been away most of the summer visiting towns and villages within a radius of fifty miles of Bristol. During the day the Bible-carriage would be taken from house to house distributing the bread of life, and in the evening drawn up and placed in a central position, from whence the proclamation of the Gospel would echo forth with no uncertain sound, often to many hundreds of attentive hearers. Some striking cases of professed conversion resulted.

The tents and the large Bible-van have now been stored away for the winter, but our two smaller carriages are in use throughout the whole year. With a grateful sense of indebtedness to your readers for their prayerful interest in the past, and asking a continuance of the same, yours in Gospel bonds,
JAS. A. VICARY.

Twenty-four Years' Work.

For twenty-four years Mr. Joseph Benson has been honorary pastor of the Belle Isle Mission (in addition to his business engagements in the City). During that time he has carried on a splendid work in a poor district situate in the western portion of Islington. His anniversary was celebrated on Thursday evening, Oct. 22, when a crowded audience assembled at the Belle Isle Chapel, Brewery-road, Islington, N. Mr. Samuel L. Dore, J.P., presided.

The annual report shows a nett addition of eighteen new members during the year, the total membership being now 394, while during the pastor's ministry 787 had joined the church, 657 upon first profession of faith. A branch mission hall at Blundell-street is used for children's Sunday evening services with great success. The many agencies in connection with the church are in a sound and flourishing condition; the Sunday-schools particularly, the number of scholars being over 1400.

The meeting was one of the best ever held at Belle Isle, and the hope was very warmly expressed that Mr. Benson might find his twenty-fifth year of honorary labour the best of all.

Letter to the Editor.

"MR. RHODES."

DEAR SIR,—You do well to leave your readers to judge between the views of Mr. Rhodes presented by Olive Schreiner on the one hand, and her brother, Mr. Theo. Schreiner, on the other. Mr. Schreiner is a good man and Olive Schreiner is a high-toned, noble-minded woman, so that I am certain that neither of them would wilfully misrepresent any matter. We have here only another instance of the divergent views which prevail about Mr. Rhodes and his acts. He is a man of such strong and powerful personality that he has scarcely any moderate supporters or opponents. We may therefore attribute a good deal of what Mr. Schreiner says to his "intense admiration and affection for the man"—indeed his letter is very largely a general confession of faith in Mr. Rhodes and in Mr. Rhodes' purity of motive. Now Mr. Schreiner has a perfect right to his own opinions of Mr. Rhodes and of the "De Beers Company," but he has no right to say of anything that Olive Schreiner has written that it "is simply so much socialistic claptrap, and a misstatement of actual facts"; he has no right to let his "intense admiration and affection" for Mr. Rhodes charge his illustrious sister with the perversion of truth.

And it seems to me that this "intense admiration and affection" has also to a considerable degree influenced Mr. Schreiner in the views which he takes of Mr. Rhodes' attitude as regards certain legislative measures—notably the so-called "Strep Bill" and the "Labour clauses of the Glen Grey Act." He believes that although Mr. Rhodes voted for this Bill, which gave masters the right to beat their servants without trial, he would have used his influence to modify the harshness of its provisions; and that the "compulsory labour provisions of the Glen Grey Act are an honest attempt to help the natives to realise the necessity and dignity of labour, a lesson which their best friends wish them to learn." I cannot say what Mr. Rhodes would have done, nor am I able to judge what his motives were; but surely anyone with the slightest regard for justice must admit that to give masters the right to chastise their servants of their own free pleasure, and that without previous trial before a magistrate, places an unfair and dangerous power in the hands of the masters. However, as this Bill, although Mr. Rhodes voted for it, did not become law, I will say no more about it, but I do wish to say something about what Mr. Schreiner has written concerning it.

He states that on some mission stations in South Africa the missionary possesses and uses the right of inflicting corporal punishment on the people under his charge. This statement, occurring in his discussion of this barbarous Act, is to my mind a most serious one for Mr. Schreiner to make, and until he gives us the names of these men, suspicion will rest upon every missionary in South Africa. If Mr. Schreiner is not prepared to furnish us with the names, then he ought not to have made this statement in a public paper. As it now stands, it is a cowardly imputation against a large number of good and Christian men.

I must also protest against Mr. Schreiner's wholesale condemnation of our Colonial natives. They certainly are not angels, nor are the masters. He gives the masters' view of the matter; there is also a servants' side of the question. And I make bold to affirm that if a master will only speak to his native servant with the commonest civility he will find him neither insolent nor disobedient. There are gentlemen and ladies who have never had an insolent look or word from a native in the Cape Colony, simply because they speak to natives as ladies and gentlemen always should. The thieving propensities of these natives are also very generally exaggerated. When one considers the facility which the country affords for stealing, and the carelessness with which things are left about, we may conclude that if they steal more than other people, as is generally implied, it is not the propensity but the opportunity for its exercise, which is greater among them than among others.

If you can spare me a little more of your space, I should like to offer a few observations on the Glen Grey Act, or rather on what Mr. Schreiner describes as the "compulsory labour provisions" of that Act. I am not able to recall the exact wording of the Act, but I do not think that, strictly speaking, it amounts to compulsory labour—rather, it imposes a fine upon certain natives unless they can show that they had been in the employment of some master for a certain number of months in each year. I am the more anxious not to state the matter unfairly because I am one of those friends of the natives who consider these provisions of the Act as unjust and retrogressive, and who hold that whatever temporary good the natives may derive from it, the inevitable tendency of such kind of legislation is evil in its results and degrading to both white and black—that you may teach the natives the lesson of industry at too high a cost.

Mr. Schreiner seems to imply that these provisions were inserted in the Act for the good of the natives—"an honest attempt to help the natives to realise the necessity and dignity of labour." But was that the real reason? Was it not rather the outcry among the farmers, that they could not procure native labour? And why was there this outcry? Was it because the natives would not work? How does it happen, then, that at the mines, and for all Government public works, labour is abundant? How is it that certain farmers who treat and pay their servants fairly, never lack labourers? It is all very well to speak of the dignity of labour, but no one works simply for the sake of the dignity. Inducement to work should be tried rather than coercion. I am aware that many self-styled friends of the natives approve of these provisions of the Act; but surely these people are also friends of "the poor whites"; then why exclude them from the benefits of such an Act? Why confine its beneficent stimulus exclusively to natives? Surely there is something hollow in the profession of a friendship so one-sided.

There are others who are old and tried friends of the natives, and who have sacrificed something for them, and what do they think? At the meetings of the Congregational Union of South Africa, held in Grahamstown last year, there were such veterans present as Revs. Durant Philip, and John MacKenzie; as well as such tried friends as Rev. J. P. Ritchie and H. Beard, Esq., member of our Colonial Parliament, when the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Union: "The members of this Congregational Union desire to express their earnest and emphatic protest against the tendencies of recent legislation affecting the native population of the colony as represented in the Labour Tax of the Glen Grey Act, certain clauses of the East London Municipal Act, and the Haarhoff resolution or so called 'Curfew Bell,' realising that the spirit of such legislation is unjust, injudicious, and calculated to create distrust and discontent among those who are subjected to it. They appeal to all who have the best interests of the native races at heart, to join in the protest, and to use every effort to have these obnoxious measures repealed."—I am, etc. SAM. J. HELM.

A Rest Home in South India.

WITH the precious leading of God, a Rest Home for missionaries of all Protestant denominations and student volunteers was opened in Coonoor, Nilgiri Hills, South India, in May. A most desirable location was secured, comprising seventeen acres, much of which is cultivated, embodying an orange grove and many other fruits, as well as a choice variety of roses and other plants. Missionaries broken down from overwork, or convalescent from any but contagious diseases, are made especially welcome.

Coonoor was selected as combining most of the requisites of a health resort for a Home to be opened all the year, being less expensive and having a more equable climate. There is a Church of England and Union services and a good town library.

At the present time it is not possible to entertain more than ten guests at one time, and many applicants have been refused during the past hot season as well as for the coming one of 1897. It is hoped, however, that the capacity of "Idalah" may be greater in 1897. The need of the Home has been demonstrated by the fact that guests have come from as far north as the Punjab, and as far east as Bengal.

The property is now offered at a moderate figure for the Home until March, 1897. An appeal is made for assistance in securing £5000 to be applied to the purchase of the property, erection of a new building so that twenty-five persons in all may be entertained at one time, furnishing of the new building, and alterations and repairs to the present buildings. Unless the property is purchased it can only be held during the duration of the lease to April, 1898. Other information will be cheerfully furnished.

Sheo-Yang Mission.

THE October issue of the Occasional Paper of the Sheo-Yang Mission tells of the light spreading in a truly remarkable way in Eastern Shan-si. Mr. M. Macnair writes:—

"Mr. and Mrs. Pigott's medical work is an important factor in the Mission, and frequently makes open doors, when without it we might not get them, and by it interest is often awakened in remote places, to which otherwise we might be a long time in finding our way. A man, called Li, who has put away his idols, and shows much interest in the Gospel, had his interest awakened by a former patient.

"There is another young man, upon whose eyes Mrs. Pigott operated last winter, who seems very promising. He is most intelligent, and manifested a strong desire for knowledge. His eyes being bandaged during most of his stay he was unable to read, and was dependent entirely upon verbal instruction, to which he gave good attention, and professed to believe the Gospel and accept Christ for his own Saviour. Since going home he has been visited several times; he is always glad to see us, and be further instructed in the way of life.

"In addition to similar cases among in-patients, there is also the daily dispensary work. The patients all hear more or less of the Gospel each time they come, and many are in this way reached who but for the medical work might never be reached. Our hearts have been gladdened by seeing a man, for whom we have laboured, and prayed, and hoped for a long time, come straight out for Christ. For more than two years Mr. Wang, the manager of one of the largest opium shops in the city, has been awakened by the Gospel and in a state of anxiety about salvation. He has come about us off and on during that time—sometimes apparently near the kingdom, and at others almost given up in despair. He has had a hard struggle, poor fellow, but, praise God, he has conquered.

"Although the step cost him all he had saved for over ten years, he let it go cheerfully, as being unworthy of any consideration in such a case. He 'forsook all.' As in the case of the shepherd Li, who was turned out of his situation when he embraced Christianity, a few of the Church members made up a little capital, just sufficient to enable him to open a general shop, which affords him a modest income. Being the first Christian shopkeeper in the place, his is the first and only shop to close on Sunday."

Communications regarding the Sheo-Yang Mission may be addressed to Mr. W. B. Pratt, 38, Ronsdram-road, Clapton, N.E.

Village Work in British Gujarat.

THE work in the villages is largely the outcome of a mission started among the sweepers of Bombay, some nine years ago, who have their permanent houses in the villages of Gujarat, and in returning from Bombay brought with them the blessed news of the Gospel.

For a long time we were unable to do more in this work than to occasionally visit these converts; but at the close of 1894 Mr. G. W. Park was appointed to open up work in this region. While encamped near Kasor in March, 1895, people from the Dhed caste pressed for baptism, and after due consideration he baptized fifteen persons.

Since then the work has gone on well, but there is urgent need of a tent for the village preaching. Owing to not being able to get a house at all suitable, the missionary is compelled to live in Ahmedabad, distant some forty miles by rail, which he finds a great hindrance. The tent would largely remedy this, as he could live among the villages for a number of months every year. A suitable tent 12ft. square would cost £20. Some might be glad to help in this way. Address, Geo. W. Park, M.E. Missionary, Ahmedabad, India.

Famine in India.

DEAR SIR,—I write to you in the hope of enlisting the sympathies of your readers. We are entering upon troublous times owing to the continued absence of rain. The wheat crop has been dried up, and the cultivations cannot plant out the new crop, for the seed will surely die. Already corn is double its normal price, and semi-starvation stares thousands in the face. Many of our Christians, who earn scarcely sufficient to keep hunger from the door in times of plenty, are feeling the famine sorely. I venture to appeal to those at home, who have been blessed with abundance, on behalf of their poor brethren in the faith out here.

I am anxious to help the most needy to tide over these few months of scarcity, and if the amount received permits, I shall endeavour to relieve the most distressing cases amongst the numerous non-Christians that daily congregate over our mission premises.—Faithfully yours,

J. W. HALL.

The annual meetings of the Brighton branch were held on Tuesday week at the Pavilion. The annual report stated that the number received at the home in the Old-stone during the year was 556, while there were 289 members. A sub-branch had been formed at Haywards Heath with 23 members. The reports of the Kemp Town and West Brighton branches were both of a favourable nature. The afternoon meeting was well attended. In the evening the Banqueting Room was well filled. The Countess of Chichester, who presided, said the Association now reached the uttermost ends of the earth, and as they saw all this they must realise that this was due to the fact that in all the work prominence was given to Christ.

A Conference of Workers and Secretaries, numbering about seventy representatives, has been held in Leeds. Papers were read by Mrs. Hind Smith, Mrs. Moore, Miss Reynolds, Miss Morley, the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, and others. Lord Kinnaird presided over a public meeting in the evening, and dwelt on the necessity of preventive work amongst the young. Miss Maynard gave an address on "The Dignity of the Teacher's Profession" giving the highest place to the truly religious, who reflected in their teaching the wisdom and humility of Jesus. Miss Hedley contributed a paper on "Our Social evenings," and Miss Blane spoke on "The Missionary Field."

The annual meeting of the Edinburgh Association was held in the Free Assembly Hall on October 29. The chairman, Rev. J. H. Wilson, D.D., spoke of the growth of the association. The report showed steady and satisfactory progress, both in numbers and development, the membership in the thirty-seven senior branches having risen to 2230, and in the four junior branches to over 200. During the evening, Miss Morley and Rev. George Wilson gave addresses.

A Convention for the Promotion of Holiness was held in the New Hall, Molkham, on Wednesday, October 28. A Bible-reading was given at the afternoon meeting by Rev. E. S. Hamilton. Sailors in Sydney Harbour.—At a meeting held at Government House, Sydney, an appeal was liberally responded to for a steam launch to carry the Missions to Seamen chaplain to and from the ships in Sydney Harbour. On board many British ships trading with Australia there are no services conducted whilst at sea, and the only opportunity which these crews have for united worship is when the chaplain comes.

The Y.M.C.A.

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN is the seventh Y.M.C.A. centre in South Africa. An association has just been organised in this important frontier town.

Mr. George Holmes, late of the National Council travelling staff, has had a cordial welcome this week to the general secretaryship at St. Helens.

The annual meeting of the Sunderland Association was held on the 26th inst., when the total on the books was shown to be 645, the new names added in the twelve months numbered 104. Two members have left for the mission field.

The first annual gathering of the Gloucester Association was a great success. The Guildhall was crowded afternoon and evening, and the proceedings were characterised by much enthusiasm. Forty new members have been enrolled within the past two months.

Mr. Samuel Millar, Belfast, has concluded a mission to men under the auspices of the Dublin Association. The meetings were well attended, the Word was with power. Many city prodigals were brought in, while the Bible talks to Christians were very successful.

The twenty-seventh anniversary of the Lincoln Association brought together a very large audience in the Corn Exchange on Wednesday evening. Mr. H. Newsum occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Messrs. Emerson Bainbridge, M.P., Robinson Souttar, M.P., and W. Hind Smith.

The work of the Camden Town Association made an excellent start for the winter at a social reception kindly given by Sir George Williams, and addressed by Mr. W. T. Paton and Mr. Henry Conder (Bombay). Mr. A. C. Furse, of this Association, has recently conducted a series of young men's meetings for the Ipswich Y.M.C.A., at which there have been evidences of much blessing.

The annual conference of the North Metropolitan District Union of Associations was held on Wednesday evening, at Hertford. Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., president of the local association, occupied the chair, and there was a good attendance of delegates and friends. A paper on the agencies employed by the Y.M.C.A. was presented by Mr. Robert Burn, and gave rise to an interesting discussion.

The annual meeting of the Hastings and St. Leonards Association, held on October 27, was a success. Sir George Williams presided. Mr. Geo. Henry (the local president) stated that the past year had been one of much prosperity as regarded the membership, eighty-two young men having been elected members and associates. A number of the Bible class members had taken up Sunday-school and other work—one had offered for the foreign mission field, one had gone to college prior to entering the ministry, and another had become assistant secretary at the Croydon Y.M.C.A. The ladies auxiliary had been found most invaluable.

Armenians in France.

A short time ago Miss de Broen, of Paris, was able to acquire a large house on the sea-coast, not far from Dieppe, which she designed to use as a Home of Rest and for delicate children. This long-wished-for Seaside Home is to be opened next spring, and will be a boon valued by many.

Meanwhile, during the winter, Miss de Broen offers it as a temporary Home for Armenian refugees. It is necessary at once to prepare the place for their reception. There are hundreds now in Marseilles who are homeless. Miss de Broen is fitting up the house, and needs help of every kind, specially money for furnishing and provisions.

The refugees will be instructed in French and English, also in basket-making, which is a trade of the district. A Scotch missionary lady, of much experience in the East, will give her services as superintendent. More voluntary helpers are needed in this great field.

Money help for this Armenian Home may be sent to Miss de Broen, 3 Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris. Gifts in kind, or warm clothing for men, women, or children will be gratefully received by the Secretary, 4, Horbury-crescent, Notting Hill Gate, London, W.

MARY DOUGLAS.

Glasgow.—A series of meetings arranged for by the Scottish Band of Hope Union came to a close on Friday last. Mrs. Harrison Lee spoke each afternoon and evening to good audiences. On Sunday, October 25, at St. Andrew's Hall, Mrs. Lee gave a most interesting and instructive address on the miracle at Cana. Monday evening the City Hall was crowded with those seeking to do her honour at a conversazione. Her mission included a visit to the training ship at Helensburgh, where some 400 boys gathered to hear an address.

Christian Endeavour.

DR. CLARK'S visit to Paris has greatly encouraged the Endeavourers working around the French capital.

The first society in connection with the Church of Scotland in Edinburgh has been formed in Newington Parish Church, of which Rev. John Allison, D.D., is the minister.

An address to associate members, delivered by Miss G. Philpott at the Bristol C.E. Convention, has been issued as an "Open Letter." We trust its affectionate counsels will be pondered by many. It is published by W. F. Mack and Co., Bristol and London (4s. per 100).

At the annual meeting of the Cardiff and District Union the afternoon session was presided over by Rev. T. Walton, who took for his subject the "Outpouring of the Holy Ghost." Papers were read on "Why I am a Christian Endeavourer," by Mr. H. A. Phillips; and "C.E. from a Woman's Standpoint," by Miss L. Thomas. A large number came together for the evening meeting, when the secretary reported steady progress in various directions.

The Brixton Union celebrated its anniversary at Wynne-road Chapel on Saturday week. Rev. Z. T. Down took the chair and the organising secretary gave an excellent report of the year's work. This was followed by a series of "one minute" reports from the various societies, which spoke of increase in numbers and extension of usefulness, and gave evidence that most valuable work had been carried on during the year. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who was warmly welcomed, gave an address on the inner Christian life being kept alive by Divine power.

[By OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE Greek Testament readings on Sunday evenings, conducted by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, continue to be well attended; the subject this term is "A Day with Christ." Many helpful thoughts are suggested, and their bearing on college life brought out.

It is hoped that the Hannington Memorial Hall will be ready by next term. There is to be a library and a large room for meetings, as, for instance, the meetings of the Missionary Union. This will supply a long-felt want.

The president of Trinity College presided at a meeting of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta, and Rev. H. Whitehead gave an account of the work being done. Education is destroying the early religious beliefs of the people, and they are looking for some positive principle upon which society could be based anew and reconstructed. There is the opportunity for us to make use of. They need to know the Lord Jesus.

Sermons on behalf of the Wesleyan Foreign Missions have been preached by Rev. W. Hart, missionary from India. He said at the annual meeting here that the hand of Providence was distinctly to be seen in the struggle which England had with other Powers for the possession of India, as it was well known what the moral influences of some nations would have been. Of the last four Lieut.-Governors of Bengal three had been distinctly Christian men.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University Bible Reading in the Henry Martyn Memorial Hall last Sunday was conducted by Dr. Moale. The hall was quite full, as it has been several times this term. The subject was the "New Covenant."

The daily prayer meetings under the auspices of the Cambridge Inter-collegiate Christian Union are well attended and must be a very great source of help and spiritual comfort to those who feel the need of help in the daily battle for Christ at college. The average attendance is about forty.

There seem to be many keen Christians among our freshmen this term. The numbers, it is true, are small as compared with other years, but the membership of most of the religious and especially of the Evangelical societies is increased this term.

The C.I.C.C.U. meeting at 8.30 p.m. in the large hall of the Guildhall was addressed by Col. Owen Hay. The address was stirring and powerful, and led, may we not hope, to many taking a more serious view of life, and death, and sin.

Zanzibar.—Mrs. Knapman, writing from the Strangers' Rest, says that on the death of the Sultan lately there were fears of trouble, and the English ladies were all received into the consulate, which was well guarded by marines and bluejackets. Later on, while the palace was bombarded in order to oust the usurper, the ladies were taken on board the flagship. Mrs. Knapman adds: "We are delighted to hear that new workers are being thought of. Zanzibar needs them sadly. We feel that the Lord has many other sheep to be brought in here."

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Bright Eyes. This charming children's annual is now issued by G. Stoneman (2s. 6d. and 4s.), who has introduced many new features. It is prettily illustrated, and contains many pleasing stories, riddles, and verses for the little ones.

Sunshine revives memories of its founder, the late Dr. Whittemore. The new volume is bright outside and entertaining inside. The competitions conducted in its pages show that it is a favourite with the young folks. (1s. 6d. Stoneman.)

The Young Standard Bearer is a well-conducted illustrated temperance magazine, designed for juvenile branches of the C.E.T.S. and Bands of Hope. The volume contains many pieces suitable for recitation. (1s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Sunday is an old friend, valued in many homes, and much sought after in Sunday-school libraries. About two hundred pictures, with choice readings in prose and poetry, not omitting Scripture sketches, tastefully displayed texts, and simple stories, make up the bill of fare. (3s. and 5s. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Darton's Leading Strings is a capital annual for the tots. The latest issue, like its predecessors, is "the very thing," with its bold type and striking pictures. (1s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Kate Rayburn. By Constance Cross. (Gardner, Darton & Co.) The simple story of a little maid who takes her own way, gets into trouble, and profits much thereby. A capital book for young girls.

Left on the Prairie, by M. B. Cox (Noel West), is the story of a boy's experiences in distant regions of the great American continent. The pages will have a charm for the young. (Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Baffling the Blockade, by J. Macdonald Oxley, is a story of the American civil war. The author is deservedly popular with boys, and every page of his book, with its striking engravings, is full of life and movement. (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.)

Adolph, and How he Found the "Beautiful Lady." By Fannie J. Taylor. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. 1s. 6d.) A story of child life, illustrating the habits and ways of Germans transplanted to America. Tasteful pictures by Helene Toerring lend effective aid to the book.

Church and Synagogue is a new quarterly magazine, which is also to serve as the organ of the Parochial and Foreign Missions to the Jews, a society whose work is "conducted on strictly Church lines." The periodical will have special interest for friends of Israel. (3d. Elliot Stock.)

The Little Marie. By Brida Walker. (E. Stock.) A tale of the Franco-German war and the bombardment of St. Denis, with a vivid glimpse of the sufferings of the unfortunate inhabitants. The book concludes with the story of the origin and early triumphs of the McAll Mission in France.

Barbed Arrows from the Quiver of C. H. Spurgeon. (2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) This is a volume of illustrative incidents and thoughts, from the sermons of the late pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. As a companion to the well-known "Feathers for Arrows," it will be welcome to many a Bowman.

Bob Strong's Holiday. By John C. Hutcheson. (Jarrold. 3s. 6d.) A book of boyish adventure. Bob, his sister Nellie, a retired Naval officer, and a poor friendless lad make up the personalia of a fun-loving party. For Dick, the runaway, the chance meeting turns out well, and he is found a berth on board one of H.M. ships. A breezy, healthful story.

Miss Winnifred's Mission, and Other Stories. By Kate Shirley Plant. (Home Words Office. 1s. 6d.) A new and cheap issue of a book which has already won acceptance. In childlike fashion and from a child's point of view the author delineates loving and helpful service for our neighbours. Rev. Dr. C. H. Waller, in a brief preface, finds much to commend in the book.

The Christian Endeavour Birthday Book, compiled by Florence Witts, gives a Scripture verse and appropriate reading for every day of the year, each alternate page being blank for the inscription of the names of friends. The selections have been made with judgment, and we cordially commend the book to the attention of Endeavourers. (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union.)

The Life of Francis Covell is an outline of the career of one who was for over thirty years minister of Providence Chapel, Croydon. Mr. Covell passed away in 1879, and this memoir succeeds to a brief narrative which has long been out of print. Some of the quaint and wholesome sayings of Mr. Covell are given, also a portrait and other illustrations. (1s. 2d., post free. E. Wilmshurst, Blackheath, S.E.)

Across Siberia on the Great Post Road. By Charles Wenyon, D.D. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A vivid and well written account by an observant traveler, of adventures in crossing the vast Siberian steppes. Graphic sketches of exile and emigrant life, and the peculiarities of Russian rule in these distant regions, lend charm to the book, which is, indeed, of much interest as a narrative of travel out of the common and beaten path.

Things to Live for. By J. R. Miller, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Twenty-four meditations, forming a volume highly suited for purposes of presentation. The pages enforce high ideals, for, in the words of the preface, Dr. Miller holds that "nothing is worth while which is not eternal, which will not permanently enrich our character, which will not make the world better, sweeter, happier, and which we cannot carry with us into the after life."

The Ethics of Temperance. By A. E. Garvie, B.A. (Sunday School Union. 1s.) A closely-reasoned demonstration of the evils, national, domestic, and individual, wrought by intemperance, and of the obligation resting on all who name the name of Christ to abstain from all appearance of evil. The standpoint from which the Christian must regard strong drink is calmly and clearly defined. The chapter on political action will be of real help to many.

The Church of England: A History for the People. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have published the first part of this new serial (to be completed in about twenty-four parts, 7d. each), by Dean Spence. Beautifully printed and amply illustrated, the work is sure to have a very general interest. The initial part outlines the story of Christianity in early Britain. A reproduction in tints of Goodall's well-known picture, "Cranmer at the Traitors' Gate," is presented.

Out of His Fulness. By Rev. Andrew Murray. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) Addresses delivered at the Northfield Conference in 1895, with four given at Toronto in the same year. Many will be thankful that these searching, spiritual and stimulating words have been republished in this country. While on the lines of Mr. Murray's addresses to English Christians, there is much freshness in them. The closing "Word to Workers" is frank and clear: to many it must prove a message of power.

Messages to the Children: Seventy-two Short Sermons to Young People. By Rev. Charles Jordan, M.A., LL.B. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) A volume of real worth. Half the addresses are based on Old Testament texts and half on New; all are admirably constructed, and fully deserve the description of "Messages to the Children." Those who want seed-thoughts for talks with the young will find this book rich in teaching and illustrative material.

Hymns that have Helped is a double number of Mr. W. T. Stead's "Penny Poets." The collection includes compositions, Jewish, Christian, and Pagan, which have proved useful to the children of men. There are pieces in five languages, and respecting a number of them deeply interesting items of information. Many men of light and leading make confession as to what hymns have helped them spiritually or had a moral influence upon their lives. (2d. Review of Reviews Office.)

The Travels of Seek-Truth is an allegory, by W. T. Andrews. The journey is from Destruction to the Celestial City. Among those met on the way we observe the names of Mr. Antinomianism, Mr. Higher Criticism, and Mr. Human Tradition. Another who "came not in at the gate" was Mr. Duty-Faith, whose religion the Interpreter describes as "an empty sham." Seek-truth seems to have had encounters with some less formidable enemies than Bunyan's Pilgrim, whose story our hyper-Calvinist author has nevertheless read to excellent purpose. (2s. E. Wilmshurst, Blackheath, S.E.)

The Birth and Boyhood of Jesus. By G. F. Pentecost, D.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) In so far as his published works are concerned, this volume seems to mark a new departure on the part of the author. Little, comparatively, is told in Scripture of the early years of the life of our Lord on earth, yet these expository addresses bring out a mine of wealth from the mystery of the Incarnation, the preparations for and announcements of his birth, and the glimpses afforded in the Gospels of episodes in the youthful days of Jesus. The discourses are marked by freshness of thought and much evangelical fervour.

The Quiver for November starts a new volume, enlarged and with the addition of several good features. Amongst the notable articles we are attracted by Sir George Williams's story of the Y.M.C.A., under the title, "Work in which I am interested." His reminiscences of the origin of this wonderful movement are of great interest. An admirable portrait is given of the founder, together with illustrations of the room in which the first committee met and of Exeter Hall. Mary Spencer Warren contributes a delightful paper on "Sunday with Queen Victoria," from which we learn that Her Majesty sets herself steadfastly against the transaction of business on that day. But indeed the magazine has many good points, of which these are but examples. (Cassell & Co. 6d.)

The Spirit's Seal. By Rev. E. W. Moore. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) A series of thoughtful chapters on the believer's need of the power from on high, on the significance of the emblems employed in Scripture for the Holy Spirit, and on the results of the endowment with power in the personal life and testimony of the child of God. Another book, dealing with a different phase of this theme, comes from the same house—The Baptism with the Holy Spirit. By R. A. Torrey. (1s.) The large experience of the author among men lends to his work a very practical tone. He shows the absolute need of the gift of the Holy Spirit for service, the possibility of recovering this power, its results in effective service, and, lastly, how spiritual power may be lost by self-indulgence, pride, secret sin, neglect of prayer and the Word, and in other ways.

The Sunday School Union send a variety of seasonable reward books. Big Cypress, by Kirk Munroe (1s. 6d.), is a boys' story of settlers in South Florida, with some stirring adventures amongst alligators and Indians. A Clever Daughter, by Mrs. Henry Clarke, M.A., is a home story telling of a studious girl who, after many anxieties, turns out a real comfort and help. Pine Castle, by W. K. Landels (1s. 6d.), deals with Italian life and the mission work with which the author is so familiar. The trials and persecutions which those who accept the Gospel have to endure from priests and others find admirable illustration. Heroines of Mercy, by Frank Mundell (1s. 6d.), tells in a pleasant way the life stories of such noble women as Florence Nightingale, Sister Dora, Miss A. E. Jones, Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, Mary Carpenter, Dorothea Dix, Miss Marsh, Miss Weston, Miss Robinson, and other women who have devoted their lives to the service of God and of men. Dorothy in India, by Sarah Parson (1s.), illustrates the daily life and experiences of English children in India. Dorothy is the daughter of a missionary, and her life is by no means so bright and childlike as that of girls at home.

Mr. C. J. Thynne has issued, in the "Protestant View" series of penny books, A LIFE AND WORK OF CHARLES CHINIQUEY, D.D.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN, in Spirit, Mind, and Body, is a booklet full of sound thoughts, demanding the attention of parents. By Frances S. Hallows. (6d. Partridge.)

In No. 50 of Mr. Stead's "Penny Poets" we have selections from SOME AUSTRALIAN POETS—Lindsay Gordon, Kendall and Stephens. An extraordinary pennyworth.

FOUR PRIZE SERMONS, by Methodist Laymen, are published in a neat pamphlet from the Joyful News depot, Rochdale (6d.). They are of a high order from a practical point of view.

CLOSING UP OF THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES, AND END OF TURKISH OPPRESSIONS, is a review by W. T. F., in booklet form. The pages are sober and thoughtful and reverent. (1d. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

THE CLAIMS OF ROME, by H. B., is a series of articles reprinted from Emmanuel Parish Magazine, Hastings. This is a booklet deserving of a wide circulation. (2d. Brooker & Jepson, Robertson-street, Hastings.)

THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE MONTHLY (1d. Kensit) is a new magazine, the title of which proclaims its object. The October issue is the third, and among the contributors so far have been Revs. Z. B. Woffendale, Danzy Sheen, and W. Millar Nicolson, D.Sc.

Penny books are the order of the day. Now Mr. C. H. Kelly has issued THE POPULAR HISTORY OF METHODISM by John Telford, B.A. After reading this, most readers will ask for more. Those who are familiar with the story of Methodism will be refreshed by this lucid outline.

"I NEVER EXPECTED SUCH HAPPINESS." By Lucy A. Bennett. (6d. Marshall Brothers.) These touching records of "the last days of a young cyclist" show how one very young endured affliction "as seeing the invisible," and was granted a most triumphant entrance into the presence of his Lord.

FURTHER SIGNS OF THE TIMES, showing the near approach of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. By Rev. R. Middleton, vicar of St. Martin-at-Oak, Norwich. This reprint of an address given at Clapham Prophetic Conference in June last, is of grave import. The pamphlet should have many readers. (1d. Jarrold & Sons.)

NOTES ON PROPHECY, a series of slips for insertion in Bibles, on "the Times of the Gentiles" and other great prophetic periods, is a useful publication. The notes are chiefly taken from Dr. Grattan Guinness's "Light for the Last Days," and are so simply worded as to be understood by all. (2d. S. W. Partridge & Co.)

The November issue of LIGHT AND LEADING discusses the question of the International Lesson system, and describes the working of the Bible Study Union. This monthly gives thoughtful notes on the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavour Lessons. (2d. H. R. Allenson.)

LIEUTENANT STEPHAN SCHULTZ: His Talks with his Men on Popery. By "A. E." This is a trenchant booklet of the Brimscombe series. It should prove helpful to others besides the soldiers who listened to the addresses when first delivered. (Tract Depot, Stroud, Glos.)

Messrs. Dyer Brothers, Rose-street Corner, E.C., have issued a second edition of Miss Soonderbal Powar's striking pamphlet on the OPIUM-BLIGHTED HOMES OF INDIA. (1d.) Mr. A. S. Dyer writes a preface on the author's qualifications and credentials. A useful series of leaflets or letters entitled PRECIOUS SEED. (Fifty assorted, 6d.)

THE CHURCHMAN'S "ACROSTIC" BIBLE-SEARCHING ALMANACK for 1897, with Table of Lessons. By B.J.M.M. The daily texts in this almanack are all taken from the portion of Scripture appointed for the following Sunday service. (Book form at 1d. each, postage 1d. for three copies. Miss Monck Mason, Mickleham, Dorking.)

From the offices of the Basel Missionary Society, Basel, Switzerland, two deeply interesting pamphlets have just been issued, VIERT JAHR GEFANGEN IN ASANTE (30 pgs.), giving a summary of the imprisonment of Pastors Ramseyer and Kühne; and WIEDER IN KUMARE (10 pgs.), with a glance at Ashanti past and present. These booklets are both by P. Steiner, and are fully illustrated.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LAST Lord's Day was celebrated as Temperance Sunday in the diocese of Rochester; and the last Sunday of the month is, as usual, to be set apart for the same purpose in most of the Nonconformist Churches in the country. The Bishop of Rochester in a sermon on the subject laid great stress on carrying on the work for its own sake, without weakening it by joining it with other objects of reform. He emphasised the moral and religious aspects of the work, and said the movement was simply to save the drunkard, and the more clearly they kept that end in sight the better they would succeed.

As the time for the meeting of Parliament approaches, the Education question is again being pushed to the front, and it does not come in any pleasanter form than when we last had it. It is an attempt again to get money from the public, over which the priests shall have the control. Under a concern for "religion" there is really a concern to teach, at the public expense, and often to children whose parents object to it, a view of religion which this country, at the Reformation, rejected as superstitious and vain. Were they to gain their object, it would only be for a while, and the succeeding resistance would overwhelm them in a greater defeat. The worst thing for a bad cause is that it should obtain the power and opportunity of showing itself.

An extraordinary offer has just been made by the vicar of Romsey to the officers of the Abbey Congregational Church in that town, with a view to practical Christian union. Being without a pastor, he has, in a word, offered to become their minister, and to conduct their services free of charge, using the Church prayers only in the morning, and giving them full powers of internal self-government. The letter in which the offer was made is marked by the most courteous sentiment and Christian charity. The offer has been declined on the ground that the differences of principle between Nonconformists and the Established Church make such a union distinctly impracticable, while at the same time the goodwill of the vicar is heartily reciprocated. The remarkable thing is not that the offer should be refused, considering what are the fundamental principles of Congregational Church life, but that it should have been made. It proves that the desire for reunion is becoming a deep and genuine thing. It is time, however, to realise that true reunion of spirit may co-exist with manifest differences of organisation. It is the "one Spirit" that determines the one body, which may be composed of many parts and yet be truly one.

There is talk of an Unsectarian Conference of English speaking people being held on the thirteen hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the See of Canterbury, which falls next year. Why attach a conference of that kind to an event which was papistic we fail to see. The coming of Augustine to England is often spoken of as the introduction of Christianity to this country, but Christianity was here in a purer and simpler form before his arrival; he brought a degraded form, and along with it papal annoyance and assumption, which caused great trouble and dissension. For the English-speaking people to make so much of an Italian monk seems very absurd; and it is certain that a conference on the anniversary of his formation of the famous See of Canterbury will redound a great deal more to the glory of sacerdotalism than anything else. An undenominational conference of the English-speaking people may be a very good thing, but it should not be associated with an intensely narrow and sectarian event.

The need for incessant watchfulness in preserving the Lord's Day from the encroachments of organised amusements involving Sunday labour was illustrated at the recent committee of the Lord's Day Rest Association. The condition attached to music licences is that the licensee "shall not open his said house or place on the Lord's Day." This condition is being flagrantly violated at a number of halls, hotels, and restaurants, at some of which gigantic concerts are held, and large sums of money taken, and great numbers of employes are consequently kept at work. The committee rightly resolved that a list of such houses be sent to the County Council, with the request that the terms of the licences be enforced in order that numerous employes may be protected from Sunday labour. The question suggests itself, however, whether the Council is adequately doing its duty in permitting such infractions of its bye-laws to be committed at all. It is their business not only to grant licences, but also to see that these are properly kept.

"Romany," writing in The Christian World on the "Wonders of Dudley," notices that the militant secularism which used to be so common in the late Mr. Bradlaugh's days is now quite dead at Dudley, as, indeed, it seems to be in almost every other place. A gentleman who recently wanted a copy of The Freethinker was informed by his bookseller that the paper had not been asked for for several years. No doubt this is true; but the infidel party in this country can keep a monthly magazine floating, though probably its social and literary articles make it as acceptable as its atheistic utterances. Along with the decline of infidelity at Dudley, there is said to be a marked improvement in the moral and religious character of the people, with one great drawback—the spread of gambling. Homes, so it is said on all sides, are broken up with this mania. We seem to want a number of converted cricketers, converted "bike" riders, and converted football players, to begin a crusade among the sporting thousands.

The great fire on Saturday night last at the establishment of one of the greatest manufacturers of fire-engines illustrates a common danger of the religious life. The fire laid hold of the vast factory and never ceased till 350 fire-engines, two floats, and 37,000 feet of hose were entirely destroyed. It is stated that there were enough engines in the place to have put out a second "fire of London" if they had got a fair start. But, though existing for the sole end of fire-escape, they were useless, and only added fuel to the flames. Is there not a similar fact in the spiritual world? Those who give themselves to toil for the salvation of others have need to watch their own hearts well. Even preachers may neglect their own higher needs in the very act of ministering to the needs of others. Paul was conscious of this peril, and tells what strenuous efforts he put forth to meet it, lest by any means after that he had preached to others, he himself should be a "castaway." "They made me a keeper of vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept."

The recent Conference at Berne on national morality seems to have borne fruit early. Some alarming revelations were there made of the extent of the traffic in girls; and now the Swiss journals are warning persons to be on their guard against it. The Austrian Government has notified the Swiss Federal authorities that the Vienna police are now upon the track of a "ring" of these traders, who are said to be mostly Jews and Jewesses. The girls, who are entrapped at Geneva and Berne, are said to be hurried off either to Eastern harems, or to the worst dens of crime in the great towns of Central and Western Europe. If well-informed men at the East End of London may be depended upon, Jews there also have a good deal to account for of a similar kind of evil. The "law" fails. Those who would glean some idea of this fearful traffic, should read "Martyrs of Hell's Highway," just published by H. R. Allenson (8s. 6d.).

Amid the jubulations over the return of a sound money candidate for the American Presidency, a return which, so far as it represents honest public transactions, may well cause satisfaction, there is an undertone of warning. The silver candidate may have been used for purposes of their own by silver mine owners and workers, just as Mr. McKinley has been used by other "rings" for their purposes; but the sense of wrong and need on the part of a vast number of industrious people was the force which carried him so far on his way to success, and which remains to be dealt with. If that sense of injustice is based on fact, as it appears to be, the election will not remove it. If thousands of the people are right in believing that they are exploited by millionaires, their day of reckoning will come. A lavish use of gold may carry an election once or twice or oftener, but the only thing that can ultimately stand is righteousness.

Now that the election is over we hope that there will be a discontinuance of a good deal of abusive language. Too many Englishmen have been speaking of Americans as ready "to break their contracts, go back upon their word," and so forth. The election is a reply to that. Then again, the epithets of "semi-civilised," etc., which have been hurled by Mr. McKinley's friends at the States which voted for Mr. Bryan, had better be forgotten. The farmers of the West may well compare with the tattered crowds of the cities of the East; but public railing is as bad as private, and is best avoided. The sting of these taunts is likely to live. For wise future action the whole population of the United States, so vast and so varied, requires self-knowledge, self-respect, and hearty union. The friends of America have no greater joy than to know that the great Republic is "sound" in every respect.

At a time like this, when an exciting political contest is just over, it is well to be reminded, as we have been by a contemporary, that the salvation of a nation does not depend upon a change of parties, or a change of leaders, or the passing of more drastic measures of reform, but on making the individual righteous. It is the wicked man, be he rich or poor, who creates all our "problems" and breeds all our troubles. The vices of the world become the "social questions" and the "political changes." To attack them is of little use; we must convert the men, one by one. And there is only one power and one instrument by which that can be done—the Spirit and the Word of God.

The new policy of "thorough" in Madagascar, is being more and more insisted on. Whether it will succeed is another question, as we pointed out last week. One great humane reform has however been proclaimed in the abolition of slavery. Heavy fines and imprisonment are to be inflicted on those who violate this law. Freed slaves are to keep all the goods they have bought out of their savings. No war tax is to be levied. On the other hand Madagascar has been proclaimed French soil, the French language made the delegatory basis of all school instruction, and the "Romish cult" is especially to be insisted on. This looks like a combination of physical liberty, and spiritual slavery. Protestant missionaries will be more than ever hampered in their work, and a time of trial seems at hand for their churches. If the Malagasy have not lost the heroic spirit of their forefathers, this may be but a salting by fire, out of which they will come, purified and refined.

The dark midnight that has hung over Turkey for so long seems touched with light at last. While rumours of further massacres are still coming in, there is at the same time a belief that the Powers are really working towards a mutual understanding. The latest advices contain repeated hints that England has led the way in making certain overtures to Russia that may lead to such interference with the Sultan as will bring his power for mischief to an end. What these proposals are does not yet appear; but that they are at least being made seems pretty certain. The agitation that has moved this country from one end to another, together with the Czar's visit, appear to be the primary causes of the new direction which affairs are taking. If we have succeeded in proving that the moral sense of Europe was not dead but sleeping, and in rousing it to action we have done a good work. It would, however, be a mistake to think that the battle of humanity and justice has yet been won. All the resources of diplomacy will fail unless the nation shows a determined and watchful attitude.

A Frenchman has just issued a book in which he pleads for a better understanding between France and England. He points out and deplores the insidious attempts made in his own country to separate the two nations for political ends. He dwells upon the many points of contact between the nations, and urges that their interests are identical. May his well-meant attempt prove successful. Everything that can destroy jealousy and animosity ought to be encouraged; and especially should we rejoice to see a wider diffusion in France of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. Unity in the faith is far stronger than ties of commerce or government.

The Daily News points out a real danger to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children when it says that too much prominence may be given to the number of prosecutions it has undertaken and convictions it has gained. This may ultimately create a prejudice. When will every day-school be favoured with a daily visit from some kind lady and gentleman who will speak persuasively to the children on good behaviour, purity of speech and thought, kindness to animals, truthfulness, and similar subjects? Three minutes a day would produce a great result in the long run, and in making well-behaved children we should be making better fathers and mothers of coming generations.

Rev. T. H. Darlow is of opinion that along with the advance of science and the revision of Scripture we stand on the brink of a revival of theology; and that this is the most cheering fact in the whole outlook of the future. Even in our commercial age "the unseen is beginning to exert its own eternal fascination on the race who feel, at the bottom of their hearts, that they are strangers and pilgrims upon earth." Mr. Darlow is very rightly persuaded that a revival of theology will drive home foreign mission work upon the Church's conscience, "not just as a generous sentiment, but as a solemn duty, a reasonable service, an imperious claim." And there can be no doubt that foreign mission work has also helped to keep a pure theology alive by making workers, both at home and abroad, feel that only a Gospel of positive statement, meeting the guilt, the sin, and the misery of men could be of any avail. Fancy Gospels may do for dreamers in studies, but a working Gospel is required for actual use.

Dr. John Watson, in "The Cure of Souls" (Hodder & Stoughton), says that the careful pastor will make a yearly visitation of his people; and "he will omit no one, however rich, for he needs the pastor most; or however poor, for he will value him most." But then it should be a pastoral visit, with the light and power of the truth of God in it; not a call with a few inquiries and a pleasant "Good day." Such a visit is always easier in the poor man's than in the rich man's house. It is easier to get to your knees on the bare boards or stones of a cottage floor than on the carpets of a fine house. Many things in the rich home crowd "the kingdom" out; the poverty of the poor home makes room for it.

When our Lord, in answer to the disciple's question, "Who, then, can be saved?" answers, "With men it is impossible, but not with God," He does not mean, as it is usually understood, that the salvation of rich men is impossible, but that the salvation of all men is impossible except by the power of God.

This is the grammatical rendering of Mark x. 27. No man can attain to eternal life but through the Divine grace. The gate into the Kingdom of God cannot be forced from the outside; it can only be thrown open from within. Christ came to open it so wide that all men might enter, if only they are willing to come in. He is the way to the Father. The resources of the Eternal are through Him made available to the poorest and the meanest.

Christ and the Penitent.

By THEODORE CUYLER, D.D.

AMONG all the personal episodes in the New Testament the one which is about the most painful to read, and yet is most practical and precious in its teachings, is the story of Peter's fall and recovery. Impulsive, impetuous Simon Peter is a man we cannot spare. Standing or falling, he is worthy of our deepest study; he is the conspicuous example of the way in which Jesus Christ deals with a penitent Christian.

As soon as the cock-crow smites upon his ear, and the upbraiding look of his Saviour smites through his soul, he hurries away in an honest outgush of bitter tears. Those tears are not cowardly shame, they bespeak the keen anguish of a truly penitent heart. Christ had said to him a few hours before: "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not"; and the interceding prayer for the awfully tempted disciple is answered straightway. Peter, the terrible sinner, has become Peter, the restored penitent; and a tremendous lesson has been taught to all Christ's professed followers to the end of time.

This lesson is full of solemn significance to all of us; for I pity the Christian who is so presumptuous as to imagine that he never can fall, or so forgetful as not to remember that in times past he has fallen. If the lesson is full of warning, it brings also a most precious encouragement. We learn from it how our merciful Master, instead of allowing "bruised reeds" to break utterly, deals most tenderly with a truly penitent Christian. In the case of this disciple, who made such a lamentable exhibition of his weakness in the court of the high priest, we see a beautiful manifestation of Christ's compassion. "He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust." On the very day of Christ's resurrection a message is given to the women beside the empty sepulchre, and it is this: "Go quickly and tell his disciples and Peter that He is risen from the dead."

Jesus Christ keeps open doors for penitent backsliders. To the lukewarm, whose spiritual pulse is feeble, as well as to those who have fallen into open, flagrant sin, the inviting voice is "remember whence thou hast fallen, and repent and do thy first works." Thousands in our churches sorely need a reconversion. My friend, if you have grown cold in heart, and indolent in duty, if prayer has become a penance, and the world has eaten out your love of the Master, don't go hunting amid the rubbish of memory for a lost religion. Give up that old "hope," and seek for a better. A revival within the churches would prepare the way for a mighty converting work outside. If Peter sinned grievously, he repented deeply, and worked grandly and fought gloriously until this heroic martyrdom brought to him his resplendent crown. Dig down deep, my friend, and lay the foundations of a new and stronger life on Jesus Christ. If Christ once kindly said "and Peter," you can write your name in the same roll and say, "Peter and me."

On Prophecy. At Mildmay.

EVERY conscientious and intelligent Bible-reader will not only willingly admit but strenuously affirm the necessity of maintaining sound principles of Scripture exposition. Yet we are all liable to the temptation to disregard them when we wish to establish some view which has taken possession of us. We may be sound on Inspiration, and yet give ourselves away to unsound principles of exegesis or interpretation. It is an elementary principle that we should not found a doctrine on a parable, or a symbol, or an illustration, unless it is authenticated by other portions of the Word.

With sincere respect and regard for the chairman and the other brethren on the platform of the recent Prophetic Conference at Mildmay, on the afternoon devoted to answering questions, we must express our regret that in one instance the rule was distinctly transgressed. On the basis of an interpretation of Rev. xiv. 1-5, not generally held, and confessedly in opposition to the apparent and generally accepted teaching of 1 Cor. xv. 23 and 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, a novel doctrine was emphatically pressed. We do not particularise it; we have done so before. Our present concern is not so much that an unproved doctrine is taught, as that a vital principle is disregarded, by men who are nothing if not Biblical, on a platform which is nothing if not evangelical. It is not impossible that the same brethren on the same platform may some day be found contending earnestly for the faith, against doctrines which all evangelical men would consider false, but which may have been let in by the removal of the barrier named above.

It was urged by one speaker that he had come to the view he had advocated after thirty years of study. But a succession of men through centuries have advocated views which are essentially different from those of that day's speakers. It is no proof of the truth of a view that it has grown up during a lifetime.

The personal and premillennial coming of our Lord has been one of the foundations of the Mildmay platform. We believe its truth emphatically. It is the polestar which guides us through the night, and the morning star of our hope as the day is dawning. But of late years the hope has been obscured by the dust of controversy as to detail; and very respectfully we venture to question the wisdom of lending the Mildmay platform for the teaching of any particular school of interpretation, unless it be open to others.

We, therefore, suggest that it would be in accordance with the past and with the spirit of Mildmay, that the Advent Conferences should be on such elementary lines that all who hold the blessed hope of the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ should meet upon its platform without obtruding antagonistic points and entering into divisive details. Such a platform would probably receive a crowded and interested audience.

We have a filial affection for the Barnet-Mildmay Conference. It was at Barnet, thirty-seven years ago, that the tide of our captivity was turned. Our early numbers, almost unknown before, were eagerly welcomed at the Conference of 1859, and those who then rallied to the call for Christian union have been our warm friends ever since. As one by one they have passed within the veil they have been succeeded by others of the same spirit, and Mildmay and THE CHRISTIAN have gone hand in hand as the representatives of the oneness of the people of God, without reference to diversity of doctrine or denomination—an Evangelical Alliance on the broad ground of the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God; its mission—to gather together in one the children of God who are scattered abroad.

It is therefore in no critical spirit, but with a heart full of treasured memories, of saintly friends, and of meetings whose watchword was the love of the brethren and the love of his appearing, that we make these suggestions.

Is Truth a Necessity?

THE impression produced by a writer upon a reader depends not so much upon what is written as upon what is read, or what is read into it. Mr. Reader Harris has published a book entitled "Is Sin a Necessity?" (Partridge, 1s.) in which two articles are reprinted from THE CHRISTIAN of November 21, 1895, one by Rev. George Wainwright, and the other by "M." The chapter of the book containing them is headed "The Angry CHRISTIAN," and the following chapter contains the reprint of an article said to have been published by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in the Methodist Times, in which the articles from THE CHRISTIAN are described as "a bitter personal attack" upon Mr. Reader Harris. We reply that the "anger" and the "bitter personal attack" are read into the articles by those who find them there. We leave the readers of the book to judge where the anger and bitterness come in.

Mr. Reader Harris replied in a short letter, concluding thus:—

The matter at issue is not what any man thinks, but what the Scriptures say on the matter occupying so many minds to-day, "Is sin a necessity in a Spirit-filled man?" That question THE CHRISTIAN has discreetly avoided.

To this letter we appended a note saying, "We do not avoid the question, 'Is sin a necessity in a Spirit-filled man?' It is in the first place ambiguous; in the second, it misrepresents the position of those whom Mr. Harris attacks. The Holy Spirit says by the Apostle John: 'If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.' Therefore sin is a fact in a Spirit-filled man. But the Spirit says by the same Apostle: 'These things write I unto you that ye sin not.' Therefore sinning is not a necessity in a Spirit-filled man."

This is in brief the position of the Keswick platform, and of evangelical men generally. If it had been true before (which it was not), it was true no longer that we had "discreetly avoided" Mr. Reader Harris's question. But this note is (we will not say "discreetly," but indiscreetly, if the object is to arrive at the truth) omitted in the book!

Mr. Reader Harris, in introducing "the angry CHRISTIAN," says:

It is no secret that "M." was no other than the editor of THE CHRISTIAN, while Mr. Wainwright was his brother-in-law.

This remark seems less relevant to the discussion than would have been the omitted note. It is not obvious how the fact, if it had been a fact, that Mr. Wainwright was "M.'s" brother-in-law, could contribute to the solution of the problem. Unhappily, "M." has no brother-in-law; therefore the illumination which might have been imparted through that relationship is unavailable. Mr. Wainwright's connection with "M." is the same as that of Mr. Reader Harris and Mr. Hugh Price Hughes—a brother in Christ.

None of those who have taken part in this discussion wish to apologise for sin or wish to assert a necessity or a liberty for sinning. All believe that Jesus, our Great High Priest, "is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." All believe that those who take his yoke upon them find the rest that He gives. All exhort to holiness of life; and Christian charity requires that each should credit the other with the purpose to "follow holiness without which no man shall see the Lord," unless the fruit borne in his life proves the contrary.

If the question had been, "Is sinning a necessity?" there would be a unanimous "No." Is not this enough for a working basis in Christian unity? Sin is only made evident by sinning. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Each knows the plague of his own heart, and his own experience of the uttermost salvation, better than anyone else can know it. What one calls infirmity, another calls sin. The anger or bitterness, if any exist on either side, is greatly due to the use of the same words with different significance. One side says there need be no sin in a Spirit-filled man, but admits that infirmity is an inevitable condition of our earthly life. The other side says that that infirmity is sin.

Christians live and work together in love and peace, with far more practical differences between them than this.

Mysteries of Grace.

I do not know exactly how

The work of grace was wrought
Within my heart; I only know
His Holy Spirit taught
Me to believe in God's dear Son;
I did, and so the work is done.

I cannot well imagine how
His Spirit can reside
In my poor heart, but then God said
That He should be my guide;
And so He came and dwells within
To keep me from the power of sin.

I do not understand at all
How He can ever need
Such worthless ones as I to do
His work, but then I read
The foolish shall confound the wise
If in his hand the vessel lies.

I cannot tell the moment when
My Saviour will appear,
And so I must be ready now;
To-day he may be here.
For all around us tells so plain
That soon He will be back again.

So if you cannot understand,
Just trust Him, do not doubt;
But do your part and leave the rest;
For God will lead you out,
And guide you till with heaven's throng
"Worthy the Lamb" shall be your song.

MAUD A. BUSSELL.

Yarmouth.—A correspondent says: There is an unusually good and interesting work being carried on here by Mr. Jary, of the B. and F. Sailors' Society. From the numbers turned away of an evening he ought to have a building twice the size. Of 230 packed in last night 160 were men.

The Howard-street Gospel Mission has now brought the open-air meetings, commenced on Good Friday, to a close. 130 meetings have been held in different parts of London. Sinners have been saved, backsliders restored, and drunkards have signed the pledge and become sober. Many have been led to accept Christ by personal dealing. A man at the close of a meeting held in Salvin-street, said he was deeply impressed:—"I have been in the army, and done six years in India, where I have been a bad man, but I want to do better, and master drink, which is the cause of my trouble." He was spoken to by one of the workers, and came into the hall and accepted Christ as his Saviour.

The Grammar of Christ's Gospel.

By SAMUEL PEARSON, M.A.
(Of BROUGHTON PARK CHURCH, MANCHESTER.)

(Concluded.)

III. BELIEVE IN HIM.

YOU cannot imagine an unbeliever writing such a life of Christ as Luke did. In order rightly to pen a biography you must love the subject. This is why amongst other reasons Boswell could interest tens of thousands in Johnson. He himself believed in Dr. Johnson intensely. Do men then want to present Christianity in all its beauty and perfection to the world? They must not first believe in a church or a book, but in the living person of Christ.

There is one essential to all faith of this sort, viz.: that we give into Christ's hands and keeping what is dear and precious to us. This element of faith appears and re-appears in all our dealings with one another. The scholar learns most readily when he can give up his mind to the teacher, believing that the teacher has sufficient knowledge. The patient can best be cured when he believes in the doctor. The wife makes and finds a happy home when she gives her heart to the husband of her choice.

Suppose a man says, "I believe in Christ, but Christ shall have no part in my pleasures, my troubles, my duties, my sins." Then Christ is but a name to him—nothing more. He gives up nothing to Christ and receives nothing in return. We try many ways of evading this one point; we do not make a fair start, a good beginning; and then our experience is painful, doubting, and halting.

Let us enter into details here:—For the matter is of prime importance to those who want to be Christians. Pleasures. Some suppose and say that Christ wants to take away these. But that is an irrational view of Christianity. He wants to take them into his hands. Gold is good, but it needs the stamp of the Mint in order to circulate as money. Pleasure is good, but it needs Christ's approval to be current coin in his kingdom. Take the pleasures to Christ. He will not take them away. It is death that robs us of all things, but Christ never robs us. He does but intensify our joys, by turning a butterfly into a man, and by making us live for the noblest ends.

Troubles. Most of them are very small, but in the aggregate they vex and torment the soul. Yet persons hug them as though they were very precious. They are very important to us, and a man's own troubles make up his little world. It is often a sacred world into which no other eyes may pry, on whose floor no other feet may tread. The reason why these things break the back is that the load is too heavy for the man to bear. And the remedy is to let Jesus in. He is at our call. He is not a friend who comes only in sunshine. But at our prayer He will enter to our home as He did into that of Bethany. What a change this would at once produce.

Duties. These are often hard. They are not the work which we should have chosen. Persons want the prayer meeting when they ought to be at the shop. They want the peace of Sunday when they have the hurry and worry of Monday. Duty is a dead weight until we put love in the other scale. I saw a Dutch woman carrying two pails of milk by means of a wooden yoke. Our duty is too heavy, but often we see men carrying both Sunday and Monday, both the spiritual and the secular, and we wonder how it is done. It is done through the yoke of Christ's love. When we receive our duty from Him, then life loses its leaden weight, we have wings to fly with, and at least nimble feet to carry us along the road.

Sins. These are in very deed our own. We made them and fashioned them. Sometimes we loathe and sometimes we love them, but all the time we know that they will kill us. They are very secret. They are like a snake hidden in the heavy curtains of an inner chamber of the soul. To scotch it, to throttle it, to kill it, is beyond our most strenuous endeavour. We have failed, we shall fail. And we do not like to ask any human creature to come in and share our thoughts of dread, of fear, of despair. One remedy is left—to let Christ come and share those sins. That is the beginning. Tell the black story to Jesus. Take time to do it; go alone to do it; and the sky will clear, the rainbow of hope will be painted on the cloud.

IV. PRAY IN THE NAME OF JESUS.

If we want to commence a Christian life let us try to learn to pray. That is the language of the new life; it is the grammar in which we must be well grounded. When you trace back a Christian life to its first manifestation, you say then the child began to breathe. The spiritual life depends on very simple conditions, and prayer is the simplest of them all. If we feel that our inward heart is not strong, the reason is that we do not breathe well. We have not been on the mountain top of solicitation. At eventide do you get hold of God in prayer? In the morning do you enter into the very presence of God? When you bow down your head at the solemn sacrament for what do you pray? Perhaps if we come to examine we shall find that our prayers are not prayer. They are the copperplate writing of boys at school informing their parents that the holidays begin on such a date, etc. Prayer is, "Dear father, come at once, for I am very ill."

But to begin well we must have prayer in the name of Christ. And this does not mean the mere mention of his holy Name at the end of prayer, but the offering of it according to the Will of Christ. In a woollen weaving mill I was taken to a private room where the patterns were drawn. When those patterns were fixed, then everyone had to work according to them; and the mere turning out of stuff would not suffice unless it had the threads directed according to this pattern. Now, Christ's life is the pattern. He shows us on what principles we should make money, save money, give money, and expend our energy. What we have to do is to go to the private chamber where that example is unfolded, and then to bring out our prayers in accordance with it.

The mother of Zebedee's children had not been to that chamber; she asked, but she asked foolishly, and Christ was so merciful that he inserted a new and a spiritual meaning into her temporal request. Prayer is not meant to furnish our house, to buy us fine clothes, to obtain lovely weather for our holidays, and to line our nest with luxury. It is intended to bring us into harmony with God. It brings down the sunshine of Divine love; it waters the fields with showers of grace; it fertilises the seed of the Word so that many a new thought and purpose spring up in the young soul.

I met a man who had lost his way to heaven, yet he was striving hard to get there. He was looking on the ground for gold; he was following his own shadow of self; he was believing what the rustics told him about the path, though they only knew their own locality; and he was uttering loud complaints about his church, his minister, his sad lot, and even about himself. I told him that he was wrong from the beginning, and that he had better make a new start. Instead of being vague and indefinite, I said this:—

Look at Jesus attentively.
Follow his directions.
Leave yourself in his hands.
Pray earnestly to God in his name.

Perhaps you are that wayfarer. If so, I have tried so to speak about the way that even if you be a fool you shall not err therein. May God guide you into the paths of peace.

A Brahmin's Baptism.

MISS READE, of the South Arcot Mission, Madras, reports the baptism of a Brahmin, with a very distressing sequel. Writing from Thiruvithi, on Sept. 11, she says: "On Saturday last about nine o'clock, at Kumbakonam, we went in our carts to the river—the 'sacred' Kavari—our party consisting of the assistant missionary and pastor, Mr. K. S. Subba Rao, evangelist, Paul Kuppusswamy Sastri, Librarian Yovaun, and the convert himself, Saithurama Aiyar. On the other side of the bridge, just opposite Sangarachariar's Madam, in compliance with his reiterated request, he was baptized, giving up his thread as he stood in the water, in token of his renunciation of Brahminism and everything connected with heathenism. So earnest was he that he twice emphatically repeated the words, 'I do renounce them all.'

"By the time it was over, a crowd had collected, and Saithuram, who had taken the name of Peter Stone (a curious choice of his own), in addition to his former name, gave a short testimony, stating who he was, how he had come to know of Christ through the library at Cuddalore as he was on his way to Benares, and that it was at his own desire and request that he had just been baptized. Our way to the railway station lay through the heart of the Brahmin quarter; and when we came to the end of the Agraharam the immense crowd that had followed us gave shout after shout of derision. Then, without warning, the whole mob rushed upon us, seized hold of the poor man, beating, thumping, and dragging him by the hair of his head, and by his neck and limbs, till they succeeded in carrying him off by main force.

"Finding ourselves completely overpowered, we made the best of our way to the police station. The sub-inspector having taken my deposition, took us over to the inspector, a Hindu of the Naidu caste. We told the inspector that our object in coming to him was to obtain liberty for the man to choose what he would do and where he would go, as he was a man of from twenty-five to twenty-eight, and therefore had the right to decide for himself. To this end the inspector sent a constable to the street we indicated, and about an hour or more afterwards he returned with Saithurama Aiyar, and some of his friends. The man's whole external appearance had been changed. A new thread had been put on, his body freely ornamented with the usual heathen marks, and he had been invested with new Brahmin cloths. After some little time, the inspector brought him round to where we were, and took his deposition; this simply gave the facts of his baptism, the assault and his desire to rejoin us, and to have protection on the way to the station.

"At length a crowd of Brahmins assembled in the Court, and one man who claimed to be a relation came forward and pleaded most earnestly for him to reconsider the matter. 'Whatever you do,' he said, 'don't lose your thread. There has not been one conversion amongst us hitherto! Don't bring such shame on us! Do you want money? We will give you all you ask! Pleasures? We will give you a thousand. Work? We will secure you a good appointment—only let it not be said to our shame that one of our community has lost his thread!' For four or five hours the poor man stood the fire of temptation unswervingly.

"At last two highly dignified personages, like court officials, appeared on the scene, and with an air of authority called him aside to a private interview which lasted about a quarter of an hour. His whole face changed when they appeared, and he asked for a pen and paper to write, and refused to tell the inspector what it was. On his return, he said, 'I am willing to go with my relations.' The inspector then handed him his former statements, and requested him to write at the end, 'I cancel the above statement.' He absolutely refused. On another sheet he wrote something to the effect—the words in italics are verbatim—'I am willing to go with my relations. I have only one objection to Christianity, I have been a vegetarian from birth and I..... (words not audible) beef and meat. But though I go with my friends, I strictly adhere to the moral truths of the Gospel. I thank you for your instructions and for all your kindness. May God save you! May God bless you!' With this, he left with them, making a salaam to each of us."

An Afternoon in Lambeth.—2.

GLADDENED, I left her, and turned to mount the stairs of a house where I knew the tale was far different. Ah, that room where I entered! It was destitute of all furniture save a small bedstead, on which lay huddled a half-dressed boy. But it was not the bareness that hurt you, not even the dirt and squalor indescribable; but, above all, the face of the woman who was in it. Clever low cunning and vice were written on every feature, and the passion of some angry brawl had not yet died away from them.

Every time I entered that room the same problem came back to me—How could this poor sin-sick soul be helped and aroused to her danger as long as her visitors were bound over to silence and to silent disapproval of her character? That she spent her nights in vice I knew from other sources, and that if anyone mentioned it to her (as, indeed, they had) she absolutely shut her door against them I knew also. To speak plainly to her meant simply to be refused admission. On the other hand, to go in and say nothing of this horrible cancer of evil which was eating out her life and touch only on subjects on which she was willing to talk, was a cloaking of her sin, more fatal than anything. Spiritual comfort was out of the question till the hideous thing was unmasked.

The difficulty confronted me as I stood by her this afternoon and listened while she began a fierce tirade against all those who declared her life to be sinful and "who took away her character," as she said. Angrily she denied the truth of their charges. "They may be wrong or they may be right," was all I dared venture in reply. "I am not here to judge you, only God knows; and though you may easily take me in, we cannot deceive Him." Then taking both her hands in mine as the passion mounted to her face, I tried to talk of the love which He had for her—love which is never quenched, never daunted; of the sin which, be she ever so virtuous in the world's eye, both she and I were yet guilty of—sin which separated us from an all holy and pure God, condemning us to death, and yet sin which could be blotted out, washed by the blood of Jesus Christ.

Little response I got; permission to talk to her at all was about the only encouragement granted me. Still results are not for us to gauge, and some word might have struck home. Only as I left her the thought would return, in such lives—lives not young, but wasted to their dregs—what spiritual perception for truth is still left? We believe there is a point—though who would dare say it has been reached in any one case?—when, after dogged resistance to the truth, the ability to believe is taken away.

My next call was at a home many degrees higher in the social scale so far as outward appearance went. Mrs.—lived in a flat in some model tenements, and certainly managed to make ends meet and preserve a tidy state of affairs around her. As I obtained no answer to my repeated knocks I concluded she was out, but suddenly catching the sound of voices within I softly opened the door and asked if I might enter. This woman regularly attended classes, and I always felt belonged to me somewhat. To-day she met me with a curious air of constraint and nervousness, and this it struck me was due to the fact that she already had a visitor in the room, a worker from a church near by.

Evidently she did not want either of us to see that she was "running" two sets of helpers and getting as much as she could out of each. Seeing a medal on her breast with the heads of Our Lord and of the Virgin thereon, it occurred to me she was probably a Roman Catholic. "Are you?" I asked. "Yes" was the answer I at first got. Then, "Well, no, Miss; not exactly. I'm betwixt and between. I am High Church." One could not resist a smile at this delightful method of trimming to suit everyone. It brought to my mind other houses I knew, where the occupants attended meetings at an evangelical chapel and yet whose rooms contained curiously suspicious little images and pictures! How are we to meet this system of overlapping, which is such a harmful element in crowded centres of town life?

One visit more, reader, ere we part. This time we do not turn into any private home, but into the great hospital close at hand. We are in our ward, and here are the two beds whose occupants I have come to see. First note the difference between the two wan, white faces that you are looking at. They are both worn and sad, and lines of care have furrowed themselves on both, but one has a something hardly definable which the other wholly lacks. It is an expression of rest, almost joy, perhaps, rather, exaltation.

"God is not fair to the poor. How can you say He cares for us when He lets us suffer like this; when day after day it's a hard matter to keep body and soul together? Oh, it's easy to be a Christian if one was like you, miss—plenty to eat and a good home." So we have to listen to the fierce bitter cry that falls from the lips of the one whose bed lies nearest. "Look at me, laid here and my man at home ill, and the little ones, and no coals, and hardly a bit to eat, and I do pray," she continues, looking hard at me, as if I had told her of a Lord who was not good "to the soul that seeketh Him." How shall we make it clear to her? In the simplest way we know, we strive to elicit from the woman some indication of the failings of her life and a recognition of merciful chastening from a hand that longed to draw the poor tired soul nearer to itself, and was doing it by these means, rough though they seemed on the outside.

We turn to the other bed. Here lies one prostrate from much suffering. Hear her speak. "If God sent me ten, twenty years more of suffering I would gladly bear it, because I know it is for a good reason, and I can trust Him." "But you, who were once so proud and rebellious and walled yourself in with an icy reserve, do you mean this?" we murmur. "Yes," and her face glowed. "Yes, He has taught me this." In the life history of the woman before us there had been a continual emptying from vessel to vessel. Roots torn up, death to all sides of self-energy, taught by a being made to die to this thing and the other, death at last to the very stoicism which as a wall she had built round to hide her sufferings from a world which to her had no human love. Such had been her lesson from the Great Teacher, and she had almost learnt it. Now she had mastered the secret of giving in, of yielding, dying, it seemed as if He were going to bring her back to happiness and health, and to give her again what she at last willingly gave up to Him.

We are out in the street again. The lesson from that last bedside must surely be fragrant to us in its encouragement. Often perplexed, often baffled, disappointed, beset by problems to us yet insoluble, it remains for our comfort that here and there we meet the miracle of a soul born again, and are brought face to face with a human illustration of the eternal universal principle: "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it beareth much fruit."

FAITH.

A Prophetic Conference will be held in the Town Hall, Dover, November 17 to 19. It is the result of much prayerful deliberation amongst a number of God's servants, who have desired to bring home to the hearts of their fellow citizens the glorious nature of the hope of Christ's speedy return for his people, which of late years has been so greatly revived. The programme will embrace the consideration of the Divine authorship of the Bible, prophecies relating to the Jews, and the Second Advent. A good array of speakers is expected.

A Visit to Jamaica.

I HAVE just returned from a visit to some of the West India Islands, and spent nearly three weeks on the Island of Jamaica. I saw much of the real home life and mission work in the country districts and the mountain hamlets of this lovely island. A more unassuming and devoted set of men and women than the workers there I have never met. Many of these missionaries, with wives and young families, have no income guaranteed from any home society, and their work has been made by them self-supporting.

We drove from the town of Kingston one hot morning in September in a buggy and pair for Cedar Valley, in the Blue Mountain district. It was a lovely drive, through broken country, up mountain passes, and across mountain rivers. The population soon became sparse, and the native houses of the poorest description. We changed our horses before the afternoon was late, and we posted up and down the mountain passes until at 6.30 we reached our destination, which was the minister's house on the hillside. We received a most warm welcome.

I remained beneath their roof nearly four days. On one of these the minister was out visiting his flock at a radius of fourteen miles. The whole distance has to be traversed on the back of a native horse. The bridle path wound up and down slopes of the mountains, beneath a broiling sun. The good man returned home exhausted late in the afternoon. Another day was occupied in his carpenter's shed making windows for one of his preaching stations. The Sunday found him preaching at a distance of twelve miles away, and over roads that necessitated him leaving home at 6.45 a.m., and not returning until 7 p.m. On each of these days the thermometer stood at eighty-four in the shade. I felt that I could not do such work at any cost. As I bade my honoured host farewell, I took stock of his get up. His clothing was worn threadbare.

This man and such as he are barely able to maintain themselves. They continue preaching at the various stations, visiting their people, doctoring them, advising them, helping them to build the mission-rooms or their own cottages, and so become real friends to the negroes for miles around. As I left one of these mission stations in the end of September to start in a few days for England, I wished I had a £50 note in my pocket that I might have given the patient, gentle, and noble Christian couple to enable the young and drooping wife to see her native land once again.

A great deal of missionary work is done by such quiet heroic men in the island and mountain districts of Jamaica. Can nothing be done to give them a little change and a little encouragement by our wealthy churches at home? Truly the pathos of such lonely European life, in the midst of a people very uninviting, and a climate most enervating, can only be met by the infinite pathos of Christ. If we picture such a home as I have described, with a wife or husband sick or dying, we have before us the very acme of desolation. My visit to our missionary brethren has confirmed my conviction that they are worthy of all our encouragement, our earnest prayers, and our practical support.

B. J. WILLIAMS.

Hamwell, Middlesex.

Crosshaven, Cork.—In writing to thank our readers for supplies of literature received, Mr. James H. Wright, Lieut. Royal Engineers, Conti-terrace, Crosshaven, Cork, says:—"It is my joy and privilege to conduct a Sunday-school and Gospel service on Sunday evenings. On Wednesday evenings we have a Bible reading. In the various services I am helped by other servants of the Lord wearing Her Majesty's uniform. Should any readers visit this charming little health resort I should be glad to welcome them to our meetings."

Young People's Mission.—The excellent Mission for young people employed by Messrs. J. S. Virtue and Co., City-road, was commenced over thirty years ago by one of the employees, who was impressed with the needs of the machine boys and the many temptations incident to factory life, especially as affecting the younger hands. In commencing the work he received the generous support of his employers, which had been continued ever since. At once he drew around him a devoted band of fellow-workers, all employed at the house like himself, some of whom have laboured with him over twenty years. The great foundation on which the work is based is the Bible honestly and earnestly taught.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

* We have still some copies left of the reprint of the "Homily" page for Oct. 29, which we shall be glad to send to any of our readers who will undertake to use them in bringing THE CHRISTIAN under the notice of their friends, with a view to securing them as regular readers of the paper. Will our readers, in replying, please say how many copies they can advantageously use in this way?

"KNOW THAT THE LORD HATH SET APART HIM THAT IS GODLY FOR HIMSELF."—Psa. iv. 3.

The Lord sets apart for his own enjoyment.—"A garden enclosed is my sister." Out of the wild prairie Christ encloses favoured bits of land, out of which He makes fair gardens in which He walks. God must have spirits with which He can commune, and therefore He shuts selected ones away in sick chambers, in loneliness, and in prisons, that there may be nothing to divert them from the holy intercourse with Himself, which is his refreshment and delight.

The Lord sets apart for fellowship in intercessory prayer.—He leads three of the Apostles into the shadows of Gethsemane, that they may add their intercessions with his. In each church there is a favoured band to whom He tells his secret anxiety for other souls, and whom He leads out in prayer on the behalf of them and of the world.

The Lord sets apart for service.—Those that separate themselves from evil become vessels unto honour, sanctified and meet for the Master's use. Do not be surprised if you are withdrawn from the madding crowd, from the ambitions and interests of earlier years; it is the Lord's way of engaging you for special service.

We remember how the Holy Ghost bade the early Church separate Barnabas and Saul to their appointed ministry. They were separated unto the Holy Ghost. A similar separation may become ours. Let us live in the world as those who are set apart for God, like the Temple vessels that might not be put, as Belshazzar attempted to put them, to idolatrous and lascivious purposes.

MONDAY, November 16.

"IN THE MORNING WILL I ORDER MY PRAYER UNTO THEE."—Psa. v. 3 (R.V.).

It is very important to consider the order of our petitions. No man would approach an earthly sovereign without taking time to consider how best to present his requests. He would consider the pleas on which to rely, the arguments to present, and the way in which he would be most likely to carry his case. Upon entering the presence of the great King, our Father, would it not well repay us to stay on the threshold for a moment to ask what petitions we are about to present, the order in which we should present them, and the reasons we should adduce?

It is manifestly a mistake to pray at haphazard. There is too much random praying with us all. We do not return again and again to the same petition, pressing it home with all humility and reverence, and arguing the case, as Abraham did his for the cities of the plain.

Study the order of the Lord's prayer—the adoration and prostration of soul before God prior to supplication for definite gifts; the acquiescence in the Divine will before the prayer for daily bread; the entreaty for forgiveness before there can be a thought of deliverance from evil. Or consider the order of the High Priest's intercession for his own in John xvii. before He pours out his soul in prayer for the world.

Lay the wood in order. Enter the temple of prayer through successive courts. Follow, if you will, the order of the Church of England liturgy—Confession, Absolution, Ascriptions of Praise, the Te Deum, the broken sentences, the outburst of intercession.

TUESDAY, November 17.

AND THOU, O LORD, HOW LONG?—Psa. vi. 3.

You have been long in coming, love says. So miserly are we of the minutes, so leaden-paced is the beat of the pendulum, when our heart stands on the tip-toe of expectation. Moments lengthen to hours when we suffer and await deliverance, just as hours contract to moments when the heart is young and gay.

How long, Lord, ere the trial cease?—When we are entering into the furnace we like to make bargains with God that it shall not last beyond a certain hour, but He never tells us lest patience might miss her perfect work. He says simply, it is enough to suffer one moment at a time.

How long, Lord, ere deliverance shall come?—Long ago we sent for reinforcements, and since then the battle has been waxing more fierce. We have looked eagerly to the horizon to see Blücher coming through the wood, but in vain. We think we can hold out no more. We have strained to the last degree of strength at the oar, and if some deliverance does not come to us, the fourth watch of night will see us drifting helplessly to destruction. Where is thy God? the enemy cries; and we are tempted to think ourselves forsaken and forgotten.

How long, Lord, ere the Advent break?—He said that He would come quickly, but the weary centuries pass, and, strain our ears as we may, we cannot detect his princely footfall along the corridor of time.

Cease, fond heart, thy complaining. Delay is not denial. He counts a thousand years as a day. He is coming on the wings of every wind; already He is nigh even at the doors. Behold, He is here.

WEDNESDAY, November 18.

"JUDGE ME, O LORD, ACCORDING TO MY RIGHTEOUSNESS, AND ACCORDING TO MY INTEGRITY THAT IS IN ME."—Psa. vii. 8.

Some specific charges were being made against David, of which he knew himself to be absolutely innocent. He would not have dared to challenge God thus, if the whole of his life had passed under review. There would have been no hesitation in confessing that, taken generally, he was a sinful man. Similarly, God's children are often accused of wrongs of which they are absolutely innocent. In such case they have a right to declare their innocence before their fellows, and, if this avail not to procure their acquittal, they must turn to God, and ask Him to interpose.

But what a question this suggests! Are you able, child of God, to declare that, as far as you have the light, you are living righteously, soberly, godly, in this present world? Is your life right-wise—that is, four-square with the demands of God's law, able to bear the test of his line and plummet? Can you assert your integrity? Integrity is derived from the Latin integer, a whole, a number unbroken by fractions. Are you whole-hearted? or, to use the grand old word, is your heart perfect before God? If it be, it matters very little what men shall say of your character. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake. If a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but glorify God on this behalf. What is said is aimed rather at the Master than the servant. God becomes responsible for your vindication. He will arise and show Himself strong, and will put to silence the enemy and avenger. Trust your reputation with God. Go on doing his will.

THURSDAY, November 19.

"THOU MADEST HIM TO HAVE DOMINION."—Psa. viii. 6.

Yes, broken, beaten, fallen, oh, child of man, thou wast made to have dominion. Not only over cattle, birds, and fish, but over thine own wonderful nature. Within thee there is a realm as full of multitudinous life as Paradise was when God brought the animals to Adam that he might name them; and over all this thou wast meant to rule. Yea, thou wert made to have dominion also over the wicked ism. are thy sworn foes. A royal, regnant, Mission, life was that which thy Creator inbreathed, Brahmin, is no reason, on God's side, or in thy origi- ing from stitution, why thou shouldst not exerce Saturday dominion. Remember, thou wast made to r- we went

We see not yet all things put under us. ari-our is open revolt and anarchy within. The ary and sembles the ancient kings whose sway was it, Paul by proud and strong barons. The animal or, and the largely defies us, and is in this the symbol e other loss of authority everywhere. But look away -g Jesus. This old psalm is fulfilled in Him. His glorious nature rose, by its inherent glory, to the right hand of power. All authority is his in heaven and on earth. And in proportion as we receive Him, we regain our lost dominion. He makes us kings and priests unto God. We share a life which neither death nor the devil can master.

"THEY THAT KNOW THY NAME WILL PUT THEIR TRUST IN THEE."—Psa. ix. 10.

We do not trust, because we do not know. If we were once to know God, it would seem as absurd to doubt Him as to fear that we should fly off at a tangent from the surface of the earth. Men complain of their little faith; the remedy is in their own hands, let them set themselves to know God. We may know about God and yet not know Him. We may hear what others say about Him, but have no direct and personal acquaintance. "That I may know Him," said the Apostle.

The materials for the knowledge of God are all around thee; make use of them. Think of the promises by which God has bound Himself to succour those that come to Him, of the record of his gracious interpositions for his saints, of the necessity that He should maintain his character and reputation in the face of the universe.

Above all, argue, as Jesus bade, from your own heart. Would you give stones to hungry babes, and scorpions into childish hands? Would you desert a forlorn and hunted soul that trusted? Would you insist on a certain measure of agony before stepping in to deliver? Would you take delight in inflicting needless anguish? And will God? Look away from trouble, and fear, and efforts to believe, and trust God's faithfulness. His Nature and his Name are Love!

SATURDAY, November 21.

"WHY STANDEST THOU AFAR OFF, O LORD? WHY HIDEST THOU THYSELF IN TIMES OF TROUBLE?"—Psa. x. 1.

Men in sorrow do not always speak wisely; and they ask many questions which God does not answer. Here is one. God does not stand afar off and hide Himself in times of trouble. As the Psalmist sings, in a happier mood, "He is a very present help in time of trouble." But He permits trouble to pursue us, as though He were indifferent to its working its will; that we may be brought to an end of ourselves, and led to discover the treasures of darkness, the unmeasurable gains of tribulation. No cross, no crown. No pain, no gain.

We may be sure that He who permits the suffering is with us in it. The Form of the Fourth may be hard to distinguish, but it is there in the fire. It may be that we shall only see Him when the trial is passing, but we must dare to believe that He never leaves the crucible. Our eyes are holden, and we cannot behold Him whom our soul loveth. It is dark, the bandages blind us so that we cannot see the form of our High Priest. But He is there, deeply touched. Let us not rely on feeling, but on faith in his unswerving fidelity, and though we see Him not, let us talk to Him in whispers as though we could detect Him.

I take the pain, Lord Jesus, from thine own hand, The strength to bear it bravely, Thou wilt command.

Directly we begin to speak to Jesus, as though He were near, though his presence is hidden, there comes an answering voice which shows that He is in the shadow, keeping watch upon his own.

A Bump of Love.

On wh'AS looking over some old letters when I was nound one from a father to his sister, in which dirt a's a story about his little girl, five years old, face k her funny idea will amuse you, and the face k her father drew from it will, I hope, teach us cunn son too. The father says he was seated one and with his little daughter Eva on his knee, and she was telling him in childish extravagant language how much she loved him. He, to somewhat moderate her expressions of love, told her she could not love so much as she was such a little thing and had such a little heart. Eva only remarked, "Of course I have, father." The letter goes on to tell that in the course of the day little Eva tumbled down some stone steps, and had, as the result, a large bump on her forehead. Her mother wondered she cried so little, but when her father returned from business in the evening she ran to meet him, saying, "Look here, father; I am so much bigger, and can hold so much more love," pointing to the bump on her forehead. The father adds, "Would that Christians would turn the hard bumps of the world into love, like my little Eva." That is just what God wants us to do, if we are his children—turn the bumps of the world into love. How is this to be done? You dear children who love God and are trying to please Him, how can you do it? You cannot go through life without getting many bumps. Some you feel on your body, and some you only feel inside, by a hurt or angry feeling in your heart. Perhaps a brother, or sister, or a schoolfellow has done or said something very unkind to you, and you cannot forgive them, so you have a large bump of unforgiveness inside. Now, this bump must be turned into love, and then you will be able to forgive.

In John xv. 17, the Lord Jesus commands us to love one another, and in Matthew v. 44 to "love your enemies, to do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." They would not be your enemies, for the time being, if they did not give you bumps either inside or out.

Now, dear children, will you ask God in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by his Holy Spirit, to help you to turn these bumps into love?

In Matthew xviii. 21, Peter asks the Lord Jesus how often, if his brother sins against him, is he to forgive him, and the Lord gives him in answer a small sum in addition: "Until seven times" is not enough; "Until seventy times seven."

When we have forgiven someone several times, we think we are very forgiving. But what about 490 times? This shows us that God wishes us always to forgive, no matter how often. The bumps inside generally hurt more than the bumps that show outside, and they have a way of getting worse and worse unless quickly cured by being turned into love.

I mean that hurt, angry, or jealous feelings, indulged in, cause great pain and sorrow; but if the all-conquering love of God comes in, who has told us "to love our neighbour as ourselves," then the sorrow and pain goes.

First you must come to the Lord Jesus, who died on the cross for you, and ask to have your sins forgiven for his name's sake, and the Holy Spirit given to you, who will help and guide you to do what is right. E. R. B.

UNCLE TOM.

Jesus, the Good Shepherd.

JESUS was a Shepherd kind,
Full of love was He,
To his shoulder would He bind
Little lambs like me!
Gently did his arms enfold
Those that went astray,
Still He, as in times of old,
Carries them to-day!

On his breast they safely lie,
None can harm them there;
He their wants will satisfy
Free from every care.

Pasture, too, doth He provide,
By the puling stream;
Let me in his fold abide
Nor of dangers dream!

Tender Shepherd, keep me Thine!
Still would I be led,
Where Thy sunbeams sweetly shine,
On the path I tread!

Christian Work in Turkey.

THE following extracts from letters by mission workers in Turkey will be read with deep interest. We withhold names of writers and places:—

"We again have occasion to thank our friends for special contributions. Some are intended to be used outside of the general relief work, for preachers and pastors, or for the widows and orphans of those who belong to the household of faith. Other friends, knowing that the appropriations have been cut down, while the demands upon the treasury have been increased through the impoverishment of the congregations, have sent contributions to help in this line. All these gifts have wonderfully helped to lighten burdens which otherwise would have been beyond our ability to bear. We have endeavoured to use all these funds according to the intention of those who have made us the almoners of their bounty.

"As this is the season of fruit, and the weather is still warm, general relief has been suspended, for there is no time in the year when people can so readily live as the present. We are endeavouring to stimulate those whose homes were burned, to provide themselves with some sort of shelter for the winter, and considerable money has been contributed for this special purpose. The other sums for relief, in regard to which this letter is written, are being used sparingly, and chiefly in the way of helping to provide winter supplies. The tax-collectors and Turkish creditors have stripped the majority of the poor people of their harvests and their preparations of winter food, so that we are looking forward to the winter with no little anxiety.

"As to remittances for our regular work, we should have been obliged to dismiss every preacher and close every school if they had not been made. We are not paying full salaries to any one, only an allowance, and if the persons who receive this money had been dismissed, many of them would now have been dependent upon charity. So along with the spiritual work which is accomplished, we are giving practical relief by furnishing employment to many worthy persons.

"The attitude of the Turkish Government has never been so antagonistic as it is now. Leading Turks confess that Protestant teaching is loyal to the Government, but that it also opens the eyes of people, and leads them to think for themselves, which is not compatible with the Turkish political system. Protestants are not allowed to rebuild their burned chapels and schools without permission from the Sultan himself, and such permission there is no hope of receiving. We have never had such discouragements to face as now. As compared with a year ago, the work seems to be in ruins. Many of the best men in all our congregations have been cut off. Every congregation is impoverished, and the people are still living in the fear of another massacre, but we know that this is God's work and He will yet bless it. Pray for us.

"Notwithstanding many adverse circumstances, the school year proved a more successful one than we dreamed could be possible, and the term closed with more than seven hundred students on the roll in all the departments. We cannot carry on the schools in the cramped quarters of last year, so a large double house has been rented, and is being put into order for the girls' boarding department; also another for the boys. Having lost everything, and having very limited resources with which to work, we cannot hope for more than bare necessities.

"Parents appreciate more than ever the blessing of having such a safe home for their daughters, and if we had the room and funds we should have a larger family of boarders than ever before, but we are hampered for the want of financial help. Can you imagine how our hearts ache when we hear the Macedonian cry from towns and villages hitherto shut against the Gospel, and have to answer: 'We have no money with which to send you the light and comfort for which you beg.'

"There is a mighty battle being fought between the false prophet and the Son of God, and although we are sure that Christ will conquer in the end, it often seems that the victory is being long delayed. We are trying to help the people to set to work, but what can the multitudes of widows and orphans do? There are no factories for spinning, weaving, stocking making, etc. When there is no market so far in the interior, the condition is desperate. Had it not been for the relief last winter thousands would have died, and the prospects of this winter are even darker. We dare not look ahead, but only lean hard on God. How we wish that someone would come and start an orphanage here for the many orphans.

"Another subject for deep sympathy is the condition of the many innocent men unjustly imprisoned. They are charged with having caused the massacre, and the impression is that they will be sentenced to long imprisonments, if not to death. Among these prisoners, perhaps (150 in all), is the good pastor of the Church, with the assistant teacher and the beloved doctor, full of good works and faith, who, like Paul, is rejoicing in that he is counted worthy to suffer for Christ... The people are like poor frightened sheep. It is pitiful to see how terrified they become at the slightest rumours. Threats of further massacres are common. We wonder how long a Government so thoroughly corrupt and so hopelessly bankrupt can hold out. God only knows when and how the end will come... Our spirits have been greatly refreshed by visits from the Red Cross agents, and more recently by a delightful and uplifting visit from Prof. and Mrs. J. Rendel Harris, of Cambridge."

Irrigation in India.

WE have received a lengthy letter from the veteran, Sir Arthur Cotton, in respect to some remarks in a recent issue bearing on the connection between extended irrigation and the mitigation of famine in India. Sir Arthur relates in some detail the steps taken in past years in the face of considerable official opposition to regulate the waters of the great river Godavery, in the province of Madras, so as to promote irrigation. With reference to the results our correspondent says:—

"The increase of income to the people by the irrigation of 700,000 acres, the protection of the crops from flood by embankments and drains, the almost abolition of the cost of internal carriage by the thousands of miles of water transit, etc., cannot have been less than four to five million pounds a year, equal to three times that sum in England. Almost all this has been clear gain to the people, for the total payments to the Treasury, which were before twenty lacs of rupees, by half-a-million of people, or four rupees a head, are now only 100 lacs paid by two and-a-quarter millions, or four and-a-half rupees a head, almost the same.

"The Godavery might at this moment be pouring rice into the famine districts of the north in immense quantities, at a nominal cost of carriage of one penny a bushel, if only the several pieces of canal in the 1000 miles between were united, which they might be, for the cost of twenty miles of railway. I wish to show the public what amazing things God has been pleased to do for India by our hands, and what an unbounded field it is for the produce of revenue honestly, so that there is not the shadow of an excuse for making money at the expense of the misery and deaths of millions in China by the trade in opium, the most dreadful curse that ever was inflicted on a country.

"I cannot expect others to realise as I do (who knew India seventy-five years ago) what amazing mercies God has bestowed upon her by us, and the soundness of the foundation of our power there, as laid by the Directors of the India Company, who introduced a new thing on the earth, a rule based in the main on Scriptural principles of uprightness, justice, and mercy, a thing that had never been dreamt of before. During my forty-five years in India, I never knew of an English official suspected of corruption.

"By the new census just published, the population enjoying this incalculable blessing is 334 millions, and, including Ceylon, Malaysia, etc., 340 millions. Thus, God is pleased to bless England and every people He brings under the rule of our favoured Queen. I should add that Godavery is only one of the smallest of more than 200 districts in India."

Christian Lifeboat Crew.—The Fo-c's'le at Miss Child's Home, Ratcliff Highway, was taxed to its utmost capacity on Tuesday last at the monthly muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew. Miss Child, who gave out the text for the month, "Let us run with patience," said that there was much to praise God for since last muster; not only souls being saved and the members strengthened and their services owned of God, but the Lord has graciously led step by step to the opening up of a new branch at Barking-road, E. Addresses were given by Mrs. Anderson, Miss Tuck, Colonel MacGregor, and several others.

Bridge of Hope Mission.

THE work of the Bridge of Hope Mission is not to be described in a sentence. Those who wish to understand the operations, as varied as they are beneficent, must visit St. George's-in-the-East, and the various Homes connected with the well-known Refuge in Betts-street. As the annual meeting comes round, some special aspects are emphasised, and a few notes on these should induce friends of preventive and rescue work to seek a personal interview with Miss Steer, the founder and director of the Mission.

To begin with, the report that was presented was not only a lucid account of the work, but a document full of encouragement to all interested in the Mission. Without tabulating results, Miss Steer tells us the number of inmates that have been received, and takes us into confidence as to administrative anxieties. We make brief extracts:—"Through all the days of another year we have laboured, not only dealing with fresh cases, but more than ever cheered by those who have come to remind us of other days when they were inmates of the house, but are now honestly earning their own livelihood. Funds have come in slowly. There have been days when we have not had sufficient in hand to pay for the next meal, but it has come. I have sometimes thought that the scraping in the barrel of meal that had almost failed, was a more eloquent prayer than any form of words. The answer has been given in a replenished store.

"Since September 30, 1895, we have received into our Homes 234 women and children. Of these 165 were rescue, and sixty-nine preventive cases, which, with the numbers in the Homes on the 30th of last September makes a total of 439. Of this number, after a short stay in the Refuge, we have passed forty-two on to other Homes. We have also found situations for eighty-four young women and girls, most of whom have passed through the laundry department, or one of the Training Homes. In the Ratcliff Highway Refuge we have fifty-eight beds, which are always full, besides the Night Shelter, and accommodation for fourteen workers and visitors.

"The actual numbers received this year are less, but the number in the Homes is greater. The fact is simply that so many being children and very young girls, we have to keep them a much longer time on account of their age. There have been many more, rather than fewer, to clothe and feed throughout the year. In the Night Shelter, we have given 4557 nights' shelter, and dealt with 960 individual cases. We have 160 children under our care."

The year's proceeds from laundry work amounted to £413, and the net result of the knitting and needle rooms was £134. A diploma has been received from Chicago Exhibition, together with a medal as an award of merit for samples of the knitting.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. J. COMPTON RICKETT, M.P., who delivered a hearty address. as also did two other Members of Parliament, Messrs. Joseph Howard and Walter Hazell. Mr. W. A. COOTE and Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE having dwelt on the urgency of the work, Miss STEER herself spoke, expressing at the outset a hope that friends would come forward to provide the £500 needed to complete the undertaking whereby additions are being made to the group of cottages at Chingford. After some words on the blessedness and the great promise of the work among the children, she passed on to refer to the encouragement of the rescue work. She regularly receives letters from grateful women, now wives and mothers, whom she was enabled to help to a life of virtue and happiness. Occasionally well-dressed women visit her, who have to make themselves known by a reference to days gone by, when she received them into the Home. She rejoiced to tell of women occupying good positions, whose lives had been transformed; also of such as had come to her, while still young, out of vicious and dangerous surroundings, and had gone out into the world with immensely better opportunities than they would otherwise have had, and are now leading respectable and useful lives. In conclusion, Miss Steer acknowledged the valued services of Miss Jones and her other helpers.

Dr. Barnardo announces the result of his street collection on Saturday, June 27. Total amount in 1895, £1836; in 1896, £3777. Thus it will be seen that he has more than doubled last year's record.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Sen., LONDON.

BELGRAVE CHAPEL stands a few yards from the north-east corner of the most fashionable square in the world's metropolis. This spot has for thirty years past been the scene of a Christian ministry, which for its plain and reiterated setting forth of "the lovely story of the Gospel," could not well be surpassed. The preacher who still occupies the pulpit is Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, and the phrase that we have quoted is his own. No words could better describe the attractive aspect of salvation that he has ever delighted to present to his congregation. He revels in the fulness and freeness, the graciousness and complete sufficiency of God's dealings with the sinful sons of men, as embodied in the birth, life, words, acts, death, resurrection, ascension, session, intercession, and second advent of Him who is the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. For a generation he has been telling within the same building the story of Jesus and his love. Last Sunday morning it was the same inexhaustible theme on which he discoursed. The listener could see that the physical man is decaying through the course of nature, but the spirit is yet full of an ardour and intensity that are not merely the index of a Celtic ancestry.

For Mr. Rainsford is an Irishman, and he possesses in full measure the vivacious qualities of his race. He was born in Dublin. When an infant he was supposed to be dying, and he was dedicated by a Christian father to the service of God, in case his life were spared. Recovery was granted, and the paternal dedication has been ratified by the good Spirit of God in a remarkable degree.

When he was about sixteen years old, to use his own words, "a dream of the night awoke him from the sleep of death," and caused him to inquire what he must do to be saved. In the providence of God an old copy of Romaine's "Life of Faith" fell into his hands, and that treatise was the means of leading him into those simple Gospel certitudes that he has continued to declare to others ever since. After his conversion he entered Trinity College Dublin, with the view of making the Christian ministry his life work. His first curacy was at Hilltown, co. Down, where he laboured with youthful zeal for a year and a-half. At the end of that time Mr. Rainsford was appointed clerical secretary of the Irish Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. He thankfully refers to this office as one that led him, early in his active life, into the privilege of association with the Bible-student class of Christians, clerical and lay.

After nine years' training in that sphere, his friend the late Earl of Roden (father of the present Earl) appointed him private chaplain, and concurrently gave him the living of Dundalk and Castletown. His previous devotion to close and systematic study of the Holy Scriptures here came into specially practical fruition, in connection with Sunday-school and Bible-class effort, on which God's rich blessing rested. He has told, in his own vivid and pictorial way, of another branch of service at this time, in Gospel effort among the Roman Catholic children in his parish. One narrative in this connection which the writer heard him relate some years ago was as to the conversion and subsequent persecution of a poor Roman Catholic boy; the lively and pathetic recital alternately convulsed his audience with laughter and melted them to tears. All were fish that came to Mr. Rainsford's net. He had a long ride on one occasion on a jaunting car, in a remote part of the country, with an Irish farmer. To this man Mr. Rainsford, like Philip in his chariot ride with the Ethiopian eunuch, preached the Gospel, and the truths of salvation were drunk in by the solitary auditor with the utmost eagerness. "I believe," said Mr. Rainsford, in telling the story, "I shall meet that man in heaven, though I never saw or heard of him again." Twelve of the best years of Mr. Rainsford's life were spent at Dundalk.

He was subsequently urged by such friends as the late William Pennefather, R. C. L.

helpful expositions of experimental Christianity given from that platform.

No London minister entered more heartily and with readier personal co-operation than Mr. Rainsford, into the two great evangelistic missions conducted in our city by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1875 and 1883-4. His help was specially conspicuous on the latter occasion, when one of the wooden halls in which the great gatherings were held was pitched for a season at Wandsworth, in which district Mr. Rainsford resides. Those who were present at the later meetings in Down Lodge Hall will call to mind with much pleasure and profit the public dialogues that took place between Mr. Moody and the subject of our sketch. The evangelist was quick to perceive Mr. Rainsford's gift of clear and simple utterance, in clearing away such mental difficulties as are commonly encountered in inquiry-room work. These talks, it cannot be doubted, dispelled the mists of doubt or misapprehension from the minds of many an anxious seeker, and shut them up to an immediate decision for Christian discipleship.

Three years later, in 1886, on the cordial invitation of Mr. Moody, the Northfield Conference platform was enriched by the presence and frequent speech of Mr. Rainsford. He speedily won all hearts at Northfield, and none of the addresses of that year were more thoroughly enjoyed than those of the pastor of Belgrave Chapel, whose genial utterance, rich unfolding of the treasures of God's Word, and inimitable faculty of lively narration, made him a universal favourite.

Mr. Rainsford is the author of several valuable published expositions of Scripture, which have been noticed from time to time in our columns. He is now well stricken in years, having served his day and generation in the Gospel ministry and otherwise for well over half a century. We trust a further period of happy and useful work is still before him. Last Sunday morning, as the writer noted the somewhat feeble gait and pale countenance of this man of God, a petition in one of the Psalms for the day came home to him with a peculiar sense of appropriateness as applied to the preacher. It was: "Oh, spare me that I may recover strength, before I go hence and be no more." When the inevitable hour comes for him to pass within the veil, and to know with a grander fulness the comforting truths he has so long taught, he will leave behind him many a cherished memory and many a sanctifying impulse, besides countless seals to his whole-hearted Gospel ministry.

A son of Mr. Rainsford's, bearing the same Christian name, is incumbent of St. Matthew's, Brixton.

Jewish Mission, Leeds.—A sale of work has for many years been held for the above mission, at Miss Smith's school, Woodhouse Hall. It is being arranged for December 1 this year. Any help in money or goods from old pupils or others will be gratefully welcomed.

The House of Rest.—Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave an address of considerable power at the House of Rest, Finchley-road, on Friday. His subject was "The Fulness of the Holy Ghost," and he led those present along the lines which culminate in the realisation of this blessing.

Bevan and others, to accept the post of Incumbent of Belgrave Chapel; in that centre of opportunity, as already stated, he has these many years been a faithful and earnest ambassador of Jesus Christ. His pulpit labours have been supplemented by varied forms of successful endeavour to carry the Gospel message into the homes of the aristocracy who reside in such large numbers in the neighbourhood of his church. Another class of society that he has sought effectually to reach and help is the large body of domestic servants; week evening classes for these at Belgrave Chapel in bygone years have been a channel of blessing to many.

Throughout his period of public ministry at Belgrave, Mr. Rainsford has acted as examining and clerical secretary to the London Scripture Readers' Association, the members of which have the advantage of his instruction once a month at King's College. His addresses from time to time at the Mildmay Conference will be in the recollection of many readers as among the most acceptable and

Prophetic Conference

AT MILDMAV.

(Concluded from last week.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

THE afternoon sitting on Wednesday was devoted to the answering of questions on subjects raised during the conference. Dr. WALLER presided, and read 1 Cor. xiii. 8-13, and Prov. xxx. 2-6. A considerable number of questions had been sent in, some of them relating to statements made by various speakers; others relating to matters arising out of the great subject of conference; and again a few not directly connected with matters advanced or words uttered at the meetings.

The first question dealt with took this form—"Was the Virgin Mary a direct descendant of David?" Rev. JOHN WILKINSON replied in the affirmative, remarking that otherwise, as our Lord had no human father, He would not have been of the seed of David. He quoted the words of the angel Gabriel, "The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David" (Luke i. 32). How could it have been the throne of his father David unless his mother were of David's line?

The next question was, "What prophecy remains to be fulfilled before we may expect the Lord's return?" The answer (by Mr. Wilkinson) set forth two stages in the coming, one to the air where Christ's saints will meet Him; and one to the earth. While there are events that must occur before the latter, none can be specified that must occur before the coming into the air to raise the holy dead and change the holy living.

Another question had reference to a statement made on Thursday on the prophetic dates; and in some words of explanation Dr. Waller said that he regarded the times of the Gentiles as a sort of parenthesis between the recorded and reckoned times of Israel past and future. The Old Testament gives us no information as to the length of the reigns of the kings of the nations. He thought that a mistake had been made by those who, considering the "time, times, and half a time," the forty and two months, and the 1260 days—that well-known prophetic period of half a week—have applied it to

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES.

In Dan. vii. 25, it is said that the saints of the Most High shall be given into the hands of the fourth beast "until a time, and times, and the dividing of time." Without sufficient reason this has been regarded as meaning until the end of the period, whereas the true sense is until the time arrives. A similar construction occurs in verses 21 and 22. "The same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them until the Ancient of days came." In a word, Dr. Waller regarded these times as Jewish, and yet future, to begin when the Lord returns.

Taking up a point in one of the letters of inquiry, Dr. Waller explained the view which holds that in the taking of the saints from the earth the gathering of the first-fruits of the harvest will be succeeded by the reaping of the vintage. He referred to Dr. Seiss's Lectures on the Revelation, although not able to adopt all the positions maintained therein. The barley harvest in Israel came in at Passover, the wheat harvest not until Pentecost. So there may be two acts of taking the saints, as passages in the Revelation seem to show. For instance, in chap. vi. verses 9 to 11, we read of the souls under the altar, and then we find them with white robes (or bodies) given to them, and they are told to rest (not sleep), after the heavenly fashion of enjoyment, for a little season until their brethren also should be killed.

Rev. J. SHOLTO DOUGLAS answered two questions. The first was "Does the passage Rom. xi. 30, 31, mean that the Gentiles are to be an object-lesson how God will bestow mercy on the Jews—i.e., as free grace to them in the same manner as to the Gentiles? or does it mean that God is using Gentile kindness as instrumental in the conversion of the Jews?" It was held that the grace is the same; but as the passage has to do with the conversion of "all Israel" (see verses 25, 26) the object will not be fully attained in the present dispensation. The saving of Israel as a whole has to do, not with our instrumentality, but with the grace of God.

The other question was, "Is there any Scripture from which we may gather that the national election of Israel was consequent upon the Gentile rejection of God?" In reply, Mr. Sholto Douglas quoted Deut. xxxii. 8, and held that from all eternity God determined how he would govern his world, and at the very beginning chose Israel, to form, as it were, the backbone of the world's history.

Among other questions were, "On what ground is it said that the Church is not the Bride of Christ as well as his Body?" Answering, Mr. Wilkinson said: Israel is to be the Bride of Jehovah, but it is also probable that the Church may be the Bride of Jesus Christ in resurrection life. As Eve was the Bride of the first Adam, so the Church may be the Bride of the Second Adam.

distinction between God's earthly people Israel and God's heavenly people the Church. The two peoples have this in common, that they belong to God; but they differ in the respect that one is a people whom God designs to plant in the earth and bless them there, while the other is a people of heavenly citizenship and in due time to be gathered there. It was a great day in the history of the world when Abraham crossed the river Euphrates, because in his own person he carried the assurance of blessing to all the nations of the earth.

From Abraham came Jacob, and from him the twelve tribes who were brought to the Land of Promise by Moses, and led in by Joshua. By and by God gave them a king in the person of David; hence a three-fold conjunction—people, land, and king. What is their condition now? They are no longer in the land, and, though still a nation, they are without a king. The position of things is: the land is waiting for the people and the people for the land; and the King is at the right hand of God waiting until the time for Him to bring people and land together, and for God to set Him, the King, upon his holy hill of Zion. How is it that they have not ceased to be

A PEOPLE BEFORE GOD AND MAN?

It has been impossible to blot the Jew out of existence; he is the anvil that wears out all the hammers that smite him.

Again, the Jews could not cease to be a people by being absorbed with the nations of the earth. They are scattered, but they shall be gathered by the same hand as scattered. How do we know this? For one reason, because the gifts and calling of God are without repentance—this is, those whom God takes up He never gives up. God does not go back from his purpose concerning Israel. Both for the bringing back of the sinners to God, and for the gathering of Israel there must be a righteous ground. From the lips of Caiaphas we have the prophecy that Christ must die "for the nation"; again in Isa. liii., "For the transgression of my people was He smitten." When He yielded up the Ghost, Christ died for the nation; therefore, on the ground of the blood shed on the cross, the great arm of God will sweep them in.

Thirdly, the blessing of Israel is to be effectuated by the power of the Holy Ghost. So, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost will bring back the scattered people and plant them in their own land again. Turning to Ezek. xxxvi. 22, the speaker showed that the restoration is to be altogether a grace on the part of God, and in order that the nations of the earth may glorify God, who will cleanse, give a new heart, and put the Holy Spirit within them. Being nationally restored and spiritually renovated, the people who before could not stay in the land, will never leave it (Jer. xxxii. 37-42). The result of this is that the other nations come into certain blessing at the hand of God. Whereas to-day believers seek sinners, in days to come the people will come flocking to Christ. They will not be days of aggression, but of attraction (Zech. viii. 20-23; Isa. 2, 3).

With regard to the Church, the heavenly people, Mr. Stewart read Eph. i. 1-3. What is the meaning for us of the word "In Christ"? Doubtless, it is as when Noah was in the ark—he was safe. The significance is yet deeper and implies a vital connection as in 1 Cor. xii. 13, "By one Spirit, we are all baptized into one body," with the result that the Head, and the members in living connection therewith, are called Christ. In a baptism there are always three—the baptizer, the subject of the baptism, and the element in which the person is baptized. Three things—past, present, and future—are said of the Church in the Epistle to the Ephesians. As to the past: "He loved the Church and gave Himself for it" (v. 25). As to the present: "That He might cleanse it by the washing of water by the word" (verse 26)—the present activity of the Son of God for the

"Will the day of grace end when the Lord takes up his Church?" was another query. The answer (by Mr. Wilkinson) was: "I do not think the day of grace will then end. If the ready saints were taken up to-day, conversions would be very numerous to-morrow. I am not sure that the unready would be taken; some believers might have to go through the tribulation."

Answering other questions, the following views were expressed:—The saints who follow fashion and folly, though they may be saved, will suffer loss through their coquetting with the world. Antichrist will be a person very like Satan incarnate. When he shall oppress Israel to the point of extermination in the latter days, the Lord will hear prayer for deliverance and send the personal Christ to destroy the personal Antichrist. Dr. Waller also made a statement on the Masoretic divisions of the Old Testament to correct misapprehension on some points in Dr. Bullinger's address on the previous day.

Finally, it was asked—"Some say there will be two translations—one secret as was that of Enoch, the other public after the type of Elijah. If so, which must we be ready for?" Mr. Wilkinson replied, I do not know that there are to be two; if so, you should take care to be ready for the first!

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

In opening the proceedings in the evening, Mr. J. E. MATHIESON read Acts xx. 17-27, and in kindly terms urged upon ministers and others the importance of the giving due place to Advent doctrine in their regular teaching.

The first address was by Mr. ALEXANDER STEWART, of Glasgow, and it had special reference to the Church. As He was the Redeemer, so He is the Sanctifier. What has He done this for? As to the future: "That He might present it to Him, a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

THE MYSTERY.

Dr. BULLINGER took up the subject of "The Mystery." In the course of a study of the Epistle to the Ephesians, he pointed out the correspondences and distinctions of the two prayers of the Apostle—one in chapter i. (17 seq.) and the other in chapter iii. (14 seq.). In the teaching concerning the Body of Christ, many members and one Head, he found the mystery that had been kept hid, and of which the prophets had nothing to say. It is called the "Mystery of God," because it was hid in God, had its origin in God. It is called the "Mystery of Christ," because it is a secret that relates to Christ.

Urging the importance of distinguishing the dispensations and interpreting the Scriptures in the light of their proper connections, the speaker showed that this does not prevent the application of the essential teaching of all Scripture to ourselves and our times. The Apostolic Epistles must be interpreted with reference to the Church as well as applied; and the fact that professing Christians do not hear "what the Spirit saith unto the churches" is responsible for the increasing deepening apostasy of the day, for that apostasy began by a turning away from New Testament truth regarding the Body of Christ. No wonder our land is filled with many bodies, and that the Church of Rome has arrogated to herself the designation the "Body of Christ."

The calling of the Church is a high one; she waits for the shout that will call her upward. Dr. Bullinger maintained that this subject of the Christian's standing in Christ and hope in relation to the coming of the Lord is not an "extra" subject. Those who are not waiting for Christ, show that they do not know what is the hope of their calling, and what are their privileges as members of the Body of Christ. Part of our calling is "We shall not all sleep"; another part is waiting for God's Son from heaven; and these cannot be neglected without serious spiritual loss.

THE PERSONAL ADVENT.

Colonel J. F. MORTON, who presided on the last day of the Conference, opened by recalling the attitude taken by Rev. W. Pennefather, the beloved founder of the Conference Hall, towards the great truth forming the main theme of this convention. For the sake of those few who might not be familiar with the subject, he read one or two fundamental passages showing that the hope of the Lord's coming again is one of the most important and blessed, as well as practical and stimulating, truths in the Word of God.

Mr. GEORGE F. TRENCH, speaking on "Our Lord's Return, Personal and Premillennial," began by showing that in old times the purpose in all things was the glory of God, and now it is the glory of God in Christ. His own attention and study had in late years been given to the manner of the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ here on earth. He did not come on the scene in one flash of glory and then disappear. He showed his glory step by step. He came into the world hardly known or noticed, save by a few. His Father knew Him, one or two of the godly knew Him, and welcomed Him, and that was all. It is instructive to trace, throughout his life, the surprises of the people at what they saw and heard, in the gradual manifestation of his glory. So it went on until his transfiguration, until his marvellous death and resurrection, and then to his ascension, closing the first stage of his unveiling. The second stage is his coming again, for which we now look. Then will He reveal his glory, as He prays that they may "be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory."

A study of the prayer of our Lord in John xvii., and the teachings of such passages as 1 Thess. iv. 14-17; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; Rev. xxii. 12, 20, and Heb. ii. 12, show the peculiar significance assigned in the New Testament to this blessed hope of the Church, the personal return of her Lord. These illustrate the teaching of the Word concerning the second stage of his unveiling; but there is a third stage, when Christ will reveal Himself through Israel, and this is called the millennium. A flood of light is thrown on the condition of things, so far as God has been pleased to reveal them, during the "thousand years," in the prophecies of Isaiah and Zechariah, as in Isa. lix. and lx. With this branch of his subject the speaker has dealt fully in his recent book, *After the Thousand Years, showing that the millennium belongs not to the new creation but to the old. Man has been tried in successive dispensations, under every form of rule and circumstance, but always and ever man has failed; and so in the wondrous fulness of blessing and privilege in the thousand years he will fail once more, hence God must cleanse the earth with a judgment of fire ere He usher in his new creation.

Mr. Trench closed by showing how Ps. viii., 4-6, which gives a foreview of man's destiny, is quoted three times in the New Testament—Heb. ii. 6-9, where Christ is seen "not yet" crowned as He will be; Eph. i. 18-23, where the character of the future glory is described; and 1 Cor. xv. 23-28, where the end is shown, when Christ should have delivered up all things to the Father, that God may be all in all.

"THAT BLESSED HOPE."

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE dealt with "Our Lord's Return, a Separating and Purifying Hope." Every fact revealed to us concerning the Lord Jesus Christ is intended to be a factor in the spiritual life of his people; but two things are necessary—we must know and we must apply the facts to our life. There are those who know such blessed facts as the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ at the Father's right hand, his intercession, and his power to help, but they do not use these facts, turning them into a glorious power in their lives. Similarly, many know intellectually that the Lord Jesus Christ is coming again, but that fact does not become in their lives the potent and purifying power it is intended to become.

Now, what effects is this hope to have? Some of those influences are seen in such passages as—Rom. viii. 11, 12, where the fact that He is coming should make us realise that we are not "debtors to the flesh." So in Rom. viii. 18, 19, we see that it is intended to make suffering seem light to us; while in 1 Cor. xv. 23, 24, 58, it is to make us steadfast and unmovable in the work of the Lord. Passing on to Gal. vi. 7, we find that the expectation of his return should make us very careful as to our sowing, seeing we shall reap as we have sown. Then in Eph. i. 13 and iv. 30, 31, we are taught that those who are looking for the redemption of the body (at the Lord's return) will put away bitterness, wrath, clamour, and evil-speaking; what lovely Christian homes this would ensure. In Phil. iii. 20, 21, and iv. 1, the hope is described as making us stand fast in the Lord. In Col. iii. 4, 5, it leads us to mortify our members on the earth. In 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20, the hope is our comfort and encouragement concerning those to whom we have been used of God; while in 1 Thess. iv. 13, 18, it gives comfort concerning dear ones who have fallen asleep. In 1 Tim. vi. 11, 12, it is referred to as a motive for steadfast endurance in the good fight of faith. So also in Tit. ii. 12, 13, it is a motive for sober and righteous living. In Heb. x. 36, 37, and Jas. v. 7, it is linked with patience in tribulation. In 1 Pet. i. 7 it gives assurance in the trial of our faith. In 1 John iii. 3 we have clearly its purifying influence on heart and life; while finally in the Epistle of Jude it is referred to as a reason why we should not be troubled when all around seems wrong. The Lord is coming, and He will right all wrong when He does come.

Thus in each Epistle of the New Testament we find that the hope of the Lord's return is intended to exercise some practical effect on our life and conduct. The fact that the Lord is coming is accepted by many believers. Would that it might be brought to bear on their lives more fully. We use the facts of the death and resurrection of Christ as our hope and salvation; let us use the fact of his coming again as a separating and purifying power. We see evil around, within and without, creation is groaning, all seems wrong. Let us look to the coming One and find in that hope the secret of patience in trial, comfort in sorrow and solitude, and a stimulus to purity of life, so that, as far as may be, we may be like Him at his coming again.

The United Communion, in the afternoon, proved a season of happy fellowship. This was followed by a Bible Reading by Dr. Thomas Neatby, on Scripture teaching as regards the return of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE COMING "DRAWETH NIGH."

The last evening of the Conference opened with the reading of a verse or two from nearly every book of the New Testament, teaching expressly the great truths of our Lord's personal return.

Rev. W. I. MOWLL preluded an address on "The Coming of the Lord draweth nigh," by calling attention to four great facts: (1) The rule of equality among the peoples of the earth; (2) the restoration of nationalities; (3) the return of the Jews gradually to their own land; (4) the real interest that is now taken by all sorts and conditions of men in the land of Palestine. These facts require the closest attention on the part of all who desire to study the truth concerning the coming of the Lord. Turning to his particular theme, he showed how the Lord Jesus in Luke xvii. refers to the days of Noah and of Lot as similar to the latter days just ere He returns. These days were marked by four characteristics. (1) Utter indifference—there is no indication that even one man paid heed to Noah's warnings, and asked to be admitted into the ark. Is it not so to-day? (2) The result of this indifference was lamentable ignorance of God and his righteous claims, and is it not so to-day? How much, for example, do men know of what sin really means? (3) This again gave rise to fearful infidelity. Lot "seemed as one that mocked" when he spoke of God and his judgment. Is this not especially characteristic of our own days? Look at our congregations, who regard truth about God, heaven, and hell very much as mere platitudes. The same spirit may be seen in our magazines and novels. (4) All this led to horrible impurity. We shudder to think of Sodom and Gomorrah, and yet the most abominable and vile novels are read everywhere, while pictures and plays of the vilest kind are permitted. These things the speaker regarded as distinct signs that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

In dealing further with the subject, Mr. Mowll turned to Rev. xxii. 20, "Surely, I come quickly." Taking the letters of the word "Come" separately, he dwelt on the Certainty of the Lord's return; the Object of his coming again; the Manner of his coming—sudden, startling, secret, and separately—Examination for his coming. Nothing can be more personal and pressing than the question, Am I ready for Christ's Coming? If we are to be ready, we must be Regenerated—Expectant—Active in his service, Decided in daily life, and Yielding cheerfully to God's will.

Rev. JAMES SMITH said that he wished to give the closing address directly on the lines of Gospel testimony, in view of the perilous condition of those who are still unsaved. Having read Joel ii. 11, Mal. iii. 1, 2, and Rev. vi. 12-17, he gave the title of his address as "Who shall be able to stand?" These Scriptures all point forward to one Person, one day, and one tremendous crisis. All have a relationship to that Person, either as friends or foes—Which is it? In addressing ourselves to the question, Who shall be able to stand? we notice, first, that there are some who will not be able to stand; secondly, that some will be able to stand on the ground of redemption; and, thirdly, what is God ready to do for those who are not able to stand? These thoughts formed the basis of a ringing Gospel appeal to the unsaved, bringing the Conference to a close with the tender pleading of God's matchless grace in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Pentecostal League.

[WE INSERT THE FOLLOWING BY REQUEST.]

THE Large Exeter Hall was filled, afternoon and evening, on Wednesday, October 28, with enthusiastic audiences on the occasion of the autumnal gathering of the Pentecostal League. Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., the founder of the League, presided, and said:—"The design of the Pentecostal League is the salvation of the masses, through the revival of the churches, brought about by the united prayer of individual believers for the Holy Spirit. That this is in accordance with the will of God, and is imperatively needed, few will doubt. Many thousands are faithfully and prayerfully carrying this design into execution. We ask the many more thousands who are in sympathy with this design to join the League, and have their share in bringing about the great revival which will illuminate the closing years of this century."

The Pentecostal League is not yet six years old, but it already numbers many thousands in this country, and is spreading with rapid strides throughout the world. It has the hearty sympathy of very many of the spiritual leaders of all the great denominations.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. Darlow Sargeant, Rev. H. H. Pullen, Mr. Rendel Harris (recently returned from Armenia), and Mrs. Reader Harris. The audiences were drawn from all sections of the Christian Church, even Kurds and Armenians being represented on the platform. Twice over the great audience united in prayer that the Spirit of God would convict the Turkish Sultan of his sin and lead him to repentance.

At the close of the evening meeting, from all parts of the great hall, from galleries and from organ loft, men and women rose to their feet and remained standing in silent testimony that God had that night spoken to their hearts, and that they desired to be prayed for. Few present will forget that closing scene.

It was announced that Mr. and Mrs. Reader Harris would conduct meetings for the deepening of spiritual life in the Lower Exeter Hall each Tuesday in November, at 3.30 and 8 p.m. Further particulars of this league of prayer can be obtained on application to Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., Clapham Common, London.

London Samaritan Society.

A STATEMENT comes to us signed by Rev. W. Cuff (chairman), the other members of the committee, and Mr. J. J. Jones, the manager, strongly setting forth the needs and claims of this Society. The committee say:—

The methods adopted by the Society for the distribution of relief in London to destitute men, women and children during the winter months are well known to your readers. The Convalescent branch of the work at the home and hospital at Sandgate, with 250 beds, from its magnitude and growth now makes great demands upon the Society's resources. During the twelve months ending June 30, over 1900 patients were received. Every one of this large number involves some expenditure beyond the contributions of the patients and their friends, while a considerable number are received free. A feature of the home and hospital is that many of the patients are such as are not received at other institutions owing to some peculiarly distressing state of health.

The committee of management are unwilling to curtail the Society's work. The erection not long since of the substantial pile of buildings forming the present home was a very heavy drain on the general funds from which the Society has not yet recovered, and although the cost of the buildings has now been all but paid the effect of so heavy a drain is still felt. At present there are accounts owing amounting to at least £2,700. The great bulk of these consist of claims for meat, groceries, fuel, medical services, and other indispensable items.

The committee are commencing their winter work, and are anxious to be able to meet the very numerous demands which this season always brings from the unfortunate and afflicted. The Society has no endowment, and relies solely upon the generous support of those interested in the alleviation of sickness and want.

Help will be gratefully received at the offices of the Society, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, E. [1014]

London Medical Mission.

A QUIET meeting, rich in promise for the future, was held on Thursday last in a back street in Lambeth, right in the heart of a poor and careless population. Here, in Oakley-street, close by Mr. Meyer's church, the London Medical Mission have opened a branch from Endell-street, under the care of Dr. Gibson, from the Edinburgh Medical Training Institute, and the meeting was inaugural of this new branch. It was interesting to find the clergyman of the parish (Rev. J. B. Barraclough) present, and taking hearty part side by side with Mr. Meyer and other Free Church ministers. Similarly the audience was composed of representative workers from churches and missions of various denominations around. After a season of prayer,

Dr. HENRY SOLTAN made a statement as to the work of the Medical Mission in St. Giles, and the way in which it had been impelled to push out across the river. Of course this step involves extra expense, as two establishments have to be maintained instead of one. The committee have started a separate fund to be called the "Lambeth Branch Fund." It is estimated that the extra cost will be about £300 a year, and at the outset some £50 in addition are needed for alterations, furniture, etc. The house is small but very suitable to the purpose, having two large rooms built out at the back, and thus providing a patients' waiting-room and hall for mission services.

Words of warm welcome to these new workers in Lambeth were spoken by Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. B. Barraclough, Dr. Oswald, and others. Earnest prayer followed for much blessing on the labours of the medical missionary and his helpers.

Rev. C. H. Yatman in Belfast.

THIS American evangelist, who is so well known in connection with his services for young people at Ocean Grove, has visited Belfast, on his first evangelistic tour in Ireland. His work commenced with a mission at Woodvale Hall and Crumlin-road Methodist Church, on Sunday, Oct. 18. From the first the success of the mission was assured.

During the first week there was a dinner-hour service in the lecture hall of Crumlin-road Methodist Church, and a service at eight o'clock in Woodvale Hall. All the services were times of great blessing, and the practical results highly satisfactory. The friends at Woodvale Hall deeply regretted Mr. Yatman's inability to remain with them for a second week, but as he was already advertised to continue the mission in Crumlin-road Church it was impossible for him to remain.

During the second week he preached every night in the church, and continued the noon meetings in the lecture-hall. Every night of this second half of the mission was marked by manifestations of Divine power, and very many were led to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. Yatman passes on to Armagh to conduct his second mission in Ireland with the gratitude and prayers of his Belfast friends. He is an attractive personality. As a speaker he is bright, vivacious, and impressive. His evangelism is full of the love of God, yet he can state the sterner side of truth with terrible force. Throughout he manifests much sympathy with sinning and suffering men, and great earnestness of desire to lead them to the Saviour.

Wreck of the "Dayspring."—The loss of all their furniture, books, wedding presents, etc., which were being taken to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Paton (Dr. Paton's third son) at their pioneer mission station on the West coast of Tanna, will be keenly felt by these young missionaries at the outset of their work. Their empty house and impoverished rooms will be all their home for many months now on account of this disastrous wreck, and will add to the loneliness of their island life.

Koreans in London.—Four Christian young men from Seoul, the capital of Korea, are now in London desiring to increase their knowledge and future usefulness among their countrymen. Their names are Iung H. Yee, Soo P. Yee, Kwy P. Im, and Hinn B. Yēr. Any friends about to proceed to Korea, whether on business or mission work, and requiring a knowledge of the language, could obtain instruction from either of them. Further information can be had from Miss McLean, 46, Pyrland-road, N., who is practically interesting herself in these strangers from the far East.

The National Refuges.

THE National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, with the Arethusa and Chichester training ships, have been before the public for over fifty years, and in the sphere of religious philanthropy they have performed a very useful ministry. The new report is full of facts showing the conscientious interest of the workers in the boys and girls of whom they have charge, and as we scan the pages we cannot but regret that such an excellent series of institutions should suffer from heavy financial embarrassment.

During last year over two thousand applications for admission were received, of which many, of course, were unsuitable. Numbers were passed on to other agencies, but 359 were rescued and given a place in the Homes, making a total of over eleven hundred boys and girls fed, clothed, educated, and trained during the year in the various homes and ships. Downright need is the effectual appeal for admission; and once admitted, the system of training which is then begun has in many a case made good and useful citizens out of the most unpromising material.

As an evidence of the promptness with which cases are received and dealt with, we may state that a few days ago a little boy named Robert H. K., aged eleven, who had been sleeping in a Salvation Army Shelter, was taken to the headquarters, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, by his sister, who begged for his admission. She stated that their father and mother were dead, that she earned her bread by selling flowers in the street, and was at present living in a common lodging-house in Drury-lane. The little boy was taken in there and then, and the Society's inquiry officer started to make the necessary inquiries. He was able to corroborate the girl's story, so that little Robert has been retained and sent to the Farm School, Bisley, where he will remain for three or four years. He will be thoroughly provided for and taught a trade. This case is a fair sample of what is taking place almost daily, no votes or half-yearly elections being required.

Some of the letters given in the report are eloquent of the grand influence of the Refuges upon the young lives which have been nourished. Particulars are given of "old boys" who are now engaged in various honourable pursuits, and one wonders what would have become of some of the number were it not for the care and instruction bestowed upon them through the generosity of Christian philanthropy. It is much to be regretted that the receipts last year were smaller than has been known for several years past; this is attributable to the death of several large contributors and to the falling-off in legacies, so that at present there is much anxiety regarding finances. We are glad to learn that the work is not being curtailed, except that only the most necessitous of the many distressing cases which come before the committee are being admitted. The committee is particularly desirous that the Training Ships and Homes, as founded by the late Mr. William Williams, shall be carried on as usual.

The Society is worked on distinctly economical lines, so it is hoped that it will not lack public support. It is very important that the debt of upwards of £5000 should be removed. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen.

Dr. Pentecost's Sermons.—These discourses delivered weekly from the Marylebone Presbyterian pulpit have been widely scattered of late, gratuitously, by the pastor, who has been enabled to do this through the advertisement revenue from the covers. These trade and other announcements are now discontinued, and Dr. Pentecost relies on sales, subscriptions, and donations, for the maintenance of the issue. The sermons are strong, able, and practical presentations of Christian truth. Copies can be had from the publisher, 33, Upper George-street.

The Jewish Almanac, issued by Mr. Henry Barnett, of 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E., is now ready for the year 1897. On the left side, at each opening, are the English dates and a presentation of the Gospel by a text of Scripture for every day. On the right side are the Jewish dates, feasts, and fasts, the lessons read in the synagogue, and Old Testament scriptures on the person of Christ. Mr. Barnett finds the almanac of great service in his evangelistic work, and he is hopeful that it will be increasingly adopted by other labourers. Particulars as to price may be had from the compiler, of whose various enterprises we are glad to hear very encouraging reports.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to a correspondent's letter regarding the use of the Lord's Prayer, and in particular one clause in it, "forgive... as we forgive," I subjoin the following remarks:—

Let us first consider the nature of the prayer itself, for it may be that misconception exists in the minds of some as to its real meaning; and then let us consider as to its use invariably, or occasionally, or in principle only, and its non-use.

1st. Our Father, &c. In a general sense the author of anything is its father, as Jabel and Jubal (Gen. iv. 20, 21); or, again, the Father of mercies (2 Cor. i. 3). God being our Creator, all mankind are his offspring (Acts xvii. 29). Then there is the further and deeper truth in the new creation in Christ Jesus, "as many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become children of God, to them that believe on his name." These constitute the "we," "us," and "our" in respect to the present subject.

In heaven.—May we ever approach God with deep reverence, solemnity, affection, and calmness!

Hallowed be thy name.—This constitutes essential worship. We desire that God's name, his relationship, his character, Himself, should be known, regarded, magnified, sanctified; and that, because of his holiness, righteousness, love, grace, faithfulness, wisdom, knowledge, power, pity, tenderness, perfectness. His attributes being declared in the words, and by the work in life, and by the work in death, of his Son the Lord Jesus, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, who has revealed Him.

Thy Kingdom come.—There has been a rebellion in the universe, which has been shaken thereby, and our race has sided with it. But God is acting, and will act. The one foundation having been laid in Christ, and Him crucified, the Kingdom is now being established in the heart, and will appear in outward glory, to be shaken no more, Satan, and all who continue in evil, being overthrown.

Thy will, &c.—When there is no more warring, opposition, and self-will, but a confiding submission to God; when all things are subjected to Him, and this subjection is delighted in and universal, oh, what a condition of righteousness, peace, and spiritual joy in the million million spheres of God's kingdom!

Give us, &c.—God gives life and recalls life; and meanwhile, He sustains it. So true is this continued action, that man does not even live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Still, for the time during which it is the will of God that we live here, He sustains our lives by means of food, and it is a good thing to receive our food as a daily gift from Him. It aids in keeping the mind in a continual sense of our dependence on God, which is so important.

And forgive, &c.—This is not the cry of one who is at enmity with God, unreconciled to Him (though I would not check anyone in so using it); but, seeing that, in spirit, in word, in motive, and in conduct, we soon do come short of love to God and love to man—our debts—and not only do fall short, but may actually transgress, therefore we need forgiveness, both of our debts and of our trespasses—sins of omission and of commission. And "if we confess our sins, God is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Nevertheless (for we must not isolate, but give place to all truth), in order that this petition may be answered, we ourselves must respond to similar petitions from others. If not, then, instead of our being forgiven our own trespasses, we shall be chastened for them. Something will arise immediately in the daily life, or in our future history, for our correction; yet even then it will be that we may not be condemned with the world.

And lead, &c.—The expression "lead" has always presented some difficulty to me. I have my thoughts of the meaning, but forbear to express them.

But deliver, &c.—From our birth, and also from our conversion, and onwards to our great change, oh, what need of being kept; or, if we stumble, of fresh deliverance!

For thine, &c.—A fitting return to the worship at the ending of the prayer viewed in connection with the entire range of subjects.

2nd. Coming now to the second point, as to the invariable use of the Lord's Prayer; this was not enjoined. John the Baptist had taught his disciples how to pray; and the disciples of Christ wished their Master to teach them. In Matthew vi. we read, "after this manner," or "thus, pray ye." In Luke, "say." This seems to mean: Let this be your kind of prayer, your pattern in spirit and desire, your model for worship and supplication.

3rd. I think the use from time to time of this prayer in the very words of our Lord is important. We require to be kept to the point, may I say, and to have the expansive range of subjects before us, and that by terse sound words. We need definite aids to largeness of heart, to intelligence, something that will lift us up above personal considerations only, through the pressing need of the daily life, to which prayer is sometimes restricted. What a wonderful scope, and yet a concentration of truth, is contained in the Lord's prayer, the relationship to God, his name, his worship, his kingdom, his will, daily provision, forgiveness, temptation, deliverance—followed by another ascription of worship—all is of God, the kingdom, the power, and the glory. Not only are we blessed, and to be blessed, but all shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off. So viewed (and is not the above sound exposition?), who will not say, Amen!

4th. Its use in principle. One would fully recognise that without using the actual words of the Lord's Prayer, the ideas expressed therein may, though perhaps partially, be expressed in different language. Still, the light of the revelation in the present dispensation, when brought to bear on the Lord's Prayer, makes it resplendent. That does not set aside the prayer, but it opens it to a wonderful fulness and blessedness for the thoughtful. For instance, let us consider the petition "Thy kingdom come" in the light of the whole Scriptures, Old and New: the kingdom, the enemy, the King, the foundation in righteousness, the atonement needed, the Bride, the subjects, the adversaries, the present condition, the future external glory, the perfectness, its mysteries, its ultimate unshaken character, its extension, the present coming of the kingdom within, and the future coming in power and glory, the certainty of the answer to the prayer made these many centuries—"Thy kingdom come." Oh! what a subject, what details for intelligent interest and fellowship in the tribulation, and kingdom, and patience which are in Jesus; what need of preparation, of deeper concern, for the exercise of conscience, and for prayer that such a kingdom may come. Thine it is, thine is the power to accomplish it, to Thee shall the glory redound!

5th. Its non-use. But if, on the other hand, the Lord's Prayer is intentionally omitted altogether upon the supposed ground that it is now inapplicable to Christian persons, such absolute omission becomes a loss and an injury. Instead of having desires, as here instructed by Christ Himself, will not the omission of certain subjects indicate a serious divergence in doctrine between the Lord and his people, and a deficient sense of our own need and character? If we are not in fellowship with all that the Lord taught, worship may soon become very limited and faint, and prayer may soon become restricted to ourselves, our wants, and our personal service. Long after the Prayer was taught, and the propitiation made, the Apostle John, and nothing can be clearer than the truth as he expressed it, wrote, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and righteous to forgive, &c.," as I have before referred to.

I need scarcely add that it is one thing to say or read the Lord's Prayer in a dry, formal, hasty way, and quite another to pray the prayer, and that earnestly. (The Apostle James uses the expression, "prayed in prayer.") When the latter is the case, then whether at family prayers or in public every aspiration and petition in the Lord's Prayer in the lips of one who is in a humble, loving, reverential state, is precious.

JAMES VAN SOMMER.

"Cuffnells," Wimbledon Common.

DEAR SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN for Oct. 29 I find a letter from "M. T.," asking for some explanation of the Lord's Prayer. I will, by way of answer, just say that years since I was conceited enough to suppose that I understood the meaning of this sublime command of our loving Saviour. My ideas and stupid egotism were dispelled, however, by reading a book, published by Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster Row, entitled, THE LORD'S PRAYER, by Charles Stanford, D.D. (3s. 6d.). I shall never be sufficiently thankful for the instruction and comfort derived from the perusal, nay, repented study (I am 83) of this all but inspired production; and if "M. T." wishes seriously for a sweet and comprehensive explanation of the Lord's Prayer, I can promise him more than I had ever anticipated from the pen of any author.—Yours, dear Sir, faithfully, JOHN GORHAM.

OUR ARMY IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—There are three prominent subjects in your pages more closely related than is generally supposed: the Turkish Atrocities, the C.D. Acts, and the condition of our Indian Army; and the Mahomedan apostasy underlies all three. The fact is, we are pandering to the prejudices of the Mahomedan population, of which the Indian races greatly consist, and a more gigantic attack on the domestic institution can hardly be conceived than the establishment of our grand Indian Army on the "forbidding to marry" principle. Only 6 per cent. of private soldiers are allowed to marry.

Miss Ashe's letter, describing the European soldier's life in Rawul Pindee, Punjab, says too truly, "It is the monotony and intense loneliness of the soldier's life out here that leads him into sin." Yes, it is the "forbidding to marry" regulation that is at the base of all the vice. I had twenty-three years of regimental duty with European soldiers in India before the institution of the C.D. Acts, and know what I affirm when I say that the institution of marriage greatly tends to raise the happiness and moral character of the soldier.

The most valuable branch of society in India used to be composed of men and their families, trained and taken out of the European regiments, whether as missionaries or employés under Government and civil institutions throughout the land. Since then India has largely been colonised by Europeans, but the example of the Army is most influential for good or evil—backed up as it is by all the prestige and lavish expenditure that could be suggested for their physical comfort. But the principles of the C.D. Acts have since widely diffused themselves through the entire population, where Mahomedans are more numerous than in all the Turkish Empire, and our Government is thereby becoming a pillar in support of the great apostasy.

It is no wonder that God has a controversy with us, and is causing that apostasy to become our curse. The subject is too intricate, or I could prove that it is even cheaper to do right in this matter, for nothing wrong can ever be expedient. All our other colonies have been founded on the family principle, and India is the first experiment of enlisting anti-Christian principles in government. It will never prosper or prevail, and unless renounced will ruin our country as it is ruining our Army.

DELIVERANCE FROM POPERY.

SIR,—I feel great sympathy with the letter of "A French Missionary" in your last number, and, with many other Christians, am only waiting to join such an organisation as the one of which he proposes the formation. Divided by distance and unknown to each other, let us meet, at stated times, around the Throne of God, and beseech Him to deliver our England from the abyss of Roman teaching and tyranny to which she appears to be so rapidly hastening. Such a simple and unworldly weapon—the united prayer of faith—a very David's sling against the Goliath of Rome, will have its due effect, and will move our God and Father to save us and that with "a mighty hand and a stretched-out arm."

A committee of four or five, representing the various churches, could make all the necessary arrangements in a few days, and the organisation should have as cosmopolitan a character as possible.

—I am, Sir, etc.,

MANDER JOHN SMYTH.

CLOTHING FOR EMIGRANTS.

DEAR SIR,—In response to the letter you were so good as to insert last July, I received twenty-five very valuable parcels of clothes. Several of these were anonymous, and I thank the donors through your columns. My empty boxes testify to the usefulness of the gifts. There is considerably less emigration in the winter months (none to Canada), but small parties are often going to South Africa, and a party of fifty girls with free passages will start early next year for Western Australia. I have not a single stuff dress left, and many other deficiencies. Nor have I any Bibles or Testaments or small devotional books such as some of your readers have kindly sent me.—Yours faithfully,

ADELAIDE ROSS.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE fourth annual meeting of the Tilehurst branch was held on October 29, when addresses were given by Mrs. W. H. Smith and Miss Turquand.

A new branch has been formed in Penryn, Cornwall, Mrs. Chard and Miss Hall being appointed non. secs. Interesting opening meetings have been held.

The annual report from Falmouth shows the work spreading in surrounding districts where branches have been formed, and a good work is being done among young women.

Anniversary meetings of the Bexhill Y.W.C.A. were held at Harecourt on October 28, when addresses were given by Miss Wilkinson and Miss Duke. The work in the institute is progressing.

The opening winter meeting of the Musselburgh Branch was held on the 15th ult. Mrs. Almond, president, having welcomed the members, introduced Mrs. Simpson, vice-president Edinburgh Y.W.C.A., who gave an interesting account of the work.

An appeal has been issued for a sum of money amounting to £200 towards the enlarging and furnishing of the Birkenhead Y.W.C.A., which does not appear to be so well supported as it deserves. The present accommodation is not sufficient for the requirements of the work.

At the Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, a room is set apart by Mr. Charrington for the Y.W.C.A., and an excellent work among the young women has been done by Miss Turner and her helpers. On a recent evening in the small hall about 125 members and friends sat down to tea, which was followed by a bright meeting. Addresses were delivered by Mr. H. Kidner and Miss Richardson.

Rev. A. Carden presided at the annual meeting of the Hastings branch, held at the Brassey Institute. The report read by Miss Dale, hon. sec., showed that there were now seven branches in the town, and the new home at Mildmay House had been a great success. The branch at Western-road had a membership of 187, while the others were in an equally flourishing condition.

The annual meeting of the United Lowestoft Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. was held at the Public Hall on the 29th October, Dr. Shann presiding. Mr. Nicholson (Y.W.C.A.) said that the classes had been well attended, and the total membership was now 429. Over £470 had been contributed towards the building fund, the Association being much in want of larger premises. Addresses followed by Mr. Souttar, M.P., and the Mayor of Lowestoft.

The rooms set apart for the use of the Central Institute at the new headquarters, 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., were crowded to their utmost capacity on Tuesday, 3rd inst., between 8 and 10, by a lively party of Y.W.C.A. members and their friends. The occasion was the second social evening (hostess, Hon. Louisa Kinnaird) since the opening of the Institute. The workers and members are rallying well to the support of Miss Willmot, the indefatigable secretary of the Central Institute.

On Saturday, Oct. 31, an interesting meeting was held, arranged by two members of the Cloudeley Institute, Islington, Total Abstinence Union. The proceedings were bright and animated throughout, but kept entirely on spiritual lines. Cheering testimonies were given as to the value and importance of total abstinence, varied by appropriate sacred music, and the chairman, Rev. J. Jackson, spoke with much vigour and earnestness. Many strangers were brought in; thirteen new signatures were taken; and it is encouraging to record that nearly all the members are pledged abstainers and zealous workers.

The thirteenth annual Conference of the Irish Y.W.C.A. was held in Dublin, October 26-30. Over seventy secretaries of branches and workers from all parts of Ireland accepted invitations to the opening conversation. Mrs. Tottenham, of Wimbledon, conducted the early devotional meetings. Major Lombard gave information of the advantages of the Y.W.C.A. Miss Reynolds, World's Y.W.C.A. secretary, interested all in the young women of Italy and Canada, Cape Town and Australia. Wednesday being missionary day, the meetings were presided over by Miss Bradshaw, head of the missionary department. Home workers for the foreign field were represented by Mrs. S. H. Smith, president; Mrs. Gillespie (North Tipperary), Miss Gregg (Limerick), the Hon. Mrs. Waller, who spoke of missions in India; Miss Culverwell, of medical work there, and Miss Boyland, of students' efforts to give educational advantages to the Parsee women. The needs of China were brought forward by Miss K. Power, Miss B. Newcombe, Miss Smyly, and Miss Codrington, the only survivor of the Ku-cheng massacre. Miss Lucy Guinness also gave stirring missionary addresses. The annual public meeting of the Y.W.C.A. was held on Thursday evening, when addresses were given by Major Lombard, Miss Reynolds, Canon Latham, and Miss L. Guinness.

The Y.M.C.A.

A new association has been formed at Bloemfontein, South Africa.

The foundation-stone of the fine new building in course of erection for the Newcastle-on-Tyne Y.M.C.A. was laid last week.

The annual meeting of the Bangor Association was held on the 30th ult. There was a very large and influential attendance. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Usher Greer, Mr. D. A. Black, and Rev. Henry Montgomery.

The Bath Association held a "membership campaign" during the month of October, the parties dividing themselves into "pinks" and "whites." The former secured 54 and the latter 37, a total of 91 being thus added to the membership list in the four weeks.

A public meeting was held in the Town Hall, Enniskillen, recently, to inaugurate a Y.M.C.A. There was a crowded attendance, and an enthusiastic start was made. Speeches were delivered by Canon Ovenden, Messrs. D. A. Black, and Robert Anderson.

At Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening Sir George Williams gave a reception to members and friends of the Soldiers' Christian Association, an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. The gathering was a very successful one in every respect, some 250 soldiers being present. A suitable address was delivered by Rev. W. R. Mowl, of Brixton.

The fine new buildings of the Belfast Association are rapidly nearing completion and present an imposing appearance. The opening ceremonies will likely take place early in January. The cost of the buildings will be £18,000, and of the site £14,000. The spiritual work of the Association is attracting considerable attention in the city. The various services are crowded and much blessing is reported.

Under the auspices of the Woodford Y.M.C.A. a lecture was given on Thursday at the Wilfrid Lawson Hall, by Mr. G. H. Lord, on the "Holy Land, Egypt and Syria." The lecture was illustrated by representations (in native costume) of the Bedouin chief, dragoman, Arab, attendant, Bethlehem lady, Syrian lady and child, tent life, etc. The proceeds of the lecture were devoted to the relief of the Armenians.

The "membership campaign," which was actively carried on at Birmingham during October, has resulted in an addition of 118 men to the Association, and fifty-one to the youths' branch—a total of 169. The captain of the Reds secured in one evening no fewer than eleven new men himself, the outcome of canvassing in the streets. The Association has arranged for the delivery of 100 sermons on the "Young Men's Sunday"; and a meeting will be held each evening during the week of prayer for young men.

The annual conference of the North Midland District Union was held at Hillsboro', Sheffield. The meetings were among the most successful held in the district for years. Four new centres of work were received into the Union, and an encouraging increase of membership in the district was reported. Steady progress had been made in most of the Associations through the past year, and the outlook for the coming year was regarded as most hopeful. In the evening Alderman W. E. Clegg presided over a well-attended public meeting.

This week, from November 8 to 15 inclusive, is being observed as the Y.M.C.A. Universal Week of Prayer for Young Men. The call issued by the Central International Committee at Geneva, the president of which is Professor Edouard Barde, D.D., embraces a series of suitable topics under the general subject, "The Life more Abundant" (John x. 10). In all countries special meetings are taking place, and in the English Union, as usual, the Sundays are being given by many clergymen and ministers to the preaching of special sermons for young men under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The Sheffield Association has arranged for no fewer than 70 of such sermons.

Pontymoile, S. Wales.—Mr. R. C. Morgan preached here on Sunday, Nov. 1 last, to appreciative congregations. The services were most impressive, and the word was in power—signs following. The address in the morning to Christian workers on Lucifer was especially helpful and instructive, and at the close Mr. Morgan introduced a feature which, I think, preachers and evangelists might advantageously adopt. He invited questions arising out of the address. The people gladly availed themselves of the opportunity. At a similar meeting of the Daniel's band at Newport, at the house of the leader, Mr. Fawcner said that Dr. Griffith John, in China, has adopted the plan of sitting among his congregation, talking to them in a familiar way, and (like the Master) hearing them and asking them questions—with the result that there have more conversions in one year than in the five previous years.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE Dean of Lincoln, preaching before the University, spoke on the necessity of childlikeness. It is the condition of entrance into the kingdom of God and it is the highest attainment of the most saintly character in the kingdom. The three virtues, which Paul says "abide," namely, faith, hope, and love, are those which are characteristic of children.

Rev. W. J. Humphrey, the principal of Fourah Bay College, West Africa, addressed the Missionary Union last week. This part of the Mission Field has much attraction for us, as we have Oxford men working there. Personal knowledge of the missionary leads to increased interest, effort, and prayer.

Well-attended meetings have been held in connection with the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, when addresses, illustrated by limelight views, were delivered by Mr. Frank Wilson and Skipper Macdonald.

On behalf of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, a meeting has been held here. The Right Rev. J. Hine, M.D., the newly-consecrated Bishop of Likoma, and Rev. A. G. B. Glossop spoke of the important work that is being done at Zanzibar and around Lake Nyassa.

The annual meetings of the Oxford Ladies' Auxiliary of the L.M.S. in aid of Zenana missions were held last week. Mrs. Hope Hogg, formerly of Assiout, Egypt, and Miss Ethel Turner, of Almora, India, gave addresses. Miss Turner described the leper asylums in the hill country of Almora, and also the work of the missionaries in visiting the native festivals for the purpose of preaching to the women.

CAMBRIDGE.

The new Presbyterian Theological College is to be built on a fine site in the "Backs." It will be known as Westminster College.

Dr. Salter, of Glasgow, preached at the Presbyterian church on Sunday week.

A meeting was held on Tuesday to consider the Cambridge House in South London, similar to the Oxford House in Bethnal-green. Among the speakers were Bishops Westcott and Talbot, and Right Hon. A. J. Balfour.

The C.M.U. have been exceptionally strong in speakers this term. On Friday week the speaker was Rev. J. Roscoe from Uganda, who dwelt on the vigorous character of the life of the native church and the need of full English supervision.

Last Friday Rev. H. S. Phillips, of Fuh Kien, who so nearly was called upon to lay down his life for the Saviour in August last year, addressed the C.M.U. on the missionary work in China.

The November number of the "Corpus College Mission Magazine" overflows with news of hard work and brilliant results in the South-East of London. The Sunday-school, men's institute, social guild, temperance societies, band of hope, etc., are prospering. The church has grown from the primitive railway arch to a fine building.

Notes from South Africa.

DESPITE the efforts of the Colonial Government, rinderpest continues to make terrible ravages on up-country farms, and is rapidly threatening to cover the whole of the Colony. A short time ago Sir Gordon Sprigg, the Prime Minister, admitted to a deputation of Cape Town ministers that the Government had reached the end of its resources, and they could now only appeal to God. Thursday last, Oct. 15, was proclaimed by the Governor, Lord Rosmead, as a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer for the removal of the plague from the country.

On the whole, the decision of the Government was loyally and earnestly supported by the ministers and members of the various churches. At nearly all the churches special services were held, and solemn appeals were made to the people to humble themselves under the chastening hand of God.

All the places of business were closed during the day, but many of the public-houses were allowed to open their side doors in the evening. Unfortunately many of them were kept very busy until closing time, which, in this colony, is twelve o'clock; but, by a great number of people, who feel that the shadow of a great calamity is hanging over us, the day was observed in fasting and prayer.

Sunday, October 18, was, by special proclamation of President Kruger, observed sincerely and earnestly as a day of fasting and humiliation before God throughout the Transvaal. Special services were held and earnest appeals made to the people.

During the week Mr. Spencer Walton has been conducting Evangelistic services at the headquarters of the South Africa General Mission in Cape Town; also at the large skating rink. The meetings have been well attended, and have been greatly blessed.

Cape Town, October 20.

Scottish Notes.

A MEETING in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on behalf of the China Inland Mission was largely attended. Mr. Hudson Taylor, Prof. Simpson, and others gave addresses.

The Dundee Sunday School Teachers' Union embraces seventy-one schools, with an average attendance of 10,600, and is doing a good work in reparation classes and in examinations.

A meeting in connection with the Scottish Others' Union was held in Edinburgh last week to take counsel as to the preservation of social purity. An impressive address was given by Mrs. MacLagan, wife of the Archbishop of York.

Miss Agnes Weston deeply interested a large gathering in the Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, last week, in her work among blue-jackets. She told, among other things, of the remarkable progress of temperance in the British Navy and the coastguard service.

An interesting gathering in connection with the work of the Livingstone Mission was held in Aberdeen last week, when farewell was said to Mr. George Aitken on his return to that field. Much information was given as to the work, and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Aitken were expressed.

A conference of Scottish local helpers and friends of the South Africa General Mission was lately held in the Railway Mission Hall, Merchiston, Edinburgh. Mr. Andrew Bell, hon. org. sec. for Scotland, presided. The meetings were well attended. The organ of the Mission, The South African Pioneer, can be obtained at the office, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, S.W.

In connection with the celebration of the eighth anniversary of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh, a public meeting was held last night in the Synod Hall, Castle-terrace. Mr. C. C. Wakefield presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. T. Young, Manchester, and Dr. John Smith, Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. The latter spoke of the Wesleyan and Presbyterian Churches having originated in the same spiritual upheaval, and proceeded to descant on the necessity of the spiritual element in churches. He complimented the members of the Mission on the good work they were doing in the city.

Irish Notes.

SUCCESSFUL Gospel missions have been just held by Mr. Jas. Dixon, of Belfast, in Coleraine; by Rev. Edward Hazleton, in Agnes-street Methodist Church, Belfast, and by Rev. Henry Ball, of Belfast, inillymena.

It is stated that Mr. Samuel Scott, of White Plains, N.Y., who died recently, has bequeathed a thousand dollars to each of the superannuated Methodist ministers in Ireland, or thirty-one thousand dollars in all.

Mrs. Wiseman has, during the past fortnight, been addressing a series of meetings in Ireland in aid of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Methodist Missionary Society, and has given much interesting information reference to the need for, and success of, female mission workers in India, China, and Ceylon.

The ninth annual convention of the Junior Methodist ministers was held last week in Clones, and passed off very successfully. Rev. P. E. Donovan presided, and Revs. R. Dowling and H. McConnell acted as secretaries. The first session was devoted to temperance, and addresses on the subject were delivered by Revs. R. E. Sherwood, J. D. Ritchie, and R. M. Ker; another session was devoted to foreign missions, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Sanderson and John Linahan; and a third session was given to the question of Sunday-schools, when addresses were delivered by Revs. C. H. Strong and Thos. A. Moore. Altogether the Convention, which was attended by about thirty young ministers from various parts of Ireland, was calculated to do much good, and has left a pleasant odour behind it.

London Tramcar and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission.—The thirteenth annual report records an advance. The vacancy caused in the secretarial department by the retirement of Mrs. Wood, founder, has been kindly filled by Mr. Robert D. Stewart, who has for years been closely identified with the work. There are estimated to be 1500 omnibuses and 896 tramcars, with (say) annually 244,000,000 and 175,000,000 travellers respectively, in London alone. There is, therefore, much as yet to be done, for hitherto the omnibuses have been scarcely touched. We calculate that to place a transparent text in each of these 2396 cars and omnibuses would cost, on an average, 15s. each for twelve months; £1797 for the year. Communications for Mr. Stewart should be addressed, 1, King Edward-street, London, E.C.

Temperance Notes.

THE Duchess of Sutherland is arranging with Lady Henry Somerset to visit the North of Scotland and address temperance meetings.

A "John Ploughman" Gospel Temperance Society has been established in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, with Pastor T. Spurgeon as president.

Mrs. Harrison Lee has held successful meetings in connection with the Derby Temperance Society. A breakfast meeting of 400 railway men was the occasion of an impressive address on the evils of drink.

Mr. F. A. Carter, of Brighton, has won the prize offered by the National Temperance Choral Union for the best poem to be set to music and commemorative of the progress of the Temperance movement during the Victorian era.

Dr. Temple, the new Primate, announces that he is compelled to resign the chairmanship of the C.E.T.S., but will not sever himself from the society. He is president of the National Temperance League, and also a Rechabite. He will also continue to serve on the Royal Commission.

The Grimsby Town Council have had before them a proposal to open a municipal public-house. The proposal found a good deal of support, but in the end an amendment was carried by eighteen to fourteen declaring it inopportune to consider the question whilst the result of the Royal Commission was still unknown.

A licensing appeal of much local interest was heard at Liverpool on Thursday. The city justices recently refused to renew the licence of the Grapes Hotel, Lime-street, upon an adverse police report. The parties concerned appealed, and evidence for and against the house, which is one of the oldest Liverpool hotels, was taken. In the result the Bench dismissed the appeal.

A third edition has been issued of "The Church of God: the liquor traffic. Poverty, suffering, and sin." By "One of the people." (Jarrold and Sons.) The object of the writer is to arouse the churches to array themselves on the side of Temperance, and to fight the evils arising out of the drinking habits of society. The writer speaks very plainly indeed to the bishops, clergy, ministers, and all professing Christians, the medical profession and those engaged in the liquor traffic, including shareholders in the great brewing companies.

The report for 1895 of the Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police shows that the total number of persons apprehended by the police in 1895 was 85,763, of whom 60,853 were convicted or held to bail; the number of apprehensions for drunkenness and drunken and disorderly conduct being 34,605, or rather more than two-fifths of the total apprehensions. The number of summonses against "drink houses" in 1895 was 288, 213 being convicted and 75 dismissed; the proportion of "trade" convictions being one for every 162 persons apprehended for drunkenness.

The Bishop of Liverpool has addressed a letter to the clergy in his diocese, stating that it is proposed to observe Sunday, Jan. 31, as the Annual Temperance Sunday in 1897, and he hopes that they will allow the claims of the Diocesan C.E.T.S. to be advocated in their pulpits on that day. The cause of Temperance is annually receiving a large amount of attention in Parliament, though, principally from want of entire harmony among its advocates, nothing practical has hitherto been done, except the appointment of a Royal Commission on Licensing, which may prove very useful.

The Royal Commission, after a three months' recess, resumed their investigations on Tuesday week. They will sit on Tuesday and Wednesday in every alternate week. The clerk to the Bradford Justices said since 1882 the off-licences in Bradford had decreased from 635 to 381. The Chief Constable of Lancashire said there were 5,418 licensed houses in the county, of which 3,454 were tied. There were many taverns known as "three-mile houses" which laid themselves out to serve boni-fide travellers on Sunday mornings. Mr. P. M. Martineau, an East London magistrate, thought clubs ought to be regulated.

Sunday was observed in most of the churches in the South of London as Temperance Sunday, and sermons were preached and offertories given in support of the Church of England Temperance Society. The Bishop of Rochester preached in the morning at St. Saviour's, Denmark Park, and in the evening at St. Peter's, Walworth. In most of the churches the work of the Police-court Mission was advocated most strongly, and in many cases the offertories were given in support of that work. Great stress was laid upon the need of more definite temperance work, quite apart from any agitation in favour of legislation. It has been arranged by nearly all, if not all, the Non-conforming Evangelical churches in South London to set apart the last Sunday in this month as Temperance Sunday.

From Miss Robinson.

DEAR SIR,—I should like to be allowed through your columns to thank friends who have taken a kind personal interest in my welfare and to inform them that I have now no connection whatever with any part of my former work except the editorship of Ready. The various houses are doing well under the care of their respective superintendents, to whom all communications should be addressed, not to myself.

I am unspeakably thankful to be free from all business responsibility and yet able to speak and read the Word of Life among the foresters, who come long distances to weekly meetings in "The Hut."

But now I want to mention a very important matter in connection with the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute as a last word to friends and subscribers. The Trooping Work has all been transferred from Portsmouth to Southampton, and the Portsmouth workers have faithfully gone over each time a ship has come in or gone out. A splendid coffee-shed is efficiently worked. But this does not meet the needs of families on embarking and disembarking; a branch institute is required at Southampton, and this is now about to be provided.

The honorary superintendent of the Portsmouth Institute, Mr. Sidney Smith, and Mrs. Smith are giving their whole energies to this. Considerable money help will be required and for this, I do very earnestly appeal to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN on their behalf.—Very truly yours,

SARAH ROBINSON.

Glasgow Municipal Elections.

ON Tuesday, November 3, the city of Glasgow elected its new town council, consisting of seventy-five gentlemen. Owing to the extended boundary of the city, the whole council retired, and never before in the history of the municipality was there so much interest manifested.

Last May the "Progressive Union" was formed, embracing representatives of the Christian, temperance, and philanthropic agencies in the city. Its object was to secure the return of Christian men to the town council. Committees were formed in the twenty-five wards or districts of the city. For weeks past there was much earnest prayer and hard work in view of the election day.

The poll was a large one—over 75,000 electors recording their votes. When the result was made known it was observed that forty-eight of the fifty-six candidates recommended by the Progressive Union had been elected. This was a great victory, and Glasgow has now secured an excellent Town Council. The magistrates were elected last Friday; the bench consists of fourteen gentlemen, and of these eleven are personal abstainers.

Fund for Aged, Destitute, and Invalid Governesses.—The new report, "A Plea for Governesses," states that the annuitants of the Fund are now eighteen in number. The applications are numerous, some of them on behalf of ladies between sixty and seventy years of age, whose circumstances call very urgently for practical help. Ladies willing to assist as local secretaries may secure a copy of the report and other information from the hon. head secretary, Miss M. Fuller, Hillsboro', Maidenhead.

Harrod's Stores Christian Mission held its tenth anniversary on Tuesday, November 3, the Managing Director, Mr. Richard Burbidge presiding. After an address by General Phayre, Rev. A. J. Poynder spoke on "Serving," and soon demonstrated that he was not unacquainted with large houses of business. The report of the Union showed a small balance in hand, and also that the weekly Bible class is on the increase. There have been manifest tokens of God's blessing upon its work. The Mission is joined to the London Bible Class Union, which consists of about fifty-five business houses that have Christian work in them. W. MORRAN, Hon. Sec.

Sailors' Rest for Antwerp.—It is proposed to initiate a Strangers' Rest on the Quay, for this much frequented port. To effect this object two ladies, one of whom has been connected with the Rest at Ratcliff-highway almost from the commencement, and the other a Norwegian lady, who has resided in England for some time, and has laboured at the Scandinavian Home, West India Docks, have consented to proceed to Antwerp for the purpose. Their endeavour is approved by well-known friends of such Christian work. The encouragement and financial support of many friends towards the probable outlay of about £200 for a twelve months' experiment, will be gladly welcomed. Of this amount about £60 are already promised.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Points at Issue Between the Church of England and the Church of Rome. Archdeacon Sinclair's very useful and timely charge, delivered in May last, is having a deservedly wide circulation. We welcome a fourth edition, published at a popular price. (6d. Elliot Stock.)

The Sunday-school and its Relations is a series of seven articles by Principal Simon, Professor Marcus Dods, Revs. Hugh Black, George Jackson, A. R. Buckland, and A. R. Henderson. There is thought and suggestion in the book. (1s. Sunday School Union.)

The Claims of Rome. By Samuel Smith, M.P. (3d. Elliot Stock.) A vigorous pamphlet on a subject of great importance. Mr. Smith pointedly says that this is "the paramount question of the day for the English people." We trust his robust chapters will have many readers.

The Little Runaways, by M. Harriet M. Capes, is a story which the young will read again and again. Very Funny Stories Told in Rhyme is a book which truthfully answers to its title. Both these books are illustrated, and belong to the Red Nursery series. (1s. each. Sunday School Union.)

From Me to You. Messrs Jarrold & Sons have issued a second painting book with this title, and it is likely to prove as popular as the first. The special characteristic of this book is that the copies, after being filled in with chalk or paints, can be easily detached, and presented to friends as birthday, Christmas, or other souvenirs. (1s.)

Bully, Fag, and Hero; or, In Playground and Schoolroom. By Charles J. Mansford. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) Surely the title "speaks volumes"! The book is one which "our boys" will not leave until they have read the last line. And it is as well that the quiet as well as the boisterous should make the acquaintance of such a readable story.

Voices from a Money-box. Mr. William J. Forster, is a volume of talks with the young, by one who has great aptitude in that line of work. Another book by the same author is Ella's Christmas Letter, the chapters of which point useful lessons in simple language. (8d. each. Robert Culley, 2 & 3, Ludgate Circus-buildings, Farringdon-street.)

Uncle Tom's Cabin. By Harriet Beecher Stowe. Illustrated memorial edition. (7s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) This edition of "Uncle Tom" is printed in bold type, and the illustrations, upwards of a hundred in number, are by Jenny Nyström-Stoependaal. The artist has cleverly conceived the spirit of the romance, and the volume is admirably suited for presentation purposes.

Round about Armenia. By E. A. Brayley Hodgetts. (Sampson Low, Marston, & Co.) These ably written chapters describe a recent journey in Turkey, the Caucasus, and Persia, undertaken in the hope of reaching the scene of some of the Armenian massacres. That attempt failed, but the author nevertheless has produced a marvellously interesting and instructive book. We do not feel altogether sure that his strong prejudices against all that is Russian and his distrust of Muscovite projects are well founded, though we admit that he outlines a strong case. Everyone who desires to see all round the complicated Eastern Question should read Mr. Hodgetts's book. There is an excellent map of Armenia.

Martyrs of Hell's Highway. By H. Elwyn Thomas. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.) Surely no one could read this unweaving of one of the blackest forms of calculating and fiendish iniquity without horror and indignation that such things can be, in our boasted Christian land and era. It tells of worse things than were done in Sodom. The worst of all is that one experiences, as one reads, a sense of helplessness in combating or repressing such a widespread and subtle evil. Would to God that another Wilberforce might arise and lead on the Christian hosts of England to the abolition of this thousand-fold worse than American or African slavery. In a preface, Mrs. Butler vouches for the truth of the awful story.

Reveries and Realities. By Rev. F. B. Meyer. (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.) We have here the latest published product of Mr. Meyer's heart and brain. These sketches of life and work in London form an admirable sequel to "The Bells of Is," and may be described as dropped fragments from the author's amply furnished table of service. Most toothsome fare they make, and highly strengthening if well digested. Few modern writers on the practical Christian life can dress up a literary dish so daintily as Mr. Meyer. The chapters on "P.S.A." work, and other branches of Endeavour at Christ Church, will give guidance and suggestion, we trust, to many workers who are but half employed. The portrait frontispiece is simply splendid.

Gospel Pictures and Story Sermons. By D. W. Whittle. (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.) Many successful children's evangelists have mastered the art of speaking to boys and girls, but as a rule preachers of the Gospel find some difficulty in catching and holding the attention of restless young hearers. There is, however, as many have proved, a way of doing it; and rarely have we found a better example of how to talk to children than in the volume before us. It contains five story sermons, in which the preacher combines happily spiritual truth, with object teaching, simple chemical experiments, incident, and parable. The Gospel is put so simply and attractively that the children must listen. Either for reading in the home circle, or as a help to those who address the young, Major Whittle's book ought to find a wide and warm welcome.

BOOKLETS.

A Night in Bethlehem, by Rev. J. Reid Howatt (Nisbet & Co.), records an imaginary conversation at a Jewish inn fifty years after the birth of our Lord, concerning his life and death. It is reverent in conception and impressive in narration. The Vest Pocket Companion for Christian Workers, by R. A. Torrey (Nisbet & Co. 1s.), gives a selection of suitable texts for dealing with seekers; they are classified and printed in good type. Meditations on Faith and Practice, by Clare Langton (Elliot Stock), is a collection of fragmentary but helpful thoughts on practical themes. A Gentle Heart, by Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6d.) has all the attractive qualities of this author's work. The core of the booklet is in one of the sentences, "Not to be gentle is not to be a Christian." The Heavenly Vision, by Rev. F. B. Meyer (S.S. Union. 6d.), contains many beautiful and stimulating utterances as to God's plan for every surrendered life. The King's Garden (Hutchinson & Co. 2s.) is a finely-illustrated allegory in verse, intended to show young people how to order and cultivate their lives—a good Christmas or birthday gift.

CHRISTMAS CARDS AND MOTTOES.

An attractive selection of these seasonable messages is published by Messrs. Walter G. Wheeler and Co., 17, Paternoster-row. They embrace the Keswick series, and are turned out in artistic style with appropriate Scripture texts or choice verses. The larger motto cards are choicely illuminated and are suited for hanging or framing. Messrs. Nister and Co., 28, Paternoster-row, also send out some excellent cards and illuminated wall-texts. The same publishers issue fortnightly a series of penny illustrated stories by such authors as Sydney Watson, A. Quartermaster, etc. They all have a religious bearing. Year by year Mr. Kaufmann, 30, Paternoster-square, E.C., issues cards that prove of great service to Christian workers. His new publications are particularly good, with Scripture portions wisely chosen, and poetical greetings by Mercédès Rivolta, S. B. Kathleen Warren, and others. Specially worthy of mention are some fine folding cards, with floral sprays, embossed and hand coloured (2d. and 3d. each). Among the series made up in packets may be named "Autumn Leaves," "The Light of the World," and "Daily Light" (six for 1s.); also "Fulness of Blessing" (12 for 1s.), "He careth for you," and "The Tender Shepherd" (12 for 6d.). There are also motto cards, with flower and landscape designs, varying in price from 6s. per 100.

WHO GAVE US THE BIBLE, GOD OR THE CHURCH? This striking booklet gives the text of a letter written by John Barnett to Rev. F. H. Beaven, St. Paul's, Burton-on-Trent. (1d. T. F. Shorter, 53, Paternoster-row.)

Khama's Country.—Information has been received that King Khama has withdrawn the concession recently obtained from him in regard to native beer.

Kingsdown Orphanage.—For many years a sale of work in aid of the funds of this institution (Mrs. Ginever's) has been held in November, and upon this effort, which usually yielded about £80, the trustees principally depended to close the financial year free of debt. While preparing for a similar sale this year, sickness appeared at Pemberton Gardens, the largest of the homes, containing ninety-seven children. The attack, which is a light form of scarlatina, precludes a sale this year; hence, casting themselves upon the kindness of friends, the trustees appeal for additional help to meet the present emergency. The secretary is Mr. R. T. Smith, 8, Tremlett-grove, Junction-road, N.

November 22.

REWARDS OF OBEDIENCE.—Prov. iii. 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 6.

THESE verses, as the title suggests, deal with the rewards of the obedient life. Enforce its lessons by considering two things.

I.—THE DESCRIPTION OF THE OBEDIENT LIFE.

1. It observes the Word of God (1, 3).—The forgetfulness against which we are warned (1) is not a mere infirmity of the memory, but a wilful negligence of the heart. What we are not careful to remember we can easily forget. The heart is the only true keeping place for the commandments. They should be in it, as the tables of testimony were in the Ark (see Psa. cxix. ii.); and engraven on it, as the law was written upon the stone (3). How to get the word in the heart?—that is the question. Read the answer in Heb. viii. 10.

2. It trusts the guidance of God (5-7).—Not in some things only, but "in all thy ways." We need Him as much in little things as in great; and He is willing that we should consult Him about all. This will be best understood by illustrations found in the life of David. Tell how he consulted God when the men of Keilah would have betrayed him; when he lost everything by the overthrow of Ziklag; when Saul was dead, and the way was open for him to take the kingdom; and when the Philistines twice came against him (see 1 Sam. xxiii. 9-11; xxx. 6-8; 2 Sam. ii. 1; v. 19, 23). We do not truly "acknowledge Him" unless we leave the decision of everything with Him. To form our own plans first, and then consult Him, is mockery.

3. It consecrates its substance to God (9, 10).—The people of Israel, redeemed by God from Egypt, belonged entirely to God. The offering of the first fruits was the recognition of this fact (see Deut. xxvi. 1-10). Our redemption deserves an equally grateful return (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20). Apart altogether from the reward promised, it should be our delight to give to God.

4. It receives the discipline of God (11, 12). It does not "despise" correction. Picture a boy who after a severe punishment endeavours to appear as though he did not feel it. Sometimes God's people were like that (Isa. i. 5, 6). Wearying of it is the opposite evil. It is as wrong to "faint" under affliction as to "make light" of it (Heb. xii. 5). We faint when we put a wrong interpretation upon God's chastening; when we forget that it is one of the privileges of the children of God, and that it is designed for our good. God does not neglect our education. Affliction is one of his most valuable lesson books. An obedient child will be willing to learn.

II. THE REWARDS OF SUCH A LIFE.—Though we use the term "rewards," it must not be supposed that obedience merits or purchases these blessings. They are the rewards of grace.

These rewards, spread over all the verses of our lesson, seem very largely to belong to this present life. It is sometimes objected that a Christian forfeits the present for the future; and the worldling prides himself on his wisdom in not giving up "the bird in the hand for the two in the bush." But he is mistaken. Godliness makes the most of the present life, while it has also the promise of the life to come (1 Tim. iv. 8). We do not need to spiritualise these promises. They mean what they say.

What are they? 1. A long and healthy life (ii. 8). The commands of the law of God relating to the body tend to preserve its vigour and healthfulness. It is the ungodly man who, by intemperance, gluttony, vice, shortens his own life. Men dig their own graves by their sins.

2. An honourable life. This is needful if a long life is to be a blessing. An unworthy, ignoble life is not worth living. But obedience to God leads to the exercise of those qualities of "kindness and truth" (3) which are the truest adornment. Integrity, industry, honesty, fidelity—these are the qualities most in request, and these are an essential part of the godly life. Is not such a character worth more than rubies (15)?

3. Prosperity (10). The widow's cruse and barrel failed not, because she honoured God with it. Upon this principle God would bless his people when through their robbery of Him they were suffering distress (Mal. iii. 10, see also Hag. i.). Those who conscientiously seek to honour God by setting apart some of their income for Him are able to bear testimony to the truth of this promise.

4. Happiness and peace (2, 17). The ways of godliness are suited to us. We were made for obedience, and find our rest and joy in it. The will of God is our element. Inward harmony can only be ours as we do that will. Peace with God, with men, and with our own conscience, this is found in the godly life.

What is our life to be?

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ALL lovers of peace and concord will hail the conclusion of an arbitration treaty between England and the United States. This is not by any means the first international arbitration treaty, but its peculiar circumstances, and the first-rate rank and near kinship of the contracting nations, make it far and away the most important ever signed. It is a vast object lesson in human brotherhood, and strikes a deep note in the knell of war, which is especially timely, coming at this time of unrest about Armenia, when we are feeling ashamed of the jealousies which have paralysed the action of the Great Powers.

How long it will take to bring European nations to the mood in which they will entertain such an idea among themselves, it is not easy to say, nor is the forecast very bright at present. But that two of the most progressive and vigorous peoples in the world have determined to settle future disputes by peaceable methods is a fact that can never be wiped out of history, and that they are but the pioneers of a new era that sooner or later will dawn, is a certainty for faith and a grand opportunity for prayer as well as work.

It is highly gratifying to find that at length some of the Russian organs of public opinion are awake to the horrors of the Armenian situation. A leading paper in St. Petersburg has published a pathetic appeal to the Russian people on behalf of the starving Armenians, in which it seems fully to recognise the need of decisive action.

Europe is now fully decided that all the subjects of Turkey shall have better days, and that if these evil things occur again, even in the smallest degree, or more correctly, do not cease (because every day means fresh tortures for the imprisoned and starving), the authors of these misdeeds should receive their deserts. From a united Europe there is no hiding. And, moreover, no considerations as to the danger that may be incurred by the Europeans in Turkey, or to the Armenians, should prevent the enraged Powers from arriving at the decision Fiat justitia.

If these views at all express the mind of the Russian authorities, surely we may hope for the early dawn of a better day in those desolate regions.

In a letter to The Daily News a lady missionary says that never in the history of the Armenian nation of martyrs has it had so many who have so intelligently and gladly laid down their lives for Christ's sake as at the end of this nineteenth century. A list is given of Protestant and Gregorian pastors who deliberately chose death in its most brutal form rather than renounce their faith, with touching details of their calm courage at the last hour. Many even bore torture and yet faltered not in their testimony. Others, too, whose lives had not borne strong testimony for Christ, in that last solemn hour of testing, were unflinching. The devotion of the victims renewed the glories of the ancient witnesses to the faith of the Cross. Even those who gave way and embraced Islamism were in many cases constrained by the knowledge that in so doing they were saving wife and children from dishonour, torture, and death."

If the report that France will close all schools in Madagascar in which the French language is not taught, is true, we can only say that France has made a great mistake, and is her own worst enemy. The children are now taught in Malagasy in tens of thousands by Christian men and women, every one of whom would be a centre of peaceable influence and social order. To close these schools and to lay these teachers idle is to inaugurate confusion. Besides this, arrangements have been made to send French Protestant teachers as far as the services of such workers can be obtained. The haste to make a change seems to be more owing to Roman Catholic intrigue than to political considerations. France has something to learn as a coloniser, and one thing is not to persecute Protestants who are loyal to her.

The extraordinary contrast between the material conditions of the life of the poor now and sixty years ago, is one that is often forgotten. Mr. George Howell, who is an authority on this matter, gave, in a recent lecture, a summary of reforms that have been accomplished during the Queen's reign. Wages have largely risen, sanitation has been applied to the homes of the poor as well as of the rich, as many as 150 protective measures regulating work in factories, etc., have been passed; and education is on the way to become universal. Morally, also, there has been great advance. "Sixty years ago the prisons were full, and they could not build them fast enough. Now they are pulling them down."

Is this moral advance to be put down simply to the betterment in the outward conditions of life, and even to education? These two causes have undoubtedly had their share in the result, by making a life of decency and goodness more easy. But during these sixty years there has been a wonderful extension of agencies, which explain whatever betterment has taken place more than all other causes put together. There has never been a period when the Gospel has been preached to the poor so widely as this. All the churches have been more or less at work. The reign of Queen Victoria has been an era of mission-halls, of open-air preaching, of temperance work, of visiting the poor in their homes, and of numberless forms of religious philanthropy. And this work, done so quietly and unobtrusively, though it does not often find its way into social statistics, accounts not only for countless souls saved from sin, but for the main part of the improvement in the morals and well-being of the poor. The results attained should encourage all who are engaged in various channels of spiritual service to a still more hopeful and determined devotion in the name of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of all men.

Another "Settlement" is to be founded in South London. It is to be in connection with the University of Cambridge, and is to be co-ordinate with "Oxford House" in the East-End. A large and influential gathering in promotion of this end was held in Cambridge last week, at which the Bishops of Durham and Rochester and Mr. A. J. Balfour spoke. The former appealed to the cultivated youth of Cambridge to make a practical trial of what the Christian faith was and what the Christian faith could do, and to vindicate their own claim to a true life by the generosity of their services. Mr. Balfour urged that this was not to be a merely clerical movement, but to include all manner of lay service. Nor was it to be a question of sect or churchmanship. All would be welcomed who would be willing to work with the institution. If the religious element and motive are only kept sufficiently prominent in the work, this ought to be a movement that will do an enormous amount of good in the densely populated neighbourhoods South of the Thames.

The hope that the recent Papal denunciation of Anglican orders would tend to make the Sacerdotalists less arrogant towards ministers who have not been "episcopally" ordained, does not seem likely to come true. Rev. T. A. Lacey delivered a carefully-written paper on the "Papal Bull" at Sion College last week, and his attitude towards Nonconformists was not encouraging to those who looked for better things. Being anathematised as schismatics by the Pope does not make these Sacramentarians less ready to anathematise those who differ from them as to what constitutes a valid ministry. The harm done by this proud exclusiveness is incalculable. Mr. Lacey deplored the Pope's action on the ground that it "confuses the plain lines of theology, and hinders the holy work of the Reunion of Christendom." Is not his attitude as deplorable in hindering the same cause nearer home?

What are the tests of a valid ordination to the ministry? According to Mr. Lacey they are purely external, being summed up in the two conditions—the laying of episcopal hands on the candidate, after prayer has been offered for the gift and grace of the Spirit. It is clear that these conditions may be fulfilled without the candidate being in a fit state, or even in a mood, to receive the grace required. It is equally clear that the grace may be in his possession before the performance of the rite. Till the test is made an inward one—till it is acknowledged to be spiritual in character, till it is realised by all as being conferred by the free act of the Spirit on such as are fit for it, whether a bishop takes part in the service or not—it will be useless to expect reunion between Episcopalians and Nonconformists. The latter acknowledge freely the validity of every ministry that approves itself by its fruits. It is those who exclude them, therefore, who lay themselves open to the charge of narrowness and schism.

Every preacher has, no doubt, felt a longing to know, at the close of a sermon, whether among his hearers there were some who had questions they wished to have answered, or doubts to be removed, or some more specific instruction given than he had been able to afford. Hence the invitation to meet him in the vestry, or the "after-meeting." To these ways Dr. Bevan, of Melbourne, is said to have added the idea of inviting a free and candid criticism of his sermon by any hearer who may dissent from it. Can this really be Dr. Bevan's desire? If it is, he will let loose the most foolish tongues in his congregation, and a demand will soon be expressed for the innovation to cease. Perhaps he has the intention of compelling some foolish criticism to work its own destruction, but even this is a risky experiment.

Rev. Wm. Goudie, writing from the Madras district to The Methodist Recorder, on the villages of India, gives an impressive account of the need for Christian workers. "The fields are white unto harvest." During the past ten years he has baptized people, not singly, but by families and groups of families, village has been added to village, and congregation to congregation. His powerful appeal should be read by all members of his own church at least, and adequate help sent to him to gather these people in who are craving for blessing. In this time of revived commercial prosperity, this and all similar appeals ought to be gratefully responded to.

The recent references of Roman Catholics to Nonconformists have produced, so far, a very excellent result. Dr. Hiles Hitchens suggests that there should be a "Protestant Sunday" observed, on which special teaching should be given on the points on which Protestantism and Romanism differ. Rev. Wm. Pierce suggests a National Congregational Propaganda to convert Romanists and Ritualists, not by mere denunciation but by displaying the Divine features of the Congregational faith. "A religion, if it is true, cannot justify itself without becoming aggressive." Pastors should also make it a point in their ordinary teaching, especially to the young, to put the positive truth in such a way as to exclude error.

The conviction of a rich American lady on a charge of "shop-lifting," has given prominence to the moral and medical problems arising out of the disease known as kleptomania. Dr. Forbes Winslow, the eminent authority on insanity, states that cases of irresponsible thieving are exceedingly common among well-to-do women, but that the impulse hardly ever attacks men. The question not unnaturally occurs whether many cases of stealing among poor women may not arise in the same way. To this question experts reply that, while this is unquestionably so, the difficulty in such cases is to prove the absence of motive, which is the chief symptom of the malady. Difficult moral problems cluster round such a fact, but that the trouble is a form of insanity seems clear. The whole subject strikingly illustrates the fallibility of human judgment, and the extreme difficulty of apportioning blame and punishment. Only the All-seeing Eye and the Heart, that understands the intricate depths of our nature, can hold the balances with perfect justice and love.

Those in authority in Rhodesia now appear to be showing a real desire to deal squarely with the natives. The war being over, the chiefs were invited to meet the leading whites in council, and their grievances were discussed. As a result, the leading chiefs are to be paid salaries on condition that they will help to keep public order among their people, and a certain amount of trust is to be reposed in them. If this had been done from the beginning, the disastrous conflict just concluded might have been avoided. With care on the part of the authorities to administer justice impartially, there seems no reason why in future the Matabele should not in time grow accustomed to the altered conditions, and become gradually transformed from a nation of bloodthirsty savages into an industrious and peaceful people. There ought to be a grand opportunity for missionary work amongst them in the immediate future.

There is something very tempting to some minds in setting the various doctrines of Scripture in the light of science. Science is supposed to be so sure in its methods, and so safe in its conclusions, that its countenance or support is like calling in the testimony of an impartial, infallible witness; while its opposition is too often supposed either to invalidate or to shake any other conclusions but its own. Or, taking a lower view of it, its analogies form an attractive illustration of things spiritual. "Natural law in the spiritual world" is a suggestive theme, and has been handled with wonderful grace and eloquence. But are we not in danger of making too much of this auxiliary—or opponent? An analogy is not a proof; a metaphor is not a law. "Biological religion" may have a good deal of biology and very little of the religion of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in it.

We say this because it seems to us that the admirable papers of Rev. W. L. Watkinson on "The Doctrine of Sin in the Light of Science" err in this direction. He has made sin his study, and in no English volume that we are acquainted with has any one treated it with the same fulness, force, and insight as he has in "The Transfigured Sackcloth." Any papers from him would be sure to be Evangelical and uncompromising. But we deprecate using concerning plants and animals the same terms as we use of responsible men. To speak of plants as "displaying the worst moral characteristics," as "living by selfishness," as "being spiteful, cunning, dishonest, cruel," is to employ language in a sense which will ultimately rob all moral terms of their significance and power. If plants and animals are immoral, we know that it is an "immorality" for which they are not to blame, and men will think of their own immorality also as a venial matter. We cannot place the two in the same category, and then complain of their being understood to be the same in nature.

Mr. Watkinson finds in Nature, as read and interpreted by modern scientists, proofs of the reality of evil, of the total depravity of human nature, and of the presence of evil in us all. Some of the quotations with which he confirms his position from the writings of distinguished scientists are very striking. Thus from Mr. Huxley's Prolegomena to his Romanes Lectures he takes these two sentences: "I sometimes wonder whether people who talk so freely about extirpating the unfit ever dispassionately consider their own history. Surely, one must be very 'fit,' indeed, not to know of one occasion, or perhaps two, in one's life, when it would have been only too easy to qualify for a place among the unfit." Good use is made of such an admission for pushing home the Pauline teaching that "all have sinned," that "there is no difference." The doctrine of sin is resuming its old important place.

If we would appreciate aright the value of the work of Christian women in India we should ponder this fact—that more than two-thirds of the devotees at Hindu shrines are said to be women, and they are the most difficult to reach. Here is the main strength of the national religion. It can only be carried by women. Thankful as we may be for every man who goes to India to serve Christ, we ought to attach peculiar value to women's work, and do all possible to extend it.

"The Abbé de Lamennais and the Liberal Catholic Movement in France" (Longmans) affords, in the distinguished man who is its central figure, another illustration of how effectually some men are disillusioned with regard to Rome by simply seeing her. Lamennais wished to raise Catholicism from the depths into which it was sinking deeper every day. He went to Rome and "beheld the foulest cesspool which has ever sullied the eyes of man." There was no God but interest. He said that the evil was beyond the power of man, and he turned away in horror and fear. That was in 1832; what would he say now? Why, that the Liberal Catholic movement does not move. Rome changes not.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

MANY of our readers have been deeply interested in our notices of Rev. J. D. Kilburn's system of memory training. We have received a large number of letters from correspondents at home and in various parts of the world, who are especially concerned in languages. They will be glad to know, as we are to announce, that in our issue for January 7, 1897, the first number of the New Year, will be commenced a series of lessons, which we are assured by many, who write from experience of other similar courses will very greatly reduce the labour of learning. The following particulars will indicate the nature of these lessons:—

SPECIAL COURSE ON NAMES AND LANGUAGES.

This course will consist of about Ten Lessons, and will deal with:—

The Facts and Principles on which the system is founded, so as to show more clearly—

The reason of the methods suggested and used, the different divisions of names, and how best to remember the names belonging to each division.

The best way of learning the order of the letters of a foreign alphabet, so as to be able to use dictionaries, lexicons, etc., with ease and facility.

The different methods of learning a foreign language, and suggestions as to the best.

The easiest and best way of learning the words and phrases of a foreign language.

The easiest and best way of learning the declensions of a foreign language.

The easiest and best way of learning the conjugations of a foreign language.

The easiest and best way of learning the meaning and number of the Chinese radicals.

The importance of this supply of a great need, felt by missionaries in the field, by intending missionaries still at home, and by all who wish to learn other languages than their own, can scarcely be overstated. We trust that our readers will co-operate with us in making this valuable course of instruction widely known. Mr. Kilburn's great desire is to afford new facilities to Christian workers to attain a better memory, and to apply that improved memory to the acquisition of languages for the evangelisation of the world.

Papers on Missions.—2.

THE PURPOSE OF PENTECOST.

"Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts i. 8, mar.

WHOM does the Lord here address? Who are, and who have been through the long ages since the day of his departure, when these words were spoken, the lineal descendants of those to whom He spoke them?

It was to the Apostles of the infant Church that Jesus gave this promise and this commission; and to the Church through the subsequent centuries, they have come from the lips of their ascended Lord. But the Church has multiplied into churches, and to every Church adheres the privilege and responsibility of contributing in its measure to the world's evangelisation.

It is true that for a millennium and a-half the Church, in all her churches, almost forgot the Great Commission, and the wide world of heathenism lay waste and fallow, unsown and unreaped. And consequently Pentecost was only remembered as a dream of a power possessed in the Church's golden age.

But by the grace of God a breath of heaven's pity passed over the hearts of a few men a century ago, and William Carey said that he would go down into the pit where the souls lay in darkness, if his brethren would

HOLD THE ROPES.

That was a ray of light upon the relation of the churches at home to those of her sons and daughters who felt and obeyed the call of God on behalf of their fellow-men abroad.

Every Church is de facto a missionary institution, and her every arrangement should have reference to this, the main object of her existence in the world—the preaching of the Gospel to every creature, beginning at her own door, and extending unto the uttermost part of the earth.

The Acts of the Apostles shows that very early the Gospel spread, just as the Lord Jesus had prescribed, in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria, and to the Gentiles. It was the Church at Jerusalem that evangelised Samaria, and the Church at Antioch that by direction of the Holy Ghost separated and sent forth Barnabas and Saul on their first missionary journey. And from Antioch Paul again set forth with Silas, being recommended by the brethren—the Church—to the grace of God.

The proof that at Thessalonica the Gospel came not in word only, but in the Holy Ghost, and in power, and in much assurance, was that from them sounded out the word of the Lord in Macedonia and Achaia, and that in every place their faith to Godward was spread abroad. Well might the Apostle say they were his hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing, in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ at his coming.

In these last days, however, the missionary enterprise lags because the churches as such have not recognised their glorious privilege, their grave responsibility, to evangelise the world.

The first effect of a revival always is the quickening of at least a home missionary spirit. We need a revival of the missionary spirit on a world-wide scale. The return of Pentecostal power cannot be expected for any other purpose than that for which it was originally given—to empower the disciples of Christ to be his witnesses to the uttermost part of the earth; to endow his witnesses, that having eaten up the little book, which (in the vision of our "brother and companion in the tribulation, and kingdom, and endurance in Jesus)" lay opened on the pierced hand of the Angel of the Covenant, they should prophesy again before peoples and nations and tongues and kings.

Prayer for the power of the Holy Ghost as at Pentecost, for any purpose less than to be his witnesses, his witnesses in sackcloth, bearing the reproach of Christ, must be an unanswered because an unanswerable prayer. It asks for a power, without a willing and obedient spirit to be used by it for the only purpose for which God has promised it.

The angels recognise as their fellow-servants among men only those who have the testimony of Jesus. "Worship God. For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy"; i.e., "This Spirit given to me in that I shew thee these things, given to thee in that thou seest and art to write them, is the token that we are fellow-servants and brethren." "Every one of those who have the testimony of Jesus . . . has the same Spirit, and that one spirit, and no other, is the Spirit of prophecy" (Alford).

The Sign of the Times.

MUCH has been written in the present day on "the Signs of the Times," but the inquiry as to what the Sign of the Times is, is of deeper moment, and has the prior claim. It is very doubtful indeed that we know anything as it ought to be known unless we pass through the plural to the singular, and grasp the subject in unity—e.g., How to work "the works of God" rests as an oppressive burden on the mind until the theme unfolds in unity, and the signification of "the work of God" appears, which is that we should believe on Him whom He hath sent. In like manner we may trace the inability of the Scribes and Pharisees to discern "the signs of the times" to the fact that they resolutely resisted the light of that particular Sign—the greater than Solomon that was in their midst. As in the realm of nature there is always light in the sky somewhere, even in the darkest night, either cast up from the buried sun or reflected by the distant stars, so in the realm of human affairs there is no night so dark but it has some gleam from heaven, some writing of the Divine hand, some message from the Eternal Spirit; and it is because we feel that this is most emphatically true of our own day that we call attention now to the Sign of the Times.

On this subject we write with a measure of fear and trembling, the more so that our conviction is that the Sign of the Times does not lie in the region of flesh and blood perception. In all ages the Sign, however near the actual, has never been the object of sense cognition. The law of similitude applies here—the Sign, in fact, is as powerful in concealment as it is rich in illumination. Still, in every age—as God's Sign from heaven to his people—there is something specific, a writing on the wall, a movement of his Spirit, a still small voice more solemn and potent than the earthquake that disrupts kingdoms, or the volcanic fires that portend anarchy. Such a Sign is the trend to-day in the direction of life; or, as we may otherwise put it, in the direction of

RISEN LORD.

May I plead with the reader not rashly to pass over this finding, or to deal with this Sign as if it were but one among many, for—if without dogmatism the affirmation is possible—it is not. Ponder the matter well in the solitudes of the Divine Presence. Let not flesh and blood intrude. The Sign is ever the clue to the maze. Signs but confuse and baffle the mind until the Sign be found. What, then, is the Sign of the Times? It is the modern spiritual upheaval before which sects and parties fall—the yearning after such an interior knowledge of the Son of God as shall satisfy the heart with the fulness of his life, and furnish in the character an unbroken reflection of his image.

It would be superfluous to try to demonstrate the existence of the Sign specified. We take it for granted that in the case of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN modern phenomena sufficiently bespeak it. The Sign of the Times always stands as the antidote or counteractive of the ground errors of the period. The specific form of evil vitiating the Church of God at any time finds in the Sign of that time its rebuke and remedy.

Now, as it always has been, so is it with the Sign mentioned, as it regards the religious state of the present time. The Sign in question has not come an hour too soon. For unquestionably the experimental in Divine things had grown wondrously thin. There has seemed to be nothing profound anywhere. The whole matter of conversion had become superficialized. Formerly, it meant an agony to enter the kingdom of heaven, but now all was melodious and mellifluous on the lines of a verbal decision that took everything for granted, though nothing at all was felt.

In like manner, an equal shallowness of conception had reduced faith to a virtual nullity, by treating the glorious Gospel of Divine grace as if it were only so much assuming that a man was saved who gave his personal subscription to a deduction drawn for him after the mode of a logical syllogism. The result has been, in thousands of cases, that faith has existed in the region of the nominal and abstract, rather than of the living and concrete.

To all this must be added the externalism of Church action, which has given to religious profession the character of a social and political busybody, a general judge and divider among men, and to ministers, forsooth, the place of parliamentary advisers and even dictators. Other things might be mentioned which have resulted, either through the grieving of the Spirit, or the express contradiction of truth, to weaken the vital forces of the Christian life and render Christ a Saviour more in name than in experience. But we forbear. Enough has been said to show the timeliness of the Sign specified, and its claim to be recognised as the Sign of the Times.

It is to be regretted, although not to be wondered at, that there have gathered round the Sign in question elements of perplexity and difficulty. Growing out of this Sign, namely identification with Christ through faith in his blood, and the realised fulness of his Spirit, are problems of a metaphysical bearing, concerning alike the actual and the possible, which are more easily raised than answered. Without pronouncing on recent controversies, it may not be inopportune to state that the endeavour to put, into intellectual formula, truths that in their essential nature are transcendental, is no more possible in theology than in philosophy. We question if anything practical is gained by the attempt to compass, with the foot-rule of intellectual definition, what Christian perfection is, or is not. The two things to be avoided as regards the vexed question of Christian perfection are (1) Fixing a limit, and (2) Vaunting a claim.

It is a mistake to fix a limit, for as the resources of Christ are boundless there is no telling forth the possibilities of his grace, either in time or in eternity. Equally is it a mistake to vaunt a claim, for "none is good save one, that is God"; and in all such cases there is subtle danger of obtruding self on our own notice and the attention of others. Satan would fain have us copy himself in assuming that we bear the root and not the root us. The fundamental condition of all spirituality and of all perfection is poverty of spirit. Hence, in point of place it ranks as the first of the Beatitudes. The same is true of all creatures, angels as well as men, who spiritually know and keep their place. It is through poverty of spirit they do it. Indeed, as our light is but reflected light, we have no excuse for assuming to be aught at any time or anywhere. Nor will the temptation exist when we shall have perfectly learnt of Him, for then all heart for the recognition of ourselves will be gone. JAS. DOUGLAS.

Impressions of Russia.

FOR the past thirteen weeks I have been making a tour of European and some parts of Asiatic Russia—Central Asia and Eastern Siberia. As so little information reaches England from these parts, a few stray notes of what I have been able to glean with regard to the spread of the kingdom may prove interesting.

Although there may be said to be no foreign missionary effort in the Tsar's dominions, the native evangelical denominations, such as the Stundists and Molokani, increase apace in spite of all opposition. In simplicity of life and teaching, these two closely resemble our Friends and Brethren, and intermittent persecution guarantees sincerity. At first I had hoped to be able to come in contact with some of these fellow-soldiers, but I found that, being unable to go among them without an interpreter, I should only attract attention, and probably bring them trouble, so regretfully I desisted. In Siberia I saw some exiled Stundists, though unable to converse with them; but it was sad to learn how many of them, cut off from their families and friends, in time succumb to deadening and corrupting influences, though many more remain firm to the end, and are the means of bringing light to others.

Notwithstanding the enforced conformity of the lower classes, especially in the country, where the livelihood of the parish clergy depends on their making their people pay up, as he comes the "Orthodox," there is a decided evangelical movement independent of established sects noticeable chiefly among people of education and means, whose position saves them from interference. It is only where conscientious objections prevent contribution to the support of the National Church, or the bearing of arms, or the performance of other legal duties, that the State interferes and transports the offender. In a bureaucratically-governed country, with an over-centralised administration, there is no lack of ways in which the poor and friendless may be made to suffer.

Throughout all classes the teachings of Tolstoy have weight, and many have been brought to Christ by his more recent works, or awakened to a sense of their Christian duties and responsibilities. However widely the views of most of those who read these lines may differ from Tolstoy's as to the nature of Christ and his work, few will fail to be thankful for his vigorous, earnest summons to take Christ at his word, and to follow Him only. One of the most pleasant incidents of my stay in Russia was a couple of days spent at his simple country home, in contact with his mind and character. But Tolstoy has suffered from coming in touch with only the more bigoted and narrow forms of Christianity, with a Church which is bound by human formalism, and with others who can conceive of none being right with God who do not see with their eyes. Would that he could know more of the Higher Life!

Another of Russia's great thinkers, Vladimir Soloviev, a man whom the University found too Christian a student to retain him, still a member of the Russian Church, impressed me almost as much. As a believer in the Word of God and the Divine plans there revealed, he did not hesitate to attribute his country's troubles to its treatment of its Jewish citizens, the victims of the same party that persecutes evangelical Christians—a party which is one of the State's most subtle foes. He was astonished to learn how fully his views are shared by Christian Englishmen, and of the place the chosen people hold with us. With the exception, however, of the restricted area allotted to its Jewish subjects by the Government, I can find no great cause of complaint at present, and there is every reason to hope that the days of their persecution are over.

With regard to Gospel work among them, the scandal formerly caused at Warsaw by the wholesale christening of unconverted Israelites, who desired to obtain certificates which would enable them to reside in the capitals, has now been done away with in the only centre of missionary effort on their behalf, and the London Jews Society is doing real work there. The numbers who come there from long distances, even under the impression that they may obtain recognition as Christians by answering a few set questions, afford opportunities for faithful dealing which are not to be overrated, and already this has been honoured by conversions.

In Lutheran Finland, annexed by Russia nearly a hundred years ago, it was a surprise to find the Salvation Army at work. But as it was not a conquered country, and was only taken from Sweden, all its ancient rights and privileges were secured to it, foremost among them religious freedom. But even then, were the workers English, they would not be admitted; they are all either Finns or Swedes. At Helsingfors I had the pleasure of addressing one of their week-night meetings, the first I had come across in two years, in a large crowded hall. In Abö I could find no one at headquarters who spoke any language with which I was acquainted.

Elsewhere the only form of missionary work permitted in Russia is the spread of the Bible, and that is by no means little, for the British and Foreign Bible Society sends to Russia one-seventh of its total output. As the Russian Church has never committed the sin of Rome in forbidding the Word, but has approved its circulation, the Government provides free transport for the books and those engaged in selling them on all the railways, and in other ways affords facilities unknown in England. For several years past the Siberian exiles and convicts have been specially cared for in this respect, and three years ago a special order was issued in St. Petersburg providing that every one of them receiving a Bible on demand should have it entered on the list of articles for the production of which he and his warders are made responsible. Some 2000 BIBLES ARE THUS DISTRIBUTED YEARLY in Tiumen, which has hitherto been the great distributing centre, the colporteurs keeping the recipients' names, that the preservation of the books may be controlled.

Constantly I heard in those parts of the efforts in this direction of Dr. Lansdell and Dr. Baedeker, who have left light in many dark places. Dr. Baedeker especially was always spoken of with affection as a man who loved Christ and drew men to Him. One felt it an honour, when speaking or giving a book, to be linked, even in thought, with so faithful a servant of God.

Let it not be supposed that the Russian Church is dead because its members are for the most part sunk in the heathen worship of pictures, for amid it all the true light burns, though often hidden. The Russians are a religious people, and their zeal, if misdirected, has to be weighed by God, not man.

On account of the prevalent misconception in England as to the conditions of travel for foreigners in Russia, to which I was myself a victim before I went there, it is a pleasure to be able to say that nowhere did we meet with anything but courtesy and kindness from every class, official and private. One has only to be provided with a duly visé passport, and to hand this to the porters of the hotels on arrival, to be free to travel anywhere but in Central Asia. For the convenience of others, especially ladies, I am glad to say that an English boarding house, "The Private Residence," Nevski Prospekt 34, St. Petersburg, has been opened by a Christian lady, which I can most heartily recommend.

The Beggars' Church, Agra.

AMONG the many and varied philanthropic agencies begotten of Christianity, I question whether there is one of a more unique and interesting character than what is known as the "Beggars' Church" in connection with the Medical Missionary Training Institute at Agra, under the superintendence of Dr. Colin S. Valentine. Ever since Dr. Valentine settled in Agra, many years ago, a number of the poorest of the poor have been in the habit of going to the institute and in the compound, after a brief religious service, receiving alms every Sabbath morning. After a time, it became necessary to have a fixed hour when the assembled beggars might be simultaneously addressed.

Between seven and eight years ago they were formed into a church, the number in attendance varying, being sometimes as high as 400, though the average each Sabbath morning is about 160. It is a motley gathering of men, women, and children, embracing the maimed and the halt and the blind and the leprous—the very class of sufferers whom the Saviour when on earth delighted to minister to. One woman, who has never been able to walk, having, it is believed, been born a cripple, is in the habit of coming every Sabbath morning from Secundra, four miles off, the entire distance being overtaken on her hands and knees!

A more painfully touching sight, it is said, cannot be imagined. An Edinburgh gentleman who witnessed it said he had never seen the like anywhere, while an American lady, as she looked on, could not help bursting into tears. The lepers especially present a very miserable and in some cases even a sickening appearance. Many of these beggars, Dr. Valentine states, have no regular place to live in. During the hot season they lie about the corners of the streets, on the ground, and during the rainy and cold season under any shelter they can get. The gnawing of hunger is with them a daily and painful experience.

Though at first considerable difficulty was felt in securing silence and attention, it is not so now. No one could desire a more attentive audience. They are well instructed in Bible knowledge, and there are those among them who in their own simple way express their faith in and love to the Lord Jesus Christ. They are addressed by the native students in rotation, Dr. Valentine taking part in the exercises. It is an excellent training for the young men. One morning a native was telling the story of the blind man sitting by the wayside begging as Jesus drew nigh to Jericho. The speaker had no sooner explained that Jesus was as really present in their midst that morning as He was on that day on the way to Jericho, than the blind people present, of which there are always a considerable proportion, instantly and simultaneously cried out, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy upon me."

Though it is only a few pice that are given to each of these needy ones, the amount in the course of a year is considerable. To meet such outlay the help of friends is invited. It is specially required at the present time in view of the famine now prevailing in the North-West Provinces, and which threatens to result in disastrous consequences in no ordinary degree. One of Dr. Valentine's correspondents writes:—"I am very sorry to say that we are in the midst of a very severe famine. Hundreds of poor people are starving in the streets of Agra, and several have been found dead." It is calculated that at least fourteen millions of human beings will be thrown upon the hands of the Government. This state of things will doubtless swell the attendance at the Beggars' Church.

Contributions, either for this special object or for the relief of the famine-stricken sufferers generally, will be gratefully received by Rev. Dr. Colin S. Valentine, 77, Morningside-park, Edinburgh.

The Mending Guild has for its object the bringing together of those who are clever needlewomen anxious to earn money by their art, and those who have work to be done which the pressure of other duties forbids them doing themselves, and which they are loth to entrust to incompetent hands. Mending of every description is undertaken—Household and personal linen, dress repairs, and darning of all kinds. The manageress of the Guild takes the whole responsibility of the work put into her hands, and portions it out to those who are proved capable of doing it well. Further information may be had from Mrs. Norman, 3, South Parade, Trafalgar-square, Chelsea, S.W.

An Old Crusade Revived.

THE campaign which Mrs. Josephine Butler led in England against laws which take cognizance of public immorality, regulate it, and license it under stipulated conditions, secured its goal of victory by the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in 1886, after about twenty years of agitation. That triumph being won, nearly all of the many different societies of moralists who had helped on the victory were disbanded. But the Ladies' National Association remained intact, and merely transferred its energies to the British Continental and General Federation, founded by Mrs. Josephine Butler for abolishing State-regulated vice everywhere, and this work has been carried on up to the present day. A British committee of this Federation was founded in London some years ago, to maintain vigilance and co-operation in Great Britain and her dependencies.

In consequence of the continued publication of paragraphs in the newspapers, the desire of certain military and medical experts to get the Contagious Diseases Acts re-enacted in England and India has been forced before the British public. Of this movement alone, the Federation has taken but little notice, for it was only natural that those who desire laws to make vice safe and easy should mutter complaints when they were foiled. But in the last session of Parliament pressure was brought on the Government, and several Ministers agreed to give facilities for a committee of inquiry whether it was a fact that the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts had militated against the health of our soldiers in India.

This promise by the present Government was felt by the Social Purity party to be a concession to the enemies of morality. Therefore a public conference was convened by the Federation and held at Birmingham last Friday, to "protest against the efforts being made to induce the Government to re-establish in this country, in India, or in any part of the Empire, a system which is utterly antagonistic to the moral and religious convictions of the people of this country, which violates the personal liberty of women in the supposed interests of vicious men, and which has failed even in its professed sanitary aims"; further, to warn the country of this threatened legislative iniquity; and also to let the Government know that an organised cohort of moral men and women are prepared to immediately reopen the old campaign, if necessary, against this impending violation of their religious convictions.

These two meetings at Birmingham were a remarkable success. The old parliamentary leader of the movement, Sir JAMES STANSFELD, presided at the Conference, supported by other veterans in the repeal movement, and delegates from Purity committees all over the country.

As regards the speeches, Sir James Stansfeld said that if this promised Government inquiry was for the purpose of preventing vice, or lessening disease, or promoting morality, he would gladly have co-operated in it, but he could not countenance a sham inquiry. The highest possible Government medical authority, viz., the Army Sanitary Commission, had for many years emphatically and repeatedly condemned the whole system of regulating vice in India and England as a medical failure, and had also pointed out that to keep the soldiers healthy moral means must be used. That was the whole argument of the abolition party from the first. It was shown during the meetings that in Paris, Brussels, India, and elsewhere experts who desired Government licensing of vice were bound to admit that the systems at present tried had all failed to check disease, and that sexual licentiousness had everywhere increased. But while these experts only clamoured for more legislative restrictions and power over women, the party of morality steadily upheld the principles that personal continence was the safeguard against disease, and also that the function of Governments was to make the practice of vice difficult, and not by licensing vice make it easy and avowedly safe.

Letters supporting the movement were read from a number of the leading workers in the cause. The chief speakers were Sir James Stansfeld, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Professor Stuart, M.P., Mr. Geo. Dixon, M.P., Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Mr. Joseph Edmundson, Archdeacon Wilson, Earl of Moray, etc. Resolutions supporting the objects of the meetings were carried amid great enthusiasm, and without a dissentient voice. These will be forwarded to Lord Salisbury, the Leader of the House of Commons, the Secretary for War, the Secretary for India, and the M.P.'s for all the divisions of Birmingham. It is clear that if these threatened laws are re-enacted the Government will have to face the aroused indignation of the entire Christian community.

Tea-planters in India.

THE late Alexander Balfour, one of Liverpool's merchant philanthropists, lived a good deal abroad, and one of the consequences of his so doing was that he used to say that he wished every Englishman living abroad could return to the home-land for at least six months every five years for the sake of breathing afresh its moral atmosphere. There can be no doubt that one of the great drawbacks to life abroad, especially in a heathen land, is that it inevitably tends to moral deterioration. Such a state of things is all the more serious when it is unrecognised, and therefore not admitted.

It is no part of our object to reflect on the lives which many of our countrymen live, but rather to open up the question as to whether it be not possible to secure a better state of things in at least one particular. It is only too well known that evil lives are lived by some, but is it not quite possible that if some who are ready to reflect on such were similarly situated they might stray also?

Can nothing be done by way of helping our countrymen in India, especially those who belong to the great tea-planting community, to live lives more in keeping with even their own ideal of what an Englishman's life should be?

An influential company, employing scores of young men, sometimes inquires as to the Church relations of applicants before sending them to India. It appears very plain that this can, surely, only be in the company's interest, with a view to getting men of good character; and not in any way in the interests of the young men, when it is known that they will probably be sent far away from all Christian association, to districts where heathen principles and practices predominate, and the Sabbath will have to be practically disregarded. A young planter, after being some months in such a locality, scornfully said: "I would like to know why my church relations were inquired into before I was sent out!" To come to

A PRACTICAL ISSUE, we would urge that heads of firms at home should not discourage, as too many do, their assistants getting married, particularly in healthy hill climates. Marriage is God's own institution, and we are sure that those who discourage it are not wiser than God. For proprietors and directors to prefer fornication to marriage in their employés (which they must know is in too many cases the alternative), is a very serious position to take up, and involves responsibility for which they will be answerable to God. And aside from this solemn consideration we believe it is short-sighted policy even from their own business point of view.

We cannot but think that there are Christian shareholders in the different tea companies who must thoroughly disapprove of the position taken by some secretaries and directors.

The following is written by a planter of long experience, who is well qualified to speak upon the subject:—

"It is a fact that the directors of one of the largest tea companies in Darjeeling, having its headquarters in London, have passed a resolution that in future they will not employ married assistants.

"It is difficult to understand what can have led them to such a decision, because people who are acquainted with the estates and the gentlemen employed on them are not aware of the company having suffered by the employment of married assistants hitherto, while a good deal can be said on the other side of the subject.

"The company referred to has in former times had in its employment Europeans who have had a family without being married, and no objection was ever raised by the directors. The degrading fact is well known in the district, but of course the shareholders are probably not aware of it. The directors may not all know, but some of them certainly do, and in the face of these facts the resolution above referred to is nothing more or less than putting a premium on immorality.

"I have had a good many years' experience in tea-planting, and my deep conviction is that, even from a business point of view, immoral living on the part of managers and assistants is distinctly and seriously opposed to the interests of proprietors. It weakens their influence with the decent and respectable portion of the labourers, which, by the way, is the larger portion; it is the cause of numerous intrigues and consequent loss to the estate, and is often the cause of disease which incapacitates the wretched 'Christian' for the discharge of his duties to the company.

"Of course, the directors who have taken the step referred to would say that they never intended to encourage this state of things, but the fact is there, whatever the intention may have been.

"When men reach the age of twenty-five or thirty years, are cut off from society although living in a good climate, and have such an income as they consider would enable them, in the exercise of care and economy, to support a wife and all that marriage may involve, it is nothing short of sin to throw obstacles in the way of their doing so; and it is easy to see that most men thus debarred would consider that they are driven to immorality, and give their 'support' in another direction, especially as they know that in doing so they would not be opposing the wishes of the directors.

"Are there no Christian men amongst the shareholders who will rise in revolt against this state of things?

"It must not be assumed that immoral living on the part of tea-planters is universal any more than amongst any other class of men; nor must it be supposed that all tea companies carry out the policy of the one referred to: there are some companies which distinctly encourage their European assistants to marry whenever they themselves think they can do so, and there are some proprietors who resolutely set their faces against any of their assistants living in sin. I am quite sure that if proprietors and shareholders at home knew the real state of affairs a very different policy would be inaugurated, and every encouragement would be given to young men who are striving in the midst of very difficult circumstances to live pure and upright lives."

ISA. XL. 11. ACTS II. 32.

"ARE infants saved?" Have you yet a doubt?
What were a home with the love left out?
What were a shepherd who kept his sheep,
But left the lambs in the cold to sleep?
Nay, He will gather them warm to rest,
And carry the little ones on his breast.

Does He love as a parent wise and good,
Meeting all needs as a Father would?
Does He care for us as a Saviour dear,
In trouble proving his mercy near,
To spurn our darlings from mercy's door?
Nay, but his measure is, "How much more!"

Shall He care for a helpless infant less,
Than one whom He teaches her sweet caress?
While, "like as a mother," He comforts those Who seek the succour his hand bestows;
And more than a mother's, so tender-true,
Is the love and pity He bears for you!

Sweet baby voices can lisp his name,
Their simple faith putting ours to shame;
With glad Hosannas their garlands bring
To strew the path of the children's King.
For the fold below—or the fields above—
The lambs are sure of the Shepherd's love!

Be hearts at rest,—to his pierced feet,
We bring our treasures so dear and sweet;
The mother's longing his promise dowers
With dear-bought blessing for us and ours.
Love's royal charter was signed for them,
By ONE rough-cradled at Bethlehem!

Canning Town Women's Settlement.—

The annual meeting of the Women's Settlement, connected with Mansfield House, Canning Town, was held on Wednesday last week at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., who presided, said that the work had been well sustained during the year, and there was every probability of their activity being increased in the future. He hoped that sufficient public support would be accorded them to enable them to extend their sphere of influence. The annual report presented by the secretary (Miss Spicer) stated that one or two fresh departments had been added during the year, the most important of which was the work among the crippled and invalid children of the district.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, November 22.

"THE LORD TRIETH THE RIGHTEOUS."—Psa. xi. 5.
DO not be surprised if you are passing through trials. The righteous Lord is exercising you towards righteousness, that your face may ever behold his in unswerving communion. As the trainer of a young athlete will place him, now in one position, and again in another, to call certain muscles into play, to strengthen them by use, and to make the whole organisation supple and subservient to the impulses of the soul, so God tries us—to call into operation, and test by use, every faculty of our being.

Trials make the promise sweet.
 Trials give new life to prayer,
 Trials bring us to his feet,
 Lay us low, and keep us there.

There is a great difference between the temptings of Satan and the tryings of the Lord. The former are that we may fall; the great adversary takes pleasure in showing how weak and sinful we are, and in casting us down to destruction. The latter, that we may be led out towards faith, patience, courage, meekness, and other-worldliness. "Tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." Whatever spiritual power may be prepared for us; we are unaware of its value or helpfulness till it is called into exercise by trial. When once it has been summoned into manifestation, it becomes the invaluable possession of all aftertime. The night veils the sun that we may see the stars. O blessed sorrow, that makes Jesus real and glorious in our eyes.

MONDAY, November 23.

"THE WORDS OF THE LORD ARE PURE WORDS, AS SILVER TRIED IN A FURNACE OF EARTH, PURIFIED SEVEN TIMES."—Psa. xii. 6.

What a contrast is presented in this Psalm between God's words and man's! "They speak vanity, with flattering lip and double heart." God never flatters; his words are absolutely pure because they have passed through the furnace of his holiness, but they are therefore absolutely reliable and trustworthy.

As silver enriches its owner, so does the Word of God enrich its lovers. Nothing so strengthens the intellect, clears the judgment, enlarges the views, purifies the taste, quickens the imagination, and educates the whole man. The humblest day-labourer who imbibes the Bible becomes rich in thought and speech, and able to dispense his riches to others.

As silver is beautiful to the eye, so fair is the Word of God. After a boy born blind had been suddenly repossessed of sight through an operation by a skilful oculist, his mother led him out-of-doors, took off the bandages, and gave him his first view of sunshine, sky, and flowers. "Oh, mother," he cried, "why did you never tell me it was so beautiful?" With starting tears, she said, "I tried to tell you, my dear, but you could not understand me." So we need opened eyes, and then the Bible is more to be desired than fine gold.

As silver is pure, so is the Word of God, and it purifies. It has been the main purifying agent of the world. Though it deals with the corruptions of the human heart, it does so in such a delicate and holy manner as to excite within us something of the abhorrence of the Holy God.

TUESDAY, November 24.

"I WILL SING UNTO THE LORD, BECAUSE HE HATH DEALT BOUNTIFULLY WITH ME."—Psa. xlii. 6.

Here is the man who had sorrow in his heart all the day breaking into song. We do not find that his troubles were any less. The enemy was still exalted over him, and boasted of having prevailed; it seemed indeed as though he must soon sleep the sleep of death. But he never let go his trust. Whatever were his outward discomforts and trials he clung to his God and waited patiently for Him, with the result that out of his stormy griefs he built a Bethel, and in the midst of his anguish broke out into song.

When we are sitting under the shadow of severe trial, God can wrap us about with the garment of praise, and fill our mouths with song. Although the fig tree does not blossom, and there is no fruit in the vines, yet the soul may rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of salvation. You cannot starve a man who is feeding on God's promises, and you cannot make that man or woman wretched who has a clean conscience, the smile of God, and the love of Jesus in the soul.

When brave old Thomas Haliburton lost his much-loved son, he made this record: "This day has been a day to be remembered. Oh, my soul, never forget what this day I reached. My soul had smiles that almost wasted nature. Oh, what a sweet day. About half-an-hour after the Sabbath, my child, after a sharp conflict, slept pleasantly in Jesus, to whom pleasantly he was so often given... Jesus came to me in the third watch of the night, walking upon the waters... He stilled the tempest in my soul, and lo! there was a great calm." Ah, believer in God, do not look at circumstances, but at God; He will save thee, and thy songful heart shall abide in his Most Holy Place.

WEDNESDAY, November 25.

"WHEN THE LORD BRINGETH BACK THE CAPTIVITY OF HIS PEOPLE."—Psa. xiv. 7.

It is good to have an eye on the future, even though we get sometimes a little weary of waiting, and impatient of delay. Here a captive soul transports itself to the hours when its captivity shall be ended; and although it cannot altogether suppress the "Oh!" of longing desire, it dilates with ecstasy, on the outburst of joy that shall hail the Divine deliverance.

Let us look on and up. Bunyan tells us that the heart of the Pilgrim "waxed warm about the place whither he was going." A real lover of Christ, who knows something of the law of sin in his members, and of the dull weight of this mortal tabernacle, must have, at times, deep musings about his home, and his glorious inheritance. Paul was one of the most eager of workers, but he was ever dwelling on the blessed hope.

"When," exclaimed Baxter, "when, O my soul, hast thou most forgot thy wintry sorrows? Is it not when thou has got above, closest to Jesus Christ, and hast conversed with Him, and viewed the mansions of glory, and filled thyself with sweet foretastes, and talked with the inhabitants of the higher world?" Such devout anticipations do not slacken our work down here, during this little while. It is said of Samuel Rutherford that he was always studying, always preaching, and always visiting the sick, but it was he who exclaimed, "Oh, time, run fast! Oh, fair day, when wilt thou dawn? Oh, shadows, flee away! Oh, well-beloved Bridegroom, be thou to me like the roe or the young hart on the mountains."

THURSDAY, November 26.

"LORD, WHO SHALT SOJOURN IN THY TABERNACLE? WHO SHALT DWELL IN THY HOLY HILL?"—Ps. xv. 1.

This holy soul was not content to stand in the outer court without the sacred tent; he coveted to enter where the High Priest entered, and to live there. It was impossible then. The way into the Holiest was not made manifest. No ordinary worshipper might pass the Vail, and the high priest who passed it once a year remained but a few moments.

How wonderfully varied our experience may be. We have boldness to enter into the holy place, and remain there, by the blood of Jesus; and, by the enableings of his Priesthood, we may spend our entire lives under the consciousness of the presence and favour of God. We may even hear Him speaking and bidding us perform his errands, or stand in rapt communion.

This is not your experience? Then look carefully through the conditions which this Psalm enumerates. Perhaps you are not transparently truthful, or your tongue is not carefully controlled, or you are not perfectly honourable in your business dealings, or you do not know the power of the blood of Christ, as it cleanses from dead works to serve the living God.

It is worth any sacrifice to maintain this habit of indwelling the Most Holy Place. Ask Jesus to arrange it for you. He was appointed for us in things that pertain to God. Whenever anything in the inner life seems faulty and deficient, we may turn with unabated confidence to our High Priest, asking Him to adjust it, to bring us into the presence of God, and to keep us there.

FRIDAY, November 27.

"THOU WILT NOT LEAVE MY SOUL IN HADES."—Ps. xvi. 10.

This hymn is for ever sacred because of its application by the Holy Ghost to our Saviour's resurrection (Acts ii.). It was as though our Lord had stayed his soul upon these words as He left this world and entered the unseen. The last words He uttered were of committal to his Father, and then He commenced to traverse the land of shadow. The Apostle Peter says that He went to visit the spirits in prison. Whither He went is not material, it is enough for our purpose that He sang, as He went, this hymn of immortal hope. Sure that He was the Father's beloved, He knew that He would not be left in Hades, or suffered to see corruption. He was sure that there was a path of life somewhere, which God would show, which led into his presence, with its fulness of joy, and its pleasures for evermore.

Whenever you are stepping down in the dark, unable to see a hand's-breadth before you, and just letting the foot fall from step to step—it may be because of some act of obedience to conscience, or into the unknown and untried, or into death itself—cheer your heart with this holy Psalm. God will not leave the soul that absolutely honours and obeys Him. His way leads to the light through the dark, to the deathless through death, to the abounding usefulness through desertion and loneliness. Follow Him, He will show.

"She is sinking very fast," whispered an attendant in the dying chamber of a godly woman. "No, no," was the quick response of the departing saint, who had overheard the words; "no; I am not sinking. I am in the arms of my Saviour."

SATURDAY, November 28.

"AS FOR ME, I SHALL BEHOLD THY FACE IN RIGHTEOUSNESS. I SHALL BE SATISFIED WHEN I AWAKE."—Ps. xvii. 15.

To a good man, then, this is the world of dream and shadow, and death is the awakening. We are like men asleep in some chamber that looks toward the eastern sky. Outside is the day with its revealing beams, but our heavy eyes are closed to it all. "Here and there, some lighter sleeper with thinner eyelids or face turned to the sun is half conscious of a vague brightness and feels the light though he sees not the wealth of colour it reveals. Such souls are our saints and prophets, but most of us sleep on unconscious." But the moment is at hand when we shall awake and start up and declare ourselves fools for having counted dreams as realities when to the eternal realities we were oblivious.

When we awake we shall see God. Likeness is properly "form," and is the same word employed in reference to Moses, who saw the similitude of the Lord. We shall see Him as He is. There will be an outward revelation and manifestation of his lovely and holy character and it will satisfy us completely. The mind will be satisfied with his truth, the heart with his love, the will with his authority. We shall need nothing else, The weary pilgrim will have reached a goal that will more than compensate for all tears and pangs he has undergone.

"This life's a dream, an empty show;
 But the bright world to which I go
 Hath joys substantial and sincere,
 When shall I wake and find me there?"

For the Children.

"Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."

WE are pleading for the children
Cast adrift on life's swift tide,
Homeless, friendless, sad, and lonely,
Yet for these the Saviour died.
Will you join us in our pleading?
Seek some other hearts to touch
With the story of their sorrows?
Yours shall be the "Inasmuch."

We are praying for the children—
Orphans in a world of sin.
Waifs and Strays whose plaintive sobbings
Rise amid earth's ceaseless din.
Will you join us in our praying?
Lift this prayer to God above—
Loving Father, save the children,
They are Thine, and Thou art love!

We are toiling for the children—
"Feed My lambs," the Saviour said;
Scores around us, pinched with hunger,
Daily cry to us for bread.
Will you join us in our labour?
Help us dry the children's tears,
Help us dry God's summer sunshine
Warm and cheer their tender years?

We are fighting for the children;
Satan fain would hold them fast
In the haunts of vice and squalor
Where their childhood days are cast.
Will you join us in the conflict?
Christ Himself is on our side,
In his Name we claim the children,
In his strength we dare confide!

Pleading, praying, toiling, fighting,
For the children of to-day!
"Let them come," the Master urges,
Shall we not his voice obey?
Then, at last, our task completed,
Oh, the rapture ours will be,
As we catch the Saviour's greeting,
"Ye have done it unto Me!"

S. E. BURROW, in Night and Day.

The Twin Kittens.

THEIR names are Jack and Jill. They are twins, brother and sister. They are both black all over, from the tips of their little noses to the tips of their little tails, and are so much alike that it is difficult to tell one from the other. But, on closer inspection, you see that Jack's is a glossy blue-black, like a raven's wing, and Jill's is a somewhat rusty black, like an undertaker's man's second-best coat. But, though Jack's coat is glossier than Jill's, Jill's is softer than Jack's.

The twins are devotedly attached to each other, and have never been known to quarrel; very different from their crosspatch mother, a grey cat of foreign extraction named Grigia. They are always finding out new games. One of the most exciting is the waste-paper basket game. The first thing to be done is to turn the basket over on its side, and scratch out whatever is in it. Then Jill gets inside the basket, and Jack jumps on the outside and claws it round and round at a great rate. That is capital fun—a glorious coach ride with one inside passenger and one out.

But, though Jack and Jill are so much alike to look at, there is a marked difference in their characters. Jill is the most affectionate little kit I have ever known, and the most trustful. She will let me do anything I like with her, feeling perfectly certain I will not hurt her. She is very fond of jumping on my shoulder when I am reading or writing, and rubbing her little head against mine. Then, if I take her off and turn her over on her back, there she will remain, with her sixteen little black toes pointed towards the ceiling, perfectly still, singing her "wooden song," purr, purr, purr.

Jack is also very friendly, and never attempts to scratch or bite; but when I take him up he struggles a good deal, and has a timid look in his big handsome eyes, as much as to say, "Yes, master, I like you very well, but I cannot quite trust you, for I am sadly afraid you will let me fall."

Now, my dear children, don't you think we may learn some lessons from these little creatures?

One is to be kind to one another; to be always good-tempered, and never to quarrel. And then have you not noticed that, though little boys are usually stronger than little girls, little girls are sometimes more courageous, at any rate more trustful? Yes, that is it. And Jack and Jill remind me of two sorts of Christians. There are some who, though they are real true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and do love Him as their Saviour, are like Littlefaith in the Pilgrim's Progress. They have not yet attained to that "perfect love" which "casteth out fear." But there are others who know whom they have trusted, and are quite sure He is "able to keep them from falling"; so that with perfect confidence they can sing,

Sweet to lie passive in his hands,
And know no will but his.

Which are you like—Jack? or Jill?

Personal—A batch of letters.

Below I give some letters in which I am sure my young friends will be interested; as they read them, I hope they will try and follow the good examples set in them.

This is from a party of young people at Ardishaig, who sent a box of flowers for poor children nearly every week during the summer:—

"Dear Uncle Tom,—We have no doubt you will be glad to have a little note from us again. We intended writing after our last box of flowers. It gave us very much pleasure to read in THE CHRISTIAN from time to time the children's sayings, and their delight at receiving the flowers. The 'Old Hospital' children have got a box now for saving their halfpennies now that our flower season is over, and we with them are eagerly looking forward to sending them to you about Christmas time to enable you to gladden the hearts of some little ones."

A MOTHER SAYS:—

"Dear Uncle Tom,—I was very sorry that none of my children were able to do the 'Searcher' last week. My eldest daughter Nellie has not been well; she has grown so very tall, and is very weak, and ordered to lie in bed. However, the doctor gave permission to get up for half-an-hour to-day, and she has done hers, but felt too exhausted to write you, so I promised to do so for her. They were all so very pleased with their certificates. Arthur tries to do his writing so quickly that he often makes mistakes, and has to do it over and over again."

ANOTHER LADY SAYS:—

"I am thankful to say I have found three new 'nieces' for you, and I think you do not fully know what a blessing the study of God's Word may bring to those three homes. It requires a good deal of encouragement to induce the little girls to begin, and then to continue. I have two boys and another girl in view, and hope to have them soon."

A LITTLE GIRL SUGGESTS:—

"Do you not think it would be nice if each of your nieces and nephews were requested to pray for one another every Sunday morning, as the members of the Scripture Union do?"

ONE WHO RECEIVED A PRIZE WRITES:—

"You will be glad to know that since I received my prize I have got something far better, that is Jesus, for on the very night of the day I received my book I went with my father and mother to a Gospel meeting, and on the way home (after the preacher asking me if I was ready if the Lord Jesus should come), I trusted myself to Him, and I am so glad I did it."

WILLIE HOBSON.—You had better send your answers in an envelope with a halfpenny stamp. MARY CLARKE.—Very glad you and your sister are starting to answer the Searcher, but you have unfortunately commenced too late to be eligible for the competition at the end of December. ALFRED LLEWELLYN.—Thank you for your kind letter; your friend can send his answers with yours. MILDRED HAIG.—I was glad to have your letter. WINNIE SHAW and NANCIE PARKER.—Your papers were correct, but not neat enough to merit a star. Try again next week. AGNES JONES.—It is not necessary to write the questions. MILLIE PARRISH.—Your answers must be very well done to gain a star; try again next week. JOHN PEACE.—Your answers were very neatly written. FAN TROTTER.—You did not finish the questions. If you write neatly and make no mistakes, you will get a star. EDITH BADHAM.—Thank you for your pleasant letter. The prize competition will be on the last Thursday in December. E. P. S. HAYWARD—I deeply sympathise with you.

Missionaries in Algeria.

THE daily papers have reported the discussion in the French Chamber raised by M. St. Germain, the Deputy for Oran, in regard to what are termed the "English Methodists" and their evil deeds. It may, therefore, be well to give a few particulars as to the facts of the case.

For a number of years there has been more or less opposition to the work of the Mission in Algeria, the reasons assigned being mainly two. The first, that any attempt to preach the Gospel amongst the Moslem natives was calculated to stir up their fanaticism, and to lead to rebellion against French authority, or to cause disturbances which might call for the use of military force. The second was the false charge that we were seeking to set the natives against the French, acting as English spies, or selling gunpowder, etc., to the natives.

The first of these two objections, though groundless, was due to a not unreasonable fear. But our fifteen years' work in Algeria, so far as we are aware, without a single disturbance through native fanaticism, shows that the people appreciate the kindness of the missionaries and the consideration shown to their religious feelings, even when they have been taught that their views were erroneous. The charge on which the second objection is based of a want of loyalty to the French is absolutely without foundation. The untrue allegations made by M. St. Germain in the main refute themselves.

Disturbances are said to have ensued and the military authorities to have intervened. If this has ever been the case, we have never heard of it. Then the deaconesses are said to have purchased a house where they continued their teaching under cover of mystery. But no house has been bought by our workers in Algeria. One was built twelve years ago and, of course, the missionaries have always lived in houses. We are said to have established schools. This we have never done, as it is not permitted and would be stopped. Classes are held to teach the children Scripture and sewing.

The charge of a Kabyle expressing in his exercise book his desire to be a naturalised Englishman is pure fiction so far as the mission is concerned. In 1892, certain deaconesses are reported to have come to England as the result of a strong note from M. Waddington to Lord Salisbury. This was not the case. If any ladies returned, it was only in the ordinary way for furlough. Those referred to are evidently some friends not on the staff of the North Africa Mission. They are reported to have given food and money to twenty young Arabs. They probably gave some light refreshment to those who came to their classes, and they may have helped cases that they considered to be really needy. As to preaching that if England had Algeria she would restore the land to the natives and pay five or six francs a day to factory hands, this is only said to be the report of a single native, who, perhaps, took advantage of the naive credulity of his hearer to

HAVE A JOKE AT HIS EXPENSE.

The statement of the native who confessed to receiving powder from a missionary was false. Had it been true, then instead of being promoted, as he has since been, he ought surely to have been punished. M. St. Germain's assertion that an official had seized powder in one of the mission-houses is also absolutely without foundation.

We have several times assured the highest French authorities that we have sought to be loyal to them, and that we have never knowingly broken French laws, but that if we have done so unwittingly we desire to apologise. Further, that if there is anything we are doing that is not legal, on their pointing it out, we will immediately have the practice stopped. The missionaries seek to impress upon the natives the many advantages they have under French rule. We have promised that if any missionaries are known to teach the natives disloyalty to France they shall at once be recalled. We have every reason to believe that those at the head of affairs in France believe in our sincerity, and will treat us fairly; it is by lesser officials that troubles arise. No one has ever been able to prove against us any charge of disloyalty.

Livingstone College.

THE annual meeting of this institution was held on Thursday last in the Library of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding.

Dr. HARFORD-BATTERSBY made a statement as to the work of the College and of the Medical Mission carried on in close connection therewith. After reference to the opening of the new premises at Hamfrith-road, Stratford, E., various special meetings of the year were mentioned. Details of the course of instruction are furnished in the new report, while interesting extracts are given from letters which have been received from past students, showing in how many ways the teaching given at the College has proved practically useful. In some cases it is the minor surgery, the dressing of wounds, the arrest of hæmorrhage, etc., which has proved most helpful; and in other cases the knowledge of dispensing, of vaccination, or of the simple treatment of fevers, is referred to. Although the past year has not been without its anxieties with regard to finance, it is satisfactory to find that, through the liberality of friends, the expenses have been defrayed, and a small balance of £6 5s. 2d. remains in hand. In conclusion, the Council state that they "do not feel that the diminished numbers of the past year is any cause for discouragement. Never was the work of the College more highly valued than it is at the present time, and if at times obstacles seem to be thrown in the way, greater opportunities are afforded for faith and prayer." It appears that students trained at Livingstone College are including North, South, East, and West Africa, Persia, Central India, Bengal, Straits Settlements, various parts of China, New Guinea, Samoa, and North Queensland. These men are not called "Medical Missionaries," but are finding their medical and surgical knowledge of great value to them in the mission fields in which they are labouring.

Mr. T. JAYS (C.M.S.) gave an address on the Lord's work in West Africa, and illustrated in very telling fashion the need for medical knowledge—for the lack of which many valuable lives have been lost. Alas, there is no qualified medical missionary in connection with the C.M.S. on the West Coast—either at Sierra Leone, Yoruba, or on the Niger. A little knowledge may be a dangerous thing, but the training he himself received at the College had enabled him to save lives, and relieve much suffering.

The work of the East London Mission was next reported on. This Medical Mission was established in Shadwell, close to the notorious Ratcliff Highway, by Dr. Barnardo, eighteen years ago, and it has been continued ever since. For a considerable time a staff of deaconesses lived on the premises, and regularly visited the people, whilst a succession of Christian medical men, including Dr. Barnardo himself and Dr. Milne, a member of the Council of Livingstone College, carried on the medical and surgical work. As time went on, Dr. Barnardo found that he could not keep up the work, and eventually an arrangement was made by which the Mission might still remain in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, he being responsible for the rent and an annual contribution to the expenses, the chief part of the responsibility, both for the administration and for the funds necessary for its maintenance, being borne by the Council of Livingstone College. The Principal, Dr. Harford-Battersby, has acted as Medical Officer, assisted by Drs. McReddie and McAdam Eccles. The Mission is situated in one of the poorest districts in East London, and besides being an important auxiliary to the work of the College, is proving to be an invaluable evangelistic and philanthropic agency. 1,361 new patients attended during 1895, making in all 5,299 attendances. The possibilities before the Medical Mission are only limited by the funds at the disposal of the Council.

Dr. CARLESS spoke strongly of the importance of the Medical Mission, looking at it first as a doctor, and second as a worker for Christ. He urged that the present premises are dilapidated, and removal seems likely to be soon necessary.

An Evening with the Sailors.

ON Friday evening, Nov. 6, I went into the Sailors' Rest, in Ratcliff Highway, and found a company of not far short of 900 men present, seated at well-spread tables. After grace there began an onslaught on the good things that had been provided. While enjoying a cup of tea I had an opportunity of observing the guests, and getting in a small degree acquainted with some of them. There were, as was natural, a large majority of British, but in addition there were a goodly number of men from foreign parts, including Scandinavians, Spanish, Italians, Germans, French, and some East Indians. Typical sailors they were, some bronzed and fresh-coloured, stalwart men, who it was easy to see were of those who eschewed strong drink. Others looked pale and sickly, evidently not taking water to quench their thirst, and apparently troubled, in some cases, with pretty frequent thirst. They appeared thoroughly to enjoy the cup that cheers but does not inebriate, and to be merry and happy. Their behaviour was exceedingly good.

While tea was going on one of the late Richard Weaver's sons came in, and the men were quite content to stop the consumption of tea and cake and fruit while he sang and spoke in the hearty, frank way which, I imagine, must have characterised his father. His talk with them evidently left a deep impression. It was in the bright, happy style which sailors delight in, and was full of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Tea was soon finished, and an adjournment was made to the meetings. The English-speaking friends, to the number of about 150, had their room. The Scandinavians, the Spaniards, and others went to other rooms, and friends who could speak in their several languages did so. Mr. Conder (lately president of the Bombay Y.M.C.A.) was in the chair at the English-speaking meeting. Pastor Johnson (of Sweden), Rev. Mr. Pollard, Mr. Lines, and other friends gave brief, pointed addresses at that and the other gatherings. There was plenty of singing, in which the men joined very heartily, and soon after nine o'clock the meetings broke up.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac, who have charge of the Rest, devote much time and labour to make it really successful, not only as a pleasant resort for the sailor ashore, where he can get good refreshments at cheap rates, and a bright, cheerful place to spend his spare time in, but also as a place where the higher spiritual life is made, one may say, the main purpose of the whole work. Some of the sailors gave happy testimony, on Friday evening, to the power of the Gospel of Christ to save them, and it was good to see their bright faces, and to hear their word for Christ in the midst of their comrades.

About forty friends help in the good work. With the exception of the caretaker, all this is voluntary service. The expenses amount to about £400 a year. As I came away on Friday evening many thoughts came to me about what I had seen and heard, and I venture to hope that this brief notice may evoke the practical sympathy of your readers. Help in money is required, so are books, tracts, periodicals, and bags to hold books. I plead for these things, and, above all, for more prayer on the sailor's behalf and for blessing on the work of those who so freely give time and labour to bring him to love the Lord Jesus Christ. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. T. Isaac, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, E. A FRIEND.

Commander Ballington Booth when asked recently with regard to his methods of reaching the unchurched, said it was a mistake to think of them as confined to the slums; that they include a great number of lawyers, physicians, business men, artists, and even former ministers; thousands and millions of them have never given a serious thought to religion. In the effort to reach these, he said he would always scrupulously avoid sending to them any persons not qualified by actual touch with them and sympathy for them. He said there is incalculable harm done by sending among them people who have not a real, honest desire to help and bless and save them. "The churchless must find in those who bring the Church to them a burning, restless, and sincere concern to help."

THE LATE

Rev. Anthony Holliday.

THE ministry of the minor Methodist bodies is a field where much Christian work may be done, but where even an able man is not likely to secure wide public notice. The fact that ministers remain only a few years in a place prevents them from taking deep hold of local populations, and as the movements of their denomination do not rise to national importance, the actors in them do not become "the observed of all observers." Hence it is possible that the name of ANTHONY HOLLIDAY may be unknown to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN, though he was more widely known than most of his brethren, and did much good work in his day.

Mr. Holliday was born in Cumberland in 1837. When about fourteen years of age he removed to Northwich, in Cheshire, to be trained for the teaching profession. For a time he assisted an uncle, then became assistant-master in a grammar school, and afterwards opened a middle-class school on his own account. His course as an educationist was, however, only brief. The uncle was a saintly man, and his example and influence told powerfully—under God—on his young relative, who during a series of special services was led to decision for Christ.

No sooner had young Holliday consecrated himself to the service of Christ than he began to call sinners to repentance. A celebrated theologian used to speak of "the expulsive power of a new affection," but the new affections of a young convert have also an impulsive power. The love of Christ constrains them, and under the influence of this blessed constraint young Holliday entered the ministry of the United Methodist Free Churches, in the very year when the union of two bodies formed the religious organisation known by that cumbersome but expressive name. This was in 1857.

Mr. Holliday's first appointment was to Cheltenham, where he remained two years. In 1859 he was appointed to Shields, where the present writer made his acquaintance, and an intimate friendship resulted, which remained unimpaired till Mr. Holliday's death, a period of nearly forty years. Though only twenty-two years of age when he removed to Shields, there was no juvenility about him. Certainly he was not old-mannish; there was no preternatural gravity about him, but nothing had to be pardoned on the ground of his extreme youth. He was prudent, judicious, sober, though not solemn or sombre. Even then his opinion carried weight, and he was felt to be a powerful preacher. It did not need deep discernment to discover that he would become a man of light and leading in his own denomination. He remained six years on Tyneside, serving two years each in three different circuits. In 1865 he removed to Rochdale, then esteemed the Goshen of the Connexion.

In the first eleven years of his itinerancy, Mr. Holliday laboured in five circuits, but although he engaged in ordinary circuit work for other fourteen years, these years were spent in two places, Darlington and Huddersfield. He was then, by the unanimous vote of the Annual Assembly, called to the Principalship of the Institute for the training of ministers. Opinions may possibly differ as to the relative importance of the ordinary work of the Christian ministry and that of training young men. Dr. Chalmers, in the height of his popularity as a pulpit orator, did not hesitate to give up the pulpit for the academic chair; and his choice has been repeated at a later day by such men as Dr. Caird and Dr. Fairbairn. Mr. Holliday must have felt with these good men. He responded to the call, and entered on his new sphere in 1882, after a year spent in preparation.

Alike during this period of preparation, and after becoming theological tutor, Mr. Holliday by no means abandoned the work of preaching. During the thirteen years he filled the Principal's chair, he was engaged most Sabbaths in declaring the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. During that lengthened period all the ministers who received academic training passed through his hands.

In the work of tuition, Mr. Holliday had able helpers, and in maintaining discipline he was firm yet gentle. To many it is doubtful whether college life can be made conducive to of the mission at Lady Lane. He had a strong desire to be engaged in rescue work, and for twelve months he laboured not in vain. At the Annual Assembly in July, his friends were struck by his appearance. He gradually became worse, and died on Sunday, October 18. The day before his death, when the doctor left him with the remark, "I will come again to-morrow," the dying man said, "Doctor, I shall not need your services; to-morrow I shall be before the Throne."

Mr. Holliday was a good man of business, and gave proof of this when he was made Connexional Secretary in 1873, and in 1877 when elected to the Presidential chair. He reached this position unprecedentedly early in life, being only about forty years of age.

He took a deep interest in public movements. He was a firm abstainer and an earnest supporter of the U.K.A. Perhaps educational affairs occupied more of his time and thought than any other extraneous question. He was a member of Darlington School Board; in 1891 and again in 1894 he was elected on the Manchester School Board; and after his removal to Leeds, a vacancy occurring on the School Board there, he was by co-optation chosen to fill it. He was a very modest man, and, above all, a sincere Christian.

He loved his Master, and honestly tried to serve Him; and remembering his diligence, his constancy, his consistency, we need not hesitate to say—"He did what he could."

A Veteran City Missionary.

Mr. H. EHRLICH, the well-known worker among the Jews of East London, is a veteran as a missionary and a veritable elder in the host of L.C.M. evangelists. On Tuesday, last week, a meeting was held in the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, to celebrate the thirty-fifth anniversary of his entry into the London City Mission, and it was gratifying to hear from ministers and others a hearty testimony to the widespread influence of our friend's life and the true excellence of his work during an entire generation.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who bore witness to the devotion of the missionaries who had taken the Gospel to the Jews. Mr. EHRLICH read a statement on his work, indicating the changed attitude of the Jews in relation to the Gospel during recent years. He dwelt with special interest upon the work among the young, which is increasingly hopeful as the years go by. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. I. Levinsohn, A. Bernstein, C. T. Lipshytz, M. Nachim, J. Draper (rector of Whitechapel), and Messrs. G. Nokes and J. Rennie, all of whom spoke of the good work which Mr. Ehrlich had done during a long period of years.

Lambeth Ragged School Society.—The fifty-first annual meeting of this society was held on Tuesday, Nov. 10, at the Clarence Rooms, Coldharbour-lane, Brixton, Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., in the chair. The report recorded a falling away from the high-water mark reached during the Jubilee year, but it was not so great as might have been feared. The greatest need was more workers. The average attendance at the Sunday-school was—morning, 110; afternoon, 268; evening, 695; teachers, 34. The various agencies had been carried on with success. The membership of the Beaufoy Institute had risen from 150 to 210. The chairman held that ragged schools are of high value to the State. He wished the society every prosperity. Addresses followed by Rev. J. Carnegie Brown, and the assistant superintendent, Mr. T. J. Briant. Rev. F. B. Meyer said that it was impossible to keep ragged schools ragged, for when the principle of Christianity began to have an influence on the young, the rags began to disappear.

growth in godliness. It is feared that the race is often intellectual merely, and that spiritual life is apt to deteriorate within college walls. It is not only fanatics who have this fear; the greatest friends of ministerial culture must acknowledge that there are dangers to religious life in bringing many young men to live together. God "sets the solitary in families," and where the restraints of family life are withdrawn, greater watchfulness is necessary on the part of individuals. We have reason to believe that during Mr. Holliday's term of office the conduct of the students was without reproach. The Principal treated the students like his brothers or his sons, and he lived in their affection and esteem.

The term of service in the Principalship is six years, but twice the Assembly renewed Mr. Holliday's appointment. At the end of his twelfth year he intimated that he would only serve for another year. Rev. Richard Chew was designated as his successor, but ere the year had passed away, he was called to the higher service. On Mr. Holliday's leaving the Institute, he went to Leeds to take charge

The Blackdown Hills Mission.

SPEAKING a few days ago in Bognor, Mr. W. J. H. Brealey stated that his father, Mr. G. Brealey, had intended to go out as a missionary to the heathen; but while in correspondence about his passage, he was asked if he would go and take a meeting in a cottage: he did so gladly; and four persons came, all four were converted. They asked him to come again. "Yes, if you will each bring one more." They did so; and these others all found Christ. Again he was offered a meeting on similar terms, and the place was filled, many being converted. So a poor woman said, "You must stay here and be our teacher." He replied, "Nay, I am going to preach to the blacks." Said she, "We be black sinners; you must come and preach to we; we be your blacks." The inquiries as to passage having miscarried, he saw the hand of God pointing to this Blackdown region as his sphere of labour: and in it he lived and was permitted to do a great work, as our readers well know. The work spread, and resulted in the establishment of day as well as Sunday-schools and a large amount of Gospel work in very dark parishes, which still goes forward.

Mr. Brealey also showed how the hand of God was evident in the provision of funds for the work. On one occasion a bill had to be met for fodder. He prayed that the amount needed might be sent him. On the day he wanted to pay it, a lady, who had been a subscriber previously, sent him a cheque for £5 5s., remarking that when she wrote "Five" her pen stuck in the paper, and she thought, "instead of pounds, I'll write it for guineas." The bill proved to be £5 4s. 6d.; and in acknowledging the money, Mr. B. told her that it had sufficed, and sixpence over, to pay a bill which was just due. Delighted to find that she had been so minutely guided in sending the cheque, she enclosed in her reply "two guineas more, as sixpence seemed so small a sum to leave in hand."

That the hand of the Lord is in the work now, as in the past, is abundantly evident from the new report of the Blackdown Hills Mission. In addition to a regular work in the six Mission Rooms open in connection with the Mission, the Gospel has been carried by means of tent-itinerations into needy villages around. Mr. Brealey says, "God has been with us during the year, and the various meetings and agencies have been continued all over the Hills, with much to cheer in many ways—albeit there is always enough to keep us humble, watchful, and prayerful. The Gospel and other services are, as a rule, well attended—in some of the stations exceptionally so—which, in large measure, is due to the diligent earnestness of our beloved helpers, who so heartily co-operate with us, notwithstanding exceptionally rough roads, often rough weather, and very long journeys—many over twenty miles.

The "Annual Narrative" (just issued by Morgan & Scott. 4d.) gives a number of "cases of interest," showing the dense darkness prevailing in many hamlets and out-of-the-way places, and the power of the Gospel among the ignorant and sinful. Indications are also given of the direct and manifest leading of God's hand in various ways. "Often, when we have been absolutely penniless for the needs of the work, has the Lord cheered us by sending the exact sum to meet some special requirement—causing our hearts to rejoice afresh. Many a donation in the past year has come just at the very moment it was needed, proving the love and faithfulness of our God. We trust Him still to supply." The superintendent is Mr. W. J. H. Brealey, Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

The Aleppo Free Dispensary is carried on by Dr. Altounyan, who, on the breaking up of the medical school connected with the American Missionary Hospital at Aintab, was led to settle as a private practitioner at Aleppo in 1890. With the aid of a few friends he opened a dispensary for the poor, with one or two beds for the reception of patients needing special care and treatment. In the evangelistic work Dr. Altounyan has had the assistance of the Armenian Protestant pastor, and also of the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Owing to the disordered condition of Turkey, this part of the work has been suspended for some time. Subscriptions in aid will be acknowledged by Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. sec. Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

The Scripture Gift Mission.

THE publications of the Scripture Gift Mission have always been characterized by a beautiful page and a bright cover, but recent improvements as to the exterior make them books which no one, however indifferent to Scripture truth, would think of declining. The new covers are in several colours, artistically produced in the highest style of lithography; and the scenes and objects are striking to the eye, as well as useful in illustrating the Gospel story, which is, in fact, the purpose of the various engravings accompanying the sacred text.

The Mission has already published the Four Gospels and the Epistle to the Romans in English; the Gospel of John in Spanish, Portuguese, Modern Greek, and Arabic; and the Gospel of Luke in French. Other portions are in preparation. The type is readable, the paper is good, and the illustrations—which are from original drawings by the well-known artists, H. A. Harper and J. Clark—have been engraved in first-class style. The object of the Mission is to promote the circulation of the Scriptures, the reading of one of these Illustrated Gospels, so unconventional in appearance, having frequently led to the study of the complete Bible in its familiar form. The Mission has no paid agents; the bulk of each edition has been forwarded as free grants to Christian workers at home and missionaries abroad, numberless testimonies having been received as to their usefulness as an evangelistic agency.

Some idea of the eagerness with which the portions are received, also of the blessing attending their distribution, may be gathered from the following extracts from a letter by a lady working at Caracas, Venezuela:—

"Two persons to whom copies of St. John's Gospel were given afford much reason to hope that they are converted, the illustrated book being the first rays of truth that reached them. One was a woman over sixty. She told us that through all her life (as far as she could remember), she had been seeking something for her soul which she did not find until these words of God reached her. The other incident is that of a family who, on receiving a Gospel, took it to the confessional to find out from the priest what sort of people they were who gave away such good books. The anger with which the question was met, and assurance of the book being 'wicked,' aroused attention still more. An elderly woman in the same family gives us reason to hope that they have found what they sought for in Jesus alone. The field in Venezuela is almost untouched, and by every threat Rome tries to make the people fear reading these Scriptures."

The secretary of the work, Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C., informs us that Mr. Clark is now in the East engaged upon pictures for the illustration of additional portions of God's Word. We trust that the Mission will be enabled to bring out without delay the whole of the Gospels in all the languages already covered, also the Acts and Epistles of Peter (particularly for Roman Catholic countries), as well as the Psalms, the Proverbs, and other Old Testament books.

The Foreign Aid Society was established in 1840 for the purpose of aiding Protestant churches on the Continent in their endeavours to evangelize the Roman Catholic populations in the midst of which they are placed. The new report states that during last year the Society was enabled to send increased grants to the various societies of France and Belgium, which it has for upwards of fifty-five years assisted. The association secretary of the society is Miss Sophia Burgess, Readleaf, Streatham Common, S.W.

The New "Welcome Home."

THE familiar Welcome Home in Ratcliff Highway, with its fo'c's'le, where so many have been led to the Saviour, has not disappeared. It is still in full activity, but in addition a new Home has been opened in Barking-road, close to the Victoria and Albert Docks. The sailors, following the ships which go into the great docks, are gradually forsaking the Highway and congregating further east. Those who seek the sailors must go after them, and hence this new place. The Home includes two houses and three small shops, thrown into one, repainted and renovated; with dormitories, coffee-bar, reading and prayer rooms, and larger room for services. It ought to prove attractive to men beset by many perils.

The opening of this Home took place on Wednesday week, when a large company of friends assembled to show their interest in Miss Child's work. Mr. W. H. SEAGRANT, who presided, rejoiced in this extension, and called for special prayer that, as in the old fo'c's'le, so in this place, many souls might be born to God.

Miss CHILD made a statement as to past blessings and present hopefulness. Many friends had written expressing warm sympathy, and she was thankful to find many co-workers among seamen present to manifest their sympathy. She did not feel that at Bow Creek she would be treading on anyone's toes, for sailors are numerous, and there is no similar Christian work for them in the locality. We learned on inquiry that £180 is needed before the end of the year to clear expenses and place the whole in working order.

Lady ASHBURTON, who has rendered substantial aid towards the new Home, now declared it open.

Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH gave an address, in which he showed that the neighbourhood is singularly bare of Christian work of this class. While, however, breaking new ground, the workers will have the old message and weapons, for they have learned the power of the Gospel, and realise that they may reckon on the faithfulness of God.

Addresses followed by Col. Macgregor, Col. Morton, Messrs. John McCall, M. H. Hodder, Robert Burn, J. T. Isaac, R. Scott Moncrieff, Mrs. Hill, Miss Heath, and other friends deeply interested in such service for seamen. A hymn, specially written by Mr. W. Luff for the occasion, was sung to the tune of "Hold the Fort." The first verses run thus:—

Launch! it is the Master bids it,
Launch upon the deep!
Cast the nets in deeper waters,
Wider oceans sweep!

Chorus—

Launch the bark! for He is with us!
He is with us still!
Cast the nets! His grace will fill them;
Cast at his blest will.

Blessings on each new endeavour;
Blessings, day by day.
Grant the heavenly fishers wisdom:
Guide their opening way.

The Love of Christ,

"Which passeth knowledge."—Eph. iii. 19.

'Tis passing strange, thy love of me
Shouldst bring Thee from thy heavenly throne,
To die accursed upon the tree,
To make a sinner all "thine own."

Sweet love, that gave such love, that I
May love Thee back with what is thine;
So to thy heart a joy supply,
Through this weak feeble love of mine.

Sweet love, in which my heart would dwell,
Loving to love, thy love the best;
For what is mine, O Christ, to tell,
Compared with thine in which I rest?

I love this love, and more would know
Of the vastfulness of its sea;
How Thou couldst love a sinner so,
And find thy joy in loving me.

S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

Upton Park.—A week's mission has been held at Plashet Gospel Mission, Park-road, by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, of Bethesda, Dalston, with the results of several being added to the kingdom, and a wave of deep spiritual blessing to all believers. More have been since then brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and the work is still growing.

Hop-Pickers in Hampshire.

IT was my happiness two years ago, and it has been a gratification to me this year, to attend evangelistic services among the Romany and other hop-pickers at Perrylands, Bentley, near Farnham. The chief concern of the occupier of these grounds, when the hop-pickers are gathered for their autumn work, is not merely to entertain the people with even Scriptural picture slides and a little Bible talk, but to unfurl the banner of salvation and to commend the "Word of the truth of the Gospel" of Christ by preaching to the hearts and consciences and faith of the people, with a view to their real spiritual conversion.

This is a most important consideration for the harvesters of hops that come to the gardens from different quarters, as they seldom, if ever, attend the public worship of God in their home localities, and certainly the Romany in their wanderings through the country generally ignore Christian assemblies. Any collection of the hop-picking multitude should quicken Christian people, and especially those who organise measures for their moral and religious welfare.

At the Perrylands Gardens this aim is well to the fore in worship and Gospel song, especially on Sunday evenings, when there is Scripture reading, exposition, and evangelistic appeal. The services this year were held in a cart-shed, comfortably fitted up, and situate near the farmhouse. The kind occupier of the farm and his family threw themselves heartily into Christian efforts, and were assisted by the sons and daughters of Mr. Mason. The services were conducted two years ago by the rector and Rev. J. B. Blackmore, of Ventnor, Isle of Wight, and the latter also conducted them this year.

Both adults and youngsters were well conducted and attentive, and gave evidence that strictly Gospel handling, kindly, earnestly, and familiarly done, is quite appreciated, and even welcomed, by the unconverted groups that are found in and about the hop gardens. The Gospel still retains its winning power when presented in a Christ-like spirit and way, and the people at these meetings were grateful for the interest shown in their spiritual welfare.

It is hoped that, by God's blessing, some lasting good was effected; and it is fervently to be wished that the Christian workers amongst the hop-pickers would to a much larger extent, and in every case, make their opportunities, which are of such brief duration, special times of most eager evangelistic effort to save the souls of these people. Merely moral and semi-religious musical recreation, in place of the preached Gospel of Christ, which is God's own radical remedy for rescue from sin and from the doom of sin, are far too secondary to form a considerable feature of Christian missionary endeavour amongst our hop-pickers. Qua Iboe Mission.

THE mails to hand give details of exciting scenes which have occurred at Okat, the new station of the Q.I.M. and in the territory of the Ibibio tribe. It appears that a representative of the Niger Coast Government had visited the district and held a palaver with the native chiefs in order to induce them to trade with the Europeans and also to put a stop to several of their brutal customs. Less than twenty-four hours after the conference, a human sacrifice was offered by the people to their Ju-Jus. This led to the return of the commissioner, accompanied by two planters. The natives at first fled, but finding these gentlemen unarmed, they returned and, instigated and led on by their king, made a most treacherous attack on them, an attack which would have ended fatally, but for the intervention of some friendly natives.

Troops were brought at once from Old Calabar, and as the natives showed no signs of putting aside their hostility, the town of Impok was shelled and burnt. The town of Okat, where the mission house is situated, was spared through the intervention of Mr. Kirk, the missionary, and Mr. Smith, a planter who resides in the district. On the day the mails left, the natives of all the surrounding towns had consented to sign an agreement promising to discontinue their cruel customs. The workers believe that what has happened will lead to the furtherance of the Gospel, and ask prayer that these events may be overruled to this end.

Silent Sufferers.

"THE Lord sends along a bit of bread for them that trust for it." So one of our poor friends recently assured us. She had lived in one neighbourhood for many years, and was well known and respected, but with a reticence one often finds amongst the poor, her terrible straits, owing to the cruelty of her husband and her own afflicted condition, had been carefully concealed. We listened in pained surprise as little by little the story was at last told to us. "I remember the first time you ever sent me any help; I had not tasted any food for three days, but only God and you know of my hunger." We recalled how at the time she referred to, our suffering sister was under hospital treatment, and though our knowledge of her was only limited, we had felt impelled to send a trifling sum to her. We ransacked our scanty stores of clothing for sorely needed garments, and through the assistance of an invalid friend secured a letter of admission to a convalescent home for this patient, suffering woman. There she has gained a measure of strength which has enabled her to take a position of trust where she will be raised above such cruel want as she has realised in the past.

Here is another sufferer in the grasp of an incurable malady. In this case it is the husband who has been stricken down. The wife has come to the front and works to support the family. Her hours of labour are cruelly protracted, and the pay pitifully, unrighteously small. The little children must be left untended while mother is absent, and the sick father is racked with anxiety about them and the toiling wife. On receiving a trifle to help towards the inexorable rent, he says, "This is Christianity indeed; all the more welcome seeing as it isn't parish," he adds with a grim touch of bitterness.

The winter is almost upon us, and presages of a severe season are not wanting. Warmly clad, with glowing fires and well-spread tables, we are yet not invulnerable to biting cold, keen winds, frost and rain. But what of those who buy their bread and coal and other absolute necessities of life in penny-worths, not knowing how or when the next purchases will be made? What of those who face all weathers to earn the scanty pittance that barely keeps body and soul together? God help them! is our constant cry. Will our friends help to bring the answer to that cry? ANNIE F. PERRAM.

38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, London, N.

From Miss Annie Taylor.

I AM now (Oct. 28) in Calcutta. I much enjoyed the journey from Yatong to Darjeeling; I walked the whole way, staying at night in the native houses, and thus having opportunities of telling the Gospel message. At Kalimpong, Dr. Ponder kindly put me up; I was so glad to get to know his wife.

The conference at Darjeeling has been a time of real blessing. Mr. Gregson stayed for three days at the manse; thus I got to know him, and he has promised to pray for me and the work every Sunday. It was indeed grand to be there in the house with him. The Lord has taught me a fresh lesson of love and trust.

I have bought the whole of the hut at Gnatong for 300 rupees. The ground, of course, does not belong to us. The old woodcutter is making it more comfortable. Miss B. Ferguson seems very happy at Yatong alone. I will return as soon as I can get all the needed things sent to Kalimpong, so as to take them on with me to Yatong.

I am staying at the Y.W.C.A. here in Calcutta, and find the home comfortable and the friends very kind. We all look to the Lord to do great things here.

A Swiss Professor claims to have solved the problem of making wine without alcohol. Fresh juice of grapes is placed in air-tight bottles, which are deposited in a vessel containing water heated to 153 degrees Fahrenheit. The heat kills the particles necessary for the development of alcohol. This pure juice of the grape can be kept for years.

Liverpool.—A correspondent of The Methodist Times says that there is considerable stir at present in the churches over Temperance matters. A united mission has been held, which has been most successful, speakers of every church being found side by side. Only the other week one firm of distillers sent to Liverpool 16,000 gallons of Irish whisky. It is difficult to realise the real significance of figures like these.

Homes for Sandwich Men.

THE third anniversary of the Bessbrook Homes, which is worked on the lines of an Industrial Mission, was held on Friday last, at 39, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, the building being taxed to the utmost to accommodate the number of friends who gathered to express by their presence their deep sympathy with the objects of the mission.

Mr. G. MAYNARD, the president of the Institution, said the work of the Homes during the past twelve months was of an eminently satisfactory character; while he could not report any extension in housing accommodation, the process of consolidation was most gratifying. The two Homes, that in Queen-square and that at 167, High Holborn, are now full, furnishing living and sleeping accommodation for 107 inmates. Numbers of men had to be turned away every week for lack of room. The dinner given to 900 sandwich men at the beginning of the year was fruitful in the main object aimed at, and many of the men had been gathered into the Homes, where, under the influence of the Gospel meetings and the strengthening companionship of some fifty soundly converted comrades, they came over on the Lord's side.

The business of the Homes has very considerably increased during the year, and the wished-for goal of being able to find employment for every inmate has been more nearly approached, but the self-supporting point of the Institution has not yet been reached. Here the speaker earnestly appealed to the many friends who had gathered to use their influence with the circles in which they moved to obtain work for the men. Some seventy of the 107 are total abstainers, and out of these fifty are grand object lessons of the power of Christ to save and keep to the uttermost.

Several interesting testimonies followed, in the course of which it appeared that one large firm alone had been so pleased with the first man sent them from the Homes that they had taken three others and placed them on their permanent staff at good salaries, besides employing some twenty others in temporary work.

An appeal for work was made considering the approaching winter, and an urgent request was made for cast-off clothing, shirts, mufflers, etc. This Mission supplies writers for out-door work, in addition to addressing envelopes, wrappers, etc., on the premises, and the delivery of same by hand from street to street.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE society recently issued an appeal for funds to defray the current expenses of the work. Some instances of misfortune which had overtaken certain young women were given, and in response one morning a contribution was received from an anonymous donor, who said, "For the poor girls, with a prayer that our heavenly Father may indeed bless them and save them to eternal life, I from a more fortunate sister." The Seven Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge for 240 young women and girls require many such contributions to enable them to feed, clothe, house, and instruct the large number of friendless and unfortunate inmates who are being trained for respectable positions in life. Our "more fortunate sisters" who have been shielded from the temptations that have overwhelmed others may well come to the rescue of those who but for such homes would be left to perish.

At least £500 in new contributions is needed. Readers who can help may communicate with Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W., who will send reports and other papers relating to the work to any address on application.

Gospel Work in New Zealand.—A good work is going on in the far north of the North Island of New Zealand. Mr. H. E. Fell, formerly City missionary in Liverpool, settled at Pahanae, Hokianga, some years since, and has evangelised the whole district for 100 miles round, finding an open door at every home, the settlers being poor, scattered, and generally deprived of the comfort of regular services. Three small assemblies of believers now break bread on the Lord's day. The young men of Mr. Fell's family conduct two Sunday-schools. Supplies of tracts, picture texts, and good magazines, may be sent to Mr. Fell, addressed, Opononi, P.O., Hokianga, N.Z.

J. M. M.

Filling up the Ranks.

GOD can make losses into gains. The work of the Manchester City Mission seemed to sustain a loss just lately, when Miss Burns, a devoted worker, especially among poor lost girls, went away to the soldiers at Gibraltar. This lady, besides prison-gate mission work and other things, had for some time managed, under the City Mission, a small receiving home, to which poor girls could be brought at any hour. The closing of this, on her departure, threatened to be a serious loss, but the Lord is beautifully changing it into a gain. (One more proof that workers sent into the foreign field do not weaken the Church at home.)

A few weeks ago, while one of the missionaries was holding a service in a large common lodging-house in Red Bank, one of the lowest parts of the city, the lodging-house keeper's wife knelt down before all her lodgers, a wild and vicious set, and sought and found peace with God. Her husband followed. They wanted to do something for God, and Mrs. J.'s heart yearned over the girls in the crowded lodging-houses, some "fallen," or on the brink, others comparatively innocent, with nowhere to go in an evening except the streets and the common kitchen. A smaller house close to hers was empty: she and her husband proposed to the City Mission to take it and fit it up as a shelter and evening home for the girls, Mr. J. helping with the rent.

Two ladies, engaged in business during the day, are devoting their evenings and spending Saturday and Sunday nights at the place, to receive any poor girls brought in by the helpers of the Mission, who patrol the streets till late on those two nights each week. These ladies have both had experience in similar work. Anyone who has thought about the position of girls in cities must know the value of such a shelter.

The new place was opened recently, the long, low room, cleaned and fitted up by loving labour, being crowded, mostly by the Mission workers, but the men and women of the neighbourhood, drunk and sober, came in and out, listened so earnestly some of them, and three held up their hands to signify their wish to be prayed for. Mr. George, the missionary for the district, has won their hearts, and says he has not yet had a rude word, though surrounded by some of the worst people in the city. The opening meeting was led by Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlaw, in the absence of Mr. MacGill, the superintendent of the City Mission. E. K.

Ragged School Union.

LORD COMPTON, president of the Ragged School Union, writes:—"The Council of this institution find that they have as great need as ever for help in their work. The efforts of the teachers, who give their services free in nearly 200 schools and Missions, are bringing about most satisfactory results. On all hands are proofs that the tens of thousands who have passed under their influence have derived permanent spiritual and intellectual benefit.

"The Union have always kept before them the truth that the poorest of the London children must be trained to become loyal and Christian men and women, and have kept pace with the times in all matters affecting the best interests of the little ones. Many of the local institutions depend almost wholly on the Union for support, and Holiday Homes are sustained where thousands have their yearly rest and change. The crippled and afflicted children are being specially cared for, and it is hoped that by degrees more may be done for them than in the past.

"The Union works heartily with the authorities of the Board and Voluntary schools, and supplies clothing and boots to the ragged, also food during the winter months. On the one hand, there is want, suffering, neglect, and privation; on the other is practical help without indiscriminate charity, and loving sympathy combined with religious instruction. The work is so extensive, and the expenditure so heavy, that it is with confidence the Union appeals to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for pecuniary aid, so that all that is possible for the poor children's welfare may be undertaken and carried out without hindrance or delay. Contributions should be sent to myself, 51, Lennox Gardens, W., or to the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C."

The Daysman.

WE are not to insist that Job foresaw the evangelical light, and felt in all its fulness the evangelical meaning of the Gospel; but there are strugglings upward, there are dumb instincts, there are conjectures that come very near to revelations; there are gropings that mean prayer; and surely He is the wise man who sees in all the way of human education the germs of things, their beginnings, their first indications, and who watches them advancing like an ascending sun. Thus viewed we have no hesitation in declaring that there is now a Daysman between God and us. There is one Mediator between God and man—the Man Christ Jesus. He is able to lay a wounded hand upon God and a wounded hand upon man, and to bring God and man together in righteous and eternal reconciliation. The poorest man may engage this Advocate. His eloquence is free to all. He takes up the least prayer, the soul's first effort in supplication, and enlarges it into a prevailing plea. The weakest believer that hangs upon Him hangs upon the Rock of Ages.

DR. PARKER.

Seed for Sowers.

TO a large number of readers, outside the circle of her own friends, the author of THE BRIMS-COMBE LEAFLETS and THE BRIMS-COMBE BOOKLETS is known by her writings; and we think there must be other Christian workers who would be glad to scatter seed so ready to the hand of the sower, and so reliable. The publications which lie before us are not in any sense uniform. Several are literally leaflets, with temperance verses and other matter suitable for broadcasting: five are penny books, on various topics.

"Recollections of a Grandmother" (4d.) brings vividly before us some of the old-time customs which even the grandmothers are beginning to forget. Whilst these are good in their way, our interest has chiefly centred on two recent and larger additions to the series, Nos. 12 and 13, which strike us as being specially calculated to be useful. "Colonel Verner and his Friends" (6d.) is a pamphlet we should like to put into the hands of many who would perhaps reject an ordinary tract; and the manner of it is such as should appeal to educated persons, and men of what is called, rightly or wrongly, "the better class."

But it is refreshing indeed to read of one officer after another asking, in dead earnest, "What must I do to be saved?" And the ring of glad certainty with which such an inquiry is in these records repeatedly answered is truly heartening. It would be a good work to give this booklet to officers, and indeed to any to whom it is desirable to present the truth in a clear and yet attractive manner.

"Lieutenant Stephano Schultz" (4d. each, or 3s. per dozen) is, in some sort, a sequel to the other pamphlet, and is correctly described by its sub-title, "His Talks with his Men on Popery." The talks are natural, lively, and undoubtedly telling; some good blows are struck at cruel, false Rome.

Though published by different firms, the pamphlets can all be obtained, separately or otherwise, from Mr. Collins, Bookseller, King-street, Stroud, Gloucestershire.

Alingsas, Sweden.

ABOUT two years ago Gospel work was begun in Alingsas, Sweden, a room being taken for holding the meetings. God blessed the effort, and now the room is too small. In the beginning of last year a church was formed consisting of sixty members, and these have called as their pastor Mr. C. F. Johnson, who has been in the foreign mission field for the last twenty years.

Mr. Johnson is now in England trying to secure help towards building a plain wooden chapel or Gospel hall, to hold about 500 people. A plot of ground has been obtained and paid for, and friends in England have rendered some assistance. About £150 more is required to proceed with the undertaking. Pastor Archibald G. Brown has consented to receive money in aid. His address is 22, Bow-road, E.

Rev. W. H. Aitken at Eastbourne.

FOR the last twelve days Mr. Aitken has been holding a very encouraging mission at Christ Church, Eastbourne. This church is situate in the poorer part of this well-to-do and fashionable watering-place, and is a long way off from the more opulent parts of the town. This renders it all the more satisfactory that there should have been such excellent gatherings in the mornings to listen to his addresses on the Spiritual Life, which many Christians have found exceedingly helpful. It is an interesting fact that the bicycle has contributed largely to this result. Numbers of ladies who would not otherwise have been able to attend, have found their way down on "wheels," and the "Rising Sun" coffee-house, next door to the church, has been quite a sight, so great have been the number of bicycles committed to the charge of the officials there.

Large congregations have assembled night by night, and a goodly band of workers have found active employment in the after-meetings. On Sunday night an overflow meeting had to be held, which was taken by Rev. Jas. Nunn, who is assisting Mr. Aitken in the work amongst the young, with very encouraging results.

A very sorrowful event cast a shadow on the early days of the mission. Rev. Jas. Stephens, who was taking the work amongst the children during the first days of the mission, was summoned home by telegram to the death-bed of his eldest daughter, but before he could arrive her call had come. She was a young lady of much promise, and a great help and comfort to her father in his laborious life. When told by her mother, on the morning of her departure, that she was not likely to be with them much longer, she replied quite calmly, "I am quite prepared to go, but I don't like the thought of leaving you all." She was spared the pain and suffering that often accompanies even a rapid decline, such as hers was (brought on by typhoid fever). Towards the middle of the day, feeling faint, she asked the doctor if he thought she was going to faint, and, ere she realised what was happening, she had "fallen asleep." Earnest prayer is asked for her dear father and the family that they may be supported in this very heavy trial. Our readers will peruse with interest the following lines written by Mr. Aitken on the sorrowful event:—

IN MEMORIAM.

Lines on the death of Alice Stephens.—Nov. 10, 1896.

Rest thee, beloved! Since He bids thee sleep
We will not grudge thee rest, nor doubt his love,
Who folds thee in his bosom, while we weep,
New-born into that Sabbath world above.

Rest thee, beloved! No more weary hours
Of mortal languor, no more waning strength!
Weakness is left behind, the victor powers
Of immortality are thine at length.

Rest thee, beloved! We had fondly thought
Long years of earthly service should be thine;
And human love with patient care had sought
To train thee for the use of love Divine;

But rest, beloved! Service ends not here;
Sweet restful service in thy home above
Awaits thee, with thy Master ever near—
The full-grown ministries of perfect love.

Rest thee, beloved! Lay the precious seed
In God's own acre, watered with our tears;
Till, "raised in glory," it shall upwards speed
To swell the harvest of the accomplished years.

God has thee, our beloved, and we leave
Our darling in his hands, not in the grave;
Till his glad advent shall our loss retrieve,
And He gives back the treasure that He gave.

GOD AND THE HEART.

The heart must be made a temple to God, wherein sacrifices do ascend; but that they may be accepted it must be purged of idols, nothing being left in any corner, though never so secret, to stir the jealousy of our God, who sees through all.—Leighton.

ALL-SUFFICIENT GRACE.

Letters to the Editor.

THE NEED OF FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—Seeing the letter "Prayer for France" in THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 5, I write to suggest that Christians not only band for prayer for France, but for free Gospel work all over the land, covering the towns and villages that the McAll Missions and individuals have as yet not touched. It was told by one who knows well the need and the open doors, that there are 30,000 towns and villages in France that have never had the Gospel. It is now a nation falling into infidelity, and yet many—even among the priests themselves—feel the need of something and someone to help. That someone is Christ, that something is the simple Gospel cast freely over the land.

Just now at Avignon—where the floods have surely spoken to many hearts, and where some of the poor were drowned before the boats could get to them, and one soldier of the rescue workers was also drowned—one found all too willing to receive books and tracts. Perhaps they know their need better than we do; but who will band together to meet it? And surely if all Christians pray together for this, He who is wise in heart and mighty in strength will make his ways plain, and "supply all wisdom" and all "need." One can prepare the ground by the free distribution of tracts and Testaments, then have halls for the preaching of the Gospel. There are in many places earnest pastors who long for this, but cannot do it themselves. They would help evangelists and evangelists would help them.

As one who has worked quietly and freely, in a feeble way, for some winters, I admit it is the Roman Catholics who have helped me most to spread the good news. They seem to understand that it is not controversy but Christ—not to change them from Catholics to Protestants, but to show that Christ died for them, loves them now, and is seeking them from the glory; and if they once saw Him in all his fullness, the dead things, which so clog and wither, would drop off. Satan is strong, but God is stronger. The Holy Spirit is the Holy Spirit of Pentecost, therefore "Go ye out." One could easily search out the workers in France and the ground untouched. We want a "China Inland Mission" for France. Why not have it?

ONE WHO KNOWS THE NEED.

RHODES AND SCHREINER.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, S. J. Helm, is most reckless in his attack on these two gentlemen. Had he known all South Africa as well as many others he would have known that up-country natives have a dread of the magistrate, and when the native has done something very wrong that he has to be punished for, he and his friends will ask that his master, or the missionary, or those who are over him, will themselves thrash him rather than put him in the power of the law. This has happened in my own experience, and I have no doubt is what Mr. Schreiner alludes to. This explanation will, I hope, satisfy you and your readers.

Bear in mind that the native who loves his master or missionary looks on himself as his "child," with a perfect right to punish him; it is, however, very rarely done. Your correspondent attributes to Mr. Schreiner something that he could never have said. "Wholesale condemnation of the coloured people" could never have come from him. He has spent all his life for their good, disregarding wealth that has been within his grasp had he given up his work for the salvation of others. By last mail only he wrote me from Worcester, Cape Colony: "I wish my sister Olive, who writes of the natives and coloured people of the colony as a criminal class, could be present at our meetings with them where they come in hundreds. She would then see that they compare very favourably with the peasantry of England and Europe, but of course she knows nothing of missionary work, and ignores it altogether." I might say much more, but forbear. Please feel quite free to make any use you like of this communication.—I am, yours truly, J. NEWBERRY.

Maes Mawr, Whyteleafe, Surrey.

November 9.

[In the Rev. John Mackenzie's "Austral Africa" (2 vols., Sampson Low and Co., 1887), many references are made to Mr. Rhodes in earlier years which would throw considerable light upon the events of the past year or two. Mr. Mackenzie's book is a record of facts, rather than of feeling, and is certainly necessary to an intelligent understanding of Mr. Rhodes and his later developments.—Ed.]

THE DRINK CURSE.

DEAR SIR,—There seems to be a callousness among the Christian people of our country about the ruin which drink is making around us. I feel compelled to call upon them to pray. The efforts put forth, though they have accomplished much, come far short, and are feeble, compared with the enormous need. All the while licences for its sale are being renewed and increased, and prisons, workhouses, asylums, and charitable institutions are full of victims, not to speak of the misery in thousands of homes, both of rich and poor. What is the only, unfailing remedy in such a case? I believe it is prayer. When the Almighty Father sees that we really care, his hand will be outstretched to save; and when He works who can hinder? Of old a people cried by reason of cruel bondage. He heard, and came down to deliver. This is a worse kind of slavery—worse even than perishing under the hand of a tyrant like the poor persecuted Armenians. Many sufferers are crying for deliverance; but the whole country has never been roused to a united effort of prayer.

That the Christian and moral sense is slowly being educated in the right direction we cannot doubt, but in the meantime the ravages are going on at an awful rate, and a heritage of evil desire is being handed down to the next generation.—Yours truly, S. E. R.

Bessbrook, Ireland.

DELIVERANCE FROM POPERY.

DEAR SIR,—I value greatly the teaching of THE CHRISTIAN, because foundation truths are firmly held in it, and also a catholic spirit. With "A French Missionary" I believe that the thought laid before you in the paper "Prayer for France," in your issue of November 5, comes from God. It should be extended to "Prayer for England and France."

I have cut the printed letter out of my number, intending to put it upon cardboard, and have it before me as a daily reminder to intercede thus for England and France. I should be very glad to hear that others would seek to pray daily in the same way.—Yours faithfully, A CONSTANT READER.

SIR,—I have read with just accord your correspondent "A French Missionary's" remarks as to the necessity of united persevering prayer to God, that the designs of the Jesuits, whether disguised or otherwise, may be frustrated. Near my business is a so-called church of England and its clergy house. For all practical purposes these clergy may be considered Romanists. They wear long gowns in the street, have crosses suspended from their necks, are called "Father," and their ritual is very "high."

But what strikes me is their crafty policy of getting at the parents by (to me) their fulsome petting of the children. In the tram I see the senior "priest" with one or two dirty children sitting on his knees, and he kissing them. The same effusions of affection may be seen in the streets. One day a small boy was holding a horse when the priest passed, and the boy pulled his coat, and in return was lifted up and kissed. The conditions attached to these greetings are, that in return for kisses, sweets and pence, the children attend Sunday and other classes.

One day I spoke to an intelligent man who had been a Lutheran, and warned him against the probable harm his children would get by going to the schools; but I found the mischief already done, that through the caressing of the children the parents had been entrapped and were ready to defend Romish practices. By thus getting at the children they have a nation of future parents growing up, to increase and multiply and so carry out their deeply-laid plans of getting England again under the cruel yoke of Rome. We need indeed to work, watch, and pray that the evil may be arrested.—Yours sincerely, T. L.

Gospel Literature in Spain.—Mrs. Lawrence wishes it to be known that workers in the Gospel in Spain, or Spanish-speaking countries, may, by applying to Mr. Pundsack, Plaza Buensuceso 3, Barcelona, receive a parcel of a novel and beautiful Gospel tract he has recently published, especially suitable for distribution in the streets and "cafés." On one side are the texts in large type, "God is love" and "For God so loved, etc.," and on the other side a clear and simple exposition of these texts. Mr. Pundsack has within the last few weeks put a large number of these tracts into circulation in Barcelona and other places. A few days ago he had a copy inserted as a fly-leaf in one of the most widely circulated daily newspapers (16,000). In the same paper he had an advertisement printed (headed by the text "God is love") to the effect that anyone desirous of receiving a superior copy of the tract might do so by applying to Mr. Pundsack at his residence.

Boyce Memorial Home, Bordighera.

THE number of children in the Home has been larger this year—always more than thirty. At the present time we have twenty boys and eleven girls. The girls' dormitory is too small to accommodate them, so we have been obliged to use for sleeping purposes a small sitting-room. I am thankful to say that all are quite well, and the greater part of them give us much satisfaction.

The demands for admission are always numerous. We have accepted this year two orphans from Livorno and three from San Remo. One poor boy (whose father is dead, and who has been cast off by his mother) has been taken from the streets of San Remo, and a generous English lady has undertaken to pay us £12 a year for his support. Another English friend has very kindly become the benefactor of one of the little orphans from Livorno. For the others, we are waiting that God shall raise up a loving one to befriend them.

We are obliged to refuse many demands, as we can hardly take more than thirty children, and even this number brings with it grave responsibilities. It is now Nov. 3, and we are in need of 3000 lire (or £120) to finish the year! And all our children are in need of winter clothes. We must wait till it pleases the Lord to send us the means to enlarge our Home, and accept a larger number of little ones. We are expecting at the end of November two poor orphans from unfortunate Armenia. They are coming to share with our little Italians.

Information about the work may be had from Col. M. Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres.

DEAR SIR,—The appeal on behalf of this Mission has already received response in promises and contributions to the amount of £1224. I have recently been on a short visit to Buenos Ayres, in order to arrange details which required personal attention. While there I paid debt on the Boca Mission property to the amount of £1010.

The various activities of the Mission are thriving. Some new and suitable workers have been added to the staff already engaged, preparations are being made for increasing and extending the operations and influence of the work, and there are many signs telling that the approval of the Master is resting upon it. For the balance of the debt, and for necessary improvements and extensions, about £700 is still needed.

I have returned to England for a short time in the hope that gifts to this amount may be entrusted to me for this purpose. It is most desirable that promises and gifts be received before the end of the present year if possible. Should the amount needed be received by that date, the mission schools, and the general plan of work for the new year could be arranged on a larger scale than has been possible in the past. With sincere gratitude for help in the past, I venture to invite further co-operation in this work.—Yours faithfully, WILLIAM C. MORRIS.

Peterborough.—A public-house letting at £80 a year was bought at auction by Messrs. Allsopp for £5700. This extraordinary price represents, it is estimated, about £700 for the house, and £5000 for the licence.

The Armenian Pastor, Krikor Behesnlian, addressed a crowded meeting in the Victoria Hall, Norwich, a few days ago, when he gave a painfully interesting account of matters in Armenia. He also gave a Gospel address at the Evangelistic service on the previous Sunday evening, having preached in the morning at the Trinity Presbyterian Church (Rev. M. A. MacAllan). We had the privilege of giving a donation to the fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of the Armenian martyrs. Our dear friend made a most favourable impression on his audience, and rendered good service to the cause he has at heart by his simple narrative of terrible facts. ROBERT ADCOCK.

Bracondale, Norwich.

Miss C. Wilkes, local hon. sec. of the Ladies' Armenian Work Party Committee, writes that Mr. Behesnlian addressed meetings at Great Yarmouth on November 12. She says: "It was with thankfulness to the Giver of all we receive, that we were able to give back to Him £21 for the carrying on of the Christian Orphanage at Marsh. Surely the wife who is undertaking this lovely ministry during the absence of her husband, needs not only our prayers but the help of willing workers and givers to enable her to provide for these orphans."

EXETER HALL.

THE Committee are earnestly desirous, during the coming winter, of largely extending their efforts to bring the Gospel to the young men of London. To this end, they seek the assistance of Christian men who, constrained by the love of Christ, are willing to devote their leisure to this truly missionary work. Believing that there are many such residents in or near London, who, owing to family life and surroundings, have no need of the social advantages of the Association, but would be willing to work on its spiritual side alone, the committee cordially invite their help, without requiring that they should become members of the Association in the ordinary sense, or that they should make any definite subscription. All particulars will be given on application to the General Secretary, at Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

BRIEF NOTES.

A very successful delegates' meeting was held at Darlington on Wednesday evening, Mr. J. W. Alnwick, hon. sec., presiding. Messrs. F. Robson, Stockton; F. Shorter, Middlesbrough; J. C. Moor, W. Savage and G. Knowlson, York; J. W. Atkins, Scarborough; H. Simpson, Bishop Auckland, and others addressed the meeting.

At Gloucester, on Tuesday evening, there was a pleasant gathering of the members of the Association with those of the Tewkesbury Association. Mr. W. Creese (one of the hon. secs. of the original Y.M.C.A., founded in St. Paul's Churchyard, 1844), Mr. W. Hind Smith, and Mr. Wynne took part in the proceedings.

The Birmingham membership campaign resulted in the addition of no fewer than 169 names to the list—118 seniors and fifty-one juniors. The Association arranged for the week of prayer no fewer than a hundred sermons to young men. The Leeds and the Sheffield Associations were next in this matter, having arranged no fewer than seventy sermons each.

The Lincoln Association arranged a mission by Rev. Joseph Simpson, vicar of Waddingham, for the observance of the week of prayer, Nov. 8-15. Dean Farrar preached under the auspices of the Association in Lincoln Cathedral on Sunday, Nov. 8, to nearly 3000 persons, and addressed a mass meeting of men in the Corn Exchange in the evening, when the audience numbered between 1500 and 2000.

The week of prayer has been observed in London—by holding evangelistic meetings every night, conducted by ministers of the various churches in the city. These were well attended, and there is reason to believe that some young men have been brought to Jesus. A meeting for Christians, which was started some time since on Saturday nights, is proving a means of rich blessing, as are also the morning prayer meetings.

The half-yearly conference of the South Midland District Union was held in Rickford's Hill Hall, Aylesbury, on Thursday. At the devotional meeting Rev. R. Fletcher, of Aylesbury, delivered an address. In the afternoon reports from the various branches were given, followed by a paper on "The Inner Work of the Y.M.C.A.," by Rev. C. W. Pearson, vicar of Walton. After an adjournment for tea, during which a short address was given by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., a public meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, the chair being taken by the president of the local branch.

The Anglo-American Association, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, is marking its progress by great spiritual activity. Its religious meetings are much increased in attendance—not merely because of its being the winter session, but owing to the activity of the work. The membership, full and associate, is rapidly growing. The treasurer has offered 1,500 francs towards the deficit, providing a similar sum is forthcoming. The members have contributed over 250 francs of the sum needed. Mr. H. E. Kinsley, the secretary, is much encouraged by signs of progress and interest.

At the opening meeting on Sunday in connection with the week of prayer, the secretary, Mr. Arthur Hill, of the Kingston and Surbiton Association, reported that since the annual meeting, seven months ago, when there was a debt of £140 on the accounts, largely upon the purchase and repair of the property at Kingston, the council, in answer to a general appeal, had raised £100, leaving only £40 to clear. The committee have added seventy members to the Association, and had the joy of bringing several young men into Christian discipleship during the same period. All sides of the work are in a very healthy condition.

The Bishop of Chichester, presiding at the annual meeting of the Chichester Association on Thursday evening, said in the course of his address: "I have seen the work of the Y.M.C.A. in the North of England, where I have come from, and know of the immense good it does. The Association works on [1038] the only true lines on which we can help young men, viz., those given to us in connection with the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ. Whilst it thus adheres to the true principles that must underlie all Christian work, I am glad that it represents a manly form of Christianity. The agencies employed show that it does not neglect the bodies of young men, any more than the minds or the spirits of young men. It seeks to make a young man better for everything in life—for his daily duties, for his pleasures, and for everything in which he takes part. A question I would wish to put is this: 'Can you not do still more even than you are now doing for the young men who are as yet outside?' There was a large and representative audience at the meeting.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE opening meeting of the Macclesfield branch was held on October 23. Mrs. Heaton Smith, who presided, gave a very helpful address on "Memory."

The annual meeting of the Fowey branch was held on November 4, Mrs. Treffry presided, and brought forward a good report. Rev. J. S. Flynn gave the concluding address.

The members of the Newport Y.W.C.A. held their annual social meeting on November 6, Mr. W. Bain presiding. An interesting programme was given and a pleasant evening spent.

The opening session of the Kirriemuir branch took place on the 6th inst. Mrs. Lendrum, of Kirkliston gave a bright address, Mrs. Wedderspoon followed with an account of the work among the deep sea fishermen.

A successful meeting was held on November 1 in the National Schools, Avonmouth, on the occasion of the first anniversary of that branch. The report was a most satisfactory one. During the year twenty-six new members were enrolled.

The annual meeting of the Chiswick branch was held on the 4th inst. Rev. S. Bell presided. The report showed that the work had been one of steady progress, but there was unfortunately a deficit of £22 10s. owing for rent. The claims of the institute were advocated by the chairman in his address.

At the Association Rooms, Torquay, Mrs. Mallock opened a two days' bazaar in aid of the funds of the Institute. Colonel Appleton referred to the good which had been achieved by the Institute during the thirty years of its existence, under the able care and superintendence of Miss Coombs, who originally founded it.

The anniversary meeting of the Stratford branch was held on the 5th inst., in the Town Hall, the chair being taken by Mr. G. W. Ball. Miss Hickling read the report. The Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird spoke encouragingly to the members on their individual responsibility, basing her remarks on Romans xiv. Rev. H. S. Mercer, of Coventry, also spoke in a helpful manner.

Two meetings on behalf of the Brighton branch were held in the Royal Pavilion, on October 27, presided over in the afternoon by Mr. MacLean, and in the evening by the Countess of Chichester, who has recently accepted the office of president. Colonel Goldie read the financial statement, and Mr. Geo. Clarke recommended the purchase of a new house for the Brighton Association.

The annual meeting of the Norwich Association was held on the 5th inst., Canon Patteson in the chair. Miss F. Miller, secretary, presented the annual report. The total number of members was 226. Great interest has been shown by the members in the work of the foreign mission field, and articles of clothing have been sent out to India. Miss Pigott spoke of the necessity for larger premises, as the work was progressing.

A conference of the representatives of the local branches was held on the 31st ult. in Bath-street, Glasgow. Mr. Merriees presided, and spoke on the difficulties in the way of progress, and the virtue of quiet waiting. Mrs. Brown-Douglas spoke on the subject of the Scottish organisations. There were now 300 secretaries of Scotland. Lady Overtoun also addressed the representatives, and urged the importance of enthusiasm and sympathy.

The annual soirée in connection with the Arbroath branch was held on the 4th inst., presided over by Councillor Melvin. Miss Annie Lowson, hon. sec., read an interesting report on the work of the Institute. The total membership reached 203. Both the temperance branch and the flower mission were flourishing. Conferences held in Perth and Dundee had been found stimulating and helpful. The junior branch had an average attendance of fifty out of seventy-eight members. Altogether the work of the Association was in a highly satisfactory condition.

Almost every post is bringing additions to the Coin Collection. Three hundred and thirty sheets have at present been returned filled with contributions, and these, with collecting cards, have brought in £506—a very substantial and welcome addition to the fund for purchase of new premises. We are asked to remind secretaries that a very large number of sheets have still to be returned, and as it is not desired that any branch be left out, it is hoped that those who have not yet begun to collect will do so at once, and send in the amount as quickly as possible to Miss Ada K. Habershon, 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

Christian Endeavour.

THE South Staffordshire C.E. Union has held its inaugural meetings in West Bromwich.

A conference of the Greenock and District Union was held last week in the Temperance Institute, Rev. John Young, president, in the chair. Reports were given regarding the work of the past year, and the work at present on hand for the 1897 Scottish Convention.

A united gathering in connection with the Portsmouth Union was held on Monday in Gosport, presided over by the president, Mr. C. H. McKay. An address was given by Mrs. J. Harrison, of Landport, on "Missionary Spirit, and the Necessity of its Cultivation."

The first convention of the Northampton Union was held at College-street Chapel on Thursday week. Rev. J. J. Cooper, vice-president, presided. A paper was read by Mr. A. E. Rodhouse on "The Advancement of Christian Endeavour Work in our Town." At the public meeting Rev. W. H. Towers, of Manchester, gave an address.

A successful and well-attended convention was held under the auspices of the Halifax and District Union on Thursday week. The afternoon conference and the evening meeting were both held in the Stanary Congregational Church, whose energetic pastor, Rev. T. Maine, is an enthusiastic Endeavourer. This is the first C.E. Convention that has been held in Halifax, and no doubt much good will result from it.

The annual convention of the Nottingham and District Union was held on Saturday week. In the afternoon Shakespeare-street Chapel was crowded for a workers' conference. The evening meeting was held in the Tabernacle, where there were from 1400 to 1500 young people assembled. The chair was taken by Rev. J. Clark, pastor of the Tabernacle, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. W. Walls and D. Maldwyn Jones. Mr. Hibbert, the secretary, read the annual report, which showed that eighty-six societies were enrolled in the Union, with the total membership of over 3000.

The Church Missionary Society issues a booklet of missionary collects, for use in family prayer, arranged in connection with the Society's "Cycle of Prayer," and extending over an entire month. An esteemed correspondent commends to prayerful hearts, not for monthly, but for daily exercise of soul, the following petition for the Mohammedan world: "O Lord God, to whom the sceptre of right belongeth, lift up Thyself, and travel in the greatness of thy strength throughout the Mohammedan lands of the East; because of the anointing of thy Son, Jesus Christ, as thy true Prophet, Priest, and King, destroy the sword of Islam, and break the yoke of the false prophet Mohammed from off the necks of Egypt, Arabia, Turkey, and Persia, and other Moslem lands, that so there may be opened throughout these lands a great door and effectual for the Gospel, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, and the veil upon so many hearts may be removed, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

"The Church in Relation to Nonconformity" was the subject of a lecture delivered a few days ago by Archdeacon Sinclair before the Church of England Young Men's Society, at the Leopold Rooms, St. Bride-street, E.C. The utterance was a thoughtful, survey, conducted in a courteous spirit. The Reformation meant the full recognition of liberty of conscience and worship. Two facts pre-empted future divergencies. One was that the Reformation did not affect all the countries of the Continent; and, where it did, the reforming movement did not take the same ecclesiastical lines as in England. It was absolutely certain that the Roman as well as the Calvinistic types of religion would reappear in England, and this proved to be the case. With all the mistakes which the Church and the State had committed in the past with regard to the Nonconformists, Churchmen should be tender and respectful towards those who differed from them. While holding fast to their own views, they ought not to act as if no other view was possible. They ought to be looking for points of agreement instead of points of difference. They should cultivate the friendship of Nonconformists, and in every town and village throughout the country make it felt that there was no social ban on anyone who did not subscribe to the national form of religion. In God's good time barriers would be broken down, prejudices discarded, and misunderstandings cleared up.

Irish Notes.

By the death of Miss Peacocke, of Kiltrush, the Clare Methodist Mission has lost an earnest worker and a practical and unselfish labourer.

During the past fortnight earnest and successful Gospel meetings have been conducted in the Methodist Church, Enniskillen, by Mr. James Dixon, of the Belfast Central Mission.

The representatives of the London Wesleyan Mission, Revs. Peter Thompson and W. D. Walters, visited the North of Ireland last week, and were well received. They addressed meetings in Portadown, Lurgan, Antrim, Newry, and Dublin.

Dr. Barnardo addressed a large meeting in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, on Thursday evening, 12th inst., and gave interesting information as to the working of his Homes. Since January, 1895, fifty-one children of Irish birth were received into the Homes.

The Dublin branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has been in existence for seven years, and during that period it has interfered in about 4000 cases of cruelty, and at present it requires two additional inspectors to enable it to undertake all the work which it ought to do.

The Women's Temperance Association and Hibernian Band of Hope Union have held a Gospel Temperance Mission in Dublin, conducted by Miss Brewster, of London. Owing to a number of special missions going on the same week in the city and neighbourhood, the attendance was not so large as we had anticipated. Miss Brewster subsequently visited Athlone, Tullamore, Mountmellick, Waterford, and Dungarvan, and afterwards proceeded north to hold meetings in Ulster.

Scottish Notes.

THE Dundee Y.M.C.A. is directing more attention to its social department, a special parlour in the premises having been devoted to that purpose.

At a conference in Edinburgh in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird emphasised the pressing need of more lady workers in India.

The "Monthly Visitor" Tract Society of Scotland is doing a good work. In Edinburgh there are 800 distributors and 40,000 to 50,000 copies of the tract are scattered every month.

An anonymous donor has lately given £1000 to the endowment fund of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland. It is desired to raise this fund to £100,000, so as to extend the scope and usefulness of the institution.

Mr. A. J. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, last week presented the claims and work of the Alliance to a large company assembled in the Young Men's Christian Institute, Aberdeen. Mr. Arnold's address created much interest.

Notwithstanding some disappointments in the speakers, the recent eighth anniversary services of the Edinburgh Wesleyan Mission were full of encouraging interest. Nearly £400 were subscribed at the week-night meeting.

It was stated at a meeting in Glasgow last week that the West of Scottish Auxiliary of the McAll Mission in France had collected £1000 for the work of the Mission. Rev. C. E. Greig, of Paris, gave an interesting account of the operations of the society in evangelising among the French people.

Meetings in connection with the Scottish Christian Union of the B.W.T.A. were held in Edinburgh last week. The Union has nearly 170 branches, with some 14,000 members. At a mass meeting stirring addresses were given by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Agnes Weston, Mr. C. J. Guthrie, and others.

The annual conversazione of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Society, last week, was an occasion of inspiring interest. The chairman, in the course of an excellent address, said that the Bible was the main instrument used in connection with the work. Anybody who went to the City Hall on a Sabbath forenoon would see the abundant material on which they had to operate.

At the opening in Glasgow, last week, of the winter session of the Protestant Institute of Scotland, Prof. Orr gave a lecture on "The Church of Rome Tried by Its Own Tests"—unity, holiness, catholicity, and apostolicity. On all these points the lecturer constructed a formidable indictment against the Romish Communion. In presiding, Dr. Elder Cumming remarked that open opposition to the arrogant claims of Rome is not so popular as in bygone days.

Requests for Prayer.—For special services by Mr. Arthur Klein, in Hengler's Circus, Hull, Nov. 22 to 27.—For eight days' united mission by Mr. Wm. Forbes at Worcester, to begin on Sunday, 22nd inst.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD.

THE anniversary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society has taken place. Sermons were preached in several of the churches, and the Society seems to be receiving increased support. Rev. John Barton, the central secretary, and Rev. Canon Denton Thompson were the deputation.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, gave the address last week at the Missionary Union. His testimony at the recent convention was the means of blessing to many.

A meeting on behalf of the Church of England Zenana Society was held last week in Oxford. Miss Frances Johnson gave an account of the work of the Society in the Fuhkien province of China. She said that, as a rule, they were welcomed by the people. Perhaps the most important branch of the work was that carried on in the schools. In this province there are probably twelve or thirteen thousand Christians out of a population of twenty millions, hence there is much need for more workers.

The Silver Star Society.

THE Silver Star Society is an unsectarian Mission Aid Society. We learn from the report presented at the sixth annual meeting, at which the Right Hon. Earl Compton presided, that it is extending its operations in many directions. Evangelists and soloists are being sent to conduct Gospel services, also Gospel and temperance lantern lectures.

A noble band of Christian men and women voluntarily render their service, so that the hands of Christian workers may be upheld whilst the battle rages against sin and the powers of darkness. A useful work is being carried on by branches in East, North, and South London, also in Yorkshire. Young women, as well as young men, are trained for lantern service, and for visiting the sick and destitute and dying, and many blessed results are recorded. The society is seriously hampered for want of adequate funds.

The hon. sec. is Mr. Walter S. Robbins, 14, Little Ilford-lane, Manor Park, E.

Milan Beehive Orphanage.

THE report of this Orphanage says:—"God has blessed us in the conversion of some of our girls, and others are giving signs of the workings of God's grace in their hearts. Some of our girls have been rescued from very sad surroundings, and have thus been preserved body and soul. One of the orphans when passing a convent often shudders and says: 'Oh! how nearly I was put into one of those terrible places. How I should have suffered, and, notwithstanding all the promises made by the priest, I should never have seen my brothers and sisters again.' The great object of our institution is to save Protestant orphan girls from being placed in convents, or in other ways subverted from their faith, and to train them to be missionaries while earning their own living. It is difficult for Protestant families scattered in different villages, with only a school under priests or nuns, to educate their children, and bring them up in the true faith." Information as to this work may be had of Miss Selwyn, Bennett-park, Blackheath.

Public-house Work.—On Thursday last Mr. J. J. Browne, in St. Pancras, held his fifteenth anniversary with the London City Mission, and his fifth as missionary to the public-houses and coffee-rooms in the north-west. The meeting was held in Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Great Ormond-street. A meat tea was most generously given to about fifty potmen and their wives. Afterwards an interesting meeting was held, presided over by Mr. E. Bannister. Addresses were given by Rev. W. Brock, Messrs. H. Marnham, Blackman, and Snow. Mr. J. J. Browne is about to visit Winstler, near Matlock, Derby, for ten days, to hold meetings and visit amongst the people, and he will be glad of prayer for blessing.

Manchester and Salford Mission.—The eighth report of this Mission states that the past year has been the most successful in the history of the Mission. The aim of the leaders has been to make each branch purely home missionary. There have been vast congregations at the Central Hall, Free-trade Hall, the Grand Theatre, and other places in connection with the Mission. The social work is extensive. It attempts to deal with the cadger, the lazy loafer, the half-imbecile victims of hereditary pauperism, the wrecks of humanity—the classes which are the despair of magistrates and poor law guardians. The membership returns show an increase at all the centres of work except Ebenezer Chapel. The population in that district is almost exclusively Jewish.

Wheatsheaf Hall, Lambeth.

THE London Congregational Union have established a new mission-hall in the South Lambeth-road, and the opening ceremony was performed last week under the presidency of Rev. Andrew Mearns, secretary of the Union. The workers connected with the Lambeth Mission, numbering nearly 300, are drawn entirely from the working people of the district, and are gathered together into a Christian church under the ministry of Messrs. W. S. Cairne and Oliver Millard, and affiliated to the London Congregational Union. Wheatsheaf Hall was a patchwork building, and recently became so dilapidated that it was found absolutely necessary to raze it to the ground. The new hall has been built on the old site at a total cost of £4000, of which £3300 has been subscribed, leaving £700 still to be raised. The premises of the Lambeth Missions consist of three halls, of which the Wheatsheaf is the chief, Cairne Hall and Myrtle House being subsidiary. The workers in all three form one church. The Wheatsheaf consists of a large hall for public worship, accommodating 800 persons, a lecture-room to hold 150, and three other rooms. It is situated in the midst of a dense population of working people.

The principal speakers at the inauguration were Rev. J. Bernard Snell, Brixton Independent Church, and Rev. H. Storer Toms, of Enfield, under whose presidency of the London Congregational Union the Lambeth Missions were adopted. Mr. Cairne, in the course of a business statement, said the church numbered 260 or 270 members, and contributions amounting to £240 had that day been received towards the building fund. This was an important extension and development of Christian work in the Vauxhall district, and he believed there was a great future before it.

United Mission in Hawick, N.B.

THE Mission now closed has been successful from first to last. Mr. Dunn, with his burning words, broke up the ground, and the Brothers Stewart, with Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, with quiet, gentle, loving words and song, have followed up the labours of the first evangelist. We have not seen such evangelistic services in our town since 1873 and 1874.

It is impossible to speak in detail of the services, as it is difficult to say which side of their work has been most appreciated. The Bible-readings have been greatly enjoyed, and Mrs. Stewart Thompson's Gospel songs have been most effectual and helpful, but the Gospel meeting in the evening has been the crown of all, and the scene, night after night, of quite exceptional interest. These evening meetings grew from the first, till at the closing service the hall, floor and gallery, was overflowing. More remarkable still were the Sunday evening gatherings, when twice over both the hall and a neighbouring church were packed with eager throngs. On the last Sunday, two extra services were held, one for young men in the hall, and another which was like a great after-meeting in St. Andrew's Free Church. In the after-meetings, many anxious ones were led to Christ. From first to last love and unity have pervaded the meeting, and the spirit of prayer has been quite unusual. The hearts of the young converts seemed at once to glow with concern for the salvation of friends and comrades. If all evangelistic work be like this, our churches should give it kindly welcome, and the one indispensable thing after such good work is unity on the part of both ministers and churches, wisely and prayerfully to follow all up, and see that none of the precious fruits be flung away.

Village Work.—We have had much to encourage us in our labours with the Gospel Tent during the past summer months, travelling upwards of 2000 miles, visiting several places in this and the surrounding counties, our large tent being often crowded to overflowing. Besides the tent missions we have visited a large number of towns and villages for the purpose of distributing pure Gospel literature, and we have heard of precious fruit as the result of sowing the seed in this way. We commenced early in the month of May, and continued our work under canvas until the last week in September. Now we are busy with missions indoors, seeking the most needy outlying villages in this and the surrounding counties. On Sunday last we concluded an eight days' mission in a village ten miles from Ross. At the closing meeting the little chapel was crowded out. The fact of our driving twenty miles each evening through the frost, and then making no collections, has made a wonderful impression upon the people, and has led many to believe in the reality of the truths we preach. We begin another mission on Sunday next, and we should be glad of prayer on our behalf. JOHN COATES.

THE FAME OF SOLOMON.—1 Kings x. 1-10, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. xii. 42.

OUR Lord's use of this incident (Golden Text) suggests how we may apply it. Tell the story and enforce the lessons as we go along.

I. THE DESIRE of the Queen of Sheba. Think of her in her distant home in Arabia Felix, queen of a country "famous for its traffic in gold, frankincense, and precious stones" (Farrar); yet unsatisfied. There were heart questions she needed to have answered, and doubts she needed to have solved. The most favourable surroundings cannot meet the heart's deepest need. Probably merchants had brought to her people the story of Solomon's kingdom. Their report connected all Solomon's wisdom and wealth and glory with "the name of the Lord" (1). So it was not Solomon's fame only, but the fame of Solomon's God that was spread abroad. Was the report true? "Fame," says Bishop Hall, "is always a blab, oftentimes a liar." Was this an exaggerated report? The queen was sufficiently interested to consider it, and to desire to verify it. She would "prove" it (1) for herself. Yet not merely to gratify her curiosity, but in order, if the report was true, to get her perplexing questions answered. Apply to ourselves, our deep spiritual needs, the report we have heard concerning Jesus. Yet this report reaches us in the form of a direct message from Him, and is accompanied by an invitation to visit Him. Should we not desire to make his acquaintance?

II. HER JOURNEY.—The Queen of Sheba's country was some 1500 miles from Jerusalem. The way led her through the great and terrible wilderness, where her great wealth would tempt the rapacity of the Bedouin. The journey was accomplished on camels, and as they would travel on the average not more than twenty miles a day, the whole journey would require about seventy-five days each way. For a lady—a princess—to undertake so long and perilous a journey, and for such a purpose was remarkable. She was evidently in earnest. Her need was too deep for her to be deterred by difficulty or danger.

III. HER INTERVIEW WITH SOLOMON.—Of course Solomon granted her an interview. Think what she saw (5). His "table" was most sumptuously spread. His "servants," his officers, who were seated according to their rank at his table. His "ministers"—probably those who served the guests. His "ascend," etc., that is from the Tyropean valley, which was 100 feet deep between Zion and the Temple hill. What splendour is there connected with Jesus which equals this? (see Matt. vi. 29). Think, next, what she heard (2, 3). She told him all her questions, and he answered them all. Possibly, as was customary in those days, she tried him with riddles. It is she who is said to have placed two wreaths before him, and asked him to tell which was real and which was artificial. And Solomon settled the question by opening the window, and observing on which wreath the bees alighted. Again apply to ourselves. There are questions concerning our soul's deepest need which all the wisdom of this world cannot solve. Our Lord can (James i. 5). Have you communed with Him of all that is in your heart?

IV. HER CONFESSION.—The effect of her interview humbled her in her own esteem (5), and constrained her to exalt Solomon, and God in him (9). Usually investigation moderates an opinion formed upon report. It was not so in this case. "The half was not told." A testimony that is even more true as applied to the wisdom and glory of our Lord. For in human speech the half cannot be told. Christ is God's "unspeakable gift." Only experience can teach what He is to those who come to Him. Imagine an attempt being made to describe the sun to one whose whole life had been spent in some cavern dimly lighted by a few flickering lamps! No words could convey the full truth to such a man. A girl who had been blind from her birth had her sight restored by a surgical operation. Her first exclamation was, "Why did you not tell me how beautiful the world was?" The half could not be told to her until her eyes were opened.

Before the Queen separated from Solomon she made costly presents to him (10), and received more royal gifts from him (13). Her gifts were not the price with which she purchased wisdom; they were prompted by the gratitude and joy of her heart. What return should we make to God? (See Rom. xii. 1.) Yet she found, what we have found in dealing with our Lord, that the more she gave the more she received. Solomon's gifts to her exceeded her gifts to him. And see the promise which our Lord makes to those who give their lives up to Him (John xv. 7.).

Against those who treat the Saviour's claims with indifference this woman will rise up in the judgment. Will she be a witness against us?

Evangelistic Notes.

Tetbury.—A very helpful fortnight's united mission has been conducted by Mr. James Shields of the Evangelisation Society, in this Gloucestershire village.

Great Staughton.—Messrs. P. Hurditch and F. Hutchins have closed a ten days' mission here, which has proved a blessed time. Believers have been blessed and precious souls won for Christ.

Liverpool.—Sergt. B. G. Barker commenced a mission on Sunday last, November 15, at the Gay-street Working Men's Mission, Liverpool. He requests the prayers of readers for God's blessing upon the effort.

Motherwell, N.B.—Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a four weeks' mission in connection with the Baptist church of this town. Not only were there evidences of men and women being won for Christ, but much quickening to many believers.

Dronfield, near Sheffield.—Mr. Hugh [C. Wallace has held a fortnight's mission in the Baptist church here. Each evening the Gospel was clearly and forcibly preached to good congregations, and real good work was accomplished. The evangelist is now at work in Liverpool.

Surbiton.—Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a five days' mission with happy results. Earnest Gospel appeals were delivered, and Bible-readings given. Several were brought out as seekers after salvation, some of whom testified to having found the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

Cranbrook.—Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, conducted a fifteen days' mission in the Congregational Chapel. Services well attended, Christians were strengthened, and many awakened to their souls' need. The Word was with power, and plainly spoken with much earnestness, blessings will follow. H. H.

Hartlepool.—The Evangelical Free Churches have just been sharing in a gracious work of revival. Night after night, during the thirteen days of a mission conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford, the various chapels where the services have been held have been filled, while many have been led to give themselves to Christ. The mission was arranged by the local executive of the Free Church Council, and all the resident ministers have engaged heartily in the work. Intense interest has been aroused in the town. A distinct feature of the mission has been the large proportion of young men who have openly given themselves to God.

Hull.—The local Sunday-school Union have for some time been looking forward to a visit from Mr. Newton Jones. Great preparations were made, and notwithstanding the very wet weather, large attendances and great blessings have resulted. The children's gatherings, both on the Sunday afternoons and during the week, bore evident fruit. The senior scholars did not attend so well during the week, but on the second Sunday evening an immense throng, probably ten to twelve hundred, assembled in Albion Congregational Church and heard the old, old story. Christians were greatly edified by the afternoon Bible-readings during the week.

Dublin.—Rev. F. W. Ainley, of Cork, has concluded a ten days' mission in the mission church, Townsend-street, under the auspices of the Irish Church Missions. This special effort has been remarkable in several respects—(1) the persons who attended—large numbers of the artisan and labouring class, who paid the greatest attention throughout the mission; (2) the great majority of those persons were either Roman Catholics or had recently been Roman Catholics; and (3) the marked way in which God has been pleased to bless this mission in definite conversions. The attendance was very good throughout, between 200 and 300 adults, with about 150 children each night. Mr. Ainley's addresses could hardly have been better adapted to the class of persons who formed his audience; they were simple, earnest, and effective, setting forth sin and its consequences and laying stress on the power of the blood of Jesus to cleanse and sanctify the sinner. The after-meetings were of a very simple nature, no effort being made to force those who were impressed to make a public profession, yet each evening persons professed to turn from sin and give their hearts and lives to the service of their new-found master.

Deaconesses in Bristol.—Dear Sir,—We have completed one year's work at our Deaconess House in Bristol. In 1895, under the auspices of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, this house was dedicated to God, and he has given abundant blessing. Our great need is more workers. The people are wonderfully responsive to any effort made to reach them. We ask for voluntary helpers, who can contribute a small amount towards their expenses.—Yours very truly, EVELYN OLLIVE, 7, Brunswick-square, Bristol.

Personalia.

Mr. W. Mackworth Young, C.S.I., Resident in Mysore, who has been appointed to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, is an earnest Christian man, and a strong supporter of missionary work.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun.—Last week we erroneously described this clergyman as Incumbent of St. Matthew's, Brixton. We should have said "senior curate"; the aged vicar is Rev. N. A. Garland.

The late Mrs. Rundle Charles.—A memorial to this lady is being subscribed in the form of an endowed bed in the North London Hospital for Consumption. The memorial tablet will be unveiled by Princess Christian, on December 18.

Obituary.

MR. HENRY DYER, EXETER.

As we go to press, we hear with great regret of the death at Exeter of Mr. Henry Dyer, for many years an able teacher and faithful minister among the Open Brethren. We hope to be able to give more particulars next week.

ADMIRAL GRANT.

This life-long friend of seamen fell asleep in Christ on Sunday week at his residence, Coombe Lodge, Liss, Hampshire. He was sixty-two years of age. For some time he had suffered from diabetes, but had not been laid up. On Sunday while talking to his daughter he suddenly fell into her arms, and shortly afterwards expired. The Admiral was a well-known Christian worker and supporter of philanthropic movements. In his many years' service in different parts of the world he was wont to seek out workers among sailors and encourage and aid them in their work. Since his retirement he continued to take a similar interest, lending hearty help to the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, the B. and F. Sailors' Society, the Welcome Home, and other agencies for the welfare of seamen. We hope later on to give a portrait and sketch of the Admiral.

Indian Lepers and the Famine.

SIR,—Amongst those who will suffer most from the impending famine, and who are quite outside of relief works, are the lepers. The result will be that many hundreds of them will be driven to our asylums for the means of sustaining life. Indeed every mail brings us in appeals for extra help to enable the superintendents of asylums to cope with these difficulties. Our asylums are already full to overflowing, and to supply even our ordinary number of inmates with rice and wheat at famine prices, and the value of the rupee gradually rising, will tax our resources to the very utmost.

How then are we to meet these extra demands? We shall need both accommodation and food for the many hundreds of poor sufferers not now provided for. The case is urgent.—Yours faithfully,

WELLESLEY C. BAILEY.

Sec. and Supt. Mission to Lepers.

17, Greenhill-place, Edinburgh.

Croydon Convention.

LAST week a four days' Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life was held in the Temperance Hall, Croydon. The general meetings were held each day, presided over by Capt. Tottenham, besides prayer meetings. The attendances were good, and there were many tokens of Divine blessing resting on the expositions and exhortations of the various speakers. These included Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. J. Brash, Rev. W. D. Sargeant, Rev. J. B. Figgis, General Brownlow, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Pastor Rohrbach (of Berlin), and Rev. H. C. Sturdy.

The addresses were practical, searching, and helpful. The true possibilities of the Christian life were set forth, while hindrances were pointed out, and the sources of strength unfolded from the treasury of Scripture. Calls were made for a definite and full surrender of life, gifts, and possessions to the service of God, and for separation from all that would mar the testimony. The Conference was closed by a missionary meeting and a gathering for praise and testimony.

Chinese in New York.—The recent visit of Li Hung Chang to New York has stimulated interest in the Chinese colony of the Empire City. The American Chinese Association has made arrangements for opening a school, for the purpose of instructing Chinese children in English and industrial pursuits. Through the children it is hoped to be able to influence the elder Chinese generally.

Titus: A Comrade of the Cross (2s. 6d. Ward, Lock, & Bowden), is a well-printed edition of F. M. Kingsley's popular tale of the times of Christ. The illustrations by W. S. Stacey illuminate the text.

The Keynote of Life; or, Thy Will be Done, by Rev. I. E. Page, has been issued in a second and cheaper edition. (1s. net. Marshall Bros.) The pages present high ideals with force and beauty.

Rev. Charles Bullock is a born book-maker, and this third edition of his little compilation, Heart-cheer for Home Sorrow (Home Words Office), may be warmly commended for perusal in leisure moments.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Our Darlings, Vol. XXII. (Shaw & Co.) This is a real treasury of story and song, adorned, on well-nigh every page, with pictures and quaint cuts, beside a number of full-page chromographs.

The Fireside, edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, is a large volume, varied and excellent in its contents. Here are serial stories by Edward Garrett, Emma Marshall, and Agnes Gibberne, many sketches and articles on topics of interest, and Scripture expositions and meditations beyond number. Altogether, The Fireside for 1896 is as good as its many worthy predecessors. (7s. 6d. "Home Words Office.")

Bubbles. The fourth and Christmas volume of this serial is a substantial book of nearly 400 pages, and from frontispiece to finish there is a blaze of artistic combinations of colour, which will take captive children of all ages. The literary contents are of capital quality, and the annals of Dr. Barnardo's Homes are diligently explored by "H. A. D." in a series of interesting "Jottings." (Office: 153, Aldersgate-street, E.C. 3s. 6d. and 5s.)

Friendly Greetings is a Christmas volume that will take cheer into many a home. (2s. 6d.) The same may be said of The Cottager and Artisan, with its large page and grand engravings. (1s. 6d.) Light in the Home (1s. 6d.) is the Tract Magazine "up-to-date," and filled with good matter. Other volumes which are eagerly looked for year by year are The Child's Companion and The Little Dots (1s. 6d. each), for nursery inmates of various ages. Excellent as serials, these publications are all of them favourites in bound-up form. (Religious Tract Society.)

Our Cousin Neel, and other stories, by Annie Craig, is a capital little book for little folks. (9d. Culley.)

Countess Helena, by Marion Andrews, is a girl's story, pleasant to read, with the scene laid in Germany. (Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Helice's Heritage; or, the Links of Life. By A. M. L. Farrow (2s. Jarrod & Sons.) Whole-some throughout and right in the end.

Blackie's Children's Books are stories by various authors, issued in three series, which are made up in packets of twelve, for 1s., 2s., and 3s. a packet.

The Slave-raiders of Zanzibar, by E. Harcourt Burrage (2s. 6d. Partridge), is a recital of cruel captures and smart rescues, with an abundance of amusing incidents and exciting situations "thrown in."

Maggie's Life Work, by Jenny Ferry (2s. Culley), is about a girl who had a wicked, drunken father. Maggie was good and brave, and her bright part sets off grandly against the painful side of the story.

Maisonette: A Girl's Story. By Mrs. M. Corbet-Seymour. (Jarrod, 2s.) A pleasantly-written story of an English girl in France, who, through perplexities and trials, ripened into a happy and useful helper of many in a little Hampshire village.

Ursula Challenger. By Emily Ruth Boddy. (Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling; Partridge, London. 1s. 6d.) The story of one who, through patient endurance, found at length rough ways made smooth and the path opened for quiet, faithful service for God.

A Village Maiden's Career. (1s. nett. Partridge & Co.) The name of Mrs. Sydney Watson is known to many of our readers, who will be interested in reading this, her autobiography. It is an inspiring story, setting forth in simple strain her experiences in Christian life and work. It not only interests but helps, and is well calculated to form a turning point in many a reader's life.

The Way of the World at Sea, by W. J. Gordon, is a capital book on the sea and ships, ship life and ocean travelling. The chapters will attract many young readers, and should interest all who undertake sea voyages, as well as those who have to be content with "sea on land." (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

From Scrooby to Plymouth Rock; or, The Men of the Mayflower. By Henry Johnson. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) A capital sketch of an absorbingly interesting chapter of history, religious and social. Several illustrations help the reader to realise the story of the great conflict in the interest of spiritual and civil liberty in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Anecdotes of Animals and Birds, by Uncle John, is an excellent picture book for the young. A companion volume is Stories of Animal Sagacity, by D. J. D., the very title of which is eloquent. Both these compilations, printed in large type and bound in bright covers, will promote among the young a wholesome regard for the dumb creation. (1s. 6d. each. Partridge & Co.)

Aleph, the Chaldean; or, The Messiah as seen from Alexandria. By E. F. Burr, D.D., LL.D. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) This is a very readable story, affording a good idea of Jewish life in Egypt at the beginning of our era. In the form of written communications and narratives by travellers who had visited the Holy Land, the words and deeds of Christ are reverently rehearsed.

Is it an Epoch? 1896-1900. By E. V. B. (1d. Morgan & Scott.) This is the second edition, with new matter added, of a remarkable booklet on the times in which we live, in their relation to the end of the present age. The author states well-known facts in a striking way; and as his booklet may be placed in an ordinary envelope, it is likely to enjoy a wide circulation through the help of those who are looking for the Lord's appearing.

In The Homiletic Review for November, in the very useful "School for Bible Study" department, Dr. D. S. Gregory begins a series on the New Testament. Surely the characteristics of the Gospels were never set out with more clearness and succinctness. There is a very important editorial on "The Twentieth Century's Call" for the immediate carrying out of Christ's command in evangelising the world. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

The Management of Infancy: Physiological and Moral. By Andrew Combe, M.D. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) Sir Arthur Mitchell, K.C.B., M.D., LL.D., has prepared a new edition of this valuable work, bringing it within the reach of the million by a process of wise condensation. Designed for the use of parents, Dr. Combe's book has performed a singularly useful ministry for over fifty years; and in its latest compact and handy form it richly deserves to renew its youth.

Children's Books.—Messrs. John F. Shaw & Co. publish a pleasing variety of bright books for the little ones. Sunday Sunshine, edited by Catherine Shaw, will, as its title declares, brighten the Sunday hours with its simple setting of Bible stories and Gospel messages. Another capital annual is Little Frolic, with bold pictures and large type readings. Other toy books, smaller in size, but quite charming in contents, are Merry and Glad, Little Pets, and Playfellows, all in brilliant colours and gay interiors.

The Pilgrim's Progress.—A dainty edition of this immortal allegory, edited by Canon Venables, has been issued by Mr. Henry Frowde in his miniature "Thumb Series." The complete work (two parts) is given, with quaint illustrations, in 860 tiny pages, the famous Oxford India paper being used; the whole, bound in soft morocco, weighs under an ounce. Yet withal the type is clear and readable. Those who love such dainty morsels will regard it as a triumph of the printer's art. The prices vary from 1s. 6d., according to binding.

The Feast of Divine Love.—Meditations on the Holy Communion Office. By E. H. Bickersteth, D.D., Bishop of Exeter. (Sampson Low, Marston & Co.) Though primarily intended for members of the English Church, this little book will assist any devout Christian who regards the Supper of the Lord as a divinely appointed means of grace, and a blessed token of the spiritual fellowship more or less realised among Christians of different communions. Specially worthy of study are the chapters "Purity of Heart," "Communion of Jesus with the Soul," the "Prayer of Self-surrender," and the "Prayer of Fellowship." The hymns and original verses, many written by the author himself, are beautiful and suggestive. The book is a suitable gift for young communicants, while full of deeper teaching for those who have for years trusted and obeyed the Lord.

The Life of Henry Bowers Harrison. By his daughter. (Wesleyan Book Room. 3s. 6d.) We gave last year a portrait and sketch of this honoured servant of Christ, and now we welcome heartily a fuller biography. It is sound and healthful reading—the story of a man of business who, while diligent in his earthly calling, gave himself with assiduous devotion to the service of God and the winning of sinners to the Saviour. As Rev. Charles Garrett says in a brief introduction, "He became a leader of men." His personal efforts and activity were largely in connection with Methodism, but his sympathies went beyond his own communion to all who loved and served the Lord Jesus Christ. The book is well written and should be widely circulated among young men, who will find therein a fine example of a high-toned and unselfish career.

Rottenness: A Study of America and England. By Roger Pocock. (2s. 6d. Neville Beeman, Limited, 6, Dells-buildings, E.C.) A terrible indictment of the social, political, and economic corruption that permeates the life of the Anglo Saxon peoples. The sting of the book is in its undoubted truthfulness, speaking broadly. Yet the reader instinctively feels that the picture drawn is distorted because out of proportion and because no due account is taken of the existing good. Moreover, the author's views on various points directly traverse the convictions of multitudes of the best people in both countries, and prove him to be in many respects an unsafe guide. It is right that one should know the worst of modern society, but we look in vain in this work for any adequate cure for the evils so powerfully depicted.

The Lady Ecclesia: An autobiography. By Rev. George Matheson, M.A., D.D., F.R.S.E. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.) Lovers of allegorical writings will find this a very original book, and a readable one, whilst the object is undoubtedly good. It appears to us, however, that the author has not kept always in mind his own wise prefatory remark, that the beauty of an allegory consists not in its puzzle, but in its obviousness. It need scarcely be said that Ecclesia represents the Church, or, rather, as Dr. Matheson himself puts it, "that inner life of Christianity which was the flower of Judaism." The description of the plague-stricken masses is good. "Each had looked into the face of his brother, and seen it there." And Ecclesia's own reverent, desiring love for the Deliverer, "the Man of the Valleys," and her delight in his voice and his presence are the things which most attract us in a book which we are not ashamed to confess that we do not wholly understand. Books of allegory are numerous, but the gift of allegory is rare, as anyone may discover who attempts to bracket other names with that of our own Bunyan.

THE SCRIPTURE POCKET BOOK, published by the R.T.S., is a vide-mecum of established reputation, and the edition for 1897 shows several improvements. In addition to the almanac and space for daily memoranda, there is a budget of information such as should always be at hand. (1s. 6d. and 2s., according to binding.)

OUR THEATRES AND WHY CHRISTIAN PEOPLE CANNOT GO TO THEM. By J. Forbes Moncrieff. (Dyer Brothers, 2d.) A new and enlarged edition of a telling booklet setting forth the intolerable evils associated with theatres. It might well be placed in the hands of young asking the question, Why cannot we go to these places?

ERRORS OF ROME, No. 1. By H. B. (2d. Apel's Library, Robertson-street, Hastings.) These pages deal particularly with the worship of the Virgin Mary, the idolatrous charge being proved by quotations from the writings and other utterances of Roman Catholic teachers. Such publications as this are sadly timely at the present day.

Notices.

CONSTANT READER, Stalybridge.—You are at liberty to reprint the note, if you wish. The source must be given.

CONSTANT READER, Reading.—Many thanks for your letter and kind interest. It is very gratifying to us to learn that THE CHRISTIAN has been of such help to you.

ANOTHER CONSTANT READER.—The atonement is universal. If the Creator dies in the creature's stead a necessarily unlimited atonement is made for the human race. Jesus "tasted death for every man." He "is the propitiation for the whole world." Those whom the Father gave to the Son are those who come to the Son, and whom He will in no wise cast out. Those who are called "the world" are those who "will not come unto Him that they might have life."

Appeal.

ST. THOMAS, W.I.—In the course of tract and Bible distributing it was laid on me to visit the poor, sick, and suffering in our public hospital. The ready welcome I met, the eagerness for tracts, etc., I could only supply in part, and the earnestness in listening to my words deeply moved me. I could only promise to come again when I could get more tracts. Books, pamphlets, tracts, cards, etc., will be thankfully received and faithfully carried to God's suffering poor. In my state of health this is all I can do at present.

Madame de Ramsay, of Wilhelmso, Sweden, writes to inform friends of the Scandinavian sailors that Christmas letters are to be had by writing to her at a halfpenny each. She has for twenty years continued to issue these letters in Sweden, and has found many who have derived spiritual benefit from them as well as comfort and encouragement. The work is done solely by herself without outward helpers or contributors. The Bible and Prayer Union was started by Madame de Ramsay at Wilhelmso twenty years ago, and it is continued to be managed by her single handed. The members number 4000, and have cards corresponding to those sent out by Rev. Thomas Richardson's Union, from which the Swedish organisation is a branch.

Moravian Missions.—The current number of The Moravian Quarterly of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, commenting on the present state of the funds, points out that the means are not forthcoming for the work which is being done, let alone that which the society is asked to do and cannot. One-half of the financial year has ended, and its record shows that increased financial support must be forthcoming if the work is to be carried on successfully. From the mission fields glad news comes. The annual statistics record an increase in the number gathered out of heathenism of some 1800 precious souls. The society wants to raise an additional £8000 as soon as possible. "We don't want," The Quarterly continues, "another deficiency. We don't want our medical training fund to fail of its object. Then the needs of Labrador and its new stations and new ship must be met. Similarly from Alaska, Tibet—indeed from almost every field—comes the reiterated cry for men and means to meet the requirements of present work."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE ATTENTION OF THE READER IS RESPECTFULLY
DRAWN TO THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT.

This season of the year is always one of great anxiety to the executive. The absence of adequate support during the Autumn months not only exhausts the treasury, but leaves an accumulation of liabilities for food, clothing, etc., for the inmates.

The work of the winter is before us, when more than ordinary claims are made upon the resources of the Society.

Between these extremes we now stand, and appeal once more for that help which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have hitherto been so ready to give when asked for.

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT, or to

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR.

Temperance Notes.

THE town of Tallow, in Ireland, has, it is said, one public-house to every eight of its inhabitants. The appointment of Rev. E. Carr Glyn to the See of Peterborough is an addition to the ranks of the abstaining bishops.

A Gospel Temperance Mission has been conducted in Dublin, under the auspices of the Women's Temperance Association and the Band of Hope Union, by Miss Brewster, of London.

It is stated that nearly all the off-licences and small beer-houses in one district of Manchester are "tied" to a brewer who is said to supply the toffee and other gifts used as bribes to children.

There has been an agitation in the Isle of Man in favour of a relaxation of the Sunday Closing Act. The Manx Nonconformist Council has passed a resolution denouncing the agitation, and declaring that the opening of public-houses on Sunday would be injurious to the best interests of the island.

Serious attention should be given to the remarkable statements made before the Royal Commission as to the abuse of "Occasional licences," whereby one justice (in defiance of the Brewster Sessions, who may have refused the licence), practically licenses some place of amusement or resort for a season.

The Wesleyan Temperance secretary, Rev. G. A. Bennetts, has issued two circulars—one addressed to ministers, and the other to local preachers and Sunday-school superintendents, urging that Temperance Sunday, Nov. 29, should be preceded by special prayer, that it may this year be signalled by the rescue of many victims of drink.

Mr. Arnold Morley, presiding at the opening of the session in connection with the Lambeth Baths winter meetings, said that the Government of which he was a member had introduced a bill providing for drastic temperance reforms, but, unfortunately, the country was not ripe for such an advance. Temperance reformers must go on agitating for such a reform, which, it was much to be regretted, had been made a party question.

Mr. W. P. Hartley, one of the most devoted and generous of Methodists, has large jam works at Aintree, Liverpool. He has cared for the wants of that district and of his own workpeople by erecting a large institute and café at a cost to himself of £8000. It was opened last Tuesday by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool. In his opening speech Mr. Hartley said that neither drink nor betting would be found on those premises.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission was held on Friday evening. The president (Mr. R. Cadbury, J.P.) took the chair. The report showed that a total of 4112 pledges had been registered, no fewer than 1677 of these being the results of the various missions. The efforts in the police-court had been successful, and the missionary had had the satisfaction of recording 959 pledges. The average attendance at the women's meetings, of which there are thirty-one, was 1984 per week. Two new factory girls' meetings had been opened in thickly-populated districts, and another would be opened shortly. Addresses followed by Revs. John G. Hopkins (hon. sec.), J. Odell, J. A. Sharp, and others.

The annual conference of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union has been held in Harrogate. Cheering accounts were given of the work and the branches throughout the country during the past year. The High Flatts Sanatorium is still faithfully carried on, and the past year has been singularly prosperous. During the conference sittings valuable papers were contributed by Dr. Sarah Gray on "Alcohol and Food" and "Alcohol and Work"; and by Miss Connell on "Temperance Teaching in Schools" and "The Work of Lady Guardians of the Poor." Mrs. Atkinson, secretary of the Union, introduced the question, "How to Extend Temperance Work in Villages." The conference closed with a public meeting, the Dean of Ripon presiding. Addresses were given by Sister Lily, of West London Mission, and Miss Graham, of the B.W.T.A.

The Royal Commission, at its last sitting, had before it Mr. J. Willis-Bund, chairman of the Worcestershire magistrates, who said that occasional licences were freely, not to say recklessly, granted. At one small hamlet consisting of only eleven buildings nine occasional licences were granted in connection with a fair, the two buildings not licensed being the Board-school and meeting-house. The widow of a man who had committed suicide while intoxicated was allowed to sell beer for six days, to recoup herself. Mr. C. L. Rothera, coroner for Nottingham, said the licensing laws were laxly administered in that town, and the police were very prone to turn a blind eye on public-houses. There was more drunkenness to be seen in the streets of Nottingham in a week than in London in a month. Juries at inquests were ready to attribute death to any cause except excessive drinking.

"HEAL THE SICK."

HELP is very earnestly entreated for the Medical Mission in the large Mahometan city of Mooltan, Punjaub, established by the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, side by side with its Zenana Mission there.

The city of Mooltan contains 80,000 inhabitants, and the district of Mooltan covers an area of 26,000 square miles. This is the only Medical Mission, and the doctor, Miss Eger, M.D., the only Medical Missionary in this wide range. The fact that the attendances at the Dispensary are numbered by thousands, will show that competent helpers and suitable premises are urgently needed to meet the present state of the work, and to provide for its extension.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be gratefully received by Miss WEBB, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

GLASGOW correspondent is anxious for information as to the best way of attracting and bringing under Gospel influence "street-corner" boys and lads. Perhaps some readers who have had successful experience of this kind of effort will report to us briefly on their methods.

A very hopeful project is being brought before the investing public in the endeavour "to provide healthy, interesting, and instructive entertainment for the great masses of the people," in connection with dioramic views of scenery and life in the Holy Land. Rev. James Neil, the well-known authority on Eastern manners and customs, is a prominent mover in this venture, which is to be registered as "Palestine, Limited." We are not in a position to say anything as to the purely commercial aspects of the Company, but the effort seems to us one that ought to be largely encouraged by wealthy Christian philanthropists and capitalists. The offices of the Company are at 70, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

The famine in India and the rinderpest in South Africa are as grave as any political problems of the day. In India the pinch of hunger is being keenly felt, while in Africa, according to Mr. F. R. Thompson, of Matabeleland, the rinderpest is the gravest situation any British colony has ever had to face, and far exceeds in importance the Transvaal war, native rebellions, and Jameson's raid. He does not think that one per cent. of the cattle will be saved. Such a heavy blow may, however, stay the mad race for wealth, and help to purify the moral atmosphere.

The latest and most promising phase of the Armenian question is that the humanitarian sentiment of France is fast waking up. Up to a short time ago, the Press of that country was controlled by Turkish financiers and bondholders, who imagined that the safety of their property was bound up with the continuance of the status quo at Constantinople. Now that they are coming to see that their "bonds" would probably be of more value if a radical change took place in Turkey, this unnatural pressure has been removed, and the real feelings of the people of France are being aroused. The Roman Catholic Church, which hitherto has been, to its deep disgrace, as silent as the newspapers in giving information and making an appeal to the public, has also taken up the matter. The saying goes that "what Paris thinks to-day, France will receive as truth to-morrow." If this is correct, a new force on behalf of justice to Armenia will be awakened up, of immense and incalculable power, and the prospects of a righteous settlement at the eleventh hour vastly increased.

The death of Sir Benjamin Richardson has removed one of the most potent personalities in the medical profession, and one of the most earnest social reformers of the time. The motto which has dominated his work from the beginning is the old saying, "Cleanliness is next to godliness." The whole passion of his vigorous mind was given to the prevention of disease by the provision of sanitary conditions of life. His prominent share in the work of scientific temperance has crowded out some of the quieter but most important aspects of his work from popular attention. As time goes on these will come more to the front. The vast importance of his teaching on the text, "National health is national wealth," is seen in the grand extension of hygiene and public health movements both in the scientific and practical worlds. A deep religious motive underlay all his efforts, and gave force and dignity to his advocacy of medical and sanitary reforms. The sanctity of bodily health with him was but a phase of the deeper sanctity of the soul.

Some deplorable facts were recently stated before the Licensing Commission as to the prevalence in Liverpool of drinking habits among women, and, still more alarming, among young children. Verily, this "dark spot on the Mersey" sorely needs the hand of the Christian reformer, though matters, we believe, have improved in certain respects of late years. The law specially requires to be not only stiffened but strictly enforced as to serving intoxicants to children. It is a national shame and disgrace that young lives should be thus blighted for want of a little thought and painstaking.

Mrs. Harrison Lee has given to a representative of The Christian Commonwealth some interesting and important facts with regard to the temperance outlook in Australia. Her testimony on "compensation" is very timely and helpful. The temperance party were willing to give compensation in order to get free from the bane of drunkenness, or at least to mitigate the evil, but it has turned out "a terrible hindrance." Temperance men were told that the respectable hotel-keepers would unite with them in closing the vilest places; but instead of that they formed a trade defence league, and the money was used to fight the Local Option party. In Ballarat forty low hotels were closed at a cost of £40,000, with the result that the people will have no more places closed until the compensation clause is repealed.

Not long ago it was generally held that to live in India it was necessary for Europeans to indulge more or less in intoxicants. More especially was this an article of faith in the army. So clearly, however, has the contrary been proved of late years by experience, that there are now 20,000 teetotallers among the English soldiers stationed in India. This result has been arrived at in spite of all that stubborn prejudice and bitter opposition could do. To attain such a victory among the very class whose monotony of life must in itself prove a deadly temptation to drink, is a triumph indeed, and worthy of all praise are those officers and men, as well as the outside workers in the cause, whose steady and faithful Gospel temperance work has been the means of winning it.

So much for hot countries. On the other hand, we find that Nansen, the explorer, is just as emphatic in affirming that alcoholic liquors are worse than useless amid the Arctic snows. He carried no stimulants with him for drinking purposes while on his recent adventurous journey towards the Pole, and he says that no one who is wise would think of trying to keep off the effects of cold by such artificial means. This leaves us with only temperate climates for those who would defend the use of intoxicants as beneficial to health. Whether they are good or bad there may be best judged from the fact that there are 7,000,000 teetotallers in this country, who are among the healthiest of the population, whose prospects of long life are held to be higher by almost all the insurance companies, and whose abstinence, instead of lessening, increases their happiness and enjoyments. These facts ought to be decisive as to the value of alcoholic beverages in all climates and lands for those who are in health and vigour.

Small countries and small towns often become the scenes of social experiments which are successfully applied on a greatly enlarged scale; Switzerland is a social laboratory, and now Denmark seems to have hit upon a plan for providing old age pensions. The whole scheme is set out by Miss Edith Sellers in The National Review. Briefly, the fund is chiefly raised by a tax on beer; it is applied to those whose lives have fulfilled certain specified conditions. Those who receive its benefits are not treated as paupers at all, but as pensioners, and "everything that can be done is done to prevent the help they receive entailing on them any humiliation or disgrace." They have no dealings with relieving officers or other Poor Law authorities, but have officials of their own to take care of them. It is specially enacted that no part of the cost of their relief should ever be defrayed out of the poor rate. The time for testing the system has not been long—only since January, 1892—but so far it appears to be successful. There has been in that time a considerable decrease in pauper relief in Copenhagen.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has remarked that "the Christian is the only man who cannot live beyond his income." This is perfectly true. The Christian can give only as he has received. He cannot borrow to give, or simulate a generosity beyond his means, his hope, and his love. The branch can only bear grapes according to the measure in which it has received from the fulness in the stem and the root. Union with Christ is the condition of any giving at all, and once it has been established, the measure of all sorts of giving depends upon the freeness and fulness of the Saviour's entrance into our hearts. If the sap of his grace is unhindered by unbelief or sin of any kind, it will flow abundantly through the soul, and make it that it shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of Him. The first thing wanted in all Christians is a full fountain in their hearts, a rich experience of the grace of Christ.

All lovers of children and of gentle manners will be glad to learn that "The Children's National League of Courtesy," founded in 1892 by Professor Meiklejohn, of St. Andrews University, has already achieved great success. Its sphere of operation is chiefly in the elementary schools. The rules enjoin courtesy in the school, the street, and the home. A headmaster of one of the largest schools reports that, whereas before the children joined the League there was rudeness and impropriety which nothing could check, since they have joined the evil has disappeared. Nearly every school in Nottingham has joined the League. It seems to us to supply just one of the most essential links in the education of our children as members of society.

In a recent sermon Dr. Alexander MacLaren expounded to practical purpose the well-known words of Hosea iv. 17, "Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone." He maintained that these words are not a threat of abandonment on the part of God, with whom are "multitudes of redemptions," nor do they enjoin the cessation of effort on the part of Christian people for the recovery of those most deeply sunken in sin. Assuredly, it does not become those prodigals who have come back to the Father's home, to think that any of their brethren are too far away to be drawn by their loving proclamation of the Father's heart of love. As a fact, "Let him alone" is a commandment to God's Church to keep separate from an idolatrous world. We must "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." If we mix up with Ephraim, we shall find ourselves ere long grovelling beside him before his idols.

Dr. Fairbairn hits a weak place in the armour of scientific men when he says that science has become as speculative, as prolific of physico-metaphysical theories, as the most bewitched metaphysician could desire. Twenty years ago not a few were confident that everything could be expressed in terms of evolution; but such is not the case now. The theory has to be modified; and so the theory-building and theory-uttering and theory-discarding goes on from year to year. This is not altogether to be complained of, for only thus does the human mind advance to higher and surer ground. Complaint, however, is reasonable, when the theories are wild and over-confident, and when they run counter to certain great principles. When the theory of evolution runs counter to miracle, then we set against it the truth in Jesus—his miraculous birth and life and resurrection; Himself the greatest miracle of all.

"A Cry from the North" was the title of a recent article in The Church Times on the irreligious condition of Lancashire. It was an indiscriminate, sweeping indictment of the whole county; one sentence of it will suffice: "Vicious habits among the young, secret and open sins among boys and girls, the drink-sodden faces of the men and women one meets every day—all these things stun and appal, till the conviction comes at last—This is not a Christian land; these people do not know the A B C of Christianity." The remedy suggested is a Catholic ritual. A more fatuous suggestion could scarcely have been advanced.

The writer was not allowed to go unchallenged in last week's Church Times, besides refutations in other quarters. The rector of Newton Heath is very effective, "Obstinate the people are, rough to a fault, passionate to ferocity—but immoral, no." Speaking as a Londoner he affirms that more men go to church in Manchester than in London. He has there well-attended Sunday-schools. In twelve years four girls have been known to misconduct themselves. He has a parish population of 12,000, and he says there is not a single openly immoral woman among them. He will not affirm that it is religion which makes the people pure, but "pure they are." Another "Catholic" incumbent, a Lancashire man, bears similar testimony: "The average Lancashire man, be he Churchman or Dissenter, is a religiously inclined person." Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrma, who knows north and south alike, pays a handsome compliment to the mill-girls. "Some of the mill-girls are noble specimens of their sex, trying to be good and pure and kind among many difficulties." On the whole, Lancashire comes out of the ordeal none the worse for the attack.

Canon Hammond, a pronounced High Churchman, is bound to admit that Englishmen are at last thoroughly roused on the subject of sacerdotalism. He sees evidence of this in Nonconformist newspapers, in the fate of the late Education Bill, in the language of a leading statesman in the House of Commons, and in "the calm and candid paper" in The Times, called "The Outlook for the Established Church." The writer of this paper says that sacerdotalism is one reason the clergy are not popular; "it accentuates the breach between them and the laity," and is a serious danger to the Establishment. Canon Hammond does not deny the impeachment; he admits it; and allows that "the distrust and dislike which this cry has aroused can only be allayed by patient and persistent explanation." As the explanation he gives claims for ministers the power to offer sacrifices to God, we fancy the odium of which he complains will remain. According to him, they are "special priests," whereas laymen are only priests.

Some of the Welsh religious bodies are bestirring themselves with a view to training the rising generation in the principles and history of Protestantism, in order to stem the tide of Ritualism and Romanism. It is, however, denied that the latter form of superstition is gaining ground in "Welsh" Wales, though among the English-speaking population there seems a distinct revival of Romanism. There is not a single Roman Catholic chapel in the Principality where a service is conducted in Welsh. Even the recent St. Winifred's processions at Holywell were not made up of natives, but of pilgrims from England and Ireland. It would be foolish, however, to argue from this that there is no need for a real Protestant movement among the rising generation in Wales. It is one of the avowed objects of the Roman system to recapture Wales, which was once one of the least Protestant portions of the kingdom. The best way to defeat this is to furnish the young with a true reason for the faith in which they are brought up.

The senseless and brutal code of duelling in the German Army is at last about to be revised. The recent outrage, resulting in the death of a citizen who had insulted an armed officer, has roused public feeling, and forced on a debate in the Reichstag. The Emperor, who has always shown a strong partiality for his army in cases of disputes with civilians, is reported once to have said: "He who insults my uniform insults me." A lawyer, speaking in the Reichstag, pertinently said, "I hope that the Imperial words meant that any one who degrades his uniform insults the Emperor." The case could not be better put than this. The fact that the German duelling code is to be dealt with at last by a competent commission ought to be the beginning of the end of this evil practice. One thing is certain—that any change must be for the better.

Japan is pronounced by those who know it well to be one of the most difficult of all mission-fields. Bishop Bickersteth, the head of the English and American Episcopal Missions in that country, has been trying to explain to an interviewer the reasons for this. He seems to think that the Christianisation of Japan can be attained only by the Japanisation of Christianity. This vague term needs definition. If it means that Western modes of thought must not be permitted to hinder the central verities of the faith from appealing to Eastern minds, it is a thoroughly justifiable process. Every nation from the beginning has had its own type of Christianity, and the vitality of the Gospel is seen in nothing more clearly than in its capacity to adapt itself to the conditions, nationality, and state of culture of its adherents.

There are forty millions of people in Japan, and as yet only 112,000 Christians, of whom 50,000 are Roman Catholics, 23,000 belong to the Greek Mission, and 39,000 to the various Episcopal and Nonconformist Missions. The last mentioned, "with the exception of a small branch of the Salvation Army recently established, are conducted entirely by Americans." One of the difficulties of the work arises from the impressible character of present Japanese thought, which eagerly absorbs European sceptical ideas, which thus arise to confront the missionary in his work. Therefore, as it has been well said, "progress in Christian truth will largely depend upon the progress of Christianity in Europe and America."

Professor W. G. Sumner, who writes in The Forum on "Banks," expresses an opinion that as the struggle between democracy and plutocracy is the rising crisis of modern history, "it is clear that the conflicts over banks and currency are the real great tragedy of American history, beside which even slavery and civil war appear as only passing incidents." The sober expression of opinion concerning the Presidential election, now that the election is over, is all in the vein of this forecast of the Professor's. The same struggle is going on in every civilised country, and loudly calls for the application of Christian principle. We ourselves are living through a civil war, but only a small portion of us seem to be aware of its seriousness.

Dr. Stuckenburg gives in The Homiletic Review a short account of "King Stumm" of Germany, "a multi-millionaire," an owner of coal-mines, of vast wealth, who employs thousands of labourers, and who also "insists that his labourers, the public officials, the Press, and the preachers, shall be subject to his control." He has a paper of his own for promulgating his views, a paper which declares that true Christianity has nothing to do with this world; "that it hovers, like a bright star, high above all temporal affairs, and offers eternal life as a substitute for all earthly sorrow and suffering." "King Stumm" is not so much alone in this conception as might be supposed. It is not uncommon to find that those who object to Christianity having anything to do with this world have no objection to enjoy as much of the world as ever they can get. But our Master will not be left out of any department of our life; He is Lord of all.

Papers on Missions.—3.

THE MESSENGERS OF THE CHURCHES AND THE GLORY OF CHRIST.

THE conviction and contention was expressed in our last that the Church of Christ, and therefore the churches, and therefore every individual church, with every member of it, is under obligation to contribute its quota to the evangelization of the world. This would be self-evident, in the nature of things, even though the commission and command had not been so solemnly given and repeated by the crucified and risen Redeemer before He went back to God. For every Christian believer professes to have the love of God in him. But if anyone see his brother in need, and shut up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? And if the bulk of the human race is lying in darkness and the shadow of death, in direct need of the good tidings that God so loved the world that He gave his Son for their salvation, and the Church shuts up her compassions and withholds the tidings from them, how dwelleth the love of God in her?

There is little doubt that on an average every church in England could supply and maintain a missionary, to her own great benefit, to the salvation of multitudes who never heard the Gospel, and to the glory of God.

One church, neither large nor wealthy, has formed a Missionary and Prayer Union, engaging each member every day to pray for and give to the missionary enterprise; and in the first year and each year since has contributed an amount equal to the support of its own missionary. On the principle that they who gather much have nothing over, and they who gather little have no lack, there are thousands of Protestant churches able to do the same. It is for the very purpose of proclaiming the good tidings of the kingdom of God or a testimony among all nations that the Church exists in the world, and yet it forms no part of her theological curriculum to prepare her ministers, nor any appreciable part of those who claim to be ministers of Christ to prepare their people, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.

If those who carried temporal help from the churches of Macedonia and Achaia to the saints at Jerusalem were messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ, how much more do these terms belong to those who go from the churches of Christendom to their dying brothers in the heathen world? Is this recognised? Only in an infinitesimal degree. Missionaries to heathen lands are agents of missionary societies, but few think of them as messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ." Yet only as they are messengers of the churches are they, in the sense here intended, the glory of Christ—for the Church and Christ are one: "The Church which is His body, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all."

What then is the function of missionary societies? This important question will be considered later on. Meanwhile, we close this paper with this remark, There is an undesirable division made between home and foreign missions. They are not twain but one. The great commission is, like human nature, tripartite, but indivisible: "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost part of the earth," is but the expansion of the one command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

At the anniversary of a tiny local mission the first hymn on the programme was:—

Far, far away, in heathen darkness dwelling,
Millions of souls for ever may be lost;
Who, who will go, Salvation's story telling,
Looking to Jesus, counting not the cost?

Our first impression was the incompatibility of so great a hymn with such a small occasion. But this was immediately corrected, we believe, by the sevenfold Spirit whose range is all the earth, and we felt that the superintendent had taken the only right view—his local mission was an integral part of the one Gospel, of the one Lamb of God, once offered, to bear away the sin of the one world.

"Who Love His Appearing."

NOT all who love HIS appearing think it will be premillennial; nor does the belief that it will be so, necessitate the love of it. They who love Him, the personal Lord Jesus Christ, must surely love his appearing, whatever they may think of how and when it will be.

It is possible warmly to advocate a doctrine, while the hope which is the power and savour of it may have passed away, like the bloom from the peach or the scent from faded flowers. It is possible to be so occupied with questions as to the mode and period of the appearing as to be almost unmindful of HIS appearing: as an expectant member of a family might be more intent upon the incidents of the journey of the returning head of the house, imagined from his letters, than upon the returning one himself.

It would be even possible that different members of the family should have interpreted his letters differently, and each become so earnest in urging and defending his own interpretation, that their views on these details might take precedence of their loving waiting and watching for himself.

The household might even be divided into parties, each side adopting the view of the leader approved among them; and as the beginning of strife is like the letting out of water, their hope upon him might be drowned in the floods of opposed opinion.

Even the wife herself (for the best of women are women at the best) might be drawn into these discussions, adopting the view propounded by her brother, against that advocated by a comparative stranger (for blood is thicker than water), and passionate eagerness on these secondary and problematic events might even divert her thoughts, in a measure at least, from Him under whose shadow she had sat with great delight. In earlier days she had no thought beyond, "I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine; let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine." In the depths of her spirit she might thus love Him still; and yet the intellectual atmosphere might be overcast with thunder clouds of controversy, and her delight in Him be obscured by her interest in secondary and incidental circumstances, imaginary or real, of necessity unproved because unprovable. The remedy for all this would not be to give up the hope of the loved one's return, but to withdraw attention from the imagined circumstances, and fix it upon Himself.

Perhaps an endeavour to convene a conference of those who love the appearing of the righteous Judge, without reference to its time beyond his own word quickly, or to its manner beyond the glory which He has Himself attributed to it, might prove a revelation to us all.

Gideon's Ephod.

A SENSE of disappointment passes over us as we read the close of the story of the life of Gideon, the hero of Israel's deliverance from the Midianites: a man endowed with the Spirit, putting from him dignity and position that the Lord might have his own place as Ruler and Governor of his people (Judges viii. 22, 23). We looked for a sunset of golden glory, and behold it is shadowed by a cloud (vv. 24-27).

As we look into this story we see a lesson of deep spiritual meaning to us; the secret of the failure of some who, in past days, led the army of the Lord to glorious victory. This ephod, which became a snare to Gideon and the children of Israel, was made from the spoil taken from the Midianites, and given to him as his share of the booty. It embodied to him the memories of that deliverance which God had wrought through him, a deliverance marvellous indeed, and inspiring to faith and courage when viewed aright, but a snare when for one moment viewed apart from the Deliverer. The ephod was a high-priestly garment, but there, in Ophrah, it was dissociated from the High Priest himself; and that which might have been a garment of "glory and beauty" when seen as his robe, became a snare when seen alone.

How many there are in the Christian Church to-day who are living upon a past experience! Do we not know of churches where the life seems to be stagnant, where there is organisation without power? Have we not found, at least in some cases, that a glorious record of work done, or a noble band of missionaries sent out from their midst, has become a source of self-congratulation and exaltation? Instead of throwing themselves wholly into the spiritual tide, and being borne along into an ocean-fulness of grace, they rest on their oars—they worship the ephod apart from the High Priest.

It is the same in the experience of individuals. If you ask some friend "Are you a Christian?" the answer is "Oh, yes; I was converted under So-and-so, at such a meeting, so many years ago." Well and good—but what of to-day? Was that memorable time the beginning of a life of union and fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ, a life that has been growing fuller and sweeter every day? If not, then that one is in danger of falling into the same snare—resting in an experience apart from the living Lord.

The danger seems to increase as we tread the heavenly pathway. If the Master has brought us to know something of the power of his death and resurrection, something of the life hid with Christ in God, something of being emptied and broken that his light may shine forth radiantly (ch. vii. 16-20), what then? Is there not a temptation to speak pityingly of others, as being still in comparative twilight—unconsciously to plume ourselves upon having reached a stage, a state of holy blessedness? And if for one moment we do this, we fall into Gideon's snare—worshipping the ephod, instead of using it to glorify the great High Priest.

Oh, let us beware of ever regarding holiness as a state; it is a life, the life of Jesus manifested in our mortal body. We are only safe while Jesus is all to us, when truly "it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me;" and so "to live is Christ."

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

THERE is nothing in which the ordinary education of English boys and girls is more defective than in languages other than their own. The consequence is that they are hopelessly beaten even in their own country by foreigners, who successfully compete with them in obtaining situations in England, and then use the knowledge gained here in successful competition with them in the markets of the world.

From this point of view alone we shall confer an inestimable advantage on thousands of our readers, by the course of Lessons which we announced last week, and which may well be termed

LANGUAGES MADE EASY.

The course will bring the best and most recent results of Mnemonical Science to bear on the study of languages, and place those results within the reach of all without the high fees which have generally had to be paid for mnemonical help. The Lessons will be copy-right.

But from our point of view a still higher and more important end is to be attained by this striking system, in reducing to a minimum the time and labour of the Christian missionary in acquiring the language without which he cannot begin his work. To show that we are not speaking at random, we quote the testimony of the Neue Preussische Zeitung of July 18:—

Rev. J. D. Kilburn...has instructed the students of the Johanneum, Barmen, in his system of memory training. The results were surprising. What seemed impossible to remember at the beginning of the Lesson had before its close impressed itself on the weakest memory with ease.

The Rev. J. Haarbeck, President of the Johanneum, says that the chief feature of This new and epoch-making system is its great simplicity and its philosophical foundation. Through the principle that memory work has to do with the understanding, thinking will be exercised, the thinking power increased, and the mechanical headwork diminished. With the same outlay of time and strength, from three to five times as much work can be accomplished, if Mr. Kilburn's slow and progressive method be followed.

It will be a very real and kindly service not only to us and our circulation, but also to the cause of education, and especially of Christian Missions, if our readers, many of whom have been our friends for a long series of years, and all of whom we regard as our steadfast fellow-workers, will take this opportunity of introducing THE CHRISTIAN to the notice of their circle of acquaintance and friends. And, above all, we ask their union and communion with us in prayer that the last years of its originator and Editor may be cheered by its increased usefulness in gathering together in one the children of God who are scattered abroad, and in cultivating the revived evangelistic and missionary tendencies of this hopeful time.

The Heart of Life.

In the heart of the roots are buds of spring
Cowslip bells and the orchis spire,
Though mists of autumn crawl and cling,
And dumb is every woodland choir.

In the heart of the trees is sap of life,
The force that yearns to leaf and fruit;
Pressed back indeed by the wintry strife
And bound in the barren, buried root.

In the heart of man is hope that thrills
Toward some far-off matchless spring;
In the heart of God is Life that fills
The expectant life of everything.

The Sin Bearer.

"FORGIVEN but not forgotten." How often these words express the hopelessness of a human bond which has once been broken ever being again as if it had always remained intact. How often the injured party yearns with intense desire to forget even as he has forgiven, and he cannot. He feels there is a gulf fixed between him and the one who has betrayed his trust, which nothing in this world can ever fill up. Sometimes, indeed, a human heart in the fulness of a love almost resembling the Divine, may forgive a treacherous past, and if not forget, do what is far better, trust without a shadow of a doubt, even when that past is not forgotten.

But it is not in respect to the injured party that a memory with a curse in it is most to be feared. It is the one who has done the injury, who has inflicted the injustice, who has been the betrayer and is forgiven, who knows what the bane is, of not being able to forget. There is no fear in such a case, for fear is incompatible with perfect love, and that may exist, but there is the secret sense of shame. The cry of agony, "Oh that it had never been!" may, under the healing influences of time and affection, die down to an inarticulate sob, but the latent ache is there. If this be true as between human beings who have sinned the one against the other, how much keener the anguish must be of a human soul that recognises its guilt as a traitor to its God! When the holiness and purity of God are once clearly apprehended, and the righteousness of his law, and the malignant perversity of disobedience to it realized, how can the utter shame, the sense of guilt ever be removed? The guilt may be forgiven, even as man is commanded to forgive his fellow man. God has promised to put the sin of the penitent "behind his back," and "to remember it no more for ever," that is, to do what man can so seldom do, forget as well as forgive the wrong. But what is the sinner to do with his stained memory? If he keeps his mental vision fixed on the Holy One, there is the ever-present question "How can a man be just with God?"

Eternal light, eternal light!

How pure the soul must be,
When, placed within thy searching sight,
It shrinks not, but with calm delight
Can live and look on Thee!

Strong intellects have reeled to their foundations when they have realised the purity of God and the pollution of sin, and then have gone no farther in the way of salvation. The two characters in Bellamy's "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," who are driven to suicide by the memory of sin, have their prototypes in real life. Forgiven I may be, but how can I forgive myself, and meet my loving Father's face, with sins on my conscience, and stains on my memory, which are indelible, being component parts of the indestructible past? Yes; impossible if a miracle of love, utterly incomprehensible to my finite mind, had not been performed. My guilt is transferred to Another. Not the punishment of my guilt, primarily, but my guilt itself.

"Absurd, unthinkable, immoral!" says the scorner, and I may be unable to refute his assertions, though I do not admit them; but I know that if once with an awakened conscience he is brought face to face with God, he will find relief and peace only in the same blessed truth. "This is transcendental, and incompatible with human reason" he may rejoin. Admitted, but the trans-ference of guilt, presents no difficulty to the mind, which does not exist in a like degree in the transference of punishment, or in any other plan of salvation, which does not make light of sin. Oh, the joy of knowing that absolute love, in accord with absolute justice, says of all the sinful past "I am responsible for that, not he," and that not so much to prevent inflicted punishment as to remove self-inflicted shame and remorse. My otherwise inalienable property in the wrong, which was crushing me down, is taken away, by One able to bear it all, and so:—

The sons of ignorance and night
May dwell in the Eternal Light
Through the Eternal Love!

Is not this the kernel of the Gospel?

An Object Lesson in Missions.

THE fact of 105,000 people and over 20,000 children visiting a large hall in Birmingham for the express purpose of hearing missionaries and seeing missionary curios speaks for itself. No less than 6000 exhibits from all parts of the world decorated the courts of the Bingley Hall, in which the representative patiently stood, delivering his message to moving and surging crowds of reverent, fascinated audiences. During the ten days the scene was more like a huge panorama of a foreign country than anything else. On every side the beholder gazed upon trophies, barbarous and civilised, the one the trumpet call to instant action, the other a witness to the enlightening influences of Christianity. No heart could fail to be impressed as the eye gazed upon solemn, touching relics belonging formerly to martyrs and witnesses of the truth of Jesus Christ. Like a continuous flow of drawing-room gatherings, the addresses went on at the rate of fifty a day, and in no case did God's servant cease his story without a pointed appeal for prayer and service.

In the middle of the hall was a model of that little-understood Zenana, and it was interesting to watch the faces of pity and quiet thought of those emerging from the dark, cheerless home of some 120 millions of their fellow-sisters in India. The Bible Society, too, was present, bespeaking an interest no one should fail to give to a society which lays the foundation of God's eternal Word, as the only basis of unity and strength in the great harvest-field. The many translations on view, eagerly scanned though not understood by many, nevertheless told of years of unstinting labour, scholarship, and suffering.

Medical missions were well to the front. The conception was a very blessed one, bringing all denominations together in one spirit, one hope, one calling. There was indeed a deep spiritual influence pervading the whole proceedings, and few could depart without some idea of the last command of our Saviour, the myriads ignorant of it, the bond of brotherhood encircling the globe, and the tremendous love of Christ to us who tread on Gospel ground.

Village Work in Devon.

For some time I have been in North Devon, conducting mission services among the villages. We have been enabled to visit a large number of those during the past summer. During the day we have visited the cottagers in their homes, inviting them to the evening service in their village, and leaving with them a Gospel book. Good numbers have attended the evening meetings, and in some cases the chapels have been crowded. We have had much cause for praise and thanksgiving to our God. Christians have been stimulated to more active service for their Master, and we believe many have been led to trust wholly in Christ as their Saviour. At present I am working among the villages around here, visiting the homes of the people, and holding meetings as opportunity offers. I shall be glad of the prayers of the CHRISTIAN for guidance and blessing during the winter months.

OUR FIRST BAPTISMS.

SOME months ago seventeen of our native congregation, after having the subject of baptism brought before them and explained, gave in their names as candidates. Every one of them was in regular attendance at our schools and services. All of them had professed conversion and decision to follow Christ, and had already been under observation for some time. The nature of their occupation and their being on different shifts, made it impossible to form them into a class for instruction, so we had to impart as much Gospel truth to them as possible in the services each Lord's Day.

On September 27 twelve of them presented themselves for baptism; of the others two had lapsed into heathen customs, and a third, because of inconsistency, was deferred; the fourth was sick, and the fifth had not received notice, and could not be found. At 9.30 on Sunday morning, accompanied by Brother Allister and the three evangelists, Joshua, Matthew, and Johannes, they came over by appointment to our private house in Jappetown. After prayer had been offered, Matt. xxviii. 18-20 was read and commented on—Christ through death breaking the power of death; the all power of the resurrection life; the command to go and make disciples of all nations, baptising them.

We then read Galatians iii. 26-28: Baptized into and putting on Christ. All one in Christ Jesus and members one of another. Then followed Romans v. 1-11, Christ's finished work, and then Romans vi., the whole beautiful chapter, so appropriate and complete: Buried with Christ, risen with Christ;—the new man with the new name, risen, cleansed, and having put on Christ; the new life, the new Master, the new members, the new Spirit, the new service, and the new wages. Brother Allister also addressed the candidates.

A series of questions having been put and duly answered with regard to Gospel teaching and the renunciation of the old life and its ways, Joshua said:—"I would like to ask you whether you all clearly understand the meaning of the words, 'heathen customs, rites, and superstitions?' They mean the witchcraft, the spirit-worship, the transmigration of souls, the sacrifices and prayers to the spirits of your ancestors, and everything of that nature. I am very thankful to God to see this sight to-day, and pray that God will make you a blessing to your fellows." We here specially referred to polygamy, as one of the customs to be renounced.

Matthew said: "My brothers, let us praise God for this great salvation. Satan will come and tempt and try you, but shut all the doors and refuse to listen to him. With the shield of faith you can turn all his darts aside, just as a soldier turns aside the assegais with his shield of bullock-hide. Be much in prayer. Do not think that the door referred to by Christ when He said 'When thou hast shut thy door,' means a literal wooden door. It means the door of the soul. Shut other thoughts and affairs out, and get away from yourself, and talk with God on the hill-side, or anywhere where you can be alone."

All present were then solemnly warned of the need of absolute sincerity and complete renunciation of the old life and ways, and advised to search their hearts and be certain of their purpose. Thereupon Finish Nkamango, the only one about whom we had any misgivings, said: "I am not ready to be baptized to-day." The remaining eleven raised their hands in token of their sincerity and persistence in their desire for baptism. Each candidate was taken separately into another room, and the questions having been clearly read and explained to him, one by one, his answers were recorded by Brother Allister. The questions were satisfactorily answered by all.

The new name each one had chosen was bestowed upon him in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. When the eleven had been baptized, we sang hymn No. 70 of the American Zulu collection, "Ngi ya ku'm dumisa M'Kululi wani" ("I will praise my Redeemer"), "U ya ngi sindisa ezonweni zani" ("He saves me from my sins"), "U ya ng'etabisa enhliziweu yani" ("He rejoices me in my heart"), "Ngako ngo'm dumisa M'Kululi wani" ("Therefore, I will praise Him, my Redeemer").

Brother Allister then addressed them on the duties and privileges of soldiers of Christ, urging obedience to his commands and the necessity of daily testimony by word and life, that Christ may be glorified and objectors silenced and compelled to own the presence and manifestation of Jesus in the soul. A few words were then added to help them to distinguish between "temptation from without" and "sin rising spontaneously within," explaining that Satan through eye and ear and mind will try to sow seed in a cleansed heart, but that they were to remember and to remind Satan that the old man of sin had been nailed to the cross with Jesus, had been taken down and buried with Him in baptism, and that the new man, risen with Christ, had nothing to do with sin, but was surrendered entirely to the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost, a servant unto righteousness.

Invited to offer praise or prayer, several of the newly baptized prayed in simple, earnest, pathetic language. Nathaniel Kumalo pleaded, "O Lord, Thou hast taken possession of my soul. Whenever Satan comes back to try and enter, it is Thy work to prevent him. Keep him out, for Thou art mighty." After singing another hymn, "I will sing of my Redeemer," the benediction closed a most enjoyable service.

In the afternoon of the same day we met to commemorate our Lord's death and to encourage one another in the expectation of his coming again. There were present as communicants, Rev. H. E. Mabile and Mrs. Mabile, W. Allister, A. W. Baker, Joshua, Johannes, and Matthew (evangelists); twelve native members of other mission churches of various denominations, and the eleven newly baptized first-fruits of our Mission, thirty persons in all. A fairly large congregation filled the back seats of the hall and were auditors and spectators.

As we went across to the services in the afternoon, a great storm-cloud had obscured the sun and covered Johannesburg with its dark shadow. Before us in the compound was a large crowd of heathen, beating drums, blowing whistles, and dancing, symbolic of the dark cloud of ignorance obscuring the light of God's truth; but as we looked the sun broke through a rift in the cloud, and a bright gleam of sunshine bathed the roofs and windows of one part of the town in glory right in the midst of the surrounding shadow, and the heart which but a moment before was clouded with sadness at the sight of the crowd in dense heathen darkness thrilled with grateful thanksgiving at the thought of the eleven transformed ones, upon whom the Sun of Righteousness had arisen with healing in his beams. Christian Unity in Work.—The vicar of St. Silas' parish, Bristol, Rev. F. J. Horsfield, recently invited the Sunday-school teachers of all denominations working in the parish to tea. The invitation was most cordially accepted, and about 160 gathered in response to it. After tea a conference was held on Sunday-school work—one representative from each place taking part in it, and dealing with some particular phase of the work. This was most helpful and instructive, many valuable and suggestive hints being given. The whole meeting was extremely interesting, and was characterized by the greatest unanimity. Many expressions of goodwill and fellowship were heard on all sides. The vicar took the chair, being supported by the ministers and superintendents of the various schools.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

SERVICES IN NEW YORK.

AFTER a considerable interval these evangelists are again holding a consecutive mission in the city of New York, and they are meeting with every token of public interest. The meetings are in the Cooper Union building, and are chiefly directed to the rousing and reviving of Christians.

The New York papers are giving much attention to the mission. In the Tribune for November 10 we find the following notes on the personal appearance of the evangelists:—

"Mr. Moody does not show the six years that have passed since his last series of meetings in this city. He is as full of fire as he was twenty years ago, and the great audience followed him as closely yesterday as did those that thronged the Hippodrome in 1876. The Bible is still to him the Word of God, from cover to cover; neither infidelity nor higher criticism, neither sneers nor scholarship swerve him from his childlike faith in the Book. The singing is under the leadership of Mr. Sankey, who, if he has grown a little stouter with the years, has lost none of his old-time power in leading great audiences in Christian song. The services, morning and afternoon, were opened with a half-hour of spirited singing. At each of the services the singing will be an important feature."

Mr. Moody's first addresses were on the Bible and the increasing hold it has on the minds of the race. On a subsequent occasion, says The Tribune, he preached upon "Fundamental Bible Doctrines," such as repentance, justification, prayer, the Holy Spirit, sanctification, the second coming of Christ. As on the previous day, he was unsparing in his protest against the idea that the world has outgrown the Bible, or that the world needs any new doctrines; in his opinion, the Church needs ministers on fire with the Holy Spirit, men who believe in the doctrines and preach them.

Mr. Moody read the following answer, given by Dr. Monro Gibson, of St. John's Wood, to some questions asked at St. Louis in 1893:—

Will the Old Book do for the new century? If it will not do, what have we left? Are we to restudy the Bible, or are we to begin with something else? Are we to follow in old paths, aided by all the light that now shines, or forsake them for ways unknown, and follow the men "who are sharp-eyed along the low horizons of truth, who walk by street lamps, and never steer by stars"? What Old Testament prophecy has failed, what word of Jesus has lost its power? We must have one Universal Book, that reveals a universal Saviour, who is able and willing to save the last and lowest sinner of earth.

The text-book of Christians—the Bible—is the only book at all worthy of universal adoption. The men who have prophesied against the Book have made failures; the Churches which have built away from Jesus Christ have vanished. The prophets of Spencerism were not intrusted with the last words of wisdom, and we need not fear what the future may bring. There are philosophers and scholars and problems innumerable, but no one but Christ and his Church has ever grappled with sin and death, and no Book but the Bible tells of heaven and immortality.

Yes; the Bible will do for all the centuries. While it deals with the manners, habits, and customs of the past, it points out clearly the sins and dangers of to-day, the perils of the future, and the remedy with which to meet them. While the ancient writings of men on stone or brick, papyrus or parchment, are valued principally as relics of our museums, the Bible is for every age and clime, the voice of God speaking in language so simple that a child can understand it, and with depths so profound that no human intellect can exhaust its meaning.

At the same meeting in his opening remarks Mr. Moody said:—"Where are the Hippodrome converts?" I hear men say. 'Where are the men and women who were converted in your meetings in 1876?' is the sneer that greets me now and then. 'I will tell you where they are. You will find them occupying pulpits in this country, and in the church pews of every city of any size in the United States, if you are looking for them. Men usually find what they seek. When Mr. Sankey and I were in the Mississippi Valley a few years ago, people in every city we visited came to tell me that they had been converted in New York or Brooklyn or Philadelphia or Boston twenty years ago.'"

Race Work.—On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last five members of the mission staff of the Liverpool Diocesan C.E.T.S. visited the Aintree Races and distributed temperance and Gospel literature, besides dealing personally with a number of the frequenters of the races. This is done on every occasion during the year at Aintree and Newton-le-Willows, and much blessing has attended the work. Rev. J. Hirst, Secretary, 11, Lord-street, Liverpool, would be grateful for parcels of suitable literature for distribution.

"THY GENTLENESS HATH MADE ME GREAT."—

Psa. xviii. 25.

THE Nasmyth hammer which can crush blocks of tough metal, will break the shell of a nut without hurting the kernel. In this it resembles this Psalm, in the earlier part of which there is one of the grandest descriptions that words can give of God's mighty interposition on behalf of his threatened child. But here we are told that it is the Divine gentleness which has made him great. It is as though God's power were exerted against his foes, whilst his education was entrusted to the loving kindness of the Most High.

Review your life. See the perils from which you have been rescued, the process of your education, the slow degrees by which you have climbed to any eminence of Christian character, the method by which you have attained the power of influencing others; is it not all attributable to the gentleness of the Good Shepherd? Not by sudden cataclysms and catastrophes, not by the earthquake, the fire, or the hurricane, not even by the stringent requirements of law, but by a succession of tenderest, gentlest movements of the Divine Spirit. He has remonstrated in stillest accents, He has seemed grieved and sad, He has turned and looked, He has sent a message by a woman's lips, He has put a little child into your life to lead you, He has poured on you one continual stream of sunshine. Now, it has been the distilling of dew, and again, soft showers on the mown grass, and through all, the purpose has run of eliminating the self-life, and leading you to the full stature of the perfect man. From your throne in heaven you will say, His gentleness brought me here.

"CLEANSE THOU ME FROM SECRET FAULTS."—

Psa. xix. 12.

It is not likely that we shall be kept from the great transgression unless we are preserved from presumptuous sins, and these in turn will befall us unless we have been cleansed from hidden faults. Just as the germ of disease taken into the system will presently reveal itself in an outburst of malignant fever, so hidden faults flower out into presumptuous sins, and these into great transgression. "Then lust, when it hath conceived beareth sin; and the sin, when it is full-grown bringeth forth death." How necessary, therefore, to utter the cry of our text!

First, we need forgiveness for secret sins. The Jewish law made large provision for sins of ignorance. A man might unawares walk across a grave, or touch some article of furniture which was ceremonially unclean, and so become defiled. Even though unconscious of actual transgression, he would find his communion with God broken. Thus, after the holiest day we have ever spent we need to ask for cleansing in the precious blood, for sins which God has discerned, but which in the twilight of our ignorance, and because we compared ourselves with those beneath us in spiritual attainment, have escaped notice.

Next, we need deliverance from the love and power of sin, in lower depths than we have ever realised. We desire to pass muster at the bar, not only of our neighbours and ourselves, but of God. We desire that the Spirit should antagonize the flesh in depths below the reach of the plumb-line of our consciousness. The blood of Jesus has unknown qualities in it for unknown sin.

TUESDAY, December 1.

"NOW KNOW I THAT THE LORD SAVETH HIS ANOINTED WITH THE SAVING STRENGTH OF HIS RIGHT HAND."—Psa. cx. 6.

This was no doubt true of David as the anointed King of Israel, and of the Lord Jesus to whom the Father hath promised that He will subdue all things under Him; but it is also true of every saint who has been anointed with the Holy Ghost. This should be thy position, friend, if thou art a Christian. Christian means an anointed one. Has thy head bent beneath the chrism of the Holy Spirit? Art thou included in what Paul said, "He that anointeth us is God," and in what John said, "The anointing which has once been received, abideth"? If so, there can be no doubt that Jehovah will ever save thee with a present-tense salvation. He saveth those whom He anointeth unto the uttermost.

Dost thou doubt this? Sayest thou that the annoyances and solicitations, the pitfalls and snares, the antagonisms and temptations of thy life are so great as to offer an insuperable obstacle to thy entire deliverance from fret, irritation, and failure? Then turn to the marvellous phrase that follows and tell me, if thou canst, the meaning of the saving strength of God's right hand. Is not God's right hand strong enough? Here is a strength that saves. All the strength of God's right hand goes forth to save. Look away from adversary and temptation, and keep murmuring to thyself, "He shall save me to-day, and here, with the saving strength of his right hand." And is not the right hand of the Most High the place where Jesus sits? Is not the right hand of God moved by the love that died on Calvary? "He laid his right hand upon me, saying, Fear not, I am the First and the Last, and the Living One."

WEDNESDAY, December 2.

"THOU PREVENTEST HIM WITH THE BLESSINGS OF GOODNESS."—Psa. xxi. 3.

God is always beforehand with us. The word "prevent" is seldom used in modern English, as it was when the Bible was translated. Then it meant "that which comes or goes before." It was used equally of the good as of the evil which anticipates our coming. How lovely it is to know that God is always anticipating our need with his grace.

Go into the chamber where the mother is preparing for the advent of a little babe. You have no difficulty in telling what the wants of the child will be by all the articles which her tender forethought is providing, and when presently the little one opens its eyes in this strange, new world, it finds that it has been prevented with the blessings of goodness.

For ages prior to the appearance of man on the earth, the great heart of God was exercised in preparing for him. To please his ear, Music tuned her lyre; to satisfy his eye, the Great Artist wrought variety of colour and form; to warm him, seams of coal were laid down; to give him drink, rivers poured from crystal urns of snow-clad peaks; and Adam might have adored God's prevenient grace.

Still more is this the case in the kingdom of redemption. God has stored all the blessings of goodness in Jesus. In eternal ages, in the incarnation, the cross, the ascension, He has prepared beforehand for every possible need of our spiritual life. Whenever you pray, remember that you are not to procure unthought-of help, but to avail yourself of the blessings of goodness with which God has anticipated your coming.

THURSDAY, December 3.

"HE HATH DONE IT."—Psa. xxii. 31.

This is the Hebrew equivalent for the words, "It is finished." Surely it was meet that the Psalm of the Cross, which our Lord must have recited to Himself during those hours of anguish, should close with this triumphant outburst.

Finished, the ceremonial law.—It had served its purpose in prefiguring the Person and work of Jesus, but now the rending of the veil betokened the abolition of the forms of the earlier dispensation. The things which could be shaken passed, that those which could not be shaken might remain.

Finished, the fulfilment of prophecy.—Very diverse predictions had met, and were closed, as gates are when the king has passed through. That He should be a King and a Sufferer; a Priest and a Victim; a Lion of the tribe of Judah, and a Lamb for substitution.

Finished, the work which was given to Him to do.—The Messiah was to be cut off, not for Himself, to finish transgression, to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness. And each of these great ends were realised.

Finished, the work of atonement.—As the Substitute and Sin bearer, the Lord Jesus stood with the sins of the race meeting on Him, but when He died He put them away by the sacrifice of Himself. They were borne into the land of forgetfulness, from which they can never be recovered. The demand of Divine justice was satisfied. Mercy and truth had met. Righteousness and peace embraced. And this cry of a finished redemption shall be crowned by a cry of complete restitution (Rev. xxi. 6).

FRIDAY, December 4.

"SURELY GOODNESS AND MERCY SHALL FOLLOW ME ALL THE DAYS OF MY LIFE."—Psa. xxiii. 6.

We are well escorted, with a Shepherd in front and these twin angels behind! Someone called them watch-dogs, but I prefer to think of them as angels. Do you not see the special beauty of these fair, strong angel-forms following? We make such mistakes, give unnecessary pain, leave work ill-done and half-done, often succeed rather in raising dust than cleaning the rooms which we would fain sweep! It is good to think that two such angels follow close upon our track as we go through life, putting kind constructions on our actions, disentangling knots, making good deficiencies, and preventing the consequences of ill-advised and inconsiderate action pursuing us to the bitter end.

There are mothers who are always tidying up after their children. The little ones have had a rare time, which has left confusion and disorder, but the mother comes, mending the broken toys, stitching the rent garments, making everything neat and tidy. As the ambulance corps goes over the battle-field, as time festoons ruins and decay with verdure, as love puts the most tender construction on word and act, so the Love of God follows us.

His goodness imputes to us the noble motive, though the act itself has been a failure; credits us with what was in our heart; reckons us the full wage, though we have only wrought one hour. His mercy forgives, obliterates the traces of our sins from his heart, undoes their ill-effect so far as possible towards others, and treats us as if we had never transgressed.

SATURDAY, December 5.

"AND THE KING OF GLORY SHALL COME IN. WHO IS THE KING OF GLORY?"—Psa. xxiv. 7, 8.

This is what we all want. We must have the King of Glory within. To have Him without, even though He be on the Throne, will not avail. He must come in to abide, to reign, to sway his sceptre, to keep the everlasting doors through which He has passed. This has been our difficulty, that those doors have so often been forced. We want one who is strong and mighty to keep them strongly barred against our mortal foe.

This Psalm was first realised in the entrance of the Ark into Mount Zion, when God went up with a merry noise. It is supposed that the first part of our text was a challenge from the warders of the ancient gates, whilst the second was a reply from the escorting band that accompanied the sacred emblem. It was a moment of vast triumph when the Ark of the King of Glory passed to the ancient city of the Jebusites.

A still greater fulfilment took place when Jesus, having overcome the sharpness of death, victor over sin and the grave, mighty in battle, vanquished principalities and powers, and entered the city of God. Then to and fro these challenges and answers flew between the angels that awaited Him, and those who accompanied.

But the most vital fulfilment is when the heart opens to receive Him, and He enters, to go out no more, and to hold it against all comers. Oh, beaten and baffled saint, it is impossible for thee to fail when Jesus, all-victorious, garrisons thy heart!

Famine in India.

A FAMINE similar to that which devastated a large part of India in 1877 is apparently upon us, and for months to come it will do its awful work of death among thousands of people living in hundreds of villages. The price of grain has gone up 50 per cent. during the past month, and is steadily rising. A few days ago a crowd of hungry people broke into the shops of the grain merchants in Agra. In their struggle to get food some were killed, and a great many wounded. In Cawnpore famine riots have also occurred. The people, maddened by hunger, band together and make a raid on the grain exposed for sale in the market places.

The horrors of famine are indescribable. A few days ago I made a tour through several villages in my district. In one place I found 137 little children, most of them under twelve years of age, and many of them not more than four or five, whose parents had died or deserted them. These children were found in the streets and bazaars picking up grain which had fallen on the floor, and eating it raw. Temporary provision is being made by the Government for the daily food of these children. I could have brought away 100, if I had had the money to support them.

In another village, I found 100 little children, most of them naked, and many so weak that they staggered as they walked. They were picking up one grain at a time in the market place. Most of them said that their parents were dead or had deserted them. We had them called to the rest house, where we were staying, and fed them with parched grain, which they ate with great voracity. My heart yearned for these homeless children, many of whom must die soon of starvation. With the children came a number of men and women who were living skeletons. It was awful to look into the faces of these starving people, and to know that every day their sufferings must increase until death ends their misery. We visited another village, and a large number of hungry little children gathered around us. We could only give them a little parched grain. As our train stopped at station after station, it was awful to hear the hungry people crying in the darkness for food. In my own quiet study that cry still rings in my ears.

In one place it is estimated that 12,000 people die every month from the effects of famine. It is utterly impossible for the Government to provide relief for all the people when the famine is so widespread. Every day as I drive along the road, I see poor people sweeping up the dust from the dried-up grass on the road side, and in the fields. They winnow what they gather for the sake of the few grass seeds they may find. Everything that can sustain life is being eaten. The seeds of weeds, roots of grass, bark of trees, and the stones of the mango fruit, the kernels of which are crushed, are eagerly eaten. This bad food soon produces disease, and hastens the death of the sufferers.

We have opened a home for the homeless in our mission compound, and at present have more than fifty people. We have no means of support for these poor people excepting what God sends us. Thus far we have admitted every homeless child that has come to us, and in marvellous ways God is sending money for their food. I am sending out this appeal hoping for prompt help. The cold weather is coming, and we must have blankets and clothing, as well as food for these people. Twenty dols., or £5, will support a woman for one year, and fifteen dols., or nearly £4, a boy or girl. Our prayer is that many who read this letter may send us help. Money may be sent by Post Office money order, or by draft on London, which may be had at almost any bank.

ROCKWELL CLANCY,

Secretary Bishop Thoburn's Special Fund for India.

Allahabad, India, October 1.

(1654)

A few days ago the Mission here was offered a hundred children from the famine districts of Central India, but not one could be taken because of lack of funds. Shall we still refuse them and let them starve to death, or will Christian friends rescue them from such a fate? God has given these children into our hands to bring up for Him. With your aid we can take them. It will cost only Rs.3 per month, or about £2 a year to support one of these children. Please let our hearts be made glad by your speedy aid. It is for the boys that we need the most help.

Aligarh, North-West Provinces, India.

Major-General F. T. Haig, Hazel Bank, South Nutfield, Surrey, send to us extracts from a letter he has received from Rev. J. Cain, of the C.M.S.-Koi Mission, India, and asks help from our readers towards the relief of the distressed in that region.

Mr. Cain says: "The Kois are all in terrible straits for water and food. We seem to be in a corner not get-at-able. The Godavery is like what it usually is at the end of March, fordable in places. So the distress must prevail over all its basin (an area the size of England). Pray that our Christians may not lose heart. They are taunted with, 'If your God is the Ruler over all, the Father of all, why does He not care for his children?' This is very hard for them to understand, and it is not easy for them to give a right answer. Unless relief works are started the Kois and Malas must die. We know that our Heavenly Father sees all, and we trust in his goodness to bring good out of evil. All the Christians are pretty well, but there has been a great deal of persistent fever at Nullapilly, where there is scarcely any drinking water to be obtained."

Major Haig says he would like to send about £400 to Mr. Cain at once to meet present necessities.

DEAR SIR,—We are receiving from our missionaries working amongst the villages in the North-West Provinces of India very distressing accounts of the famine. I enclose a brief extract from a letter received from Miss Wahl, who is working near Lucknow. The difficulties and anxieties of the missionaries at this time are necessarily very great, and we would ask for most earnest prayer for them, and also that this widespread suffering may be overruled as a means of leading the people from their idols and superstitions to the living and true God.—Yours faithfully,

A. L. CAVALIER, Sec.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission,

[EXTRACT.]

"Parents are already selling their children to get food. In Aminabad a man sold his only son for Rs.2½, as they had not had anything to eat for four days. When he brought home some provisions he did not tell his wife how he obtained the money, but when the dinner was ready and he did not come he at last had to confess it. That was more than the poor mother could bear, and she cast herself down into the well. When the man saw he had now lost both wife and son he followed her."

A very urgent appeal comes from the Balaghat district of the Central Provinces, where the condition of the people is said to be distressing beyond description. It is four years since there was an average harvest, and the present year's rice crop is almost an entire failure. It is intended to put in hand various relief works as soon as possible, so as to provide the people with the necessities of life. It is also desired to give food to the aged, infirm, sick, orphans, and others incapable of labour.

The needs are very pressing, and help ought to be rendered without delay, as the price of grain is fast rising. Contributions will be thankfully received and forwarded by Mr. George Lampard, 114, Clapton-common, N.E.

The Howard Association.

THE report of the Association shows a considerable variety of operation. The diminution of pauperism by the boarding-out system and the treatment of pauper children has received earnest attention. A children's department is suggested as a necessary and useful addition to the Local Government Board to look after the technical training of elder boys and the boarding-out of girls and younger boys, also to have special oversight of children of defective intellect or physical infirmity. The appointment of several assistant women inspectors is also desirable. It appears that there are more than 40,000 pauper children in England and Wales, and that there are also 30,000 more in reformatory and industrial schools.

It has now become generally realised that the true method of dealing with pauper children is the boarding-out system. But it appears that guardians are allowed to board out only orphans and deserted children. Children of all other classes, which in many Unions are the most numerous, must still be herded together in barracks. The boarding out system is reported to have been carried out with great success at Sheffield. The Howard Association urges the importance of having women on boards of guardians, and in particular that a lady guardian should be entrusted to carry out the details of the boarding out committee.

The report deals with the question of sentences and the capricious way in which these are awarded by different judges. Careful attention has also been given to complaints as to the internal administration of prisons as well as the question of prison education and other matters concerning the treatment of criminals.

Nor is the work of the Association confined to this country, for details are given of influence brought to bear in France, India, the United States, and other lands. The report concludes with a plea for fresh help. The secretary is Mr. William Tallack, 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, London, E.C.

Summer Village Work.

WRITING with respect to the efforts of the past summer to carry Gospel light into the neglected villages of Worcester and Hereford, Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, says:—

"We find, as Ritualism spreads and efforts in the villages, apart from the work of the Church of England, get less, that there are more anxious souls than before. In one village we met three 'seekers' in five houses, and we believe they found, too. In another very needy place, there had been some tent meetings. The people were awakened, and as we went from door to door many said 'Yes' to the 'Come unto Me' of the Lord Jesus. One Friday a tremendous gale came on, and one stood in the rain and wind talking to someone hidden from view. On joining me he said, 'I couldn't come sooner; there was another soul waiting to say 'Yes.'"

"Many years ago I remember finding an anxious one by the wayside, and, kneeling down, offered a long prayer. When next we met I found the enquirer had depended on my prayer, hence there was no peace. Since then, without any stereotyped form, we usually adopt a shorter method. 'Can you say with Peter, "Who his own self bear our (my) sins in his own body on the tree?"' generally paves the way for Christ's own words, 'Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'"

"Many times in after years we find souls brought alone with the Lord, abiding in Him and bringing forth much fruit. One Lord's Day evening I met with the case of one within forty-eight hours of heaven. When she saw me the greeting was, 'Praise the Lord.' Years before she had gone alone with her Lord and surrendered to Him, saying 'Yes' to his call. Now, as I repeated Psalm xxiii., and came to the words 'Thou art with me,' 'Yes' was the emphatic reply. She told all visitors it was 'saying yes to Jesus' that gave her peace. Is it not the same in the inquiry meeting; in fact, everywhere with seeking souls?"

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THE jubilee report of this Society opens with thankful reference to the experience of the past fifty years, since this service on behalf of the seamen began in a humble way. "The work has been largely extended, better supported, and, above all, it has been attended with much spiritual power and blessing. A branch has been established on the Sussex coast, where a comfortable and well-furnished seamen's institute has been presented to the Society by Mr. W. Willett, of Brighton; the Cumberland stations have been re-arranged and improved, and there also a new seamen's rest has been opened; itinerant work has been commenced on the Yorkshire coast, and the missioning of four Scotch ports on the Ayrshire coast has been undertaken. Several additional missionaries have also been engaged, including a Bible colporteur who is a good linguist, and is set apart to labour among foreign seamen in the port of London."

Interesting details follow of the work at the headquarters in Ratcliff Highway, and it is stated that for seamen who are not total abstainers it is still a dangerous locality, and they have need of all the helps and safeguards provided for them. The "Lightship" Coffee Tavern and Reading and Recreation Rooms have proved valuable counter attractions to the grog shops. The various operations, including "The Gospel Pioneer Band" and "The Christian Harbour Lights," have been greatly blessed. Daily visitation is carried on in the boarding-houses and on the shipping in the docks.

Turning to the details given of the branches, we find that "The work at the Society's Institutes, Rests, and Bethels on the coasts is similar in most respects to that carried on in the Port of London. Each month has brought in from nearly all the stations gratifying accounts of the progress of the work, and of the conversion to God of many mariners." The Southwick Institute on the Sussex Coast, the workers at Fowey and on the South Cornish Coast, the North Devon Mission centring at Appledore, and the branches on the coasts of Lancashire, Cumberland, Ayrshire, Ramsey (Isle of Man), as well as in Ireland, all report sustained effort and excellent results, illustrated by cheering incidents of blessing.

Unfortunately, from past years and from the new headquarters building, a debt has accumulated. Efforts are being made to clear this off by means of a Jubilee Fund, towards which about £1400 have been raised. "The Society urgently needs not merely the continued, and, where possible, more generous support of its present friends, but it needs new helpers, a greater number of regular subscribers, so as to ensure an annual income of at least £500 more than that which it at present receives." The secretary is Rev. G. J. Hill, 255, Burdett-road, Limehouse, E.

Home of Industry.

LAST week a happy gathering of Christian workers was held. Mr. DOBBIN presided.

Pastor HAZZARD, of Bow Common, gave an earnest, soul-stirring address on the two ambitions of Paul's life. "That I may win Christ" (Phil. iii. 8), and "That I might gain the more" (1 Cor. ix. 19). Paul thought nothing too great to suffer, or give up, that he might gain Christ. It was with him not merely a desire, but a passion. Prestige, position, power—all a Jew held dear—Paul parted with, willing to become all things to all men, that he might save some. His life-work was saving souls. If we would be successful soul-winners, we must be willing to be the servant of all.

Mrs. LEACH, who had lately arrived with a friend from the Pacific Coast, spoke of the work there among the miners in Alaska in connection with the Peniel Mission, and asked for the prayers of her fellow-Christians. Miss ELLA SHAW, from Port Said, pleaded for prayer on behalf of Africa. Mr. JOHNSON told how God is blessing the work near Gottenburg.

Miss Macpherson's new family of rescues was a picture of calm happiness. This is the seventy-second band whose hearts are being healed from the deadly wounds caused through drink, etc.

THE LATE Sir B. W. Richardson.

BY the death of Sir B. W. Richardson, a true nobleman passes from the present scene. Alike as a scientific investigator and a moral reformer, the lamented physician was held in high esteem throughout the civilised world.

BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON was born at Somerby, Leicestershire, in October, 1828, and had therefore just entered upon his sixty-ninth year. His early education was conducted by a clergyman at Barrow-on-the-Hill, in Leicestershire, and subsequently he went to Anderson's College, Glasgow. While here he busied himself with the victims of the "Irish fever" as it was called, one of the results of famine, and he was himself smitten down by it. He took his medical and surgical diploma in 1850, and graduated with distinction at St. Andrews in 1854.

On leaving the University he became assistant to a surgeon at Saffron Walden, and afterwards lived for many years at Mortlake. In 1861 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, of which he had become a member in 1856, and throughout Europe and America various learned and scientific bodies recognised his ability by enrolling him. In 1867 the Royal Society made him a Fellow. He was appointed Croonian Lecturer in 1873, President of the Section of "Health" at the Social Science Association in 1875, and at the Sanitary Congresses held at Leamington and Croydon he was chosen to preside. Among other distinctions Dr. Richardson was president of the Medical Society of London. A striking testimony to his popularity with scientific men and to their sense of the importance of his work was that which 600 of them combined to offer him in 1868. "In recognition of his various contributions to science and medicine," they presented him with a microscope by Ross and a thousand guineas. In 1893 the Crown recognised his distinction by conferring a knighthood upon him.

The work in which Dr. Richardson engaged, and which was thus strikingly recognised, was very varied in character. As a temperance advocate he occupied a foremost position, and one of his latest public appearances was to preside at a lecture delivered by Dr. Lees, on November 13, at Sion College, Victoria Embankment. Though not well at that time he spoke with his usual force and enthusiasm. It was in his famous Cantor lectures before the Society of Arts, 1874-5, that he made out the case against alcoholic stimulants which has had such a wholesome influence upon public opinion on this great question. He endeavoured to cut at the root of our national drinking habits by showing that the old notions about the physiological benefits of alcohol were erroneous. Alcohol does not hold the place in therapeutics or in social life that it did a generation ago, and it is no exaggeration to say that this is due in a far greater degree to Dr. Richardson than to anybody else.

He was the discoverer of a valuable mode of application of ether spray as a local anæsthetic in surgical operations. As a general anæsthetic he introduced methylene bichloride as safer than chloroform and more reliable than ether, and he discovered the remarkable power of amyl over tetanus and other spasmodic nervous affections. In connection with his researches into the nature of anæsthetics may be mentioned the remarkable system (hence "the lethal chamber") he introduced for putting animals to death painlessly, and which for many years past has been in use at the Battersea Home. Sir Benjamin also expended an immense amount of time and labour in endeavouring to devise a method of painless slaughter for animals killed for food.

Everybody associates the name of the deceased physician with the model City of Health, Hygeia, which he delineated at the Social Science Congress at Brighton in 1875. In many ways modern life has been influenced by that remarkable sketch. Sir Benjamin wrote a number of useful books, and from time to time conducted several journals on sanitary and medical science. In his advocacy of reasonable physical exercise, he singled out cycling as specially desirable, and was himself a knight of the wheel. In his later life he seems to have been greatly impressed with the extravagant pace at which most people deem it necessary to live nowadays, and strongly insisted that by careful living and easier going, instead of human life extending to forty-two, it might very well go on to a hundred.

On Wednesday last week, Dr. Richardson seemed in good health. In the evening of that day, after reading the last proofs of a book entitled "Memories and Ideas," he had an apoplectic seizure. He never recovered consciousness, but expired on Saturday morning.

Distress in Asia Minor.

DEAR SIR,—As many readers of THE CHRISTIAN have sent gifts to the special fund of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society for the relief of winter distress in Asia Minor, will you further help our work by inserting portions of a letter received from Oorfa, the Mesopotamian city wherein some 6000 Armenians were victims in the late massacres? The letter shows how needful relief funds are, and will continue to be throughout the winter; and also what a wonderful spiritual work has commenced amongst the poor and stricken people in far-off Ur of the Chaldees.

"Oorfa, Nov. 3, 1896.

"I am in receipt of £180 more [£220 had been sent previously] from your Society. We are unutterably grateful for the special aid afforded us by your contributions. We wish you could know our people as we do, and see the look of heaven in the faces of the multitude. All are awakened spiritually, and many are peculiar monuments of the grace of God. Our Bible-women now number nineteen, and report wonderful interest in the Word of God. We have some 500 women being helped thus by the readers, who also hold each week, in several districts of the city, meetings for reading the Scriptures and prayer. Some of our Bible-women are supported almost entirely by the payments of their pupils; some of these, however, can pay nothing, and then we give the small salary. Many previously very sad are rejoicing in the blessed work given them of helping others.

"We are able to help in general religious work through your generous aid, and there is no limit to the physical needs of the Lord's own about us. We have yet 2200 on our list who receive a trifling aid each week by gift of salt, native butter (used with the prepared wheat instead of meat), and soap, and I expect to use some of your grant for fuel for the widows before winter closes."

Plainly the work of relief and of evangelisation must go on side by side for a time. Surely those who have helped to preserve thus far the lives of these oppressed and poverty-stricken people will continue their assistance through the winter distress. Contributions ought to be sent to the hon. sec., Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Yours truly,

KINNAIRD.

The Y.C.M.U.

MISSIONARY CONGRESS IN LONDON.

ABOUT a year ago a Young Christians' Missionary Union was formed among the young people connected with the Metropolitan Tabernacle for the purpose of fostering a missionary spirit. Although started at the Tabernacle, it is not confined thereto, the end aimed at being that in every Sunday-school or other centre of young people there should be a missionary organisation to cultivate a prayerful interest in Foreign Missions. Already several Branch Unions have been formed, while Missionary Conferences have been held and much Missionary literature circulated.

In connection with the anniversary of the Y.C.M.U. a Missionary Congress was held last week at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. On Sunday Pastor Thomas Spurgeon preached from Acts xxviii. 28 a special sermon on missions, in the course of which he said that a non-missionary spirit is a non-Christian spirit. He believed that missionary enterprise goes for nought unless Jesus is the central figure, God grant that it may ever be with our missionaries as it was with Paul as regards the Word of God. The Sword of the Spirit is still sharp on both its edges, despite the attempts to blunt it that the Higher Critics have been so diligently making. You know the story of the Moravian missionaries—how with all earnestness they sought to do the people good, and how with very little result they toiled until, the New Testament being translated, they began to read the story of Jesus' life and death. Then the Sun shone out, then the ice began to melt, and the Esquimaux, whose hearts were as frozen as the soil about them, began to ask to hear more of the glad story of his love. You can read in almost every book on missions the story of one of the first missionaries to the Congo, of how during the first four years, I think it was, that he was there he tried to teach the people morality and Old Testament history with very little result. During a visit to England someone said to him, "You know it is the law that convinces of sin; go and preach the law to them." After his return he translated the Ten Commandments to them, and sought to enforce them, but they declared that they had kept them and grew none the better, but rather the worse. Then it was, as he pored over the Scriptures for his own delectation and stimulus, that the truth dawned upon him more clearly that "the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Thereupon he told them the ineffable story of Jesus' wondrous love, and those hearts, even blacker than the skins of those who bore them, began to believe that God loved the world and sent his Son to save them.

The Monday evening prayer meeting was devoted to intercession on behalf of missionaries and of native converts. Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, in the course of a stimulative address, gave an account of the history and extension of the China Inland Mission, and of the operations now going on in the interior of China. Incidentally, he stated that the C.I.M. has now 700 missionaries at work, with about 7000 Chinese communicants.

On Tuesday afternoon a crowded ladies' missionary meeting was held. Mrs. T. BENHAM, who presided, spoke of the condition of the women in heathen lands, and urged that there was a tender place which could be touched by love in all hearts, if more missionaries could only be sent to teach them. In conclusion, she urged that Christian women had a great power in their hands, and they needed to use that power on weaker souls. What lady missionaries had to do was to go into the native homes and to charm away the sadness, thus making the inmates feel that God truly loved them.

Miss TURNER (L.M.S.) spoke of work in Almora, India, more particularly of the work of the Leper Asylum carried on at Almora. This was one of the oldest and largest in India. The present number of inmates is reported to be 123, of whom fifty are women. All of the inmates but six are baptized Christians, and nearly half of them are members of the Church—out-and-out Christians.

Mrs. TIMOTHY RICHARD (of the Baptist Missionary Society), who was dressed in Chinese costume, spoke of the heathen women and children in China, and their sadly neglected and down-trodden condition. Mrs. Richard closed with a strong plea for women missionaries, and very specially medical missionaries, who were sorely needed.

Miss DAWE (C.E.Z.M.S.) spoke of her work in the Zenanas of India among the poor dark women and children of that land. China, as had been urged, needs workers—many additional workers—but so also does our great Eastern Empire. Many missionaries have gone there, and some may suppose the need has been met; but this is a huge mistake, for hundreds of thousands have never heard the Gospel, and know not that there is a Gospel at all. India, and especially India's women, cry aloud for messengers of the Gospel.

A great missionary demonstration was held on Tuesday evening. Pastor T. Spurgeon presided.

and opened the proceedings with a rousing address.

Rev. J. H. WEEKS, of the Congo Mission, gave an account of Mission life and service among the Congolese.

Dr. C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY followed with an address in which he specially urged the peculiar value of Medical Missions, and the importance of all missionaries requiring some degree of medical knowledge before going forth to the Mission field. Many valuable lives have been lost for want of such knowledge as might have enabled the missionary to treat himself or a brother missionary at the early stages of some disease.

Mr. W. BARBROOK GRUBB of the South American Missionary Society, followed with a limelight lecture on "The Neglected Continent."

On Wednesday evening the Missionary Congress was concluded with a prayer-meeting for the outpouring of the missionary spirit on young Christians. Mr. E. H. GLENNY, of the North Africa Missions, spoke of Prayer and Missions, showing the need for intercession in view of the stubborn prejudices of people who love darkness rather than light. Difficulties arise from the fact that the people are alienated from God, as well as from the malice of Satan, and the opposition of political powers. Thus may be seen the crying need for prayer in connection with missionary work.

The proceedings closed with a season of earnest prayer, many brethren and sisters calling upon God on behalf of missions.

Missionaries for the Sahara.—A little band of devoted missionaries belonging to the North African Mission are all ready to go out to North Africa, having learned the necessary languages for working among the Arabs and Kabyles there. They are waiting until £200 can be raised to pay their expenses. Will any Christians help to send the Gospel in this way far into the Sahara Desert to tribes who have never before heard it? The missionaries are anxious to start at once, so as to begin their work in the cool season.

Homes for Aged Poor.

IN these Homes a shelter is afforded to many suffering ones. During 1896 two new homes have been opened, and twenty-six additional inmates admitted. This makes a total of thirteen homes, containing 130 rooms, occupied by 164 aged persons. The two oldest inmates are in their ninety-second year, more than a score are far on in the eighties, while out of the remainder the largest portion have passed the threescore years and ten allotted to man. It is an interesting fact that eight pairs of aged sisters are in residence, as well as nineteen married couples.

The last Home added, 13, Minford-gardens, West Kensington Park, was opened in the end of October and completes a block of six houses, the freehold property of the Charity. No debt remains on these houses. A mortgage of £500 on the Paddington Home is the only liability of the Charity, and it is hoped that early in 1897 this may be paid off.

The record of twenty-seven years is a satisfactory one, and if this work were better known it would doubtless obtain increased support. Up to the present time the entire work of the society has been done by voluntary helpers. A room rent free is the boon offered to respectable and deserving people over sixty years of age, whose entire income in the case of widowers, widows, and spinster is not less than 4s. or more than 6s. per week, or in that of married couples, pairs of sisters, or mother and daughter, the minimum of 6s., the maximum 10s.

It has been found necessary to establish coal, sick, and nursing funds, and the extra twenty rooms recently added call for largely increased support in these branches. A ton of coal is sufficient to keep one room warm during the winter months. Clothes, old and new, blankets and sheets for lending, books and periodicals for the library, are all welcome gifts. Those interested in the aged are invited to visit any one of the homes, and see for themselves how much suffering can be alleviated at a very small cost.

Among the Jews in Paris.

IHAVE just completed twenty years' work among the Jews of Paris, as the missionary of the London Jews Society. It may be of some interest to know what progress the Gospel has made among the Jews in this great city. I arrived here as a perfect stranger and single-handed to labour among the 50,000 Jews estimated to be in Paris. They are scattered all over the city, belong to every grade and class of society, and are imbued with the innumerable "isms," besides being steeped in unbelief and indifference.

It was hard and up-hill work, full of trials, difficulties, and disappointments. But the Lord stood by me and encouraged me, and in reviewing my labours I may well exclaim, what great and marvellous things has the Lord wrought! Hundreds of Bibles and Testaments, and thousands of tracts in different languages, have been scattered among the Jews in Paris and the Provinces. The truth of the Gospel has been fully and plainly made known. A mission hall has been established, and every week mission services, meetings, and Bible-classes are held in Hebrew, French, and German. I have delivered above 900 lectures to Jewish audiences, on Messianic and prophetic subjects, proving that Jesus is the Christ, the propitiation for our sins. A colporteur is now constantly employed in visiting houses, workshops, and places where Jews are in the habit of congregating. Through the interest and timely aid of a Hebrew Christian brother, a Bible-woman is at work among the long neglected Jewesses, and a successful Sabbath school for their children is held, with an average attendance of forty children every week. Thus, by God's help, the Gospel net has been spread. We have gathered around us a goodly number of Jewish brethren and sisters, who through my humble efforts have been led to the Saviour, and have acknowledged Him openly in baptism. I rejoice to say that they walk worthily of the high calling in Christ Jesus, and are a greater comfort and help to us.

The Lord's Prayer.

IN our issue of October 29 a correspondent sought light on the subject of the Lord's Prayer—the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples (Matt. vi. 9-13; Luke xi. 1-4). A desire was expressed to know the mind of the Spirit of God particularly with regard to the clause, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," the correspondent inclining to a belief that forgiveness is extended by a gracious God through the finished work of the Saviour, and, therefore, unconditionally.

We have received a number of letters in response to the inquiry. Some have dealt with the prayer from one point of view, some from another; varying aspects have been treated by different writers, now for abstract exposition, again for practical purposes. Several correspondents seem to imply that the clause specified does not bring in a condition to Divine forgiveness; but this impression takes no account of the fact that the clause was expounded by the Lord Himself when He added, "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. vi. 14, 15).

The letters we have received fall into two principal groups, and then there are some communications more distinctive in character. First, we shall notice, in few words, those by writers who practically rule the prayer obsolete by regarding it as belonging to

A DISPENSATION THAT IS PASSED.

In a word, these friends say that the prayer deals with Israel, and not the Church, refers to earthly blessings, and not heavenly heritage; and they dismiss it from an exemplary position, because (1) it does not enjoin asking in the Name of Jesus; and (2) it makes no allusion to the atoning work of Christ. "W. G. M." writes: "It seems to me that the prayer was intended for the time when our Lord was with his disciples on earth; and that God our Father does not want his children to use these words at the present time, as they do not suit our case." Another correspondent, "E. B." (Dulwich), shall sum up this view: "No Christian would take Old Testament prayers as his only model, neither should we take the disciples' prayer, though perfect in itself, being the utterance of the Lord. But now it is the Holy Spirit who indites our prayers, for it is He that makes intercession within us." Another says we cannot say "heavenly Father" because we are in heaven—in heavenly places. But Jesus, of whom with greater emphasis it could be said that He was in heaven (John iii. 13), did not hesitate to speak of "my heavenly Father" and "my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. xv. 13, xvi. 17).

It is difficult to see how the dispensational argument can apply. Forgiveness was as really forgiveness when the Lord was on earth as it is now that He is in heaven; and assuredly we must ask for it now in his Name even as it was at the first sought by his injunction though apart from his Name. "B" (Southend) writes: "The Lord's Prayer may be used as a test of Christian character. If anyone cannot make the words his own, he must in some measure have to which Christ meant he should attain. It is related of the great Mr. Spurgeon that he discovered that the reason why one of his distressed flock could not obtain peace was that on using the Lord's Prayer as a test she could not offer up the petition, 'Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us.' Whereupon Mr. Spurgeon assured her that until she could, from her heart, use that petition, she would not enjoy a sense of personal forgiveness."

Dr. NEWMAN HALL points out that a state of mind willing to grant forgiveness to our fellows is a necessary qualification for asking forgiveness of God. He says: "The R.V. renders it, 'For we ourselves also forgive' (Luke); and 'As we also have forgiven' (Matthew). It does not mean 'Forgive us only to the same extent and with the same perfectness,' for this would forbid our prayer; but it means, 'Forgive us, who, on our part, in our smaller measure, do cherish forgiveness to those who have wronged us.' It is impossible, as true penitents, to implore mercy while cherishing unforgiveness ourselves, because penitently asking pardon implies that we abjure our sins and therefore resentment, which no real child of God can cherish towards those he includes in his own petition, 'Our Father, give us...bread, forgive us.'"

"T. W. C." (Rushbrook, Co. Cork) points out that the prayer is preceded by the direction, "After this manner, pray ye," thus leaving us to exercise a spiritual discretion in regard of the precise words used. Referring to Luke xi. 4, "For we forgive every one that is indebted to us," he suggests an allusion to the general cancelling of debts every year of jubilee, according to the Mosaic ritual, such customary forgiveness being recognised by Christ notwithstanding the fallen nature of the people. "According to both Evangelists the habit of asking in prayer to God is enjoined, as 'Our Father knoweth what things we have need of before we ask Him.' To any persons in doubt I would suggest their relieving the conscience by praying for a disposition to forgive others their trespasses against us, as we receive Divine forgiveness ourselves."

The beauty and simplicity of the prayer was the subject of many remarks in the letters. "M. E. R." (South Godstone) says:—"We may take the prayer unaltered, and plead our need before the Lord clause by clause, and so see, not only how exceedingly simple is the prayer to suit the needs of the youngest and weakest among us, but also how high, and almost unattainable, are

ITS MARVELLOUS ASPIRATIONS."

"OBSERVER" (Glasgow) holds that the prayer is a brief but comprehensive outline of devotional theology. He says:—"The second and third petitions evidently include all that comes afterwards. 'Thy kingdom come,' read in the light of the Acts of the Apostles, expresses the desire that men and women may be savingly converted by the preaching of the Gospel. 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,' read in the light of the Epistles, means that those who are so converted may afterwards live to the glory of God by being obedient to the instructions of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am persuaded that a shrinking from the clause 'Forgive' arises from confounding the Christian's standing with the obligations of daily life. The New Testament teaches that at conversion all past sins are forgiven; but it does not teach that there will be no wrong-doing in the future." 1 John i. 9 shows that as Christians we need forgiveness, which we receive if we confess our sins.

Various correspondents recommend books that have assisted them. Against the use of the prayer there is "The Lord's Prayer," by E. D. (1d. A. S. Rouse, 16, Paternoster-square). The two letters which recently appeared in our pages on this subject have been reprinted. Copies for circulation may be had gratis, on application, by letter, to Mr. Van Sommer, "Cuffnells," Wimbledon Common, Volumes of an expository character have been written by Dr. Newman Hall (6s. T. & T. Clark), and Dr. Adolph Saphir (5s. Nisbet). Mr. G. E. THOMAS (Bath) says the following headings have helped him:—Adoption, "Our Father"; Adoration, "Hallowed be thy Name"; Sovereignty, "Thy kingdom come"; Submission, "Thy will be done"; Provision, "Give us this day" etc.; Pardon, "Forgive us"; Protection, "Lead us not"; Preservation, "Deliver us"; Praise, "Thine is the kingdom."

Rev. John McNeill in Bradford.

By A CORRESPONDENT.

ON Friday last Rev. John McNeill closed a fortnight's mission in Bradford. This was Mr. McNeill's first visit to this busy and important centre of the woollen trade. The visit, however, will long be remembered as a time of deep religious interest and spiritual quickening. The town was in the full excitement of a Parliamentary bye-election when the mission began, which interfered with the attendance of a few earnest spirits at the first two meetings, but when Mr. McNeill had got the ear he soon succeeded in getting also the heart of the people. From the first day onward the meetings increased in attendance and spiritual power. The preacher was completely at home in the midst of thoroughly Yorkshire congregations, which were deeply moved and responsive to the humour, the pathos, and the powerful appeals of this remarkable preacher.

Preparations for the mission had been most carefully made. Handbills and cards of invitation had been distributed by the members of the Christian Endeavour societies. The largest hall in the town, St. George's Hall, had been secured for the Sunday and the evening meetings, and the Mechanics' Hall for the mid-day meetings for business men. The Bradford Sunday School Union and the Bradford District Y.P.S.C.E., who undertook the responsibility of the mission, entered heartily into the work. Prior to the mission, special meetings for prayer were daily held, a spirit of joyful expectancy had been awakened, and men confidently said, "The Lord will do great things."

A meeting to give Mr. McNeill a hearty reception was held on the Saturday before the mission. The Mayor, Alderman W. Wood, provided tea and issued invitations to all the ministers and many of the prominent gentlemen in the town. Rev. Thomas Scowby presided, and, after explaining the preparations for the service, and the need for the united mission in the town, he assured Mr. McNeill of a cordial welcome, and of the hearty co-operation of all branches of the Church of Christ. The Vicar of St. Augustine's led in prayer. Mr. Oates Ingham, who has been very active in the movement, then spoke, and was followed by Rev. J. Hallegay (Wesleyan), Rev. H. Perriam (Baptist), Rev. J. Townsend (U.M.F.C.), Rev. J. Clarke (Primitive Methodist), Rev. T. Anderson (Presbyterian), Rev. P. Noble (Congregationalist), and others. Mr. McNeill said that the unanimity and heartiness of the welcome had touched his heart and greatly strengthened his hands. In a racy address he explained his plans of work, and exhorted them to look for great things from God.

Night after night St. George's Hall was filled, and many who came out of curiosity were held spell-bound by the glowing words of the preacher; were arrested by the Spirit of God and led to a better life. Very memorable was the last midday service, when Mr. McNeill discoursed on "Naaman the Leper." It was a striking sight to see the multitude of strongly-built, hard-headed business men eagerly listening to the Gospel message. Equally as memorable was the last service held in the Horton-lane Chapel, which was densely crowded. At the close Mr. McNeill said he had received substantial testimony of the success which had attended the mission. The cards distributed at the meetings, inviting a response from those who had received spiritual benefit, had been filled up by people representing every denomination, and included one from a Roman Catholic. He thanked the ministers and the army of workers for their support. Mr. McNeill was then heartily thanked for the good work he had done. "The Lord hath visited his people, and praised be the name of the Lord."

Messrs. Whittle & Stebbins.

ON November 1 Major Whittle commenced a fortnight's mission in Inverness. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, the latter of whom, however, was laid aside for most of the time in consequence of a severe cold. Mr. Stebbins added much to the brightness of the meetings, not only by his own sweet solo singing, but by the inspiration he gave to the choir who gathered to assist, and who under his instruction rendered most effectively many of the songs in the new issue of "THE CHRISTIAN CHOR." On the last two evenings Mrs. Stebbins was able to be present, and did much to make these evenings the most successful of the mission. While writing of this lady, we may say that once in each week she conducted a meeting for women, at both of which she spoke with much power and taught lessons that we are sure will be remembered.

During the first week Major Whittle's Bible-readings were held in the United Presbyterian Church, and were well attended. It was thought better, however, to remove for the second week to the Free High Church, and there, for three days, a goodly number of Bible students got help and new light in the study of the Word.

From the first there was much interest in the evening meetings, but the last two evenings had by far the largest attendance, and the solemnity and impression seemed to deepen as the mission drew to the close. Every night the after meeting told of ingathering, and on the last night a large company that filled the Session House rose almost to an individual to testify of definite blessing received. Among these were several remarkable cases that will be watched with much interest. In one case father and son are now rejoicing together, and joy has come into a home long troubled by the curse of drink. In another case two young men brought in their grandfather, and stood watching and praying while Mr. Stebbins lovingly sought to lead him to the Light.

Major Whittle's power among the children was unknown in the North till now. Friends in Inverness would almost say, after the experience of these weeks, that he excels as a children's preacher. On Sabbath and Friday afternoons he gathered very large congregations of young people, and held their attention in a most marvellous way. Chemicals and candles and the blackboard helped to keep up the interest, and fix saving truth deep in the memories of the girls and boys.

After the friends had left a meeting was held of those who had been gathered in, when some forty attended, many of them young men, and all again declared that the matter was settled—they were in the Light. B.

From November 15 to 19 the evangelists conducted meetings in the Established Church, Dingwall. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Macalister, was in active sympathy. Mrs. Sheriff Hill also rendered very efficient help, while Lord and Lady Bennet assisted in the singing and inquiry work. The results of this brief mission were specially encouraging in the number of anxious ones, and in the earnest spirit displayed.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins are now at work in Edinburgh, the mission having been inaugurated by a large meeting in the Free Assembly Hall on Sunday. Mr. Whittle is delivering this week, in the Free Assembly Hall, the lectures embodied in his new book, "Gospel Pictures and Story Sermons." Next week we hope to give a special sketch of these endeavours to interest the young and those who work among them. After Sunday next the mission will be continued in various churches throughout the city till Christmas.

Requests for Prayer.—That the Holy Spirit may be poured out upon the Channel Isles, and that God's servants there may be led to unite in a general or parochial mission, if his will.—For a three weeks' mission to be conducted at the Free Church, Sarreasa, Cornwall, by Mr. Clegg, from Sunday, November 29.—For blessing on addresses to business men, by Rev. The McAll Mission.

OUR annual meeting took place in Edinburgh recently, and has left a cheering impression. Mr. Greig, the director of the work, was present. He referred to the financial difficulties which have hung over the Mission since Dr. McAll's declining years, caused in large part by his failing strength along with the rapid development of the work. Last year, by means of severe retrenchment, a budget was drawn up which has reduced the debt by about one-half. An Americanised Scotsman—a complete stranger from San Francisco—appeared on the scene, and has offered to pay £800, if friends can raise other £800 by March 28. This would clear the whole, and would be well worth an effort.

But better than this, for the retrenchment so painfully resolved upon has not been productive of the disaster we feared. Rather has it called forth the energy and self-denial of the French churches, so that the Gospel is preached as widely as ever with this difference, that in several places, the French churches have taken the work over from the hands of the mission. This is as it should be, and thus the crisis has proved the occasion of an advance.

At Lyons, for example, when Dr. McAll first began to work there, the pastors declared their inability to carry on the work by themselves. Now they are strong enough to do so, and are eager to do it, so that the four stations abandoned by the Mission are apportioned among them.

At Toulouse, when the Mission proposed withdrawal, the pastor offered to carry on the work, and, as there was great difficulty in raising the rent of the hall, he has arranged for collectors to gather the sous which the peasants of the districts round willingly give.

In spite of retrenchment, there still a hundred and seven halls connected with the Mission. But the advance most desired is not in the direction of permanent mission-halls. Twenty-five years ago these halls were objects of curiosity, but they have ceased to be so, and no longer attract the careless crowd. The mission-boat reaches the right class, and a second mission-boat is now wanted. Temporary missions, conducted in a new locality for a few weeks only, in some unlet shop, are found useful. But, if we would not be satisfied with holding together the already evangelised, if we would leaven France with the Gospel, we must go further afield and devise new and ever new ways of bringing ever fresh crowds under the sound.

Women's Mission to Women.

MAY I be permitted to bring before you the great importance of the difficult, and yet most blessed, work carried on by the lady workers of the Female Mission to the Fallen? The female missionaries visit at night the streets and bridges of the metropolis, provided with special tracts (some of them written by a lady) containing an offer of Christian sympathy and help for the poor wanderers. Many a poor young girl has thus been led to turn back on the very threshold of an evil life, the preventive cases being very numerous and most successful. Many have been those who, touched by the sisterly and Christian sympathy shown to them in their fallen condition, have been led to the home of grace, there to leave the burden of their sin and commence a new life of faith and hope. All is not success. There are often disappointments, but the patience of the missionary is generally rewarded, and many bright examples could be given of happy after-lives. The Society is conducted very economically, but still needs the constant help of fresh supporters to fill up the ranks as from time to time its friends are called away. The secretary is Mr. J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing-cross, London, S.W. DOUGLAS FOX.

Peace Sunday.—Peace Sunday, this year, falls on December 20, and we hope our readers in each district will "take time by the forelock" and enlist the goodwill of local ministers of religion in the important service of preaching peace sermons on that occasion. Literature bearing upon the question may be obtained gratuitously, on application to Dr. W. E. Darby, 47, New Broad-street, London, E.C. As a result of Dr. Darby's recent visit to France, on behalf of the Peace Society and for the promotion of the observance of Peace Sunday in particular, much interest in this matter has been awakened amongst the Protestant pastors.

French=Canadian Evangelisation.

READ with pleasure the letter from a French missionary, asking for the prayers of God's people that the wily plans of Jesuitism to arrest the progress of Evangelical truth may be defeated. It may be interesting to English, Scotch, and Irish Christians to know that whilst Romanism seems, in some quarters, to be regaining some ascendancy, through underhand methods, she is being put to a severe test in other quarters, including Canada, one of England's most promising colonies.

The long political conflict which ended on June 23 in the complete discomfiture of the clerical powers has given to the Romish hierarchy a very severe blow. In the Manitoba quarrel were involved questions of momentous import, such as these: Shall the old civilisation of the Middle Ages, under which the province of Quebec has suffered and groaned for generations, be fastened upon Manitoba? Rome said "Yes," and commanded the Dominion Parliament to compel Manitoba to submit to her dictates on educational matters. The Protestants of that province, aided by hundreds of so-called Romanists, gave an emphatic "No" to Rome's pretensions.

On June 23 the new Parliament was to be elected. The hierarchy of Rome made bold to dictate to the whole country what should be its policy. Under penalty of the most dreadful temporal calamities of excommunication and eternal damnation, the people of Quebec were commanded to vote for men that were pledged to obey the bishop's commands. The liberties of Canada were at stake, the freedom and independence of Canada were in danger; but God scattered the designs of Rome, and she met with a most crushing defeat in the province where she had been mistress for years. This defeat has so weakened her power, that access to the people with the Gospel message has become comparatively easy.

The great danger for French Canada at the present hour lies in the necessary reaction from a dead externalism to irreligion and infidelity. Thousands of people are fast drifting in that direction, and the Evangelical churches of Canada are unable alone to cope with this great problem. They have Christian workers, native missionaries, and teachers ready for the work, but for lack of funds fields white for the harvest are left untouched and the harvest is perishing. I am sent to Great Britain and Ireland to enlist the sympathy of the Christians of these more favoured lands, and I appeal to lovers of Christ to remember French Canada at this critical period of its history.

The Harp Well Tuned.

"Yea, upon the harp will I praise Thee."—Ps. xliii. 4.

Let not the harp be still,
Let not one chord be mute,
To love—immortal love—
Strike, strike the loftiest note!
Love, in the Cross of Calvary shown;
Love, in the cry, " 'Tis finished," known.

Strike, strike another chord!
The Saviour lives again,
And resurrection power
Demands a joyous strain;
See, see the stone, at break of day,
By angel hands is rolled away.

Again awake the song!
To echo through the sky,—
The Lord of glory see
Exalted up on high;
Let lovely anthems greet Him there,
And sweetest strains your homage bear.

Strike yet the harp once more!
For He is coming soon,
To bring for his beloved
A bright eternal noon!
The "morning star" uprising see,
Oh, glorious hour of victory!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Earl of Stamford, speaking at a missionary meeting in Leeds, said that his interest in mission work dated back to a very early period in his life, for he was actually born in the mission field when his father was chaplain to that great and good missionary Bishop Field, in Newfoundland.

Letters to the Editor.

"IN THE NAME OF CHRIST."

DEAR SIR,—Writing in your number for November 12, Rev. S. Pearson says: "To begin well, we must have prayer in the name of Christ. And this does not mean the mere mention of his holy name at the end of prayer, but the offering of it according to the will of Christ." That praying in the name of Jesus is not the mere mention of his name in prayer will be admitted by all praying people, but the words which follow are more open to question.

At the Last Supper, our Lord said to his disciples, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name." Did this mean that they had asked nothing according to his will? Evidently not. To ask in the name of anyone is to ask as one of those who belong to him, expecting to receive what is asked for his sake.

A friend gives you a cheque signed by himself and drawn upon a neighbouring bank. If your name could be substituted for his before the cheque was presented for payment, the cheque would be dishonoured, for the very good reason that you have not a penny standing to your credit with the bank in question. But your friend has a large balance in his favour, and on the strength of it the money is handed over to you without any hesitation. Now, in God's account we are all hopelessly bankrupt; but the credit (so to speak) of our Redeemer is infinite, and for his sake the prayers of those who belong to him are accepted and honoured; and the greater our personal worthlessness the more is Christ honoured when even we are "accepted in the beloved One."

I would advise any one of your readers who has not done so already to compare carefully the numerous passages (especially in St. Paul's Epistles) where believers are said to be "in Christ." A right understanding of these two words is a great step towards a right understanding of the whole Bible and a great safeguard against modern error. —I remain, truly yours,
Woking. HORACE NOEL.

WHAT IS A CHURCHMAN'S DUTY?

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to ask a question through your columns, a question of considerable moment to myself, and it may be to many others of your readers similarly placed. What is the duty of a Protestant under the following circumstances?

I live in a remote country village, where the parish church and two Nonconformist chapels are the only places of worship. I am, from childhood, a "Churchman," my father having been fifty years a clergyman; and although able to meet all sects in brotherly love, I have no desire to leave the church of my fathers and turn Nonconformist. I have been for four years churchwarden, and the services are decently and simply conducted by the rector, who has given me his word that Rome has no charms for him. So far, so good. The village is, however, visited in the summer-time by clergy from all parts, and London is often represented, and, of course, the rector gives over his church to them to conduct services, so that he may (reasonably so) be relieved of one out of three full services each Sunday.

To my mind there is no question but that some of these clergy are secretly "leavening the lump" with Romish practices, especially in the administration of the Lord's Supper. When such clergymen officiate, I invariably refuse to communicate, and go out during the prayer for the Church militant. This is a disagreeable thing to do, especially for a churchwarden, and my action has made itself felt to some purpose. The rector himself is free from all the altar ceremonial of some of these strange clergy; still, he has been so far influenced as to make more of the elements at the Lord's Supper than he should, and to reduce the supply of both the bread and wine to a minimum. He has, too, a phial of water at hand, and washes out the cup, and drinks up the dregs, thus giving a prominence to the elements that seems to me to border upon idolatry. As before stated, I am one of those Protestants to blind whom Rome's juggling has no power whatsoever; and yet I have to submit to this much of her "leavening" influence, or else be deprived of a place of worship on the Sabbath day. The question is, what should a Protestant do under the circumstances?—Yours faithfully,
CHURCHMAN.

THE NEED OF FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—I have been much interested in reading your correspondents' letters on this subject, but they do not appear to know that several Prayer Unions already exist. One is in connection with the McAll Mission, and was started about a year ago. We have also one in connection with the Foreign Aid Society, which was launched in 1886 by Madame Réveillaud and myself, and which, we believe and know to have been fraught with blessing and encouragement.

Our object is to intercede for France, and to establish a bond of prayer between the Christian workers in that country and our own, encouraging French workers to let us know their various needs and difficulties, so that we may sustain them by prayer and sympathy, and rejoice with them when God answers our petitions. I should be very glad to give further information, or to receive any suggestions which might assist us to work the Union with more success.

SOPHIA L. BURGESS,
Association Secretary, Foreign Aid Society.

"WHITE SLAVES OF ENGLAND."

DEAR SIR,—In Pearson's Magazine a series of papers is being given, headed "The White Slaves of England." The facts seem too dreadful to think of. The November issue shows that the poor women who work in whitelead factories seem to need as much help as the heathen. Their lives are short, and there is no mention whether they have means of hearing of the life beyond the grave, to which, through the nature of their work, they hasten before their time.

I hope you will forgive my calling your attention to this, but the condition of these sisters has weighed so heavily upon my mind, that I felt compelled to call attention to such a terrible state of things in our so-called "Happy England." I know you live to redress human wrongs, and the most terrible wrong would be to let these people go to a certain death with probably no hope beyond. We would not let a condemned felon do this.—Yours, etc.,
C. C.

OUR ARMY IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—May I be allowed to emphasise the statement in Miss Ashe's letter in THE CHRISTIAN of October 29, quoted again by Major Conran in your issue of November 12, that one of the leading causes of the abounding sin in our Indian army is "the monotony and intense loneliness of the soldier's life." The Royal Commission on the sanitary state of the army in India, which issued their report in 1863, say this over and over again: "There is no period of military service in which the soldier is thrown more upon his own resources, and has fewer opportunities of employing them advantageously, than during his service in India..." "He has few or no means of occupying himself rationally. He lies on his bed and perhaps sleeps most of the day... Even at home this kind of regimen would be far from conducive to health. In India, both physically and morally, it helps to destroy it in men in the prime of life, with abundance of nervous power to dispose of..." "The men suffer much from ennui. For all practical purposes they are entirely idle: and they complain of what they feel everywhere, the 'weary idleness' of their lives, and that there has been so little done in the way of giving them occupation" (Vol I., p. lxiv.).

Sir John Lawrence, under examination (questions 2956, 2957): "The men are not happy; they are restless, and they want to be at something else, or to get away." "It is a life of great monotony, is it not?" "Yes." Sir Charles Trevelyan, under examination (Vol. I., p. 300): "It is of great consequence to keep them in heart, and give a satisfactory direction to their minds and feelings, instead of leaving them to idle in barracks without having the ordinary objects of life offered to them."

The Royal Commission recommended (page lxiii.) as follows: "There is one means of reducing the temptation resulting in sexual disease which ought to be encouraged, and that is to improve the soldier's condition in the way of occupation, instruction and recreation, in fact to occupy his wasted time beneficially and rationally. The late General Jacob was fully aware of this when he stated that 'moral forces alone are of any value.' So far as we can deal with this question, occupation appears to us to afford the most reasonable hope of diminishing this great scourge by leading men away from the canteen and from vice."

This recommendation of the Commission has only been very partially carried out, as witness the statements of your correspondents mentioned above. Before the same Royal Commission Florence Nightingale protested against the proposed institution of the C.D. Acts in India, and said that if Government "licensed vice in order to control vice" the soldier would be more vicious than before. She also said that in this as in other things "common sense is the same as moral sense" (Vol I., page 370). Ezekiel says (xvi. 49) that "Pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness" is the fruitful cause of gross impurity of life. Some of our officials in England and India are agitating for a return of the thrice-condemned C.D. Acts. Is it not time that "common-sense" and Scripture sense, if we may use such a term, should be tried in place of them?—Sincerely yours,

MAURICE GREGORY.

MESSRS. RHODES AND SCHREINER.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Newberry thinks I was most reckless in my attack on Messrs. Rhodes and Schreiner. I had no intention of attacking anyone, but simply criticised certain acts and opinions, and cannot plead guilty of making a single reckless statement.

I am perfectly well aware of the fact that natives will often request their masters to punish them instead of bringing them before the magistrate; nor have I a word to say against this, because it is the culprit's own expressed wish. But this is a very different matter from what was aimed at by the "Strop Bill," which was to give masters the legal right to punish their servants without trial before any impartial authority to show whether they were guilty or not. This I did and do condemn as unfair.

But that any missionary should so abuse his position as to inflict corporal punishment on any of the people under his care, I, as a missionary, must condemn most strongly, for the relation of a missionary to his people is not that of master and servant. Mr. Schreiner says some missionaries do this. I am unable to contradict it, because I am not acquainted with all the missionaries, and cannot, therefore, say what some of them may not do; nor may I doubt Mr. Schreiner's word when he declares that some of them do so. But of this I am certain that the bulk of them would agree with me in condemning such an act on the part of a missionary; and it seems to me that the Christian public have a right to know who these men are. Meanwhile, I can only assure your readers that during my long missionary life in Africa, I have never heard of a single instance where such a thing occurred.

I am exceedingly thankful that Mr. Newberry has published the extract from Mr. Schreiner's letter to him, in which he declares that the native and coloured people of the colony "compare very favourably with the peasantry of England and Europe." This is a sentiment worthy of Mr. Schreiner, and one with which I most cordially agree. But now let your readers compare this with what he wrote in THE CHRISTIAN concerning their thievish propensity, insolence, etc., and judge whether that is not a wholesale condemnation; there is not a single qualifying word or exception in that sentence.

Please excuse this hurried letter as I am in the midst of preparation for sailing for the Cape. Yet I cannot close without thanking you for calling attention to Mr. Mackenzie's "Austral Africa." I cannot too strongly recommend the people of England to study that work.—I am, yours sincerely,
SAM. J. HELM.

JUVENILE SMOKING.

DEAR SIR,—There are many signs proving that this subject is now engaging the attention not only of temperance workers, but Sunday-school teachers, etc. They find that lads who become addicted to this habit are soon lost as far as their teaching is concerned. This growing evil should be combated by all who preach temperance sermons, address Sunday-schools, and in other ways are engaged in training the young. Friends wishing for pamphlets, etc., upon the question may obtain such by writing to the office of the Anti-Tobacco Society, 25, Market-street, Manchester.
JAMES B. DAVIS, Secretary.

A Plea for the Children.

"The following is from a clergyman whose work brings him very closely into touch with the working classes."

FOR twenty-five years the U.K. Alliance and Temperance Party have been concentrating their energies and money on the endeavour to pass a Local Veto Bill. Whether it is wise, or whether, if passed, it will be a panacea for all the evil, is a moot point; but during this twenty-five years, with the growth of public-houses, gin-palaces, and grocers' licences, another and gigantic evil has developed, and I write to ask whether abstainers, the professing Christian people of all denominations in England, will arise and make their influence felt, by legislation or otherwise, to mitigate or do away with what has become a sort of slavery of children in our midst? The Factory and School Board Acts are witness that when English people are aroused and united, Bills can be passed, and I imagine that it is only needful to show a good reason and it will be possible to unite all bodies on common ground.

NOW TO THE POINT.

Our Lord Jesus Christ said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." How is this possible, and how can the work of the Sunday School and Band of Hope be effective, when perhaps twice or thrice a day, Sunday included, the little ones (I have seen them of three years, but say) of five, seven, ten, twelve, are sent regularly by fathers and mothers (too lazy, or too ashamed to go themselves) to the public, or gin palace, or the grocer's, to fetch the ale, cider, gin, or whisky. Watch any public-house at the delivery bar. See the little ones, sipping often, or allowed the dregs. Hear their language. I have heard children of five swear "like troopers." Imagine the talk they hear, the sights they see. They play round the public, and children who can hardly toddle throw open the doors and march in. Surely their cry (for many don't like it, as they often get beaten for spilling the drink) rises up to God. If we do not stir in the matter, we shall catch it one day from a righteous God. It is to one like myself, who works among the masses, a cruel sight, worse than any I have seen in a heathen land, for those heathen mothers do love their children.

Again, these children have been hard at school and need rest, recreation, and fresh-air, not to pass their dinner and tea hour in waiting inside the public with its foul air, or outside in the chill air of a winter day. They were created to grow up innocent, beautiful, pure, for a heavenly country. Will not Christians unite and carry into practical effect the teachings of Bible, Sunday-school, and Band of Hope?

HOW.

Arouse public attention on every platform, church, and chapel. Unite and gather public opinion. Then let some good M.P.'s draft a short bill. No girl under fifteen ought to be sent into the public; no boy ought to be allowed in unless at work; and any publican serving such should lose his licence. Thirty years ago potboys were kept to deliver the beer and porter, etc. Now all this is done away, and mothers and fathers are training up their children as drunkards.

Grange Mission, Godstone.—This mission, at the residence of Mrs. Rambaut, is, we regret to say, now but a memory, having been closed through the inability of the lady to carry it on. It was started by the late Dr. Rambaut, and maintained for twenty years with abundant blessing. The Mission Hall, which is part of the stone-built house, seats two hundred persons, and when the work was discontinued, it was not large enough for the gatherings that regularly assembled. No one regrets more than Mrs. Rambaut the closing of the Hall, in which the pure Gospel was so long proclaimed without regard to sectarian differences. From a circular recently issued, we learn that she is desirous of disposing of the property; and should some earnest Christian family come into possession, we may have the joy of hearing again of the prosperity of the Grange Mission. The villagers and other people in the neighbourhood would also hail with delight the reopening of the Hall. The house stands in its own grounds of about two acres, and offers many and varied residential advantages. Godstone is twenty-three miles south of London, and one hour's travelling by train. Communications to Mrs. Rambaut should be addressed, The Grange, South Godstone, Surrey.

The Aberdeen Mission.

"GRANITE, granite, everywhere! even to the steps of the minister's house, all is granite. Are the hearts of the people granite too?" "We get that name." "I know who will break them." So spake Mr. W. D. Dunn, and so answered his hostess as he entered the F.C. Manse of Old Aberdeen on the eve of the day preceding that on which he was to commence a week of evangelistic services in connection with the Free Church there.

One only too short week (as all felt), and we were like the dreamers whose mouths were filled with laughter and their tongues with singing, for the Lord had done great things for us whereby we were made very glad. As when the melting fire burneth, so the word spoken in faith and in loving earnestness took hold of the hearts of the people. Now it was blessing, blessing, everywhere!—on the minister, on his household, on the elders of the church, on the choir, on the members, on the outsiders. Blessing on all ages, from the matron of mature years sobbing out her mingled joy of conscious possession of a present salvation, with regrets that she had been so long without it, to the little lad, so small as to be quite passed over on the supposition that he belonged to some of the inquirers. But, resolutely keeping his seat when one and another went away, he was at length asked why he did so, and answered with a burst of tears, "I want to be saved." "Have you given your heart to Jesus?" he was asked by one who met him as he left the church shortly after, to which query he answered "Yes," with an air of joyous determination which made his little frame shake.

It was matter of regret to all that in consequence of arrangements previously made for Mr. Dunn to commence a week of similar services in the Free Church at Torry, the meetings in Old Aberdeen could not be continued by him. Mr. Davidson, of Inchmarlo, having consented to hold services this week, prayer is earnestly requested for a continuation of the blessing on Old Aberdeen, and also on the services being held by Mr. Dunn in Torry.

A PARTICIPATOR IN THE BLESSING.

Christian Evidence Work.

DEAR SIR,—During the past three months I have conducted evidential missions in New Brompton, Manchester, Plymouth, and Devonport, also in Hyde-park Hall and in other parts of London. One of the happiest features of my work has been the hearty co-operation of Christians of all churches, clergy, ministers, and laymen, all uniting to make the work successful in preaching the truth for the purpose of educating the people in the great cardinal truths of our blessed religion and also the winning of souls for Christ.

The infidelity of the present day is altogether of a different order from Bradlaughism. It is now to be witnessed in the subtle lectures of so-called Socialists, some of whom I have heard declare that the first thing necessary for the salvation of the masses is the uprooting of Christianity; the work of the Ethical Society, the chief lecturers of which society are avowedly agnostics; the Sunday League lectures, in which the subject of religion is not allowed to be introduced. Add to all the above the work of organized scepticism and the prevalent carelessness to things holy, beautiful, and true, and your readers will see the great and growing need of Christian teaching, and a kind but just impeachment of all forms of unbelief. To carry on this work, may we ask for your help and prayers?—Yours faithfully,

A. J. WALDRON,

Lecturer for the Christian Evidence Society.

Children of Poplar.—Rev. James Chadburn in his now report says: "Last year we gave over 21,000 hot breakfasts to poor children. We were also able to distribute in the neighbourhood new and old warm clothing; and a large number of pairs of boots. Our work is always necessary. It does not depend upon the fluctuations of trade. The need becomes greater and more acute when trade is bad; but it does not disappear when times mend. Fathers of families die when trade is good as at other times; and then the wolf comes to the door. Men are often killed in the docks while at work, and then want comes into those homes just as surely and fiercely as though the deepest depression lay on trade." SOLOMON'S SIN.—1 Kings xi. 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—1 Cor. x. 12

THE story of the fall of Solomon comes upon us a sad and painful surprise. Never did career begin with brighter promise, and yet its close was in deepest gloom. Several things make it surprising. 1. Solomon's previous piety. His zeal for the worship of God; his prayer at the temple dedication; his personal dealings with God on two distinct occasions (iii. 5; ix. 2); his urgent appeals to the people—all these prove him to have been no hypocrite. Yet he fell. 2. The influence he had exerted. He had been a witness for God, and through his influence the nation of Israel had never before been so extensive, so glorious, so wealthy, so devoted to the worship of God. And to other nations his fame had spread abroad "concerning the name of the Lord" (x. 1). Such a reputation is not easily won, and needs to be maintained by continual fidelity. Strange that he should now destroy what he had by his previous conduct built up! 3. The warnings he had received (10). These were contained in Scripture (2); in the closing words of David (1 Chron. xxviii. 9, 10); and in the special message of God (ix. 6-9). There was no excuse for Solomon. The signals were against him; the beacon light was burning; the sound of the breakers was ahead. His folly was equal to his guilt. 4. He was now old (4), probably about fifty years of age. Years should add wisdom. We expect a man who has passed his prime to be steady, high-principled, self-controlled, especially if he has shown any true godliness during his young manhood. But it was not so with Solomon. The wisdom and piety conspicuous in his youth were forsaken in his riper years. He started well, but he made shipwreck just as he neared port.

No position, no previous attainments, no period of life can render a man secure against the possibility of a fall. (See Golden Text.)

The fall was most terrible. His heart was turned away from God (4, 9); he seems to have abandoned himself to a life of self-indulgence; he built idolatrous temples, defiling even the Mount of Olives in full view of the House of God (7); he first patronised and then participated in idolatrous worship with their obscene and cruel rites. "Ashtoreth" (5), a female deity originally typifying the moon and worshipped with licentious rites. "Milcom" (5), called also "Molech" (7), was a representative of Baal, the sun god, as was also "Chemosh" (7). According to the rabbins, the image of Molech was made hollow. A fire was kindled within it, and when the extended arms of the idol were red hot, the victim was thrown into them and its death-cries were drowned by the beating of drums.

To such depths Solomon fell. How did it come about? If we talk of his polygamy, his idolatry, his sensuality, it will be replied that young people are not addicted to these. But his conduct can be looked at so as to touch their life.

1. He began by doing what was customary rather than what was right. No one in those days would think of condemning a king for multiplying wives. Other monarchs did it, David had done it, why should not he? It was supposed to add to his magnificence. But a thing is not right because everybody allows it. God's original institution was against it (Gen. ii. 24); his word had forbidden it (Deut. xvii. 17). It is never safe to disobey God. When we ask "What is the custom?" rather than "What does God require?" we are imitating Solomon.

2. Next, he was influenced by policy rather than by faith. He wanted to be safe from any hostile combination of other kings, and so he took their daughters for his wives. It was a piece of worldly wisdom—a doing evil that good might come. In his dedication prayer he had recognised that God was the defence of his people, and that while they obeyed Him neither pestilence nor war would prevail against them. He now transfers his confidence from God to his own plans. The prospect of some good end has led many a man to use doubtful means.

3. His policy brought him into evil associations.—These women were idolaters. Their minds were polluted by their familiarity with the rites of their worship. Solomon cannot make them his companions without suffering loss. Beware of evil companionship (1 Cor. xv. 33). A man is not only known, but is made by the company he keeps. Enforce the lesson of 2 Cor. vi. 14.

4. He tolerated, before he practised, what God had forbidden.—He may have considered his toleration to be proof of large-heartedness—freedom from bigotry. But to tolerate crime is the first step towards committing it. Differences of opinion and judgment may be allowed; but we must never show favour to that which God calls an abomination. Dare you be thought "narrow," or called "bigot" and "fanatic" for God's sake?

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE frequently receive letters not properly sealed, and bulky packets in envelopes too weak to hold them. These are delivered to us with post-office explanations, and we are not always sure that all enclosures have reached us. At other times communications (especially from America) are insufficiently stamped. We beg our readers to assure themselves on these points when writing to us, and especially to see that packets are securely fastened and adequately addressed.

Our summary, last week, of correspondence on "The Lord's Prayer" has not exhausted the interest of our readers in the subject. Among other communications which we reserve for our next issue is a deeply suggestive letter by Mr. George F. Trench. As it is not desirable unduly to prolong the discussion, we invite those of our readers who have given independent thought to the subject, to send us, without delay and in the briefest possible form, the results of their prayerful study of the Pattern Prayer.

We recently called attention to the case of a gentleman engaged in business in London who, on account of health, has been recommended to live in the country. He has for years been an earnest Christian worker, and in making his arrangements was desirous of finding some place, within easy distance of town, in which he would be able to promote evangelistic effort. For the information of others, we gave the names of societies and workers from whom particulars might be learned of specially needy villages not far from London. One of these workers was Mr. G. D. Shipley, Highfield House, Royston, Cambs, who writes to us:—

It will at all times afford me pleasure to direct anyone who is thinking of settling within a hundred miles of London, in the matter of a needy sphere, and perhaps also to a suitable home, if desired. But all would-be village missionaries must be able and willing to go at their own charges. Such helpers are everywhere required.

Notwithstanding prevalent indifference to religion, country people are not so absorbed in toil as are the poor in our large cities; so those who undertake work among them may reckon on kindly attention and expect encouraging results.

Last Sunday was celebrated as Temperance Sunday in a large number of churches. Anything which will help to awaken Christian people from the apathy that afflicts a growing section of them on the drink question is highly desirable. If the traffic that causes so much ruin, and sorrow, and crime, is to be controlled at all it will only be through the enthusiasm of the churches. Since the extension of limited liability companies, there are so many in all sections of society who derive profit from the sale of intoxicants that a new danger has arisen in the shape of a network of vested interests. Nothing can defeat this fresh obstacle except a deepening of Christian sentiment and principle in the nation.

How many Christians would begin to find themselves new in health, in influence, and in power for service, if they would lay to heart the true words of the late Sir B. W. Richardson:—"Alcohol employs and carries with it a false necessity. It gives a false idea of happiness, false action, false organization, and false belief in self." Of old it was said "Wine is a mocker," but it has remained for science to show how great the mockery is. All is contained in the words that alcohol carries a false necessity; it brings those who partake of it into a false life, in which they have needs and helps which are alike unnatural.

During his long public ministry Mr. Moody has been a diligent collector of all sorts of good and helpful thoughts throwing light on the sacred page. In that work he has had the willing co-operation of many experienced Bible students. The fruit of all this patient industry is now available for the public in the volume, NOTES FROM MY BIBLE, which is published this week. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.) It is a truly remarkable collection of what may be called sparks from the Christian anvil—the product of many far-seeing and deeply-taught minds and hearts. It might be designated the concentrated extract of the most edifying facts and truths in the storehouse of revelation. By young Bible students and evangelists the book will be highly prized.

In The British Weekly a correspondence has sprung up on "A Matter of Conscience." One writer has affirmed that shop assistants are not required by their masters to deceive and cheat customers; while a number of such assistants and others have come forward to testify that such practices are very common both in London and the country. The painfulness of the position of a young man or a young woman who is expected to deceive, or else seek employment elsewhere, must be extreme. They may be thought, by their friends, to have been wanting in tact or wisdom in the way in which they refused to obey; and they may find it a difficult thing to obtain another situation. There is only one way of escape, and that is for them to do the right, and trust in God, who will never leave or forsake them.

The report just published on "limited liability companies" gives reason for serious reflection. During 1895 about 56 per cent. of all the companies formed passed into the Bankruptcy Court, the large majority before any real business was begun. Some of these were bond fide concerns, but most of them failed to give any satisfactory account of their raison d'être. The hunger for dividends, apart from any real knowledge of the good faith of a proposed investment, brings ruin on hundreds of confiding people every year, and plays into the hands of rogues and swindlers. The law controlling the formation and conduct of commercial companies sadly needs revision. But no law will be adequate while the passion for gain is so widespread and so strong. A purified conscience regarding the responsibilities of money is the only real safeguard of commercial morality.

Stones are so often and so vigorously thrown at the United States, for the corruption of its civil and municipal services, that one has special satisfaction in noting all signs of improvement in American life. It will be recorded to President Cleveland's honour that he has, "by a succession of executive orders, redeemed 52,000 public offices from dependence on political favour to dependence on personal merit." The triumph of this reform is said to be assured. A good cause so well begun deserves to be carried forward. Mr. McKinley will gain lasting honour if he treads in his predecessor's steps in this respect. To purify a great nation is to do as much or more than save it from all its foreign foes. Nothing destroys like internal rottenness.

Our American cousins have been celebrating their annual "Thanksgiving Day." A New York contemporary says:—

The beautiful custom of setting apart one day in the year for thanksgiving unto God originated in the conviction that God is; that He is over all, the Fountain of all blessing, the Sovereign Ruler and Disposer of all events; that however men may plan and prosecute, with Him are the issues of life. In this conviction the custom is continued year by year, and should be religiously maintained. Of all our national holidays it may be made the most beneficial and useful, if observed in the spirit of the recommendations embraced in the proclamations by the President and by the Governors of the several States. Pity that it should be allowed to degenerate, as the tendency seems to be, into a mere occasion for unseemly festivity and revelry and excessive feasting.

How is it that the mother country seems to have lost the idea of any special national recognition of God, whether in thanksgiving for mercies vouchsafed, or in humiliation for departure from the line of strict integrity? Does not the history of the past prove that such national blindness and forgetfulness of God are the sure precursors of decay?

A volunteer evangelist of many years' standing calls attention to the frequent forgetfulness in the matter of "expenses" on the part of friends responsible for Gospel meetings. If a preacher gives his services free, he ought not to be allowed to be out of pocket. Even when the railway fare is paid, the exact amount from London is generally tendered, leaving out of account the cost of travelling to and fro in London, and other incidentals. Our correspondent, who does not wish to find fault, says:—

I am convinced that in most cases it is only thoughtlessness on the part of the friends accepting the preacher's services, and not owing to unwillingness on their part to pay.

Christian thoughtfulness in this matter would greatly cheer earnest brethren willing to serve freely, but not always able to meet constantly recurring out-of-pocket expenses.

Consideration on a more generous scale is called for in cases where preachers follow no other calling, but hold themselves altogether free to serve the churches as evangelists. Those who benefit by the services of these brethren cannot, we are sure, desire that they should be continually harassed through anxieties regarding temporal supplies. Yet it sometimes happens that organisers of meetings invite them without providing in any adequate measure for their home needs. Evangelists, no less than pastors and teachers, have fathers and mothers, wives and children; and a little thought on the part of churches and assemblies would put a lot of sweetness into the farewell handshaking, as well as bring gratitude to Christ's servant into right-ful association with thankfulness to God.

Sir Richard Temple is certain that the only way in which the distress of India can be met is by the action of the Government; nevertheless, he is glad that there should be voluntary help, because it will produce a good impression upon the native mind. This is even more true of the help from Russia. "It is most kind," he says, "of the Russian authorities to make efforts for so distant a population as that of India." Every cord of kindness woven between nations is to be hailed as a bond of peace. Out of this trouble will come unexpected good. If Russia aids India, her action will affect our public opinion in relation to Russia, and hers in relation to us.

The frightful destructiveness of modern weapons of warfare has been illustrated in a terrible manner during the war which is now desolating Cuba. The insurgents, under their daring leader, Maceo, have gained possession of a dynamite gun, every shot of which, when it explodes, devastates an area of 100 yards in diameter; and in a recent battle he is reported to have blown up 700 and wounded 1800 more Spaniards by the firing of a single dynamite mine. The "humanity" of modern warfare is really an euphemism to cover its unspeakable barbarity. The more civilised the world becomes, the more inhuman grow the realities of war. One of the hopes of the future is that science will so perfect the engines of destruction as to make war suicidal and absurd. If such atrocities are possible in a small struggle between Cubans and Spaniards, the possibilities of a European war are simply unimaginable in their horror.

The following extract from a daily paper speaks for itself:—

Lord Durham has been entertaining a large party of friends at Lambton Castle during the past week. The Langley Park, Pensher, Biddick, and other estates, which abound with ground and wing game, have been shot over, and in four days close upon six thousand head were killed. Earl de Grey is credited with having on Friday last performed the extraordinary feat of bringing down 165 birds in thirteen minutes.

The passion for thus slaughtering innocent creatures in the name of "sport" could not be more brutally manifested than in such a way as this. It is nothing less than an orgy of cruelty misnamed by respectable names, which can only harden the conscience, blunt the finer sensibilities, and degrade all who take part in it.

In his recent volume, "With Open Face," Prof. A. B. Bruce includes a catechism for little children, called "The Christian Primer." Its purpose is to enable children to see the Saviour "with open face," and not through the opaque veil of theology. He says:—

Theology is for full-grown men, not for children. The Jesus of the Gospel is for all.

When the catechism is examined in view of this leading idea, it is found to contain a charming picture of the human life, the teaching, and the healing ministry, of our Lord. But when we look for questions and answers on the facts of the Gospel which reveal him as the Son of God and the

(1076)

Redeemer, we meet with a great disappointment. The first question, for instance, is, "Who was Jesus?" and the answer—

He was the Son of Mary of Nazareth in Galilee, whose husband, Joseph, was a carpenter.

This answer is most unsatisfactory, because it is hopelessly ambiguous, if a more serious charge may not be brought against it. The same objection may be fairly raised against the treatment of the Death and Resurrection of Jesus. Only two questions are asked on the first of these topics, and the Resurrection and Ascension are cloudily referred to in these words:—

Where is Jesus now? He is in the house of his Father in heaven, where He has prepared a place for all who bear his name and walk in his footsteps.

If this is what is meant by reserving theology from the minds of children, the less we have of it the better. The miraculous uprising of our Lord from the dead was either a fact or it was not. In either case, the children should be educated in the facts, even if the explanation be left till later years. To ignore the central features of the Gospel is to bring up children in a mental fog, and to prepare the way for a subsequent flood of rationalism or indifference. The author says of the Catechism:—

Should it be received with favour, a larger catechism on a similar plan may be attempted hereafter.

We hope the glaring defects we have mentioned will then be remedied, and the perspective as well as the facts of the Gospel be given with greater fairness and frankness. For ourselves, we do not think Professor Bruce is qualified to prepare a safe and sufficient manual for the young.

It is a sign that history is being written more and more in an honest spirit, when such a book as Cassell's on the Social Life of England gives a full account of the Evangelical Revival of last century. This method is true to facts, and helps us to the right explanation of many things that must otherwise be a riddle. It is something to hear Wesley's conversion spoken of in these words:—

That day his eyes were opened as never before, and he came to see that living faith was concerned with the living person of Christ, rather than with intellectual creeds or theological propositions.

When the writer adds to this statement an account of the long and successful labours of Wesley, he writes a commendation of the highest kind of the value of evangelical truth.

That form of Socialism which is divorced from all religion, and from the conception of this life as a preparation for the next, is well criticised in a recent book which has been written by Sir Henry Wrixon, late Attorney-General of Victoria. After stating the result of a tour of investigation he has recently made for the purpose of studying public affairs in various countries, he sums up the sentiment—"one world at a time" in the following words:—

It is good-natured, but not strong enough for the place. It is doomed to decay, and to make the human race decay if they adopted it. Life is too grave a matter to be disposed upon these lines. The final feeling of the man in the street, after listening to all the wisdom of the Socialist, is that there is more in heaven and earth than is dreamt of in his philosophy, and especially more in heaven.

There is, of course, a socialism of another kind, with which all those who honour the Gospel must feel in sympathy; and which, however one-sided it may appear in its most pronounced forms, aims at the equalisation of opportunity and the breaking down of the barriers to happiness and progress raised by selfish greed and Mammon-worship; to such the above remarks do not apply.

The demand is almost universal in these days for "an interesting ministry." It comes from the young and from the least enlightened members of our congregations, those who may have a form of godliness, but experience little of its power. They maintain an external connection with religion, but seek to shape religion to their own feelings and thoughts, instead of allowing it to shape them. A demand for something interesting is too often a demand for something other than the Gospel—for criticism of the Bible, for strange themes, for social discussions, for questions of the day. But interest is not an equivalent for repentance and faith, and these only are wrought in the heart by the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, used by the Holy Spirit.

The old habit of memorising Scripture, which was inculcated by parents a generation ago, is one that has fallen too much into abeyance in these days. Our memories need to be stored not only with a general idea of what Scripture teaches, but with its very words and phrases. In moments of sudden temptation these will leap into the mind like a sword out of its scabbard, and defend us from many a wily attack of the Evil One. John Ruskin has borne this testimony:—

All that I have taught of art, everything I have written, every greatness that there has been in any thought of mine, whatever I have done in my life, has simply been due to the fact that when I was a child my mother daily read with me a part of the Bible, and daily made me learn a part of it by heart.

It is a still more significant and impressive fact that our Lord in the supreme hours of his temptation, resisted and conquered every attack of the devil by a quotation from the Scriptures, with which he had been lovingly familiar from his youth. Can we afford to neglect a weapon which He found needful in the day of his trial?

Elizabeth Barrett Browning had a shrinking from religious controversy, though conducted in a friendly spirit, because it tended to endanger the spirit of love. In almost all such controversies she thought there were "two wrong sides, and one wrong spirit common to both, and whether we do or do not increase our knowledge by controversy, we are sure to diminish our love." There would, no doubt, have been fewer controversies had both sides asked before beginning the contention—"Will this leave our hearts kinder and more loving toward God and man?" Love, after all, is the greater thing.

Presentation to Mr. Moody.

DEAR SIR,—Through you I desire to ask the Secretaries or Conveners of Committee, in the various centres of the United Kingdom where Mr. Moody has held services, to send me their names and addresses.

In connection with the proposed presentation to Mr. Moody on his sixtieth birthday, we are extremely desirous to secure the widest area of co-operation. There must be a great amount of latent devotion and affection to Mr. Moody which has not yet found expression. We desire to elicit it, and would intimate that the smallest contributions will be welcome.

May I press, in the names of Lord Kin-naird and Prebendary Webb-Peploe, as well as of myself, for a kind and speedy response,—Yours sincerely,

F. B. MEYER.

Companionship.

Let us pass over to the other side.—Mark iv. 35.

THESE, our Lord's own words, are deeply interesting to us, not only because of their beautiful connection, but because they are characteristic of the way in which He is pleased still to identify his people with Himself. "Rise, let us be going," is another of these utterances, simple enough and natural enough, it is true, but who shall estimate the dignity conferred upon the lowly disciples by incorporation into the "Us" which comprehends Divinity?

Truly, in recognition of this thrice-blessed partnership with Jesus, we can boldly say, in face of every danger and difficulty, "Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them" (2 Kings vi. 16). "Let us pass over to the other side." It might have set the hearts of the timid fishermen at rest, for it implied the certainty of success, though they, alas! forgot too soon that—

No waters can swallow the ship where lies
The Master of ocean, and earth, and skies.

"Let us pass over to the other side" meant, moreover, communion, identification with his blessed work, fellowship in his fortunes. If their faith had but grasped the true position, how different had been the tale of their trial!

Without waiting now to dwell upon the sacred story of his grace and patience, let us eagerly grasp for ourselves the lesson of our Saviour's words, "Let us pass over to the other side." To us, as to those primitive followers of the olden days, the Lord still gives the beckoning call. It is for us to decide what shall be our practical response to the Divine suggestion and invitation. We cannot, indeed, take into our own hands the decision as to whether or not the voyage shall be entered upon. It is inevitable that the brief life-passage shall be made, either in the gladness of Christ's company or apart from it:—Heaven's chimes are slow, but sure to strike at last; Earth's sands are slow, but surely dropping through. A time to suffer, and a time to do, And then the time is past.

Nor can we foresee or prevent the storms that may surge around us, and threaten to wreck our frail barque—these matters are in higher hands than ours. Let us see to it, however, that the Master's presence is with us: that we take sail with Him, then all will be right.

When the helm is subjected to his disposal, when He is both Captain and Pilot, then may we indeed expect a prosperous voyage to the haven where we would be.

For tho' from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Let the brief but beautiful description of that wondrous journey of Elijah and Elisha be the truthful description of our own daily life. "So, they two went on." "And they two stood by Jordan." "So they two went over on dry ground."

It may mean a life of obscure service, and fellowship in our Lord's sufferings. It must mean a life of separation from the world and its maxims and its aims—a life of whole-hearted consecration. What of that? It means a life of conquest; a life of uninterrupted communion, a life to which Gabriel might well aspire!

Shall it be our life? Then, be it ours, at every point and in every circumstance, to hear the Lord's gracious summons, "Let us pass over to the other side," and to give back the one unvarying and unequivocal answer, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave Thee."

What can we say less to Him, whose voluntary oath of unchanging love we lisp after Him, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee?"

Of whom—

Kings, martyrs, malefactors—is it said That all forsook Him, all forsook and fled, Save of One only? Human love forsakes, Yet is not all forsaken! He that takes This drear pre-eminence of woe alone, Forsaketh never, never! He hath known That pang too well! O Saviour, with thine own Too little seemed it for thy love to share All bitter draughts, so Thou hast bid this cup Pass from our souls for ever, drinking up Its wormwood and its gall, our lips to spare.

"Let us pass over to the other side." Is there not here, too, an intimation of the true union of Christians? However it may appear to our distorted vision, it is certain that the Lord Jesus regarded his disciples as one. Of his earnest pleading, "that they all may be one" (John xvii. 22), He could say, "I know that Thou hearest Me always." We must not suppose that the petition is one for the answer to which He is still waiting through the ages. The Spirit has been given, and "by one Spirit ARE we all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. xii. 13). How we shall marvel from "the other side" that we did not more fully and joyfully recognise this, all along, as an accomplished fact, quite apart from the outward manifestations of "visible unity" for which we yearn!

We have not, in reality, to make, but only to "KEEP the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

"Lord, we know not whither Thou goest, and how can we know the way?" urged a timid and desponding disciple on one occasion, and the words have found an echo in many a heart since then.

The unseen land "afar off" is a land to us unknown. We have no map of the New Jerusalem, and the Lord has not been pleased to reveal to us very much of the nature of its glory. Nor can we tell the manner of our entrance into it, nor the time thereof. Our one unfailing comfort and all-sufficient security is that Himself is there. "We shall see his face."

And, more than that, He will Himself conduct us there, and introduce us to the prepared home. We pass through the valley of the shadow with One who has trodden it before, and who will not miss the way.

Thou wilt be with me when I go,
Thy life my life in death;
For in the deepest depths I know
Thine arms are underneath.

"Palestine, Limited."—Our note of last week has been understood by some of our readers to denote our endorsement of the value of this scheme as a commercial investment. But this was especially disclaimed as lying beyond our province. Our purpose was to commend the idea to persons of position with a view to win their practical aid in making it a successful means of familiarising the public with the land of our Lord's birth and life in an instructive and interesting manner.

Girls' Mission, Windmill-lane, Stratford, E.—This work, for young girls employed in factories, now enters its twenty-fourth year. It is not exactly a girls' club, for there is neither subscription nor entrance fee; all is quite free, and must needs be so, for with wages of only a few shillings per week the girls really have nothing to spare. There are suitable religious services, classes and meetings for instruction and amusement, and a free library of useful and entertaining books. The weekly working party is a most useful part of the work, as it not only affords means of much-needed instruction in needle-work and cutting out, but also enables the girls to procure at a low cost good and serviceable under-clothing, of which they stand in great need. Ladies' left-off clothing and boots would be very useful; if sent to Mrs. Dowding-Sansom, Hazelmere, Ather-ton-road, Forest Gate, E., they will be gladly acknowledged. Mr. Dowding-Sansom is hon. super-intendent of the mission.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

IN continuation of what we have already said on this subject, we may remark that there is no royal way of learning anything. Nothing can be learned without taking pains. But if the pains are taken, one road to the desired end may be much shorter than another. And with regard to we are assured that the system before us is by far the shortest and easiest.

LANGUAGES MADE EASY,

There are five tests which ought to be applied to every system:—

1. What has the author himself been able to do by it?
2. Have others been able to use it?
3. Is it fanciful and complex, or natural and philosophical?
4. Is there likely to be more difficulty in learning it, than benefit derived from using it?
5. Is it injurious or helpful to the mind as a whole?

We propose to answer these questions, with reference to Mr. Kilburn's system for the acquisition of languages, by quotations from the press, and from personal testimonies. The numbers of the following paragraphs refer to the numbers of the above tests.

1. Referring to a lecture delivered in St. Petersburg, the Novosti, of March 3, 1896, says:—"Ten names of books were written on a black-board, which the lecturer did not even see; he only heard them read. When the writing was completed he could give the names of the books from one to ten, and backwards from ten to one. To these names were afterwards added numbers, which were also read to him. He could repeat these numbers backwards and in different ways, and he could also remember to which book the different numbers were attached. The effect was perfect. The lecturer was loudly applauded."

2. A Master of Arts of the University of Durham writes:—

"As far as practical usefulness is concerned, I have received more help from a single lesson in the system taught by Rev. J. D. Kilburn than from the whole course of another system."

3. Baron W., General G., and others, write: Special attention may be called to the following points:—

"Rev. Kilburn's system is—1. Philosophical and different from all other systems. 2. It is based on clearly perceived facts. 3. It is not merely useful for the memory, but also excites and increases the thinking faculty. 4. It is easy to learn and apply."—Bercea, August, 1896.

4. An ambassador in St. Petersburg writes:—

"To his system he has devoted years of thought, study, and practice; and with decided ability he has reduced the laws of memory to a state of simplicity and utility that is astonishing and gratifying."

Frl. v. B., in Berlin, writes:—

"I could not have thought that anything could change my memory like Rev. J. D. Kilburn's lessons in memory have done. I can learn many things five times as quickly, and retain them ten times as long."

5. Dr. Pindor, Teschen, writes:—

"The Rev. J. D. Kilburn's lessons are not merely helpful to the memory, but to the mind as a whole. I therefore advise all to study this system."

Several officers, who occupy a high position in the English Army, write:—

"We believe that no one who masters the Rev. J. D. Kilburn's lessons will be disappointed in them."

Mr. Kilburn's course of lessons on Memory Training will be given in THE CHRISTIAN, the first article appearing on January 7. We shall be glad to forward to our readers leaflets announcing the series of lessons, for circulation amongst their friends and acquaintance, so as to confer upon as wide a circle as possible the advantages which these Lessons are calculated to produce. Applications should be sent to our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

Through the Beautiful Gate.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Acts iii.

IT seems to us, thou holy Apostle, as though the Day of Pentecost were the time, when thou didst pass from the outer to the inner court of the Temple of God. Before that sacred hour struck, thou stoodest within the temple precincts, but in the outer court. But when the Day of Pentecost was fully come, thou crossedst the threshold of the Beautiful Gate, and enteredst into new experiences of consecration, of communion with God, and of power wherewith to bless men. Never before hadst thou possessed such insight into Scripture, such grace of vision, such knowledge of the glories of thine ascended Lord, such cogency of appeal. Is the secret for us? May we pass with thee through the Beautiful Gate into the rich, rare experiences of Pentecost?

"Certainly: to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto Him."

But it seems impossible for us. We have certainly been regenerated and born into the kingdom of God; but we were born lame and poor, and for these many years have lain just outside the Beautiful Gate of a deeper life, admiring its proportions, yearning after the mysteries and beauties that lie within its leaves, but never venturing to expect more than a dole of help from the more favoured souls who pass freely in and out. We are glad to be born again, glad to be within the Temple, glad to be within sight and sound of the mysteries of the kingdom, glad to hear the holy talk of the blessed saints who are privileged to know all that may be known, glad to receive something from them now and again—but more we may not expect. We were born lame, with a crook in our lot, a lack in our life, a failing in our character, a violent temper, a revengeful spleen, a vein of jealousy, a vehement headstrong self-will. It is natural to us—we cannot expect to go beyond it—we are glad to be here—give us alms.

"Ye have life, but the Master came that ye might have it more abundantly. His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him. He that lacketh these things is blind. Wherefore, brethren, give the more diligence to make your calling and election sure, even as our beloved brother Paul also wrote, 'Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, but I follow after if that I may apprehend that for which I was apprehended of Christ Jesus.'"

It is well enough for thee. With all thy faults thou wert always a strong, heroic soul. It is not a matter for wonder that the Master led thee through the Beautiful Gate from the lower to the higher experience, but we are halt, and lame, and blind.

"But the rarest gifts in his kingdom are not for the strong and swift, but for those who have learnt how to receive. The race is not to the swift, or the battle to the strong. Jacob conquers, not when he wrestles, but when the sinew of his strength is withered. The lame take the prey. He giveth power to the faint, and to those who have no might He increases strength. The Mephibosheths eat at the table of the King. Our Lord gives healing—not to those that are whole, but to the sick. It is the beggar that lies at the gate of the Temple, wistfully eyeing each worshipper and longing to enter, who is bidden to rise and walk. It is the paralytic of thirty-eight years who is chosen out of all the crowd to be the monument of saving might. If thou art a beggar, or lame, be of good courage, Jesus fastens his eyes on thee, and thou hast every reason to expect something."

Tell us the steps by which we may ascend to the Beautiful Gate of the life which is life indeed. We want to know the way, we have long ago admired what we have seen in the faces and lives of others, all aglow with the blessed grace of Pentecost.

"Look away to Jesus! It has pleased the Father that in Him all fulness should dwell, especially the sevenfold fulness of the Holy Spirit; it is in Him for all the saints and for thee; since it is written, He ascended up on high and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men, for the rebellious also; and unto each one of us was the grace given according to the measure of the gift of Christ; that is, thy share in the gift of the Holy Spirit of Pentecost has been entrusted to the keeping of Jesus, as thy Trustee and Surety; but thou must receive it from Him in a distinct and definite transaction. They that receive the abundance of grace shall reign in life. Look away to Him. Give heed to Him. Expect to receive all from Him. Say: 'My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him.' Such as He has He will surely give thee."

But how can we receive?

"Listen: Shortly after the Day of Pentecost had fully come, the apostle John, whom Jesus loved, and I, were ascending together the steps from the court of the women to that of the priests, at the top of which stands the gate called Beautiful. Close beside it lay a beggar, lame from his birth, who was daily brought thither, and obtained a scanty subsistence from the alms of the worshippers. On this special occasion my attention was specially attracted to him, and the Spirit of Christ arrested my steps where he lay. The man looked eagerly at us, and expected to receive something. I saw him stretch out his wasted hand to take the coin, which he supposed I was about to give. If I had had silver and gold, it would not have taken a moment to have placed a coin on his palm, and for him to have transferred it to his wallet. But I saw that it would be equally easy and immediate for me to receive from Christ, and pass to him, strength for his feet and ankle-bones; so I turned by faith to the Lord, and was conscious that the gift of perfect soundness was waiting in Him for me to receive for the sufferer. Then I turned to him, and excited in his soul the spirit of eager expectancy, and as the Name of Jesus fell from my lips on his ears, with the summons to rise and walk, he immediately received strength, and leaping up, he stood, and walked, and entered with us into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God; and all the people saw him walking and praising God. Now, as this man, in the twinkling of an eye, received strength to rise above his congenital weakness, and walked as he had never done, and passed the Beautiful Gate into the Temple of which he had heard so much, but which he was prohibited from entering, why should not ye in the twinkling of an eye receive from the living Christ the fulness of the Holy Spirit, and be strengthened with all might by that Spirit in the inner man? Faith in the Name of Jesus was the channel through which physical strength came into helpless limbs; why should it not be to thee, and in this hour, the channel through which the Pentecostal gift should come to thee? Thus upon the Gentiles might come the blessing of Abraham in Christ Jesus, and ye might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."

Fellow-disciples, this is a true witness. We have spent long enough outside the Beautiful Gate, complaining of our disabilities, living on alms, and content with poverty and lameness. The hour has come when we may be healed; when we may lay claim to the exceeding greatness of the power which wrought in Christ when God raised Him from the dead; when we may pass from the outer into the inner, from hearsay to vision, from far-offness to nighness.

Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Open your mouth and draw in your breath. Jesus is breathing on you; inhale the soft and gentle zephyr, the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Take of the water of life. Dip it up. Open your entire being to welcome and to be infilled by the gracious gift of God. Claim all that Jesus has received to hold as your Trustee. Ye received the reconciliation, altogether apart from emotion, at one memorable hour, years ago; now receive the abundance of grace equally without emotion, and reign in life through the gift of grace by the one Man, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Then you shall leap up into a new life, not realising all it means, but conscious that you have received strength. You shall pass through the Beautiful Gate, and hear the chant of the holy Psalm, see the altar with its burnt-offerings, and appreciate as never before the right to enter the holiest of all. It shall be yours to dwell there, beholding the beauty of the Lord, and inquiring in his temple. It shall be yours to bring others with you to share its delights.

The blessed tide of emotion may come at once, or tarry. But it matters not. Some walk without leaping. Some walk and leap. Some are so demonstrative by nature that they must sing as well as speak. Others are still in the very excess of their rapture. It matters not. Only see to it that ye hold fast your Saviour Healer. "The healed beggar held Peter and John." So we shall pass gate after gate in company with Jesus. He has the keys to open and to shut, and will set before us one open door after another, conducting us farther, and ever farther, into the innermost chambers of fellowship, into the deepest mysteries of God, and of Christ. O strength that knows no weariness! O soundness that knows no decay! O rapture that knows no shadow! O companionship that knows no satiety! Oh progress that knows no pause!

"Not Dead but Sleepeth."

(Luke viii. 52.)

OH, call it not death—it is life begun,
For the waters are pass'd, the home is won;
The ransomed spirit hath reach'd the shore
Where they weep, and suffer, and sin no more.
She is safe in her Father's house above,
In the place prepar'd by her Saviour's love;
To depart from a world of sin and strife,
And to be with Jesus—yes, this is life.

Oh, call it not death—'tis a holy sleep,
And the precious dust the Lord doth keep.
She shall wake again, and how satisfied,
With the likeness of Him who for her died.
As He rose again, she shall also rise
From the quiet bed where safe now she lies.
Then cheer ye, fond mourners, who sadly weep,
For happy are they who in Jesus sleep.

Oh, call it not death—'tis a glorious rest,
"Yea, saith the Spirit," for all such are blest,
"They rest from their labours," their work is done,
The goal is attained, the weary race won.
The battle is fought, the struggle is o'er,
The crown now replaces the cross they bore,
The pilgrimage path shall no more be trod,
"A rest remains to the people of God."

Oh! call it not death—it is true, indeed,
The soul from the shackles of earth is freed.
'Tis true that dissolv'd is the house of clay,
And the spirit, unchain'd, hath pass'd away.
'Tis true, too, the lov'd one hath gone before;
The home how darken'd that knows her no more.
He chides not your grief, for Jesus, too, wept
On the grave where his friend, a Lazarus, slept.

But call it not death. A few short days o'er
We shall meet her in glory to part no more.
What a "blessed hope"! Lo! Christ shall appear
For "the restitution of all things" here.
Then (if not till then) ye'll see her again,
When brought by the Lord with his glorious train
Those "sleeping in Jesus" shall be restor'd,
And so shall we ever be with the Lord.

Percy Hall, Dockhead.—The first anniversary of this hall was held on Friday week. At the afternoon meeting, Mr. Smith gave an address. In the evening a public meeting was held, when the hall was crowded. Mr. P. Stuart occupied the chair, the chief speakers being Messrs. Chas. Coolidge and George Nokes.

A Retrospect.

ONE of America's most notable preachers, Dr. R. S. Storrs, of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, has recently celebrated his ministerial jubilee in connection with that church. As a pulpit orator Dr. Storrs is hardly excelled by any living preacher. In an eloquent discourse reviewing his previous fifty years of pastoral service, he thus referred to the changed aspects of church life; his survey applies largely to our own country as well as to America:—

"Unquestionably, the secular spirit in the churches at large is more active and pronounced than in the simpler earlier days—the days marked by the great 'revivals' of sixty, fifty, or forty years since. Whatever else it did or did not, the Puritan influence, which was here energetic a half-century ago, made life serious, as it related to God and to the eternities. It did not regard man's existence on earth as a season for frolic, or his experience here as a holiday-game; and it did not allow an elaborate, sumptuous equipment of life, or any success in business affairs, to be the chief end for which he was to strive. He was here to advance the glory of God, by entering into personal fellowship with Him and by serving his cause; and whatever he did or sought or gained, if he did not do this, life for him was a failure; he achieved no result worthy of an immortal record.

"Those days of plainer living and higher thinking are not as familiar to us now. The Church feels the change as well as the world. 'Culture' is now the prevailing word, rather than the greater word, 'Regeneration.' Services tend to become more complex and more ornamental. Preaching is more ethical, literary, pictorial, or sometimes sensational. Institutional churches are more frequent with their multiplying appliances for pleasant entertainment; and social questions occupy more largely the intent attention of pastors and peoples than do the deep things of spiritual experience. Enthusiasm for the distinctive truths of what is still recognised as the Divine Religion is less wide, energetic, inspiring than it was. The conduct of Christ is more dwelt upon than his cross; and missions, both at home and abroad, are often honoured and sustained rather for the secular benefits which they promise than with the single subordinating aim in which they started—to seek and to save that which was lost."

"At the same time that such general facts must be recognised, there are changes in local social custom, and in the annual programme of household living, which are not altogether prophetic of good, certainly not for churches in the cities. Populations are more restless and changeable than they were, with a less positive and educating family life. Nor is it an innovation of happy augury that the Sunday newspaper, which came in with the War, and which apparently has come to stay, now makes itself at home in multitudes of households into which, till a quarter of a century ago, it never had entered. In many instances, no doubt, this is the best, as it is commonly the largest, of the paper's weekly issues, while in other cases its prevalent moral tone is simply detestable. But, at the best, it pre-occupies with politics, with reports of the markets, with domestic news, foreign news, sporting news, incidents of society, of adventure or of crime, or with exciting fictitious tales, the minds which the Gospel is afterward to address; and the lovely and stately themes exhibited in the church are quite outside of, if they are not directly antagonised by, the influence which pulsates through such a paper.

"So, as I think, the level of spiritual feeling in the Church tends constantly to be lowered; and so, certainly, the chasm widens all the time between those who are drawn to the Church and its worship, and those who find in the Lord's Day only an ample attractive opportunity for personal recreation, in their own homes, in parks and pleasure-grounds, or in the fascinating bicycle-wheeling on the Boulevard. A Sunday morning bath in the world's business, politics, blood and fire, can hardly be the best preparation for the high thought, holy aspiration, and consecrated purpose of which the day to men should be full.

"I am only recognising facts, you observe, not now condemning or arguing against them. Others coming after us must face the new social conditions beginning so widely to appear, and must set themselves, with God's help, to the various exacting and novel labours which these are to demand. It is sufficient for us, who are coming towards the end of our service, to have rendered that service as faithfully as we could in the time which is gone. And so long as the Master of the Gospel remains, undimmed in wisdom, supreme alike in power and love, enthroned on high, we need not fear that means or men will ever be wanting for the furtherance of his Divine cause."

Amongst London Missions.

SERVICE IN THE MEAT MARKET.

PASSING through, as I am in the habit of doing daily, Smithfield Meat Market, I have often wondered how fares the messenger of the Gospel among these rough and ready, noisy, and bustling men, who throng by thousands its avenues and precincts. The scene in the early hours of the morning, when butchers' carts swarm round like bees, when the great vans are being unloaded and their contents distributed all over the metropolis, is altogether remarkable. Apart from the thousands of butchers and assistants who come to buy, there are some 8000 salesmen, clerks, butchers, carriers, and so on, engaged in the market, while outside there are hundreds hoping for a job, or hanging on in order to pick up what they can. Amidst these throngs the porters rush to and fro with their unwieldy loads, shouting to the passers-by to clear out of the way. Very unpromising ground it seems to present for Gospel effort, but the true missionary, with ready tact, patient forbearance, readiness in the Scriptures, and faith in his message, finds it a fruitful field.

For some twenty years the London City Mission has had labourers in the Meat Market. The present missionary, Mr. March, has been on this special service a year and a half, and appears well qualified to deal with this class of men. He confesses that he had, at first, to stand fire and endure various annoyances, but now that he has gained a hearing, the roughest of the porters is ready to defend him, should any fresh hand attempt to molest him.

His work is wholly personal. He has, so far, no hall or meeting place, but simply goes from group to group testifying as he finds opportunity. In the early hours of the morning he is at work among the carriers; later on, when the rush is over, he may be found inside among butchers and salesmen. It is in many ways peculiar work. He has to watch his opportunity, finding it usually in some smart or sceptical remark by

A WOULD-BE CLEVER SCOFFER.

Full often these are sadly flippant, but the missionary is a man of ready wit, and seldom fails to turn the scoff to good account. The majority of the men are a rough lot, drunkenness, gambling, and other sins being sadly prevalent; yet the missionary maintains that amongst them—from salesmen down to carriers—there are many grand Christians. Moreover, he is ready with many instances to show their good heartedness towards any one who is in trouble. For example, a poor deserted woman, found hanging about the market watching for her runaway husband, was the other day, fed, clothed, and sent to her country home, by means of a subscription got up among the men by a salesman who observed her miserable condition.

But how fares the higher message? Can he find a hearing for the Gospel? Does it prove its power amongst such men? It does, and he points to many trophies of grace, some from

THE ROUGHEST OF THE LOT.

The difficulty is to mention here any of these without causing pain.

While talking to a group of men, one of them retorted, "There's —, if ye convert him I'll believe in ye," following this with a recital of the misdeeds of the man indicated. "I cannot convert anyone," was the reply, "but I know One who can, and if he be as bad as you say, he is just the sinner I am sent to seek." Accordingly, the missionary gave much time and prayer to this poor man; long and difficult was the task, but in the goodness of God the sinner was led to cry for mercy, and is now wholly a changed man, leading a new and better life, a marvel to many.

A butcher in the market, brought up under good influences in the country, had fallen into all kinds of sin, and had become

AN AWFUL DRUNKARD!

"The full extent of his folly, sin, and shame," said Mr. March, "I cannot attempt to describe! He had several times been convicted, and when I first became acquainted with him he was in an awful state of mind. At that time his wife had left him and had taken the six children away with her, she being afraid to live with him, and had taken out a summons against him. I heard the sad story of his life, and he told me that he was alone to blame. I followed him up, pleading with him daily, and at last he signed the temperance pledge.

"The next Sunday he went to a place of worship instead of the public-house, and resolved that he would live for God. I now saw him often and encouraged him. His mates saw the change and jeered him; but he bore it patiently, not being surprised at them, as they knew his past life. He stands firm to his resolve, is trusting in Christ, and is certainly a new man. His wife did not appear against him when he was summoned to the police-court; for peace had been made. They are again united in their home, are happy under the changed conditions, and regularly attend a place of worship on the Sabbath. His master also has seen the change, and has increased his pay, telling him that he can afford to do so because he is a better servant, and he knows he can now trust him as an honest and sober man."

Several interesting episodes, illustrating this man's changed home-life, were narrated by the missionary, but on these I may not dwell. But indeed many such instances might be cited—amongst them poor backsliders led back to the God they had forsaken. During the past eighteen months the missionary knows of thirty-five men won to the Saviour, while he is convinced that there are many still unknown. One such, led to decision in a chapel he had been induced to attend, after many conversations in the market, only came to light the other day. Thus, amongst a class, deemed the Gospel message, spoken in faith and patience, wins its way, and the labour is not in vain in the Lord. This brief notice of service in the Meat Market affords a fair illustration of the importance of the work of the Special Missionaries maintained by the London City Mission, 123 such being engaged among mechanics, bakers, policemen, postmen, navvies, coalies, cabmen, and so on, reaching thus hosts of men whose calling isolates them from ordinary Gospel effort. Abundant evidence is forthcoming that God has been pleased greatly to bless these special missionaries; and in maintaining them the London City Mission ought surely to be able to count on the prayerful support and sympathy of the Lord's people. The secretaries, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C., will supply any information desired.

"THE SECRET OF THE LORD IS WITH THEM THAT FEAR HIM, AND HE WILL SHOW THEM HIS COVENANT."
—Ps. xxv. 14.

WHAT marvellous words! They remind one of the sapphire work which the elders saw at the foot of the throne, and which was like "the body of heaven for clearness." Three different renderings are suggested by R.V.

The Secret of the Lord. To some it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven. To these the white stone is given, on which is engraven a name, which only he knows that receives it. There are secret passages of love between Christ and the believing soul, which it would not be lawful for it to utter. High fellowship: deep blessedness. Things which eye hath not seen. Jesus revealed his secrets, when Judas had gone forth. "Wherefore askest thou after my name," he said to Manoah, "seeing it is secret?"

The Counsel of the Lord. "His Name shall be called... Counsellor." He draws near to those that fear to grieve Him, and gives them counsel. He instructs them in the way that He chooses for them; He guides them in his truth and teaches them; He guides them in judgment; and tells them, as He did Abraham, what He is about to do.

The Friendship of the Lord. "Ye are my friends," said Jesus, "if ye do whatsoever I command you." He longs for friends, those to whom He can tell his desires, on whom he may impose implicit confidence, and who will be so taken up with Him as to be indifferent to everything else, in their purpose to do his least bidding. Oh, to be honoured with the personal friendship of Jesus! This were a rare privilege.

"I WILL WASH MINE HANDS IN INNOCENCY."
—Ps. xxvi. 6.

The Psalmist knew well enough that he needed washing in costlier waters than those of his own innocency. The soul requires One, who comes by water and blood, not by water only, but by water and blood. At the same time, he realised that he could not avail himself of all that was typified by the altar, unless so far as he knew himself, he had washed his hands in innocency.

We must separate ourselves from known sin, washing our hands in innocency, if we are to enjoy the blessings of the altar and its sacred associations.

There is the sacrifice of the burnt offering, which stands for Christ's perfectness and entire devotedness to God on our behalf. But how can we be utterly given up to God unless, so far as we know, we are innocent of presumptuous and cherished sin?

There is the sacrifice of the meat-offering, and of the peace-offering; but how can we feed on Christ, or feast with Him in holy rapture, whilst we are concealing the stains of the hands that take the food?

There is the sacrifice of the sin-offering. But is it not a sacrilege to claim a share in its blessing if we permit those very sins, which are costing the Saviour agony and tears?

No; we must come out and be separate; we must be willing for God to examine and prove us; we must hate the congregation of the wicked, their conversation and ways; we must occupy ourselves perpetually with the Divine lovingkindness and truth. So only can we compass the altar of God, and taste its comfort and help.

"ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD, THAT WILL I SEEK AFTER."
—Ps. cxvii. 4.

One purpose dominated prayer and life. It was never long absent from the Psalmist's thought. The men of one idea are irresistible. The arrowy stream will force its way through the toughest soil. See that all the prayers, incidents, and circumstances of life subserve one intense purpose. String all the beads on one thread. When the eye is single the whole body is full of light.

What a blessing that the Psalmist's purpose may be ours. To dwell in the house of the Lord is to live within the veil in fellowship with God, in the habitual recollection of his presence. To behold his beauty is to keep looking off unto Jesus. To inquire in his Temple is to commune with the Lord about all the concerns of home and business, of church and commonwealth. In senses of which the material Temple could give but a faint conception we may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of our lives.

Let us seek after this as well as pray for it. Let it be the fixed purpose and resolution of every day. Let us begin with it in the morning, and at every spare moment remember that we have boldness to stand in the Most Holy Place. Oh, to be as intent on this high quest as the man of science to discover nature's secrets, as the business man to make a fortune, as Captain Nansen to extort the secret from the Polar Seas.

"FEED THEM ALSO, AND LIFT THEM UP FOR EVER."
—Psa. xxviii. 9.

The people of God are here compared to a flock, scattered over many hills, marked by differing brands, sheltering in varied folds, but under the care of one Shepherd, and being conducted to one Home.

The holy soul is as eager for the welfare of the Lord's beautiful flock as He is. Whatever is dear to the loved one is dear to the lover. You cannot love the Pastor, without taking a keen and constant interest in all that interests him, and especially in the sheep of his pasture, and the people of his hand. Hence when you are nearest the Lord, you are almost certain to begin pleading for his inheritance, and saying; "Save thy people, bless them, feed them, and lift them up for ever." Pray for the peace of Jerusalem, her lovers shall prosper.

There is an exquisite suggestion in the R.V.: "Bear them up for ever." The shepherd bare his flock through the desert; and carried them all the days of old. It is as easy for Him to bear a flock, as a single lamb. Jesus does not simply lead us to green pastures and still waters, He bears us, and He bears us up, and He does so for ever. Never tiring, though He imparts infinite rest; never ceasing for a moment his shepherd-care. Are you depressed to-day, are there strong influences dragging you down? Does your soul cleave to the dust? Let those strong arms and that tender breast lift you up for ever.

THURSDAY, December 10.

IN HIS TEMPLE EVERY THING SAITH, GLORY.—
(Ps. cxxix. 9 R.V.)

This psalm describes a thunderstorm gathering over the Mediterranean, passing with devastating fury over Palestine, and finally dissolving in floods of rain. But how differently such a scene is regarded. To the man of the world, it presents an interesting study, or awakes spasms of fear: to the man of God, contemplating the scene from his safe hiding in the Temple, it seems as though nature, with a myriad voices, were proclaiming the glory of God.

Somehow, everything that has been, is, and shall be; all that seems startling and dreadful; all that excites fear and foreboding, shall conduce to the glory of God. Wait, O child of God, in patient trust; Jehovah is King, and He shall sit as King for ever; all is under law. "Of Him, and through Him, and to Him are all things," and to Him shall be the glory for ever.

Our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost; does every whit of it say, Glory? I know of few things that stir my heart more than the repeated ascription of "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost." But is that the refrain of our life? Outside there may be confusion and storm; wild chaos and desolation; but see to it that from your heart's shrine there rises moment after moment the ascription of "Glory be to Thee O Thou most High."

Glory to God, to God, he saith.
Knowledge of suffering endureth.
And life is perfected in death.

FRIDAY, December 11.

"WEEPING MAY ENDURE FOR THE NIGHT; BUT JOY COMETH IN THE MORNING."
—Psa. xxx. 5.

The Hebrew word might be rendered, "may come in to lodge at even" (R.V. marg.). See, at night fall, a black-vestured guest comes to thy heart. Thou must let him in; he brings a warrant from your king for his quartering and entertainment. But he is only a lodger, he has no abiding-place with thee; at day-break he must begone. Canst thou not bear with him for these brief hours? It is only for the brief space of an Eastern summer-night. Let the first tint of the dawn flush yon sky, he will go. Like the ghosts of fable, he dies in the light.

Now, see, the morning breaks! Who is this hurrying up the hill, and knocking at the door? Hark to his joyous shout! Who is this? Ah! It is Joy. The child of the morning-light! The first-born of Resurrection! And he comes not as a lodger, but as the Lord and Master of Life, to abide for ever. Oh, welcome him in the name of the Lord, and throw open each chamber and each closet in your heart, that all may be filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. And as he enters, sorrow and sighing flee away. They have passed out at the back, as he came in at the front.

Joy in the morning at the resurrection of Jesus! Joy in the coming of the Saviour for his bride! Joy as the millennium breaks on the world: Joy when the Eternal Day comes to gladden those who have drunk of Christ's sorrow, and shall share his bliss.

SATURDAY, December 12.

"THOU HAST KNOWN MY SOUL IN ADVERSITIES."
—Psa. cxxi. 7.

Men have a way of forgetting their companion when they fall into adversity. They do not know them or visit them: or recognise them if they meet them in the street. But the love of God is always most tender and considerate then. He seeks us out when the sky is shadowed, and life is overcast with sombre tints. Adversity, so far from alienating Him, draws Him closer, and brings out his tenderest loveliest traits. He knows us in adversity.

It is only when we are overtaken by adversity that we are revealed in the innermost depths of our nature. God knows us in adversity. "Thou shalt remember," said Moses, "all the way which the Lord thy God hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness, that He might humble thee, to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart." What revelations of unsubdued pride and imperious self-will are afforded, when we are searched and tested by the fiery trial of pain.

But the margin (R.V.) suggests another rendering: "Thou hast known the adversities of my soul. Is it not enough that God should know? Need we go to all our friends and explain to them all we are called to endure? Is not this a needless addition to their sorrow, and the sorrow of the world? What a glorious piece of advice the Master gave, when He said, "Anoint thine head, and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but to thy Father, which seeth in secret." "Your Father knoweth." "I know their sorrows, and am come down to deliver them." F. B. MEYER.

THE POISON IVY.

I KNEW of a little boy who lived near Lake Michigan, who was shown by his father the poison ivy that grows very profusely in that region. The father told him that he was not to touch it because it would poison his hands, and get on his face and make him sick. "Do you think you know the plant now, my boy?" said the father. "Yes, father," was the reply. "Well, go over to that oak tree and see if you can pick it out." He went over and called out, "Here it is, father." "That's right," said his father. "Now go over and find some under that tree." "Here it is, father," said he, as he ran over to another tree and saw on the ground the green shiny leaf of the little ivy bush. "That is right," said the father. "Now you know what it is, remember about it, and be careful and not touch it."

It was only a few days after this that the boy was not well, and little red pimples came out all over his hands and face. "Why," said the father, "this is poison ivy! How in the world did this happen, my boy, after father warned you about it?"

The boy began to cry, and said very pitifully, "Me and Willie thought we would like to see if it would poison us, and so we picked some and rubbed it on." Could there be anything more like what we read of the woman waiting to see if the fruit which God had forbidden would kill her? And so it seems inevitable that every boy and girl wants—oh, so much!—to do the very thing they are forbidden to do, and that Satan should still be permitted to come and tempt them to do it. This being so, we must be on our guard, and not think that because we very much want to do a thing, that it is right or best for us to do it.

A LITTLE GIRL'S VICTORY.

I read a story the other day that pleased me very much indeed. A mother brought home a package of sweets for her little girl, and after giving her as much as was good for her to eat at one time, put the package on an upper shelf in the cupboard, and told her she was to have no more that day. The mother went upstairs and came back after some time to the open door of the room where the sweets were. What did she see but her little girl standing on a shelf, with the package of sweets opened, and a piece of it in her hand! The mother was about to call out to her; but observing that the child waited for awhile, as if thinking of something, she paused to see what she would do. To her great happiness, the little girl put back the sweets, and climbing down from the shelf to a chair and from the chair to the floor, she looked up with a happy smile, and stamping her foot upon the floor, said, "Dere, Dod, I didn't eat it after all!"

That was a great victory! Oh, that every one of you children would think of God when you are tempted to sin, and you, too, would have many such victories.

The best time, however, to fight against Satan is when he first suggests an evil thought. It was very dangerous for the little girl to have come so near doing wrong. It would have been much better if she had run right out of the room, saying in her heart, "No, no," and gone to her play that she might think of something else when the desire came to have the sweets. One of the most useful prayers in the Bible is found in Psa. cxix. verse 37. "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity."

Always make this prayer when an evil thought is suggested by what you are looking at, or thinking of, and Satan will not be able to go further with you.

A Speaking Stone.

You'll find me in Eden, 'mong roses so sweet;
At Bethel, where Jacob his true guide did meet,
With Caleb, who faithfully followed the Lord;
With Nathan, who boldly delivered God's Word;
With Esther, the lovely and beautiful Queen;
With Ezra, who homeward God's people did bring.
In Tyre, the proud ancient Queen of the sea;
In Tarshish, where Jonah was minded to flee.
I constantly tell of a God, great and wise,
Who guards well his children, and sends them supplies.

Fatherless Girls in Armenia.

THE young people of England can have no idea of the sufferings endured by the Armenian children, whose fathers have been cruelly torn from them during the massacres. In his recently issued work, entitled, "In Bonds: An Armenian's Experiences," the Rev. Krikor Behensilian introduces a very pathetic letter written in English by a Christian girl, and dated, Marash, June 20, 1896, in which the following sentences occur:—

"I am very sorry to say to you that my dear father was among the men who were killed in Marash. Indeed, it comes to me very hard; but I know and I am sure that whatever God does is for our good, because He is our Heavenly Father, and cares for me and for all. I am very sorrowful, but I am thankful to God that He comforts me in my deep distress. The verse which comforts me most is this—'God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes.'"

A young fellow in England, having read Mr. Behensilian's book, was struck with the letter referred to, and very kindly sent the author the sum of 25s. to be forwarded to the bereaved girl. In his letter to her he says:—

"Miss Doodoo Jamjochyan,—As I would like to try and help my poor Armenian brothers and sisters, and as I received your name from a very good friend of yours, I thought by sending the enclosed it would help you a little, and so enable you to help some other little sufferers."

"Through the same friend I also learn that your little sister Nuritza intends going with some companions to a school in Smyrna. I trust they all arrived safely at their journey's end."

"I was very very sorry indeed to hear of the dreadful things which have happened to your family, and all the other poor Armenian people; but I trust God will send power to help you all, as I am sure He will in his good and kind love for us all."

"Enclosed find one pound five shillings (£1 5s.)" Mr. Behensilian, of course, forwarded the amount entrusted to him, together with other sums, which he has received on behalf of the fatherless girls who are being sheltered and cared for by his wife in his own house at Marash.

Mr. Behensilian has many young friends in England, who are interested in his work in Armenia. His address is—c.o. Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE

SEARCHER (No. 47).

CORNELIUS, a centurion, who served God with all his house, was commanded by an angel in a vision to send for Peter, who came and baptized him after he had received the Holy Ghost. ELYMAS was smitten with blindness for trying to prevent Sergius Paulus listening to Paul. AENEAS, who had been sick of the palsy for eight years, was healed by Peter. GALLIO refused to judge Paul. ALEXANDER tried to make his defence in the uproar caused by Demetrius. APOLLOS was taught by Aquila and Priscilla about Christ, and he afterwards convinced many Jews that Jesus was Christ. FESTUS, Governor of Judaea, asked Paul if he would be judged in Jerusalem. When Paul spoke before him he said he was mad. AGABUS, a prophet, who foretold a famine in Judaea, and who prophesied that the Jews should bind Paul and send him bound to the Gentiles. JASON protected Paul and Silas in Thessalonica. RHODA opened the door of Mary's house to Peter after the angel had delivered him from prison. SIMON, the Sorcerer, was baptized by the Apostles; he wished to buy the gift of the Holy Ghost, but afterwards prayed for forgiveness.

Manchester Wesleyan Mission.

THE anniversary meetings of the Manchester Wesleyan City Mission were held last week, and attracted very large and enthusiastic assemblages. In the important matters of attendances and financial results the anniversary has been the most successful of all during the ten years' history of the Mission. The proceedings began at noon, when an audience which packed the Central Hall, in Oldham-street, met to hear a sermon by Rev. James Stalker, D.D., of Glasgow. The address took the form of a deeply interesting sketch of the life and character of St. Augustine, and some lessons deduced therefrom.

In the afternoon the hall was again uncomfortably crowded, a considerable number being unable to get even a peep inside the doors. Miss Lancaster, of Burnley, presided, and the meeting was addressed by two of the Sisters of the People and Rev. F. L. Wiseman, of Birmingham. Gipsy Smith contributed to the interest of the meeting by a short address and some singing.

The third and most important gathering was held in the Free Trade Hall in the evening. The hall was densely crowded. Mr. Thomas Walker, of Bolton, occupied the chair. After devotional exercises, Dr. Pope gave a short sketch of the Mission work during the past year. The tenth year of this enterprise, he said, had been more successful than any of the previous years. In every department of the Mission work the last year had been one of distinguished and of crowning success. As to the membership, it was larger than it had ever been. They had 2000 full members in the Mission church, and if they added those who were "on trial" and the junior members there were more than 3000 people weekly meeting in class, and forming an army of Christian workers. With regard to finance, the cost of the Mission for the year just ended was £6435. Towards this amount there had been raised at the Mission branches £4281. That showed they were cultivating a spirit of self-support as regards the religious or evangelistic side of their work. Collections were taken at every service, and the working classes nobly responded. At this anniversary the committee wished to receive £1200 to clear off the deficit, and something towards the cost of the ensuing year's work.

The Chairman, in the course of his opening address, bore warm testimony to the excellence of the work which had been so vigorously carried on by the Mission. He urged that in every town the Wesleyan Church should have its mission organisation, in order to carry on a ceaseless round of social and religious enterprise, which, with the present changing ministry, could not be successfully carried on in their circuit life.

Rev. Dr. Randles, President of the Conference, said the work was the same kind in essence as that carried on by the regular churches. The movement was sometimes called the "forward movement." "Forward" it was, in the sense that it differed from stagnancy. It was new in some respects—new in some of its appliances and instruments, perhaps; new in some of its methods, but in reality it was a return to early Methodism.

Dr. McLaren, who was cordially welcomed, said it was always a pleasure to express one's cordial sympathy and admiration, not altogether untinged with envy, at the work done in connection with this Mission. He did not propose to speak for anybody but himself, but he was quite sure that all the best Christian men and women in Manchester, of every denomination and communion, rejoiced with them in their success, for if he might venture to sum up the claims of the Mission on the sympathy and help of all Christian people, he found that its aggressiveness was the great recommendation. "We have all been," Dr. McLaren added, "too much in the habit of settling down contentedly with the idea that our mission is to the people who come into our churches and chapels, and have been comfortably indifferent to the dreadful fact that stares us in the face, if we will open our eyes, of the alienation of large masses of people in these great cities of ours from our churches, whilst we contentedly settle down with the handful that assemble. We had, some decades ago, almost lost the notion that Christianity must be aggressive if it was to live, and this Mission and many others, have helped to shake our churches, all of them, out of their contented apathy, and have told us once more that we must recognise the fact that we are here to grapple with, and confidently to go out to the contest, against the indifference and the worldliness that lie all round about us. A church that is not aggressive will die, and I was going to say the sooner the better; and I am quite sure it does not deserve, whether it gets it or not, Christian burial." Another obligation under which the Mission had laid the other churches was in teaching them a wise elasticity of method. The Mission had taught them that it was possible, while remaining firm in one's allegiance to the great central truths of Christianity, and to all the essentials of Christian worship, to adapt their methods to the object in view. It was a strange thing that sensible men needed to be taught that; but they all knew how extraordinarily use and wont, and the power of established form, blinded men to the realities of the case. The Mission had also shown that the work of the Church was many-sided, and had to do with the body as well as the soul. He looked with admiration on the list of operations conducted under the auspices of the Mission. These social operations were secondary, but they were consequent upon the central work; and depend upon it, there was no Agnosticism that ever turned out a list like that. "When all your modern negation mongers," Dr. McLaren exclaimed, "of various shapes and degrees, will let us see that their central principle effloresces in such things as these, we will begin to talk to them." "By their fruits ye shall know them." "Do men gather grapes of thorns?" The last thing he would venture to say was, "We are all your debtors, because you have taught us that evangelical and evangelistic preaching is, as it always has been and will be, the power of God unto salvation."

Dr. Stalker addressed a few words of counsel to the young men and young women whom he saw largely composed the assembly. He exhorted the young men to cultivate a public spirit—a disposition to do some good to the town of which they were citizens, to the country of which they were children, and to the Church of which they were members.

After an address from Gipsy Smith, Rev. S. F. Collier, superintendent of the Mission, announced the result of the collections and contributions for the anniversary. Altogether the sum received was £1851, and he had good hope it would be made into £2000.

Rev. S. Chadwick, of Leeds, also addressed the meeting.

To Mrs. Josephine Butler.

PITIFUL saint! who hast not fear ed to tread
Unshrinking where the leper souls are found,
Laying thy hand upon the world's old wound,
Which bleeds unheal'd, as it has ever bled.
Yet by thy presence thou hast surely shed
Some beam of heavenly light upon the ground,
Where only lurid rays of lust abound
To paint the night about the living dead?
Thy Dante soul has lifted up the veil
That Custom hung before the Lazar gate;
And passing swiftly in, thou didst not quail
Beneath the stinging sneer of devilish hate—
Wherefore the angels love thee, bid thee hail,
And write thy name among the deathless great.

Free Law for the Poor.—One of the latest and most interesting new departures of the West London Mission is the institution of a Poor Man's Lawyer. Mr. Bamford Slack, with the assistance of one of the most capable of his staff, has kindly undertaken to give advice to those who are too poor and too helpless to seek legal guidance in the usual way. The poor are robbed and wronged through ignorance and helplessness. In addition to that, all sorts of personal and family quarrels spring up and last for months and years, for want of a little sensible authoritative advice at the early stages of a domestic quarrel. In this and other ways, Mr. Bamford Slack and his colleague are already beginning to render invaluable service to the Mission. Mr. Bamford Slack and his partner (who is a member of the Anglican Church) have, from the beginning, rendered great professional services to the Mission in many directions. This new service to the poorest members of the Mission is a further kindness of the greatest value.—Advance.

Famine in India.

DO not need to tell your readers that gaunt, compassionless famine is stalking over India. In Central India, the ability of every mission is overtaxed in efforts to relieve distress and save children.

It is laid on my heart to make an effort to rescue and transfer to Bastor, a land of plenty, where we have land and the conditions favour the early development of self-support, 500 boys and girls under ten years of age. While you help suffering Armenia, do not forget India and this enterprise. It will cost £600 to gather up, transfer, and plant them in Bastor. Then £1000 a year for four years to maintain and develop the colony.

Yellandu, India.

C. B. WARD, Missionary.

The Gonds are the largest of the aboriginal tribes of India, numbering over two million persons, and live in the high country of the Central Provinces. More than others, they will suffer during the next few months—the harvests of "kodo" and "kutki," the millets on which they subsist, being unirrigated crops, have been a failure; their reserve stock has been exhausted by three bad seasons, and starvation stares them in the face. Grain of any sort is now unobtainable in the remote villages of the Mandla District, while in the towns (for they are far from the railway) rice, wheat, and grain are sold at higher rates than in the large cities of Upper India. The Gonds will not rise or riot, but they will die in silence. We have six mission outposts making a line across the centre of our district; these are in every case in Gond villages, and we desire to utilize these places with a view to helping specially the weak and the needy. I plead particularly for the orphans; their condition is the saddest of all, and they have a first claim on our charity as Christians.

LIGHT UP IN GOOD TIME.

Travelling in the train we have often seen the lamps lighted in broad daylight, preparatory to a passage through a dark tunnel, or for the coming night. A wise precaution requires that the lamp of grace be lit up in the heart, that we may be in readiness for the dark passage in life or the tunnel of death.

An old man, covered with furs, and having several caps on his head, is the pictorial representation of December. His nose is red, and his beard pendant with icicles; at his back he carries a bundle of sticks; and both his hands are incased in gloves. He bears the marks of age, feebleness, and decay: the emblems of life's close. The last year, the last month, the last day, the last hour, and the last moment will come to all, and happy will it be for us if the exit from this life be the introduction to a better one on the other side, and so it will be if we "live Christ"—then, indeed, "to die" will be "gain."

A minister in Philadelphia, dying, said in his last moment, "I move into the light." Hobbes, the infidel, said, when dying, "I am taking a fearful leap into the dark." What a contrast!

"But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer" (1 Pet. iv. 7).

African Children Rescued.

SOME months ago we recorded the discomfiture of Mlozi of Mpata, the African chief who had patronised and protected slaving parties passing the north end of Lake Nyassa. Mrs. Dewar (née Rayner), wife of the Free Church of Scotland missionary at Mwenzo, on the Tanganyika Plateau, in a recent letter describes the stirring incident. She writes:—

"The resident official of the British South African Administration here is very active, and directly word reaches him of any slave work he is off in hot pursuit. Last week, while superintending the making of the new road from here to Fife, news came that an Arab party had just left a certain place. He gathered a band of natives, and with another European started at once. They reached the spot to learn that Alungwana had not yet passed; being in advance, they stayed in the village, where it was expected the party would rest. Soon the Beloochistan Arabs came along, donkeys, carriers, women, and a whole lot of children. The whole caravan took half-an-hour to pass a given spot. They did not stay at the village, but camped some distance away, lighted their fires, and cooked their food.

"No move was made that night, but when morning dawned, messengers were sent demanding instant and unconditional surrender. The only answer was firing on the part of the attacked. In less time than it takes me to write,

THE PRINCIPAL ARAB WAS CAPTURED; his companion, rather than yield, committed suicide by shooting himself, and all their 'chuma' was taken, including several very valuable tusks, some weighing over eighty pounds each, 1500 pounds in all. Also the Arab mail and fifty-seven slaves have come safely to Kawa, the headquarters of the B.S.A. on the Plateau. All that could give a satisfactory account of where they were bought, or whence they were stolen, have been (or are being) returned to their respective homes. Still, there are many so small that they can tell nothing of their former whereabouts. It seems that the meek, innocent-looking Arab who was captured has been in the country for the last four years collecting his merchandise for the coast!

"Mr. Dewar received a note offering him some of the tiny ones, so he started, taking with him several men to bring them back. It was only last evening, when quite dark, that they returned, glad to set down their tiny human loads. One child was crying with the cold, as the large wrapping of calico its kind rescuer had supplied had slipped down. All were soon crowding round the fire, and, not content with the mat in front, stepped right inside the hearth, spreading out their little hands to the welcome glow. Soon their past trials seemed forgotten, and all were chattering and enjoying some sweet ground nuts—monkey nuts.

"Our hearts seemed full—on the verge of either a good cry or a good laugh. On the one hand we were thankful to know they had been SAVED FROM A TERRIBLE FUTURE, and were safe at a mission station, and on the other hand there was the thought of what the poor mothers and fathers must be enduring. A bowl of steaming nsima (boiled malezi) was brought in, and the six contented little creatures gathered round, and ate very nicely, no pushing and no hurrying.

"We are thinking that friends at home may be willing to adopt one of these little orphans through us, though so very, very far away. We could, I think, guarantee to house, educate, and provide everything needful and suitable for their comfort and health for 50s. per annum. As soon as able, they would be trained to the work they seemed to be best suited for, while the object aimed at would be their future usefulness to their own tribe and people. There are three boys and three girls; the eldest, who is wonderfully bright and sharp, cannot be over five or six years old, and two are about two years old, and scarcely know their names. The boys are Kaosa, Masasi, Musonda, and the little women, Kulanzira, Batilukia, and Muzizindwi. They seem to be mostly Awemba, but the precocious 'capitao,' Kaosa, has been so long with his captors that he speaks Swahili fluently.

"They had rested during the daytime in their march, and travelled at night, and until they reached this region the adults had been fastened together with a long chain, which is now at Kawa, well made, with two semi-circular bands at intervals, to be fastened round the necks of the doomed ones with a padlock. The head Arab is there, too, in chains, awaiting his trial."

Rev. M. E. Barakat.

THE accompanying portrait introduces to our readers an Oriental Christian, who has for some years engaged in Gospel work in America, and who is at present in this country, evangelising and lecturing on Eastern lands and scenes. MUHANNA EISA BARAKAT is a native of Damascus, "the oldest city in the world," where he was born of Christian parents in 1855, in a house lying between "the Street which is called Straight" and the place where the Apostle Paul was let down in a basket from the wall of the city (Acts ix. 11, 25).

While he was a child there was an outbreak against the Christians of Syria, on the part of the Mohammedans, and in Damascus the work of slaughter was continued for three days and three nights, neither men, women, nor children being spared by the murderers. When the massacre began, young Barakat was at school, and on returning home was lost in a riotous and frantic crowd; but at length, when escaping from an assassin, he threw himself into the arms of a merciful native, who, though a Mohammedan, did not approve the bloodshed. Afterwards he and his brother were restored to their parents and five sisters. This was not for long, however, for the father was killed for not renouncing the Christian faith, and thereupon his mother was taken ill, and conveyed to the Mohammedan hospital, where she speedily died, as was said from poison, which was freely administered to the hapless patients. The youngest baby sister, being left helpless, soon followed her parents. Then the house with its contents was burnt down to the ground.

Mr. Barakat was then taken to Alexandria by his elder sister, who laboured as a missionary there. After attending the American Mission schools for about ten years, he returned to his native country, and entered the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrout. In 1874 he graduated B.A., and going again to Egypt he was appointed professor at the Siout College, taking English subjects and Arabic. He also instructed a number of missionaries in the Arabic language, and acted as Professor of Literature in the Ladies' Seminary at Siout. During his holidays Mr. Barakat travelled in the Holy Land and beyond, acting as interpreter to strangers from the West; and during this period he had narrow escapes from danger, which impressed him much with a sense of God's goodness and providence.

Having a desire to preach the Gospel, Mr. Barakat went through a course of preparatory study at Cairo, and subsequently engaged in mission work and teaching. In June, 1882, while at Alexandria, he found himself in the midst of another massacre in connection with Arabi Pasha's rebellion; but again escaped with his life. The cause of this outbreak was the same as on the earlier occasion, Mohammedan hatred of Christians and their doctrine. Taking asylum in Malta, with his married sister and his brother, and their families, Mr. Barakat at length despaired of speedily returning to Alexandria, and took ship to France, and thence to America. Receiving letters of recommendation from the trustees and directors of the Siout College, he was heartily commended to the people of the United States, among whom he began to lecture on Oriental topics, and to preach the Gospel with all the force and point that attends an intimate knowledge of the circumstances of Bible story.

In order to attain still greater efficiency in Christian work, he entered Auburn Theological Seminary, and went through the three years' curriculum with great credit to himself, adding polish and fluency to expression in the English language. His desire was to undertake mission work in Syria, but the Presbyterian Foreign Missions Board did not entertain his offer, as they had a rule against sending workers to their native lands. So he had no alternative but to seek openings in America, where from 1889 to the beginning of the present year he laboured in several cities and towns in the western State of Iowa. From time to time also he lectured throughout the States and Canada, on Oriental customs.

At the end of last year he resolved upon a tour with several objects:—(1) To gather material for a work he is preparing on the Holy Land and the Bible; (2) To diffuse information on Eastern affairs, as opportunities may offer, in the churches of Great Britain; and (3) to promote his own acquaintance with affairs in general. He comes among us fully accredited from the churches of the United States, and we commend him to the sympathetic attention of such as are able to organise meetings for popular instruction and Christian encouragement. Communications for Mr. Barakat should be addressed to the care of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Dublin Prison Gate Mission.

THE Dublin Prison Gate Mission had its origin in blessing received by individuals during Mr. Moody's visit to Dublin in 1874. Two years of regularly held women's prayer meetings as to this work preceded its commencement. Less than eight months are now required to complete twenty-one years of Prison-gate work in Dublin. During twenty years commencing July, 1876, 8254 women have been received from the Prison Gate. Last year £1911 was earned by women and £103 was paid for dormitory accommodation, making the entire return from them £2014. Seventy-four women were satisfactorily provided for from the Mission during last year. A large proportion are young girls, who, with their hearty consent, are retained indoors at the Mission until they can be safely placed in positions to earn their own livelihood.

At present, the necessity of curtailment of the work is before the committee, the bank account being overdrawn by £750. The yearly expenses of the mission amount to about £3000. Christian friends are desired to contribute only one-third of the total expenditure, and surely the workers will not be compelled to send away those who are industriously endeavouring to lead a new life for lack of this portion. The expenses of management are small, the greater part being accomplished by voluntary labour. The hon. secs. are Mrs. Edmundson, Foxrock, co. Dublin, and Mrs. Eustace, Knockrath, Greystones, co. Wicklow.

Dr. Nansen told an interviewer that he took no intoxicating liquors with him in his recent Arctic expedition. His experience, he said, has led him to take a decided stand against the use of stimulants and narcotics of all kinds.

Missionary Meetings.

MANCHESTER.

THE annual "Missionary-day" meetings held at the Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester, took place last week. At nine o'clock, a large number of those who took part in the proceedings of the day breakfasted together. The BISHOP of MANCHESTER delivered a brief address upon the subject of foreign missions. As Christians, it was their duty to labour for and support the missionary cause. The Divine command was to go with the Gospel to every creature, and they must accept that responsibility. Subsequently a devotional meeting was held under the presidency of Prebendary Macdonald.

The first general meeting was held at eleven o'clock, there being present a large number of ministers of different denominations and active workers in missions in various parts of the world. Rev. DAVID BARON gave a Bible reading with special reference to the work of evangelising the Jews in which he is engaged.

Mr. EUGENE STOCK (Church Missionary Society) followed with an address in which he illustrated the great principle that there must be death before life, humiliation before conquest and victory. He added that much of the wonderful development of the last few years was the direct issue of the deaths of the wife of Krapf, of Livingstone, Hannington, and others. Miss ETHEL TURNER, of the London Missionary Society, gave an address upon the work carried on by the mission at Almora in Northern India.

At the afternoon session, Prebendary Macdonald presiding, BISHOP TUGWELL (Western Equatorial Africa) delivered an address. He believed that the influence which is energising the Church of Christ to-day more than anything else, had its connection with the mission field. Many present pledged themselves some years ago to carry the Gospel to the people of the Soudan; but he was there to tell them that the Gospel had not been proclaimed in the Haussa Soudan. He desired to ask them whether, when they gave that pledge they gave it on certain conditions—whether they pledged themselves to support certain men or to give the Gospel to the people of that country? It was of importance to notice the difference. If they pledged themselves to support men, men might disappoint them or be called away by God; but the field—the people—remained, and the country was unevangelised to-day. If they pledged themselves to evangelise that country, they must take up the work which, he feared, for a while they had laid down. As a result of the work that had been accomplished, however, they were in a position to-day to advance into the Soudan. In a journey which he and a colleague, Mr. Nott, recently made into the Haussa country, they were hospitably received, and were asked to give an assurance that after the rainy season they would return if their lives were spared. He told the people that he should not be able to return, but that Mr. Nott would, and that he would hold them responsible for his health and life. Two men thereupon gave a pledge that they would watch over him. Mr. Nott was going to the Haussa Soudan in December, and he wanted a medical man to join him. He earnestly appealed to the meeting to take up the work, and, if possible, to send workers into the Haussa Soudan. There was, he said, a mighty work to be done there. In the lower Niger the difficulties were great because they had to deal with so many languages; but throughout the large district to which he was referring there was but one language, while the people were not an ignorant or an unlettered people. He hoped as a result of those meetings some might be ready to go.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR gave some details of mission work in North China. He expressed the belief that there was no work in England so fruitful as missionary work in China. Some people thought missionary work was discouraging; it all depended upon how the matter was looked at. There were in China hundreds of cities—capitals of countries—in which there was no resident Christian teacher to-day, European or native, while there were a much larger number of large towns and villages equally destitute of the Gospel. The work, however, was being blessed. The latest statistics up to April of this year gave the number of native Christians as 70,000; there had been added to the Christian churches in China during six and a-half years as many as were gathered in the previous fifty years' (1084).

missionary effort. There was, he urged, great need for more workers.

Mrs. TODD OSBORNE described her experience amongst the soldiers and sailors at Gibraltar and amongst the people on the Spanish mainland. Mr. ARTHUR J. BOWEN, who is connected with the Congo-Balolo Mission, and is home on furlough, in an impressive address, gave some particulars of work in Central Africa.

After an adjournment for tea, a Medical Missionary and Student Volunteer meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. L. K. SHAW. In opening the meeting, the chairman said it had been well said that the medical missionary was the nearest approach to the first missionaries sent forth by Jesus Christ, when He bade his disciples go, giving them power to preach the Gospel and to heal the sick. Dr. J. L. MAXWELL, who laboured as a medical missionary in the island of Formosa and in South China, expressed the gratification it afforded him to see the increasing number of students in the great medical schools of London who were preparing themselves for work as medical missionaries. The medical missionary, he said, had great scope for effective work, and was doing that work most successfully. From personal experience he knew how valuable such work had been in China. The Strangeways Conference had sent out a medical missionary, Miss Dodson, M.D.; and he asked that they should render her every help.

Mr. MARCUS WOOD addressed the meeting on the work of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, a movement which, he said, was founded ten years ago in America. In England they were now adding one student per day to the roll of the Union, and since 1892 the number of students in colleges and public schools, who had promised to give themselves to mission work when their college days were done, was 1168. As a missionary who had worked eight years in China, he was deeply thankful for the movement of which he had spoken.

At the concluding general meeting Mr. L. K. SHAW presided, and in his opening address urged that a great deal more should be done than had yet been done for the missionary cause by that Conference. As a result of the "Missionary-day" they annually held, they had been enabled to send two fresh missionaries into the field—Miss Cream to China, and Miss Dodson to India—but they had still no missionary in Africa, and especially in the great Soudan, of which they had heard so much.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. David Baron (of the Hebrew-Christian Testimony to Israel), Bishop Tugwell, Mr. Eugene Stock, and other speakers. Collections were made at the meetings in aid of various missionary agencies.

GLASGOW.

The seventeenth annual missionary meeting under the auspices of the Free Presbytery of Glasgow was held last week in the St. Andrew's Hall. The hall was well filled. Lord Overton presided. Rev. James Rennie opened the meeting with prayer.

The CHAIRMAN said they all delighted in the motto that was over their national arms, Dieu et mon droit, but perhaps they were rather too much given to standing up for their rights, and it would be better to change that motto into "God and my brother." They were all apt to be like the Jews, who rejoiced in the privileges they had, and never thought that it was intended that they should be messengers to tell others of the glad tidings. After the early part of the first century the Church of God seemed to have been asleep in regard to this matter, and never wakened up to the real meaning of "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" until about the beginning of the century. Yet there were some people who sat down at their communion tables, and who, when asked for help for mission work, at once brought up the heathen at home—as if they were never to do work for the heathen abroad until there were no heathen at home. As a matter of fact, there was no difference between home and foreign missions, and his view was that those who talked thus of foreign missions did least for the heathen at home. Referring to the student movement, he said they had been taunted more than once by the charge that they sent to the foreign fields only men who had failed at home. Happily, they could look back over well-nigh a century and see men and women of learning and talent who had set themselves to the work of the Master abroad; but now in the universities of this and other lands the cream of the talent, ability, and energy were beginning to devote themselves to foreign mission work. He contrasted the £142,000,000 spent yearly in this country on drink with the £2,000,000 spent on sending the Gospel to the heathen, and concluded with an earnest appeal for greater interest in missions than had hitherto been shown.

Principal WHITTON, Nagpore, said that the first thought that came to him was that the missionary sentiment at the close of the 19th century was a very different thing from what it was when the century began. About 100 years ago a young man rose up in a meeting and pleaded the cause of the heathen. A venerable minister promptly rebuked him thus:—"When it pleases God to convert the heathen, He will convert them without help from either you or me." That to a large extent expressed the prevailing sentiment at the beginning of the century with regard to the claims of the heathen upon the Christian Church. He had no doubt that if that was sound theology a hundred years ago, it was considered heresy here to-day. The century had taught this at least—that it was the duty of the Christian Church to go to work among the heathen unto the ends of the earth. He thought with regard to missions that the proper view to take was that the Christian Church had been going through an apprenticeship to the work of converting the heathen. First of all, they tried the evangelistic method alone, but they soon found that there were very many whom they were not reaching by that method. Then they introduced the educational method, which was producing a revolution in the Indian religious thought of to-day. Then they introduced the medical method, so it would be seen that they were looking in this direction and in that direction, using this tool and that tool to see which would work best. He was not quite certain that the apprenticeship was ended. Probably they had a great deal to learn, but there were four years yet to come, and if they hurried up perhaps their apprenticeship would be finished by the end of the century. Then, when they had learned what tools to use, and how to use them, let the next century give the results for which they had been so long working and praying. Speaking of what had been called the reactionary movement, in which the Hindus seemed to be harking back to their Hinduism, he said his opinion was that it would prove to be only a temporary phase, and that, when it was clearly discovered, as it must be discovered in the long run, that their foundations were not sure—the only sure foundation would be seen to be in the Christianity that they were not yet prepared to accept. When that occurred, they would see a vast movement in India, with hundreds of thousands of men coming to see King Christ.

Rev. WM. McCULLOCH, Hoogly, gave an interesting account of the vernacular evangelistic work in his mission district in Lower Bengal. Rev. JOHN WATT, Calcutta, in the course of his address, spoke of a successful evangelistic meeting that was conducted in Calcutta by Dr. Macdonald. Certainly one-half of the work was done by native members of their Christian congregation.

Miss M'ICKING, Helensburgh, pleaded the claims of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. During their past twelve years of work they had trebled their numbers, and now they had sixty Scotch ladies working in India and Africa, and their native Christian agencies now numbered 410. Yet there remained very much to be done, and she pleaded for help in money, sympathy, and prayer. Three hundred congregations gave nothing to the cause which she was pleading, and some of these congregations were in Glasgow.

Dr. MONRO GINSON, London, gave some reasons why, in these days of foreign mission enterprise, we should make a fresh start with renewed vigour. One reason was to be found in the new enthusiasm that had been awakened for the very words of Christ Himself. Another reason was the revulsion of the age against the old individualism which assumed that if only each man would do the best for himself he would do the best for society. A third reason was the insistence on every side that the Kingdom of God was for earth. Here and now was the watchword—not a “happy land far, far away,” but happy lands here on earth. Another point was the growing appreciation of missionary work on the part of those who knew it. They still had the oracular deliverances of those who knew nothing about the matter, and who were scrupulously careful to know as little about it as possible. They had plenty of testimony as to the value of missions from those who had interest enough in the matter to make their opinion worth having. In concluding, he asked the audience to contrast the experience of Carey 100 years ago—turned away from a shut and bolted door in India—with the position now, when the whole world was lying open.

Rev. DUNDAS L. ERSKINE, Kaffraria, spoke of the work which he helped to begin ten years ago at Somerville Mission Station. When they went there they found the natives working seven days a week, but now in that district they would scarcely see a Kaffir working on the Sabbath. If the Kaffirs were coming forward in the matter of Sabbath observance, it was more than the Scotch were. Kaffraria was the land of the one-roomed house, and that explained a great deal of the immorality that was found in Kaffraria, but in consequence of the work of the missionaries two-roomed houses were becoming common. They thus helped to raise the natives socially as well as spiritually.

Mr. W. A. CAMPBELL gave some particulars regarding the missions in South Africa, which he had an opportunity of visiting during a recent journey to that land.

A great missionary meeting was held last week in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, in promotion of the foreign mission advance movement in the Established Church of Scotland. There was a large attendance. Lord BALFOUR of Burleigh, who occupied the chair, said they were met together to pledge themselves, as he hoped they would do, to further and assist the advance on behalf of the foreign missions of the Church of Scotland. In this matter they were entitled to take high ground. “Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature,” was a command which admitted of no qualification or diminution. It was distinct and of universal obligation upon all those who claimed to be servants of their Master. Success or non-success in this or that mission had no reference to the binding character of the obligation. If others in the long bygone times had not obeyed this command, what might have been their position that day? He found that twenty years ago the contributions of their church at home (legacies not included) for foreign missions was £7000 a year; ten years ago they were £11,000 a year! at the present time they had reached £18,000 a year. They were making an appeal for an increase. There was a pastoral letter issued by order of the General Assembly, and it has been subjected to some hostile criticism, but he had no hesitation whatever in saying that it was entirely justified when it characterised the contributions which they gave to foreign missions as a Church as both inadequate and precarious.

Lord REAY moved—“That Christian missions, as endeavouring to fulfil the purpose of Christ in forming his Church, are well worthy of the sympathy and support of all who realise their responsibilities and opportunities.” He took the liberty of indicating what he considered one or two fundamental requirements in all missionaries, wherever they were. The first thing in which he would examine a missionary after he had been one, two, or three years abroad, would be as to the knowledge he had obtained of the people amongst whom he had been working. In India that involved a great deal more than most people in Scotland were aware of. Missionaries would have to deal with the learned classes in India on a totally different footing from that on which they would have to do with the uneducated classes. Here they had not to deal with Agnosticism nor with people who did not believe in the supernatural, but with people who recognise that there was such a thing as spiritual culture. This was a fertile soil for the missionary who knew how to deal with it. The next form in which missionary effort could be advanced was by education. That also was being done by the Free Church, both in Bombay and Madras; and with regard to the medical missionaries again, he mentioned the excellent United Presbyterian Mission in Oudh Pore. Officials could not proselytise, and the only way they as a people could acquit themselves of their responsibility in this matter was by doing all they could to support those who represented in those foreign countries that side of the national life which was the higher, which was the spiritual side, which was the side his friends the Hindus called the spiritual culture. The resolution was seconded by Professor Charteris, supported by Dr. Lang, and adopted unanimously.

Orphan Homes of Scotland.

THE twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Orphan Homes of Scotland took place last week in the Christian Institute. Mr. A. CAMERON CORBETT, M.P., who presided, said they had special reason to be thankful that Mr. Quarrier, who had been laid aside by illness, was able to be with them. The work of Mr. Quarrier was largely to take away children from the town and place them in healthy conditions in the country, and ultimately send them to where they were helpful to themselves and to others. As to the City Homes, it was a great comfort that there was such a place in Glasgow to which the meritorious poor could be sent and welcomed. As to the Consumptive Homes, Mr. Quarrier's course had been marked by great wisdom. He was guided by medical experts, so that sympathy and science walked hand in hand. The building for the reception of consumptive people was now ready, but the offices were incomplete. Should they not help to complete the offices so that they should be able to receive the patients?

Mr. BRYDEN submitted the accounts, showing total receipts, £26,971 9s. 1½d., given without anyone being called on, or collectors sent out to gather it. During the year 1455 children and young people have been helped.

Dr. YELLOWEES said it was wonderful that so small an amount of money could do so much good. During the year they received 445 new children, and 1445 had passed through the Homes, and all for the expenditure of £13,000 odd. The amount of heart in the year's record called for admiration and sympathy. The motive that underlay the whole was love of the Master. Rev. Dr. WELLS said no man could listen to the figures without emotion. When agnostics and other unbelievers did such good work, Christian people would be disposed to look with respect upon the principles they represented. This work was the spirit of Christ in action laying its hands upon the bleeding wounds of humanity and doing its best to pour in the healing balm. Dr. E. DUNCAN said he was sorry to see so meagre a response to the movement which was of such great importance to Scotland. It said little for our rich men that the beautiful building, erected by Mr. Quarrier to cope with a dreadful disease, should have called forth only £1000 during the past year. Professor COATS said the cases of curable consumption were far more numerous than was supposed 20 or 30 years ago. If Mr. Quarrier had a little more money he was prepared to tackle these cases.

Mr. QUARRIER felt quite unable to speak, as he was just recovering from a ten weeks' illness, but during all that time he was thinking of the poor. He could not but praise God for the loving tenderness and sympathy he had met on all hands. His thirty-two years' work in the City had saved the city hundreds of thousands of pounds, for 300 paupers taken off the rates for twenty-five years at £10 per head came to a large sum. He therefore claimed the aid of Parish and County Councillors in relieving him of the rates which the home had to pay. After some details as to how God had sent the money, Mr. Quarrier further claimed the right to be regarded with a little more generosity by the really rich, and a little more discrimination when they were making their wills. They started the year with hardly a week's provision, and finished in a similar way.

A large number of little girls from the Homes, good-looking and tidily clad, sang several pieces.

The Sheats Law, enacted in the State of Florida some time ago, making it a crime for white and coloured children to be taught in the same school, has been declared unconstitutional by the American courts.

King Edward Institutions.

THE large institute in Albert-street, Spitalfields, was crowded last Thursday evening in celebration of the completion of the Jubilee year of the King Edward Institutions, which have been used by God in doing a remarkable work in the heart of Spitalfields.

The report read by Mr. ALBERT MONTAGUE—for all Mr. Montague's sons are engaged in the work—recalled the story of the early origin in an old stable, and went on to show how the mission has advanced by leaps and bounds until now there are some forty agencies in full activity, reaching 1600 children and many more adults; relieving, aiding, comforting, uplifting and helping the poor in divers ways, besides, and above all, setting before them the Gospel message. In connection with the large Sunday-school, the Bible classes are of peculiar interest owing to the hold gained on the young people. From these classes hundreds go out as saved men and women, while many re-enter the Sunday-school as teachers and workers. Reference was made in the report to the industrial sewing and other classes, while the systematic and constant house-to-house visitation in the locality, the relief work, and the free dinners to destitute children were specially mentioned.

An interesting letter was read from Dr. Kennedy, aged eighty-three, testifying to his sense of the value of the Mission, and of the labours of its devoted superintendent.

Rev. GEORGE COUSINS, of the London Missionary Society, in an animated address spoke of the bright spots in East London. Amid all the misery and horror of some aspects of East-End life there are many centres of light and blessing which are bringing glory to God, while they are fruitful in good works to the poor around. If any man finds his faith in the efficacy of the Gospel becoming weak and faint let him go down to the East-End and see what God is doing by means of such missions as the King Edward Institutions.

Rev. THOMAS SISSONS recalled the late Dr. Tyler's life-long devotion to Mile End, and thanked God that loving Christian voluntary effort found an outlet in such works of unselfish charity and Gospel grace as the Ragged School Missions in poor London.

Prebendary WHITE, D.D., who followed, spoke of his many years' observation of the work carried on by Mr. Montague in Spitalfields. Knowing the Mission, its efficient and economical working, and something of its results he could confidently commend it to all.

Mr. H. R. WILLIAMS, who presided, recounted briefly the story of the Mission since its start fifty years ago, in a wretched room, 8ft. square, in a court off King Edward-street! Now it is a great institution—but in the hands of God its remarkable growth and extension are largely due to Mr. Montague, who, in one way or another, has been connected with the school from the beginning, and who has now completed thirty-three years' service as superintendent.

An illuminated address was then presented to Mr. Charles Montague, on behalf of the people attending the Mission, the workers, and many friends, by Mr. Cross, setting forth the lifelong and devoted service rendered and the remarkable results attained. The chairman presented a purse containing £252 15s. 6d. The idea of a testimonial was started by the women of the mothers' meetings, and being taken up heartily had now reached this amount.

Mr. MONTAGUE acknowledged with much emotion the kindness shown him. Any success in the mission was due to his noble band of workers rather than to himself. The “faithful service” prizes, and the rewards for excellency in various ways were then distributed by Mrs. J. G. Johnson, and the proceedings were brought to a close.

Central America.—Rev. A. J. Diaz, who has been for some years a very successful evangelist among the Cubans, and who has founded a church there which numbers a multitude of people, has had to escape from Cuba, where he was saved from prison, and probably from death, at the hands of the Spanish general, by the prompt action of the American Government. For a time he will preach in the Spanish-speaking settlements of Texas and Mexico, under the auspices of the American Baptist Publication Society. He has taken charge of a chapel-car, and is working his way from south-west Texas to Mexico along the railways.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins at Edinburgh.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

NIGHT by night last week the spacious and elegant Free Assembly Hall was the scene of large gatherings of interested listeners, as these evangelists spoke and sang of the "wonderful words of life." The hall was not crowded, but a spirit of quiet attention pervaded the meetings as the glad message of the Gospel was lovingly and earnestly proclaimed. Perhaps there would be an average of eight or nine hundred persons present, the attendance increasing as the week wore on.

The evangelists have been thankful as well as gratified, during their sojourn "over the Border," to find that not a few of the earnest workers of to-day were brought to the Lord during the first visit to Scotland of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, now twenty years ago. But having themselves evangelised in Scottish cities at intervals since then, they miss the help and companionship of many friends who have been called to the higher service of their Lord above. Notably, in Edinburgh the presence of the late Dr. D. A. Moxey is sorely missed, for on the Major's previous visits to the city Dr. Moxey rendered invaluable assistance in spheres both spiritual and practical, and the place of such a man is hard to fill. With his thoughts running in this vein, it was perhaps more than a coincidence that in one of the after-meetings last week Major Whittle met with a man whose bright face testified to the avowal that he was on the Lord's side; and who, in response to further inquiry, said that some years ago he was first awakened to a sense of his lost condition by the tears which he saw standing in the eyes of Dr. Moxey, as he pleaded with him to give his heart to Christ. He thought, "If that man can weep for me, what must the love of Christ be?" and although he did not then yield, yet the impression never left him, until, at a later period, he gave his heart and life to God.

Another interesting case was that of a young student who came into the "marvellous light" on Friday evening, during a very searching address from the words, "And one of the soldiers pierced his side," in which the preacher dwelt upon the various ways in which men may to-day pierce the heart of the Saviour, by continued neglect and wilful sin. In his newly-found joy the young man looked forward eagerly to the services in the neighbouring parish of Newington, in which he resides, and which is being visited by the evangelists this week.

The friends attached to the Carrubbers Close Mission, and others, have co-operated well in their endeavour to uphold the evangelists' hands; and an excellent choir has night by night rallied to the aid of Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins in rendering some of the new Gospel songs, as well as many of the old favourites of years gone by. Even "The Ninety and Nine" came fresh and forceful as ever at Mr. Stebbins' rendering; while by special request he also sang one of the latest "Christian Choir" pieces—

Some day the silver cord will break, to which Mr. Moody recently referred at a meeting in New York as being "one of the best hymns of the present century." When one remembers that its author, Miss Fanny Crosby, is blind, and that she has said she would "rather be blind and able to write such hymns, than to have her sight and not be able to," there is an added pathos to the expectation expressed in the words, "I shall see Him face to face." The first stanza and refrain are as follows:—

Some day the silver cord will break,
And I no more as now shall sing;
But, oh, the joy when I shall wake,
Within the palace of the King!
And I shall see Him face to face,
And tell the story—saved by grace.

A MEETING FOR CHILDREN.

Perhaps the special feature of the week's meetings may be considered the gathering for "children" held on Friday afternoon. The various schools had been canvassed, and the attendance of about six hundred young people, varying in age from ten to sixteen, was the result. Major Whittle possesses the gift, by no means common to all evangelists, or even ministers, of interesting the young as well as those of maturer years. He is a firm believer in John Bunyan's "Eye-Gate," as well as his "Ear-Gate," and to carry out this idea he has prepared a series of special addresses, illustrated by familiar objects. "The Poison Sermon" was the one selected for Friday's meeting, in treating which he proceeded somewhat on this wise:—

On a large table before him stood two glasses, a bottle of water, two others respectively containing a poisonous and an anti-poisonous liquid; the latter he termed his "poison-detector." While the eyes of all were turned towards him as he partly filled the glasses with water, he explained, by reference to Gen. i. 31, that God made all things "very good"—and of this the pure water was emblematical. (As he tasted it, he suggested that his doing so might make his young friends "feel dry." Even so should the "water of life" be presented to the world by those who had tasted it, that those who have not should be led strongly to desire it. But that by the way.) Another text, Eccles. vii. 29, tells us, "God made man upright" in mind and body.

GOD MADE MAN GOOD,

but man has become bad, and the heart that was once pure and clean like pure water—oh, what dreadful things have entered into it! Why, even boys and girls sometimes bite, and scratch, and tell tales, and fight. How does all this come about? Gen. iii. tells how the poison of sin commenced to work; and to illustrate this the speaker poured some poison into the tumblers. The colour of the liquid was not changed, but the poison was in it. Even so may sin often lurk where least expected. The presence of the poison may, however, be detected by the contents of the other bottle which turns the liquid to a red-brown colour. What is it that "detects" the presence of sin? First, in Rom. iii. 20, "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Repeat the Commandments, and you will soon find out if you have ever sinned or not. Then, in John xvi. 8, the Holy Spirit is said to "convince of sin."

A still further addition of the same acid gradually cleared the water to its right colour again; and so, said the speaker, the Word of God not only points out our sin, but tells how it may be treated. The truths found in such verses as Is. i. 18; liii. 6; John iii. 16, and many more, may each help to convince and convert.

But one glass still remained with its contents unpurified. "What shall we do with it? Let us cover it over with a handkerchief. Is the poison cured? No, it is still there. It is no use hiding sin; it cannot be cured that way, no matter how beautiful the covering may be."

And so the great lessons of sin and salvation were pressed home; and who can tell in years to come, and even now, what fruit may be borne in the lives of the young listeners by this pleasant and homely way of appealing to their understanding by such "Gospel Pictures and Story Sermons"? The series will be continued on each of the next three Fridays, and those readers who are interested in any children in Edinburgh may well bring under their notice these talks, of which we have here given a mere outline. Some of the incidents and stories related will be found upon "The Children's Page" of the present issue.

Sermon Distribution.—The annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Loan Tract Society was held on Nov. 24. From the report of secretary, Mr. A. E. Millican stated that the Society exists for the distribution of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons as loan tracts, with a weekly circulation of 6000 sermons in the immediate neighbourhood. A benevolent fund, supported by members and friends of the society, have relieved during the year 153 families, and in response to an urgent appeal were able last Christmas to give help to 160 more of the most needy. This year they hope to be able to help a larger number.

Russian Intolerance.—The annual report of M. Pobiedonosteff, the procurator of the Russian Holy Synod, has (says The Daily Chronicle's Odessa correspondent) been published, and its contents and confident tone go far to disprove the rumours which have been afloat as to this statesman's waning influence with the Emperor. The old bigotry and intolerance are still a prominent feature in the report. During the reign of Alexander III. the Old Believers were granted certain liberties which went to ameliorate their hard lot, among others the right to take part in communal elections, exemption from contributing to the support of the Orthodox clergy, the recognition of their marriages, the right to partake of the sacrament in their own chapels, etc. These privileges, according to M. Pobiedonosteff, should be now repealed, and police and gendarmes should be authorised to see if no means are available for bringing back these erring sheep to the fold of the Church.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

THE annual business meeting of Carrubbers Close Mission was held last week in the large hall of the Mission, High-street, Edinburgh. There was a crowded attendance. The chair was occupied by the president, Professor A. R. Simpson, who, in his opening remarks, spoke of the continued prosperity which attended the Mission's operations.

Mr. WILLIAM ROBERTSON, the secretary, gave in the annual report, which stated that over 6800 meetings in town and country had been addressed by various members of the Mission in the course of the year, and that on an average no fewer than 7000 persons had been reached each week. The accommodation, it was stated, afforded by the Mission premises was now so fully utilised that it was scarcely possible to find room for any new branches of work. A more successful year had never been experienced in the history of the Mission.

Mr. THOMAS ORMISTON, the treasurer, submitted a financial statement for the year, showing a clear balance of £69. The income for the year had been the largest in the history of the Mission, and in every department there had been gratifying progress in connection with their finances.

Mr. G. A. BARCLAY submitted the annual report of the Gospel Temperance section, in which it was stated that the progress of this particular branch had been satisfactory.

The following new directors were appointed:—Mr. Robert Wilson (re-elected to office), Rev. Dr. Cunningham, Rev. Dr. A. B. Cunningham, Mr. John Macpherson, Councillor Brown, and Messrs. Ross and Haddow, two of the superintendents of work in the Mission. After the business had been transacted, and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins had sung, Major Whittle delivered an address to the workers, in the course of which he strongly advocated the formation of a Bible Institute for Edinburgh similar to that which, he said, had been found so useful in Chicago, and was already proving in Glasgow a great means of blessing. Major Whittle gave a number of practical hints in regard to the carrying on of Christian work.

Bethel Santhal Mission.

DEAR SIR,—We thank God for his grace and strength in helping us to visit the late native festivals. At the different places we had the help of our Santhali preachers with tracts, Gospels, Testaments, and musical instruments.

At present a large number of Santhals are almost starving on account of the failure of their early rice crops. Friends willing to help them can contribute towards our "famine fund," to enable us to help them by giving the strong daily work in making tanks and rice fields, and repairing roads, and to give clothes and food to the sick and helpless.—Yours, in the Master's service,

W. BARLOW.

W.T.A.U.—A bazaar and sale of Christmas presents will be held at the St. Bride's Institute, Bride-lane, E.C., by the Women's Total Abstinence Union on Thursday and Friday, Dec. 10, 11. The Bazaar is arranged to raise funds for the extension and usefulness of this Union, especially in connection with its recent forward movements. Opportunities for extending the work are constantly arising.

Stockton Christian Mission.—The sixteenth anniversary has been held of this quiet work, which has been carried on for some years in Stockton by Mrs. Goddard, who has made a practice of visiting every Sunday the female prisoners at the police-station, and endeavouring to influence them for good. But her work has not ended here. Her residence in Langdale-terrace has gradually become a refuge for outcast girls and women, who have nothing between them and a life of infamy. Very often in the small hours of the morning have the police found girls wandering about homeless, and instead of locking them up they have escorted them to Mrs. Goddard, who has taken them in, and given them food and lodging for a few days, until they could find some honest and useful position to fill. In this way many girls have been kept from falling, and are now occupying respectable positions. In addition to this much evangelistic work is carried on in the Mission Hall among old and young. Hitherto Mrs. Goddard has had the whole burden on her shoulders, but now she feels greatly the need of help. The secretary is Mr. R. T. Hardy, 24, Atkinson-street, Stockton-on-Tees.

North Sea Trawlers.

INTERESTING meetings were held on Monday of workers associated with the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The afternoon meeting was largely devoted to informal conference and personal testimony borne by those who have lately been evangelising in the trawling fleets at sea.

Mr. T. B. MILLER, who presided, opened with a few words on the call to praise for blessing granted, and the need for earnest prayer in view of the difficulties to be encountered, and the power of sin in the hearts of many. He also referred thankfully to the important service being rendered by ladies in connection with the literature and letter-writing departments.

Mr. H. W. MAYNARD spoke on work for God; Mr. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD on the glorious death of Admiral Questor, once an opponent of the mission work, and in later years a warm friend and helper.

Lieut.-Col. PHAYRE gave encouraging details of the United Fishermen's Christian Association, intended for the upbuilding of converts and the drawing out of Christian men in mutual helpfulness. Rev. Dr. STOCK followed with a hopeful account of work on board one of the mission vessels, and of his experiences visiting from smack to smack in order to reach unconverted fishermen.

The meeting being then thrown open, a number of fresh and interesting testimonies were borne by friends who had been out to the fleets this summer. Two ladies, Mrs. Wilson and Miss Cooper, also told of the welcome given them by the trawlers, and of the readiness of men and boys to hear the Word.

In the evening, Mr. T. B. Miller again presided. Mr. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD described the efforts made by this mission and other societies to help the men while on shore, at Yarmouth, Lowestoft, Grimsby, and Ymuiden. But, he said, Ostend has been laid on our hearts. It is largely frequented by the English seamen and fishermen; it is full of terrible temptations, and nothing whatever is being done for our men. Now, the first ship that carried the mission flag to the North sea—the Ensign, now the Thomas Gray—is worn out and unfit for service; and it is laid on our hearts to station her at Ostend as a seamen's resort. The Belgian Minister of Marine has promised a berth free of dock dues. Soon we hope she will be at work, and we trust much prayer will be made for great blessing.

Rev. C. H. HICKS gave an animated account of life and work at sea. Rev. A. G. CLARK, in a vigorous speech, dwelt on the threefold work of the mission—spiritual, medical, and temperance. Miss Wright, who is doing noble work at Gorleston, told of effort among men and boys, and in the homes of the trawlers among their wives and children.

Brief words followed by Messrs. Edwin Smith, Thos. Grubb, Rev. C. Williams, Lt.-Col. Phayre, Mr. E. A. Underhill, and Miss Woodman, who has been the means of doing a deeply interesting work at Ymuiden both among English and Dutch fishermen. The burden of these and other testimonies was to show that the need for such work is very great and pressing, and that God has been pleased very remarkably to bless the labours of the M.D.S.F. in the North Sea. Kindly and prayerful reference was also made to the doctor and two nurses voluntarily exiled for the winter to the icy regions of Labrador for the sake of Christ and of poor, suffering, ignorant, neglected fellow-men.

Blind in China.—Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming, Walton Lodge, Crief, N.B., writes: "This year it is necessary to make a special effort to raise an additional sum of £1700 for the purchase of better premises. Mr. Murray and his family are still living in the dilapidated old house which more than four years ago was pronounced unsafe, and moreover the present school premises allow no possibility of extension. A missionary lady has written to say that, although feeling the possibility of a permanent reduction of her small income to be a serious matter, she will guarantee £1000 of the whole cost, provided steps are at once taken to secure the balance of the money by Christmas, 1896. Letters recently received from influential men in North China, speak in the highest terms concerning this mission in all its branches, especially regarding Mr. Murray's application of Numeral Type for the use of illiterate-sighted persons."

The Power of Combination.

IN an excellent article in the N. Y. Evangelist Dr. T. L. Cuyler gathers up some lessons of the late Presidential campaign in the United States. He says:—

"The late exciting campaign has its spiritual suggestions for God's people. What an illustration it has afforded us of the power of organised effort! Men were ready to combine for political purposes; why should not Christians combine for the spread of Christ's kingdom? Tons of literature were circulated to educate the people in financial problems. Why not multiply books, and tracts and religious journals to disseminate the precious truths which elevate the poor, sweeten the homes and save the souls of our countrymen? A prodigious amount of personal effort has been put forth to make converts to one side or the other; letters have been written, calls have been made, and appeals have been addressed in order to win votes.

"Will not some of those who have been so zealous to win votes consent to be equally zealous to bring souls to Jesus Christ? The money spent in the recent campaign on meetings, speakers, papers, banners, and other political purposes counts up into the millions. We have no fault to find with that. What we do deplore is that the money should flow so readily at the call of a political committee, and yet come so slowly and scantily into the treasuries of benevolent and Christian societies.

"Fellow-soldiers for Jesus Christ, the great national campaign just closed is a mighty object-lesson for us. While it cheers us, it ought also to shame us that we do not devote our time, money, prayers, and personal influence more zealously to save our fellow-men from sin and hell. Patriotism is profitable for this life; the Gospel of Calvary reaches out into eternity. We condemn ourselves if we are more ready to work for our country than for our Master and the perishing souls of our fellow-immortals."

The Pastors' College.

ON Thursday evening, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the annual meeting in connection with this well-known College took place, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon (pastor of the Tabernacle and now president of the College) taking the chair. In the course of his introductory address, the chairman pointed out that, exclusive of fifty-five members still undergoing a course of study there, 955 had passed through the College, and about 750 past students were at present labouring either as pastors, foreign missionaries, or evangelists. During the past forty years upwards of 18,000 people had been baptized by men who had received their training in the Pastors' College. These were days of constant change and drift, but he, for his part, unhesitatingly subscribed to every article in the original creed of the College, and he was glad to do so in these days of creedless charity. Heresy in their colleges meant false doctrine in the churches, for the defilement of the fountain meant the pollution of the stream. Rev. Charles Spurgeon, the vice-president, Prof. Marchant, and other professors and tutors addressed the meeting, after which the President delivered a lecture, entitled "Pins and Needles."

French Israelites.—Friends of Israel will be thankful to know that a French Israelite and his wife and two of their children received Christian baptism after the morning service at 23, Rue Royale, Paris, on Sunday, November 15, Rev. S. H. Anderson, minister. Divine service is now held in the Conference Hall at half-past ten.

Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlaw finds much encouragement in his work among poor boys in Manchester. His latest Occasional Paper says:—"The family now consists of three schoolboys, resident with us; two boys boarded out, and learning trades; and one, an apprentice, living where he works. We can always make good use of cast-off clothing, and are specially glad of new shirts (flannelette), socks, and stockings." Two more boys have just been added. Mr. Kirlaw's committee emphasise the fact that in this undertaking nothing will be done to rival or overlap existing societies or institutions, the desire being to work harmoniously, and, if possible, in co-operation with all. The work has been carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Kirlaw for ten years at their own charges, but necessarily on a limited scale. It is to be continued now as a work of faith. Communications to them should be addressed Taxat Mount, Higher Broughton, Manchester

The Noon Prayer Meeting.

THE hour of prayer at Aldersgate-street seemed on Monday full of special interest, many evangelists and missionaries being mentioned before God. The brief opening address by Rev. P. J. MACLAGAN was very much to the point. After seven years' labour in China he has come home for rest, and his account of the work of the Presbyterian Missions in the Swatow district was compact and telling. The senior missionary, Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, landed in Swatow in 1860 and since then the progress has been decided and considerable. Then there were no converts, now there are 1900 native communicants. The means which have been mainly used are three, and the speaker mentioned them in what he believed to be the order of fruitfulness. First, evangelistic preaching in the various towns and villages. There are in the Swatow district unlimited opportunities for such work, and many have been won by this means. Second, medical missionary work. We have the largest missionary hospital in the heathen world, having some 2000 in-patients each year, or a total of about 5000 out and in-patients yearly—all of whom hear the Gospel. Third, and most fruitful of all, is the influence and testimony of the native Christians themselves among their own people. More than one-half of the converts were won in this way. For example, not long ago a young man, who had been in the hospital, asked baptism. We thought well to send him home first to see how he would stand the test. Some time after he came with two others, his father and cousin, won through his testimony, comparatively uninstructed as he was. After careful examination we baptized all three. It is but one example of many. The churches are being organised, and supporting, in many cases, their own ministers. Moreover, two native missionaries have been sent to the coast islands, hitherto largely unevangelised. The whole work is exceedingly encouraging, and has all the appearance of permanency and fruitfulness.

Miss Smith asked prayer for a proposed Strangers' Rest in Antwerp, where the need is very great. It is hoped to open, after the New Year, a place where sailors can read and write their letters, and where meetings can be held.

After these addresses mention was made of good meetings held last week by Rev. John Urquhart, in Reading, on the authenticity and all-sufficiency of the Scriptures.

For these and other evangelistic efforts much earnest prayer was made by various brethren.

Good Spirits and Bright Speeches characterised the occasion of the eighteenth anniversary of the Theatre Royal (Barnwell) Mission, Cambridge, on the 19th ult. This is the twenty-first year of the aggressive undenominational work, which, three years after its inauguration, took possession of the local theatre, and transformed it into a lighthouse from which the rays of the Gospel message shone out into the surrounding darkness. Let any who deem Christianity to be "a failure" visit the district now, and hear the testimony of those who knew it twenty years ago. True as ever is the declaration, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Addresses were given by the Vicar (Rev. J. Dixon), Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton, and other friends who have in the course of years been actively associated with the work. The superintendent is Mr. W. K. Vawser, The Cury, Cambridge.

West London Mission.—The overflow services in the Lower Hall in the St. James's Hall buildings have been very encouraging. This elegant hall accommodates from five to six hundred people, and has generally been crowded out after the large Hall upstairs has been filled. The services are conducted alternately by Rev. W. H. Tindall and Mr. H. Arthur Smith, barrister-at-law. In the large Hall, the number of strangers is more conspicuous than ever. During the last month there has been a marked increase in the number of men who have publicly responded to the appeal in the second service. The work among young men has gone on of late so successfully that at the recently-formed Sunday morning class there is now a regular attendance of more than thirty. Three-fourths of these young men are the fruit of quite recent success.

The Y.M.C.A.

AT Hastings there has recently been a considerable accession of new members.

At Worthing the work has been resuscitated, and the members are looking forward to entering eligible premises in January.

A meeting of the members of the Sydenham Association was held on Monday week, when Mr. W. Hind Smith delivered an address.

On Tuesday a meeting was held in the Town Hall Buildings, North Shields, for the purpose of establishing a Young Men's Christian Association in the town.

On Wednesday a reception was given in the rooms of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. new building, by the president, Mr. Arthur Backhouse, when over 300 members accepted the invitation.

The report of Shaftesbury House, Margate, shows that the Home has been largely used by young men, and has been helpful to many. The Sunday meetings in the "Hall by the Sea" have also been the means of attracting good audiences.

A social gathering of the members of the Eastbourne Association was held on Wednesday evening, when part was taken in the proceedings by Mr. Thomas Woods, Mr. J. Steingle, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The Eastbourne Association has three members in the mission field, one of whom has formed an Association on the Congo, at Bongandanga.

The committee of the Dublin Association have recently purchased the headquarters of the Irish National League, Sackville-street. The members of the Association, when canvassed, it is anticipated, are good for £1000, and an appeal is being issued for the balance, £4000, to redeem the head rent, make the necessary alterations, fitting up a gymnasium, and furnishing. The weekly meetings of the Association are well maintained, and many young men are professing to accept the Saviour.—WM. A. BOYD, General Sec.

Membership campaigns have proved a capital means of adding to Association roll books. In addition to those recently mentioned, Trowbridge has nearly doubled its membership in a month, adding 134. To commemorate this, the president, Mr. J. Poynton Haden, entertained the whole of the members in the Town Hall, on the 4th inst., this being the largest gathering of young men ever held in the town. The rector, Rev. A. C. D. Ryder, and Rev. A. J. Pearse (Congregational) gave addresses.

The secretary of the Lincoln Association, Mr. G. W. Rankin, has commenced a department of work that promises very useful and important results. One morning each week, in the name of the Y.M.C.A., he visits a large foundry in the breakfast hour, when an audience of 500 men is gathered together. On each visit he is accompanied by a clergyman or minister from one of the churches in the city, who delivers a brief address, which has been received with evident attention and appreciation. All the Evangelical churches of the city, as well as the Y.M.C.A., will be represented in this effort.

The autumn Conference of Associations in the West and North-West Metropolitan district took place at the district centre, Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, Edgware-road, on Tuesday, the 24th ult. Representatives were present from Paddington, Westbourne Grove, Brompton, Fulham, Kilburn, Hammersmith, Ealing, and Hendon. The chair was occupied by Dr. Parker Young, and a valuable discussion took place as to means for strengthening the work of the weaker branches, while the reports submitted showed that vigorous efforts for reaching and helping young men were being put forth throughout the district.

The thirtieth anniversary of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A. was observed Nov. 12. There were instructive addresses from the secretaries of the different departments of the committee's work—both at home and abroad. Mr. L. D. Wishard told of labours in foreign lands, for the young men of China, Japan and India. Cephas Brainerd, Wm. E. Dodge, Morris K. Jessup, W. G. Sellew, and Secretaries Morse and McBurney, also made telling points in support of the Y.M.C.A. Its most ardent admirer could not have asked for better testimonials than fell from the lips of these business men. The last speaker was Gen. Bever, ex-Governor of Pennsylvania, who gave a rousing speech, in which he testified to his interest in Y.M.C.A. since 1869.

One Sabbath evening the workers of the Saltcoats Y.M.C.A. were holding their customary open-air meeting on the beach, and the conductor asked a minister who was among the audience to come forward and address them. The request was cheerfully complied with, and the preacher proclaimed "the old, old story" to the listening crowd, and stated that fifteen years ago a band of workers from the Saltcoats Y.M.C.A. had conducted an open-air meeting in the neighbouring town of Dalry. At that meeting he was a listener, and the Word there spoken had been the means, by God's blessing, of leading him to seek salvation. He felt it, therefore, a special privilege that now, as a minister of the Gospel, he had the opportunity of saying a word for Christ under the auspices of the Association. They had cast their bread upon the waters, and it was now returned to them after many days.

The Hon. John Wanamaker, ex-Postmaster-General of the United States, has undertaken the entire cost of a building, 30,000 dollars, for the Y.M.C.A. in Madras. By the liberality of friends in England and America one of the best sites in the city had been previously secured; and this handsome gift will permit the completion of a project that is full of promise on behalf of the young men in and around this important centre. The Bombay Association is doing a splendid work under the direction of Mr. R. D. Pringle, from England. Calcutta is going forward with a large building enterprise for which funds have been contributed both in this country and in America, and the whole outlook for the Y.M.C.A. in India is very hopeful indeed. By the end of this year there will be in India and Ceylon no fewer than nine (including two native) paid agents, giving their whole time and strength to the promotion of Y.M.C.A. work.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE opening meeting of the Newcastle branch was held on the 19th ult.

The Highbury Branch of the Y.W.C.A. held a successful sale of work last week, in Christ Church room, Leigh-road, N.

A successful mission was lately held in the Penge Branch of the Y.W.C.A., 61, Beckenham-road, by Miss Paey. Much blessing attended the meetings, which were crowded both afternoon and evening.

A special address on "The Holy Spirit" will be given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe to the students at the Preparation Home, 14, Finsbury-square, on Tuesday, December 8, at 10 a.m. Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers are invited.

On Tuesday, December 8, and Wednesday, the 9th, the annual sale will take place at the Central Institute, George-street. In connection with the sale there will be an "At Home" by invitation of the Misses Kinnaird, and an inspection of the new headquarters.

The total membership at the Central Institute, 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square, is 820, 514 being associates and 306 prayer union members. The total abstainers number 570. Members joined October, 1895, to October, 1896, 300. The "Monthly Record" for December is bright with a varied programme of meetings, classes, etc.

The annual public meeting of the Southport Y.W.C.A. was held on the 18th ult. Miss Irving presided, and Miss Swift reviewed the work of the Association, which is now free from debt. Addresses were given by three ladies in native costume representing mission workers in Africa, China, and India. Mrs. Theo. Walker, of Leicester, also gave a helpful address.

Dr. Guinness Rogers' Church.

CLAPHAM Congregational Church, of which Dr. Guinness Rogers is pastor, is celebrating its 250th anniversary. Founded in 1645, the year when the decisive battle of the Civil War was won by the Parliamentarians at Naseby, and when the Independents, of whom Cromwell was the chief, secured the passing of the self-denying ordinance, the church was then far from London, three or four miles of country road separating it from the outskirts of Southwark. Dr. Guinness Rogers, who has been the pastor for thirty-one years, devoted his Sunday morning sermon to a review of the history of the church, and closed thus:—"The history of a church like this of Clapham yielded little material for reporters—sensational incidents, with startling headings. It was a record of patient faith, humble devotion, quiet love, Christian unity, mercy, and grace, the full extent of which man could never know. It was a history recorded on high. They could but conceive it and thank God that He had kept alive the fire of his love, and had given them the message of his grace, that they might tell it to generations yet to follow. Having shared with this church more than thirty years of toil, anxiety, hope, and great service, Dr. Rogers repeated, with more emphasis and earnestness than he ever commanded at any previous period, that the inspiration, the strength, the very life of the church was not a particular system of theology, not a formulated and not a perfect service, but the living Christ, not theorised about, not materialised into a sacrament, not formalised until the word becomes icy, but Christ, the hope of glory."

Christian Endeavour.

THE societies connected with the C.E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland now number 4023.

The West London C.E. and Union has now thirty-one societies with 1450 members. The president for the year is Rev. E. C. Gange.

A Boston C.E. Society recently sent out several members by twos to visit the various city missions. Their report on returning made an interesting meeting, and inspired the society to undertake practical home mission work.

Some time ago a Mexican convict was converted through the efforts of the Zacatecas Christian Endeavour Society. Later, together with his wife, he travelled a long distance to attend the National C.E., and upon his return home organised a society.

Two English merchantmen recently stopping in San Diego harbour were visited systematically by the local Endeavourers, with the result that before the ships left port an officer on each, and nineteen men on one, and twelve on the other, had confessed Christ. A prayer circle was formed on each ship.

The town of Alvin, Tex., with less than 2000 population, has four young people's and three junior societies. With six churches and seven societies all working together, it is not to be marvelled at that an evangelist led one hundred persons into the churches a short time ago.

After an address on "Evangelistic Effort," by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., before the Philadelphia C.E. Union, on a recent Monday evening, four young women employed in the same establishment went home and organised a noon prayer-meeting among their workfellows. Three of their companions were converted before Thursday night.

The first anniversary of the Praed-street Y.P.S.C.E. was held lately, Rev. James Briggs, president, occupying the chair. The meeting was addressed by Revs. John Heap, J. C. Carlile, Messrs. William Carter and J. K. Prettejohn. The report shows that the present membership of the society is fifty-five all told. Many members have also joined the church.

University Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

An interesting lecture has been delivered by Rev. C. J. Casher, M.A., on "Palestine lost and regained." He said that before the Jews could return four things were necessary, none of which were in sight in 1800, but now seemed on the eve of fulfilment; the awakening of the national spirit, the break up of the Turkish Empire, a movement towards Palestine on the part of the Jews themselves, and that Palestine should be ready to receive them. He showed that large numbers are returning, even the climate is changing, and the rainfall becoming more abundant.

Rev. Charles Stirling has been lecturing here on "The Jesuits: their origin, principles, acts, and aims," for "the exposure of the Jesuit conspiracy against England." He believes the times are momentous and that we may be on the eve of a great struggle.

A meeting has been held on behalf of the ladies' branch of the Oxford House in Bethnal Green. Miss Harrington and Miss Portall spoke of the useful work that is being done, and Rev. Winnington Ingram gave an account of the struggle for existence, the class suspicion, and the monotony of life they had to contend with.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Friday, November 27, Rev. H. E. Fox, of the C.M.S., addressed the members of the C.M.U. in the Henry Martyn Hall. He spoke generally on the work of the society, and quoted painfully self-condemning statistics of the various means of expenditure of the taxable income of this country. He also described the intention and asked our prayers on behalf of the "Three Years' Enterprise."

On Sunday, the University Sermon was preached by Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe. It contained a most stirring appeal for personal consecration to the work of foreign missions, more especially amongst university men and highly commended the brilliant work of evangelisation carried on by the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.

A Manchester newspaper declares that all kinds of inducements are held out to purchasers of drink on the Sunday. Oranges, cakes and sweets are furnished to children who fetch liquor; cigars and free beer given to adults.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT is proposed to hold a Convention for "the Deepening of Spiritual Life" in London on April 6-10 of next year. Many of the best known speakers at Keswick have promised to take part. Further particulars will be given in a later issue.

The reports of the sorrows of Armenia have touched the hearts of many of our readers; and now a terrible Indian famine is exciting the sympathy of those who feel for others' woes. Sums of £50 and £100, which friends have placed in our hands, have been cabled out, for administration in the affected centres; and as Christian people dispense their seasonable bounty they will doubtless remember India and Armenia as well as the many home needs. In regard to the cry of Armenia our readers have done nobly; we have received and forwarded to various workers among the hunted and desolate remnant sums amounting in the aggregate to £2823. It is interesting to notice in this connection that Dr. Barnardo and Mr. Quarrier are offering to take some of the thousands of Armenian orphans into their beneficent Homes.

We cannot but express our profound regret that a dispute should have arisen between the London and North-Western Railway Company and their employés. The people of this country are intensely interested in harmonious relations being maintained between the directors and servants of the railway companies, upon the enterprise and labour of whom our convenience and safety in travelling depend.

If from no higher motive than to command public confidence, we should have thought that this great Company would see its responsibility for fair, not to say generous, treatment of its employés, who by their loyalty and general efficiency, sobriety and attention, contribute so largely to the prosperity of the Company and its credit in the country. There are higher considerations: God is on the side of the labourer who is oppressed by his employer, and any tyrannical conduct must recoil upon the company which ignores this great truth.

The deaths from cold and exposure which have already taken place bring home to us in a striking way the sorrows of the poor, and remind us that we owe a duty to them. All such deaths are due more or less to starvation, and the police and coroners' courts have heard some pitiful tales within the last fortnight. The poor are always with us, and whensoever we will we may do them service. For the sake of the Saviour we are bound to do it.

The extension of the gambling craze among respectable young men is becoming a solemn and pressing question. Almost daily we hear of cases involving embezzlement, discovery, and ruin. Country lads coming up into our large towns are caught by designing sharks, and quickly entangled in debt, after which threats of exposure force them to misappropriate money belonging to others, in the vain hope of being able to repay it before they are found out. As the following extract from a newspaper shows, the popular sweepstakes so often resorted to once a year in big establishments, is a frequent first step in the formation of the habit.

Sweepstake—Betting—Prison—A young man, manager of a shop, was sent to gaol for six weeks yesterday for having embezzled his employer's money. It was stated that the defalcations amounted to £120, which the prisoner had spent in betting. Some money won in a shilling sweepstakes a year ago was the beginning of his betting career.

This case is only one out of hundreds like it. One of the most insidious features of this vice is the difficulty of persuading the victims that there is anything essentially wrong in a mere isolated act of gambling. Another is the impunity with which it can be carried on without any outward sign of its existence. Intemperance stamps its hall-mark on the countenance, impurity speedily undermines the constitution, opium-smoking ruins the nerves and makes steady work impossible; there are physical limits in all these cases to indulgence. But gambling is a mental vice, and its indulgence often leaves no mark, and betrays no sign, till the whole fabric of life topples suddenly into hopeless and irremediable ruin. Young men should be warned of this, and encouraged to look to the end from the beginning. Those who are made to see the end clearly will not readily take the first step.

Lord Wolseley's panegyric of war, at the Edinburgh Philosophical Society last week, was not pleasant reading to any true lover of peace; and his illustration of the benefits of military training drawn from the compulsory system in Italy was peculiarly unfortunate. As a matter of fact, almost the whole benefit of the great Italian revolution of thirty years ago has been neutralised to that people by the horrible burden of national debt resulting from the passion for military place among European nations. If anyone would know the effect of this gigantic blunder, let him read Mr. Marion Crawford's description of the Italian peasantry in his new book, "Taqisara," where a graphic picture is drawn of their grinding poverty and despairing misery. This is the saddest aspect of modern militarism, that it threatens to make its burden felt in peace as well as war. It cripples national resources; it drains the best blood of the people from the paths of industry; it diverts vast wealth into channels that are unremunerative; it breeds irritations and jealousies among neighbouring lands. And all for what?

The annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education contains some points which are of interest beyond the limits of that country. Thus, the friends of the Negro will be glad to know that nearly a million and a-half of coloured children are being taught in the common schools; no fewer than 26,570 Negroes are engaged as teachers. The coloured people are also admitted to the benefits of the higher education; and much is done in the way of giving them a technical training. "Child-study" is being carried forward with great ardour, trained experts are investigating the problems of child-life, and schoolmasters are aiding them with observations.

An important memorandum has been sent home by seventy missionaries in the neighbourhood of Foochow, in China, to their respective boards at home, pointing out that a conspicuous example of disinterestedness has been shown by no compensation having been sought for the massacres of missionaries in August, 1895. Now, in answer to prayer, there is a widespread and general movement towards Christianity among all classes of the population and in all parts of the province, hundreds having joined the local churches, a fact which has aroused the authorities, and brought more persecution. Thus, the struggle between good and evil goes on without ceasing, the persecutions of the bad evoking the prayers and sacrifices of the good, and the Kingdom comes in amid tribulation. But it comes nevertheless.

In Madagascar not a few of the pastors, evangelists, and prominent members of the churches, have died for the sake of Jesus. The list of martyrs will probably be a long one, says Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson. The time is one of cleansing, and may prove more useful to the churches than the years of peace and security that came to an end with the French invasion. While the heads of the Government are anxious to do what is just and right, and have repeated the proclamation of liberty of worship, the Jesuits are forcing their way in every direction, in some cases seizing chapels which had been built by the money of the congregations worshipping in them. The central authorities have not permitted this action, and in more than one case where the evidence was strongly in favour of the ownership of the congregation, the chapel has been handed back to them. Still, the priests mean to capture the island for the Pope, if they can. Our brethren should be remembered in our prayers.

Mr. G. F. Trench, in his very valuable letter (p. 21) on "The Prayer of Prayers," has found parallels to its principle of forgiveness in several of the Epistles. It will be an interesting and profitable study to search out, in the Epistles, parallel passages to each precept in the Sermon on the Mount. The seed of every thought in the Epistles is, we believe, to be found in the Gospels, and the fruit of every such seed is to be found in the Epistles.

It is worthy of note that while we have men, connected with bodies traditionally evangelical, setting up the teachings of Jesus against those of Paul, we have, on the other hand, those who claim to be ultra-evangelical setting up the teachings of Paul against those of Jesus. In the name of dispensational truth, the words of Christ are practically declared to be not Christian doctrine, but Jewish. Did not Jesus practise the principles of the Sermon on the Mount? And did He not leave us an example that we should follow in his steps?

"In praise of good mothers," might be written on the title-page of many a noble book. Mr. Barrie's new book, "Margaret Ogilvy" (5s. Hodder & Stoughton), in praise of his wise, loving, self-forgetting mother, will awaken the tenderest feelings of hosts of men and women in every rank of life. Home is, of course, the mother's kingdom, and her loving service is rendered there without ever a thought of it coming under the public eye; it has no temptation to show or display; it springs spontaneously from love, and seeks none of the rewards of this world. For that very reason it is pure and healthy. Its value lies in its transmitted influence, in the sons and daughters it makes, in the noble characters it builds up. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit." Hannah lived in Samuel, and Eunice in Timothy. All good mothers repeat themselves in their children, but it is not every good mother who has a son who can write a book, to say anything for her. Her record is on high.

The critical moments in our life do not come "with observation." Many people who have been fed on unhealthy romances, in which the story is worked up with elaborate dramatic effects, think that the turning-points in their experience will arrive with a blare of trumpets, and that heaven and earth will look on while they make the great choice. That is seldom the case. The hours when human destiny takes its final course are outwardly just like other hours; there is nothing to mark them out as specially significant, except the inner work of conscience, the knowledge of some alteration of duty put before the will, the call to some service which may or may not be accepted. The Saviour's command "Follow Me" came to one while sitting at the seat of custom, to others while mending their nets, to another while sitting beside a well, to another while walking along the road; and it is so still. Here is a call to watchfulness and prayer.

In speaking of religious restlessness and its cure, Rev. W. Hardy Harwood lately reminded his hearers that churches are apt in these days to count success, and to seek the advantages which the possession of truth brings, by means that may easily cause the greater end to be overlooked. Popular attractions, as he justly remarked, may not tend towards the cultivation of the fruits of the Spirit, and the upbuilding of Christian character. The only dependence of a church should be upon the Word and Spirit of God; whatsoever is other than that cometh of evil, and to evil it will inevitably tend. The difficulty and danger is always among the brethren who are carnal, and cannot see that the Spirit may be grieved and the Saviour dishonoured by the adoption of certain means which are essentially worldly. Those who see deeply into the nature of things must lovingly point out the more excellent way, and prayerfully follow it themselves.

The question of plagiarism is ever with us, and the problem is ever becoming more perplexing—when does a preacher's indebtedness to an author call for open acknowledgment? The speaker who is always quoting and referring to the names of writers lays himself open to a charge of pedantry; and yet, if he uses the product of another man's mind, bodily, or even largely, without stating his obligation, he gains a false reputation. The happy mean is so to assimilate what we read and hear, that when it comes forth it shall bear our own impress and personality. The true writer freely gives his thoughts to the world. The true reader accepts all that comes, and uses it for his own purpose. The true preacher always passes through the fire of his own thought and prayer the materials he thus receives from others. Truth must be individualised to make it magnetic, and this power to individualise is what gives a preacher his vocation. This is another way of saying he must speak from his heart.

Paul uses a bold and striking simile in the words, "having slain the enmity." The figure suggested is that the alienation between God and man had become so great and deep that it might be symbolised as a third person, bitter and implacable, whose purpose was to keep the Holy Father and his sinful child apart; and that Jesus by his incarnation and sacrificial death slew this monster of malignity, and opened the way to a reconciliation. Love has often been pictured as slain by hate: here hate is put to the sword by love. This "warrior love" of Christ, going forth into the world to sweep out of existence all manner of tyrannical and despotic hatreds, is a conception worthy of devout study. It represents a great truth, and it symbolises a great final victory—when everything that divides between man and man and man and God shall be smitten to death, and love be all in all.

As a practical outcome of the protests uttered in these columns against the fashionable use of "aigrettes," on account of the barbarous cruelties perpetrated to obtain them, we are gratified to receive the following from a partner in a large and important house of business:—

Through the references in THE CHRISTIAN I obtained additional information bearing on the subject of the killing of birds for "aigrette" feathers. The result is that we now do not sell this particular kind of feather. We keep a supply of leaflets in the department, requesting any customer who may be inquiring for "aigrettes" to accept one, which will explain the reason they are not kept in stock. We have already in this way distributed quite a number.

This well illustrates the practicability of Christian integrity in commercial life. Leaflets, giving further information respecting the cruelties referred to, may be had from the Society for the Protection of Birds, 326, High Holborn, W.C. (1s. per 100.)

The demand made by Mr. Malcolm Morris in his article in The Nineteenth Century on "The Superfluous Vaccination Commission," for the settlement of such questions as small-pox to be left to the medical profession, "which is alone competent to judge in the matter," is one of very serious import. It is made for other things than vaccination. We have heard it for the treatment of diseases which spring only from immorality. But we cannot comply with it. A medical tyranny would be as intolerable and demoralising as that of the soldier or the priest. For the sake of a noble profession we trust that it will not be heard of any more. To press it will be sure to excite suspicion and resistance, and the suspicion will spread to everything that medical men do. Trust the public if you want the public to trust you, is a principle on which all should act.

A Preacher's Duty is not alone to tell the truth, but to make the truth tell.—Lynch.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

THE FIVE TESTS.

WITH reference to the announcements already made in our columns of
LANGUAGES MADE EASY,

We may say that Students, Preachers of the Gospel, Missionaries, and Literary men of all classes have testified to the immense benefit derived from Mr. Kilburn's system. While the Lessons will have special reference to the acquisition of Languages, the principles of this new System of Mnemonics are applicable to all other branches of study. We therefore have confidence in commending it to all who have a considerable amount of mental work to perform, enabling them to do with ease what otherwise would be achieved with considerable difficulty.

There are five tests which ought to be applied to every system. We propose to answer the following questions with reference to Mr. Kilburn's system for the acquisition of languages, by quotations from the Press and from personal testimonies:—

1. What has the author himself been able to do by it? Referring to a lecture delivered in St. Petersburg, The British Weekly, of March 26, 1896, says:—

Mr. Kilburn has elaborated a system of Mnemonics which those who know other systems declare to be the simplest and most effective that has yet been discovered; and during the lecture Mr. Kilburn gave remarkable illustrations of the results which can be achieved by his methods. A request made by one of the audience that the lecturer should form a class in St. Petersburg was loudly applauded.

2. Have others been able to use it?

The Rev. Walter Jones, M.A., Rector of Wendy, writes:—

The few minutes' conversational instruction I had from you have been of far more practical use to me than as many laborious hours spent on another system.

3. Is it fanciful and complex, or natural and philosophical?

A German preacher writes:—

The Rev. J. D. Kilburn's Memory Lessons are founded on the truest principles of Mental Philosophy. Almost every one can do through them what hardly anyone can do without them. The ease with which they can be learned is as remarkable as the results that can be accomplished by them.

4. Is there likely to be more difficulty in learning it, than benefit derived from using it?

A pastor in Norway writes:—

I and several of my friends have studied Rev. J. D. Kilburn's "System of Memory," and have derived most valuable help from it. It can be learnt with ease, and makes many things which were before a task to become a pleasure.

5. Is it injurious or helpful to the mind as a whole?

The Journal de St. Pétersbourg, Feb. 29, 1896, says:—

His system applies perfectly to the study of languages and sciences, as a very large number of those who have tried the system testify. On this subject one writes: "These testimonies, coming from different classes of society, show that the new system of Mnemonics cannot only change the memory, but also influence for good the lives of all who study and practise it."

We would again express the hope that our readers will co-operate with us in making known these Lessons, which will be commenced in THE CHRISTIAN for January 7. Our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, will be pleased to forward leaflets giving full particulars, for circulation amongst those who are likely to derive benefit from this course of Lessons on Memory Training.

Pastoral Work.

By REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

ONE of the unanswerable arguments for thorough pastoral visitation is that it brings a minister within arm's length of his parishioners. He needs this personal contact for his own benefit. A good library is a good thing, but there is a great difference between a lifeless book on your shelf and the vitalising and fertilising study of a book in boots, for every life is a biography. You and I are helping to make these biographies. Our sermons are addressed to everybody; a conversation is addressed to a single soul. "Thou art the man," is the meaning of every loving appeal, every kind rebuke, and every personal invitation. A man may dodge a sermon; he cannot dodge a personal conversation conducted in the right spirit. A faithful sermon ought to set your people to thinking. In one mind it may suggest difficulties, and when that person meets you he may wish to have the difficulty explained; the door is thus opened for you to remove an obstacle, or to press home a needed truth. In another mind your sermon may have awakened a conviction of sin. That impression may fade away, or it may be deepened if it is followed up by a personal interview. Much of many a pastor's best work has been done in an "inquiry meeting"; but even when no such method is used, there should be opportunities for every pastor to find out who is an "anxious inquirer."

You ought to have a fixed time in every week when persons can call on you, and even if anyone breaks into your study during your morning hours for spiritual direction, you ought to give him the right of way. The man that wants you is

THE MAN THAT YOU WANT.

It is found an excellent method also to request your congregation to send a request to you if they desire an interview in their own homes. Remember how cordially the Master met everyone who came to him for light or for healing, and what a long journey He took in order to bring relief to one poor woman in the coasts of Canaan. In dealing with awakened souls nothing can take the place of personal contact. To reach all such from the pulpit only is almost as absurd as it would be for a physician to read his prescriptions from a desk in a hospital instead of going from one bed to another to feel each pulse and to examine each fever-coated tongue.

No pastor worthy of the name needs to be reminded how strong are the claims on him of the Lord's "shut-ins," whose faces are not seen in the sanctuary. Whomsoever you neglect, never neglect the sick—especially those who are in the by-lanes of poverty. There is no more Christlike work than that, and none that will grip your people to you more strongly. The hours you spend in the ministrations of comfort to the sick and the sorrowing will often subject your nerves and your sympathetic sensibilities to a severe strain. If it be a trial to visit and sympathise with those who are under sore trials, don't shirk the duty. There is not enough cheering and tonic preaching in most of our pulpits; for there are scores who come to church every Sabbath with aching hearts and need the balm and the oil; others get so run down spiritually that they require a fresh infusion of iron in the blood. Good as this work of binding bruised hearts may be in the pulpit, it is vastly more effective when you come close to the individual sufferer and let him feel the throb of your own heart next to his. What your people want is the ministry of sympathy; and the sufferers in brown stone mansions often need it as truly as those who live in dingy attics, for there are wretched rich as well as wretched poor.

Papers on Missions.—4.

THE BODY IS ONE.

"FOR as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ." "If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?" "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor, again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you." "There should be no schism in the body; but the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Cor. xii. 12, 15, 16, 21, 25-27.

The body, then, is God's pattern for the Church. The verses just quoted contain Paul's application of this fact to the subject of ministering. The work of one is the work of all; the sorrows and failures, the joys and triumphs of one are to be shared by all. No one can isolate himself from the rest of the body. In the Church of Jesus Christ there is no such thing as independence, in the sense of isolation, splendid or otherwise. All are mutually dependent.

In missionary enterprise this fact may be overlooked in two ways, both telling injuriously upon the work.

1. The churches at home may forget their oneness with the brethren in the field. Once a month the few who gather at the Monthly Prayer Meeting remember them, and once a year the interest of the whole congregation may be awakened. But except on these occasions the subject does not often engage their thought and attention. Daily interest and prayer, accompanied by daily gifts on behalf of their brethren, these seem to present an impossible ideal. Yet in the same prayer in which we are taught to ask for daily bread, we are taught also to say, "Thy [kingdom] come; Thy will be done on earth." Every day our brethren are down exploring the mine; every day it is ours to hold the ropes.

Criticism as to the results of missionary work is not wise, unless we begin by criticising the missionary efforts of the churches at home. "The body is one." Meagre results in India or China may be explained by coldness or prayerlessness in our own churches. In a speech in Exeter Hall, in 1883, James Gilmour said, "We are your agents; and I believe fervently that we shall have results there in direct proportion to the measure of your earnestness here. Unprayed for, I feel very much as if a diver were sent down to the bottom of a river with no air to breathe; or as if a fireman were sent up to a blazing building and held an empty hose; or as a soldier who is firing blank cartridges at an enemy."

The condition of the churches of this country during the long period in which missionary work was practically neglected, and the revival at home, which has always kept pace with revived interest in work abroad, are sufficient to prove that God means the oneness of the Church to be recognised. Missionaries are our messengers. To withhold sympathy, prayer, support, is not only to wrong them, but to injure ourselves. "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." The one Spirit unites each member to the rest, and all the members to their Lord. The missionary is a part of ourselves. We need him as he needs us.

2. On the other hand, the missionary, by the very methods on which he goes forth, may ignore the oneness of the body. To their honour be it said that there are many heroic souls who have forsaken all to go into unknown lands, and among hostile people, with no hope of support, except from God Himself. True successors of Abraham are they; and the God of Abraham has not failed them.

But is their method right? Is it according to God? When it was determined to begin mission work among the savage people of Quaboe, on the West Coast of Africa, two young men in Harley House volunteered. The difficulties and perils of the work were laid before them; and among other things they were told that "no society would send them out, and no support of any kind would be guaranteed." Yet they went, and counted it a privilege to go. After a few years' experience, however, this principle of "splendid isolation" is thus referred to:—"The self-support at first attempted was found impracticable." This is not surprising. God does not mean one member of the body of Christ to do his work without dependence on the rest. There must be "no schism in the body"; "the members should have the same care one for another." We may not alter God's pattern. The privations and trials and perils of a missionary are ours, as truly as they are his. The call to self-denial in his work applies to us, as surely as to him. To let him go without bearing our share of the burden of his support is not to fulfil the law of Christ.

Missionaries are not only "the messengers of the churches": they are "the glory of Christ." To care for and maintain them should be the first duty of a church; and the money needed for their support should be the first charge upon the income of our missionary societies. For a missionary to be invalided is a more serious loss to the Church than for a home worker to fall. Here the gaps are soon filled; but who can fill the place of the solitary worker in some dangerous mission field? And when a missionary falls—as he sometimes does—because his allowance does not enable him to procure what is needful for his comfort and support, the reason cannot be that God has failed him, but that the Christians at home have been remiss in their duty.

As a remedy for this, we suggest the more practical recognition of the oneness of the body. The missionary cannot say to the Christians at home, nor they to the missionary abroad, "I have no need of you." Distance does not destroy the living bond which binds one member to the rest. We venture to express our conviction that the recognition of this as God's pattern would keep every missionary free from care as to his support, and would speedily equip and send forth others for the evangelisation of the world.

Attention to Bible-reading.—If you want to be strong Christian people, hide the Bible in your heart. You make a tremendous mistake, for your own soul's sake, if your religious reading consists in what people have said and thought about Scripture more than in the Scripture itself. Why should you dip your cans into the reservoir, when you can take them up to where the spring comes gushing out of the hillside, pure, and limpid, and living?—Dr. Maclaren.

Ourselves and our Neighbours.

THOUGHTS ON GOSSIP.

"AUDI alteram partem" is an old classic proverb, or wise saw, of which few educated men are ignorant. But of the many who know it, it is to be greatly feared a large proportion either overlook, or wilfully ignore and set aside, the important principle which it involves, and the lessons which it is so well calculated to impart.

And this, if the matter be but carefully thought over, is to our great loss, whether it be in business or social daily intercourse. Very freely translated into the ordinary terms of modern conversation, the classic saw may be read by one thus: "Yes, I shall wait until I hear what is to be said by the other party before I decide finally upon the point thus brought before me. Certainly, before I conclude to believe this piece of idle gossip which is bad enough, or as it may be this ill-natured scandal which is worse, as it is calculated to give some one pain or to injure his fair fame and good name, I shall hear or try for my own sake, if not for that of others, to find out what is to be said on the other side or by the party scandalized or maligned. In a matter like this I must not listen to, or be influenced by, one side only."

If I turn to my own experience, which, if it be not worth much, has at least been long and varied enough in its characteristics, this much I can say. I have come across cases not a few, some of them very pitiful in their issues, where, had the counsel involved in the old saying been followed, a world of wearying worry, of business strife, and of domestic quarrels would have been escaped from. It is, then, a good thing not to be hasty in one's decision. It is good and wise, and in strict accordance with Christian kindness to be sure, quite certain, as to the truth of statements made to you.

If it be not always true that "there is a soul of good in things evil," fortunately for the best interests and the safety of society this often happens. A purpose of evil intent, some vile scheme designed to give pain, or cause trouble, or bring about pecuniary or business losses (which, if not irremediable, give worry enough, and are most difficult to deal with), can often be foiled or largely deprived of their mischief-making powers by a weapon which the traducer himself brings to your help if you are wise enough to avail yourself of it. It is as easily used as it is powerful in its use.

For instance, one who professes to be your friend comes to you some fine morning when your mind is quietly thankful. He indulges in strong protestations of his friendly feelings; he is truly sorry to give you uneasiness, but he felt it to be his duty in order that you may be on your guard. So on and so on, using one or other, or all of the formidable formulæ so much in vogue by the class here indicated. If you are wise, as soon as he has concluded his tale of woe, let him know, in your firmest tones, the full purport of which cannot be mistaken that this is far too serious a matter to be passed over; that it concerns not so much yourself as that of your friend "whose good name is at stake." Tell the kind and candid neighbour who has come playing the scavenger's part, raking amidst the garbage of society, that this must not be; that you shall take good care to know what your friend has to say for himself.

As likely as not, the agitated reply will be: "Oh, no! you must not do that; I am no peace-breaker. Besides, he told it me all in the strictest confidence" (you may here quietly give him a suggestive hint by interpolating, "which you have already broken"). "Oh, no! I beg of you not to do that." In all this the cloven foot of the evil spirit of slander and mischief-making is shown at once. There are some who have such an inherent love of evil speaking and doing, such an awfully perverted tendency to gain pleasure to themselves by giving pain to others, that they positively invent evil tales of others that they may have a chance of stabbing you through them. An old friend at my elbow whispers to me that the wisest of all ways of dealing with such people is on the principle that the "receiver is as bad as the thief," "do not listen to their tale-telling." The next best way to deal with them is to assure them that you shall take good care to trace their scandal up to its source. That style of dealing with them possesses also this secondary yet great advantage that you will not be troubled with the same traducer again. Such vile pests of society are wise enough in their day and generation. They know to whom they can go often with their evil tales. R. SCOTT BURN, C.E.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission used to be known as the "supper to thieves," now it is the supper to men and boys, who have in the past gone wrong, but who certainly look now as if they could be trusted, and who are, as a matter of fact, trusted by their employers, having been rescued from sin through the labours of the Mission. To look round on the fine young fellows who filled the centre of the Mission Chapel in Little Wild-street, on Tuesday week, was to find a sufficient answer to the question, Is it any use trying to save criminals?

But to the meeting itself. Sir JOSEPH RENALS, an old friend of the Mission, was to have presided, but indisposition prevented him, and in his place Mr. F. A. BEVAN took the chair. His opening statement embodied admirably the spirit and modus operandi of the work.

We have had, he said, twenty years of close contact with prison work, and our experience convinces us that nothing is so effectual for the uplifting of the weak and degraded as the power of Christian example and precept. You may help a man again and again from without, and your help will be non-effective until there comes a time when the man is helped from within—when his higher nature, long dormant, is aroused, and he resolves, God helping him, that honesty and purity shall be the rule of his life for the future. "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel," might be "writ large" across the lives of many who come under our notice. Splendid chances in life weakly wasted, temptations weakly yielded to, and educational advantages used for criminal purposes, characterise their careers. To deal with such effectually large experience is needed, and no effort to rouse in them a spirit of "self-help" and true manliness is to be spared.

Turning to our rescue-preventive work among lads, we say that there is living proof this evening that such efforts have not been in vain. Many of the lads present will to-night receive rewards for honesty and industry, and this is not entirely upon our decision, but largely upon the recommendation of those gentlemen who have been good enough to employ them. The change is greater than may at first appear. There was a time when their influence showed every sign of becoming increasingly evil. Now the influence of many of them is becoming increasingly good. We could easily have filled this building from floor to ceiling with wretchedly-clad, shivering men and boys. We think it much better, however, to confront you with bright, happy faces, and show you what can be done, and what is being done, with and for those who once stood in grave moral danger.

We could just as easily have placed before you a company of women and children belonging to that truly pitiable class—the wives and children of prisoners. The State deals with the prisoner, and while it punishes him also feeds and clothes him. The wives and children, though innocent, are punished—often more than the men. Who will feed and clothe them? Now, every year this Mission assists several hundreds such families while the man is in prison, and helps him to find employment on his liberation.

Then there are those men who, on account of the gravity of their crimes, have been sentenced to penal servitude. Many of these are to-day in positions of trust and honourable employment, who when they were released came to us with little beside their "ticket-of-leave."

But it is not only prison work which engages our attention. This building is the centre of continuous work amongst the poor of this district, to whom the winter months bring much privation. There are homes within a stone's throw of this building, where the cupboards are empty and the grates fireless, and where the children ask for food, which their parents cannot give them. These demand our practical sympathy, and such sympathy has been extended for thirty-six years past, to the sick and poor, by this Mission. Then there are our Sunday-school scholars, numbering about 1400, coming many of them from homes of evil influence, which influence we strive to counteract. Not a few of them are sickly little creatures, whose faces bear marks of privation. For these and similar children and adults we have a Convalescent Home at Hastings, where several hundreds have already been benefited.

We have, during the twenty years of our prison-work, provided considerably over three hundred thousand free breakfasts to discharged prisoners, to whom we have read and expounded God's Word. We have assisted about 72,000 such men by providing them with tools, clothing, employment, etc., and over 60,000 have been persuaded to sign the temperance pledge. We have, altogether, received about 6800 convicts on their release from penal servitude. Then we receive an annual average of 500 friendless Juvenile Offenders into our five Boys' Homes. These are fed, clothed, and provided for. Our Women's Home receives about 500 homeless women and girls annually, whose cases meet with individual attention.

The question of finance is one of considerable importance to us and we have earnestly to ask support, because upon such support, we depend for the continuance of our work, having no endowment whatever.

Mr. Wheatley, the superintendent of the Mission, having spoken, addresses followed by Messrs. R. O. B. Lane, Q.C., and J. F. W. Deacon, J.P., Judge Baylis, Q.C., Messrs. J. Dickinson and Paul Taylor, and Major Knox (Governor of Wandsworth Prison). Most of these, being metropolitan magistrates, bore strong testimony to the good results of the work of the Mission. Lady Renals kindly distributed a number of prizes to lads who had conducted themselves in a manner satisfactory to their employers.

Soul Longings.

O to be trusted and trusty,
O to be faithful and true;
Loyally serving my Captain,
Always prepared for review.
O to be just where He wants me,
There in his presence to stand;
Willing to do to the utmost
Aught He may please to command.
O to be fully surrendered,
Never a will of my own;
All of my life for his kingdom,
All of my heart for his throne.
Thus to be guided entirely
By the sweet counsel of grace;
Never a word to oppose Him,
Never a thought to displace.
O, to be filled with the Spirit,
Emptied the dross and the tin;
Filled with that wonderful fullness,
Sanctified thoroughly from sin.
So to be more than a conqueror,
Never a moment of loss—
Never a shadow of failure
In the crusade of the Cross.
Lord, to provide me this blessing
Is a small matter with Thee;
Here would I claim thine own promise,
Claim it as given to me.
Bring I the tithes and the offerings,
All at Thy pierced feet I pour;
Open the windows of heaven—
Bless me as never before.

A Little Forester.*

IT was a very cheerful party that gathered one bright Sunday afternoon in the summer-house crowned with shadowing creepers, for the children's hour with Mrs. Temple. How many things the young folk had to talk about! and how happy they all were! But Katie would never permit her beloved picture-book to be neglected on these occasions, and very soon "Our Feathered Folk" was laid open upon the summer-house table.

"What little bird brings us a message to-day?" said her aunt. "I see a pretty little creature with a red cap and a white and black back; and the motto beneath it is, 'Work first, and then rest.'"

"That's a Ruskin," said Gerald, "and the bird is the woodpecker, Aunt Evelyn; look at the nick in his tail feathers. This one is the 'lesser spotted woodpecker,' that has a call something like a laugh, and there is also the 'great spotted woodpecker' that says 'Chick, chink'!"

"Now, children," said Mrs. Temple, "I see you are laughing at Gerald's imitation of Mr. Woodpecker's music, but, do you know, I have quite a respect for our little friend. In one of our books about birds and their ways he is described as the hero of labour, and I believe that labour is a great conqueror. I am sure it conquers fretfulness and bad temper."

"So little redhead tells us not to be idlers," said Percy. "Well, he does not take much rest himself; he seems always pecking and tapping at the trees. He works hard enough for his meals."

"And removes much that might destroy and corrupt the trunks, no doubt," said Mrs. Temple. "All honour to the toilers everywhere, and may we be found among them, for in some form or other there is work that everyone—even little children—may do, and nobody has come into this world just to waste time slothfully."

"Auntie," said Iris, "I read that a German legend says the woodpecker is a baker who used false weights and deceived the poor; so he had to leave his counting-house and become a bird, and work continually and live on insects."

"Poor baker!" said Katie; "he must miss his nice hot rolls, and buns, and gingerbread, I should think."

"Even legends teach us something worth remembering," said Mrs. Temple. "In this case, though, I must defend my little friend against the charge of ever having been a baker and used false weights. You children can tell me the moral of the story."

"Why," said May, quickly, "that those who deceive people are sure to get themselves into trouble, and no one gains in the end by cheating."

"There are other tales about the woodpecker," said Gerald; "the North American Indians used to wear as an ornament the 'wiry-billed' woodpecker's head, so as to get its strength and courage into their own spirits."

"I know one thing about the woodpecker," said little Heather. "I heard father reading it once. The book said he is peaceful, and his beak and his spurs are ready for anything but fighting. He would much rather work than fight."

"Well," said Percy, "I suppose one had better work than quarrel. I know on holidays sometimes, when it has been wet, and we couldn't think of anything to do, we have all seemed cross and quarrelsome, and then mother has come in with her prescription, 'Do something for somebody,' and we started preparing those scrap-books and mending up the toys for the children in the hospital; and very soon we forgot all about wanting to quarrel."

"The old gentleman who was chairman at our prize distribution gave us a long talk about sticking to our work," said Gerald. "He said a lot of people have a try at one thing, and then another, but they don't keep on perseveringly, and so they fail. He told us an anecdote about the brother of Edmund Burke, who had made a great speech in Parliament. The brother said, 'I have been wondering how Ned managed to get all the talents of the family; but I remember he was always at work when we were at play!'"

*From "Our Feathered Folk," Sunday Chats with the Children. By Margaret Haycraft. (The Religious Tract Society, 1s.)

"But play-time isn't wrong, is it?" asked Heather and Katie together.

Mrs. Temple's loving hand touched their anxious little faces.

"I should think not," she said, "or the young lambs would be great offenders, would they not? Our Father in heaven has given to you active little people the power to thoroughly enjoy your play-time, and your games strengthen you and do you good. But we grown-up folk, as well as the children, find that those who want to play all the time become a burden to themselves and to those around them; we enjoy play better when we have been doing something useful, and nothing is more tiring than only living for enjoyment and pleasure."

"Mother," said Percy, "that reminds me of when I was young. One cold day, when I got out all my toys, and I wanted to amuse myself till it was time for our Christmas tree to be lighted up, and I seemed as if I couldn't wait for it; and at last I cried—of course I was only quite small then—and I got tired of all my toys; and you came in, and you said, 'Wouldn't I help the little boys who were trying to clear a path in front of old Mrs. Bright's cottage?' and I put on my leggings, and got a broom and a spade, and I worked so hard, till between us we had it all nice and clear; and father said, 'Well done!' when he came by and saw me at it, and the old lady gave me a mince-pie."

"And you were very much surprised to find it would be soon time for all the fun," said his mother. "That proves how hard work increases our enjoyment of recreation."

"And it gives one an appetite," said Gerald; "for in one of our school-books it tells how Dionysius did not like the black broth of the Spartans, and they reminded him that it needed besides hunger and thirst the seasoning of labour."

"I should think," said his aunt, "our little hero of labour has a good appetite. The book I spoke of gives such a pretty account of his working at the nest; the little carpenter becomes a sculptor, and 'hollows out the graceful vault of a superb hemisphere; the whole receives the polish of marble and ivory.' I am sure this should remind us all that whatever is worth doing is worth doing well. I think the birds of the air, like many other creatures we do well to study, have wondrous instinct and wisdom. In one case we are told, an American spring came very late, and little Mr. Woodpecker seemed to understand this, and arranged to make his nest later than usual. I dare say our own little woodbirds have the same natural instinct as to coming weather; but how much we possess that the birds do not, and how much higher and greater and more lasting our life work ought to be."

"It says somewhere," said Gerald, "that the more one does the more there seems left to do still."

"And let me remind you, Gerald," said his aunt, "of another truth: 'The more a man does, the more he wants to do.' It is the busy, earnest person to whom we look when we need help"; and Mrs. Temple smiled at Heather, who on the previous afternoon had found time, amid tidying her mother's work-basket, to search for some books Gerald had mislaid, and to run down to the kitchen on an errand for nurse. "The world's workers, children, want to grow in usefulness, and we are glad to know there is work yet waiting in which they can help. Each of us has some work that nobody else could do as well; and none of us will waste our time or live our lives in vain if we try to follow in the footprints of Him who spent Himself in helping others, and went about doing good."

OUT IN THE WOODS.

Tap, tap, tap, amid the stillness
Of the clustering forest trees;
'Tis a busy little birdie,
Not content to take his ease;
Working, working in the sunshine,
Working on with willing mind:
Little red-crowned bird! we children
Lessons in thy life may find.
'Tis not ours in shady woodland
Thus to fly and work away;
'Tis not ours to come tap, tapping
At the trunks old and grey;
Yet there's work that e'en the smallest
With a ready hand may do;
Loving hearts of little children
All may help in service true.
When in happy walks we hear thee
Tapping at the greenwood tree,
We will listen to thy message;
Lads and lassies, busy be!
Birdie, dear! we won't be lazy
E'en in childhood's golden light;
Day by day to do our duty
We will strive with all our might.

Finger-marks in the Bible.

THE Bible is full of striking metaphors of God Himself, his power, his grace, and his glory. The Scriptures speak of Him as having a heart of love, eyes of knowledge, ears to hear, lips of grace, hands of skill, and fingers of power. The finger of God means his touch of power, both in nature and in grace. The finger of Christ means his sympathetic touch of love, healing, and blessing. The finger of man means his skill, faith, and feeling. The different actions of the finger, both human and Divine, noted in Scripture, may be called Bible finger-marks. They point us to some wonderful touches of God, and to some important instances of faith, fear, and service of man.

1. The Finger Marks of Sin.—Prov. vi. 13, 12, 15, and Isaiah lix. 3, depravity, deception, and destruction.
2. The Finger Marks of Power.—Exodus viii. 19, Psalms viii. 3, and Luke xi. 20, in creation, redemption, and salvation.
3. The Finger Marks of Love.—Mark viii. 23, Mark vii. 33, the touch of healing, health, and hope.
4. The Finger Marks of Fear.—John xx. 25, the touch of fear and feeling instead of faith.
5. The Finger Marks of Faith.—Mark v. 27, 28, and 34, the touch of faith, fear, then healing.
6. The Finger Marks of Wrath.—Daniel v. 5 and 24, the disclosure, the dread, and the doom.

A man was employed to whiten the walls of a room; the fluid used was colourless till dried. Being left alone, he opened a drawer, examined a pocket-book, and handled the papers, but, finding no money, placed all things as they were, forgetting that twelve hours' drying would show the marks of his wet fingers, and thus expose his guilt. Sin always leaves its mark, and it cannot be covered, except by the blood of Jesus.

A young woman who had led a wild, careless, sinful life, was dying in one of the London hospitals. A kind visitor sat by her bedside reading the Word of Life. The last hour of her life drew near, and with it an intense anxiety about her soul. Many passages of Scripture were turned to during these closing moments, and at last the verse, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7), was read slowly and distinctly. The dying woman partly raised herself. "Read that again," she said. "Does it say all?" "Yes, all," replied her visitor. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "Are you sure it says all?" "Quite sure." "Put my dying finger on the word 'all,'" she replied, "I can go into the presence of God on that." This was a real touch of faith, and the cleansing of the blood to the soul, the calming of the mind before God, and the confidence of God's peace and salvation. A blessed finger-mark.

From graven stone and written scroll,
From all old flower-fields of the soul;

We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.—Matt. ii. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke ii. 10.

THE birth of Christ was the event which the people of God throughout all previous ages had been expecting. The first prophecy (Gen. iii. 15) had foretold it. And this was followed by others. Can the scholars tell to whom or by whom these subsequent prophecies were spoken? Question them upon such Scriptures as Gen. xxii. 18; xlix. 10; Isa. ix. 6, 7; Mic. v. 2. It will impress them with a sense of the importance of this event if they remember how God kept it before his people.

"Jesus was born" (1). Who is this Child? Read the answer in the titles applied to Him in Isa. ix. 6, and in John i. 1-3. This fact explains the wonders that took place at his birth: the appearance of the angels to the shepherds, the visit of the wise men, and the star in the east. And He was born. What does that mean? That God becomes man, takes our human nature into perpetual union with Himself. The Son of God becomes a little child!

Where was He born? Question the scholars as to the town to which Mary and Joseph belonged, its distance from Bethlehem, and by what means they were led to visit Bethlehem in time for the event to take place there (Luke ii. 1-4). Not only angels, but even monarchs who do not know God are used for bringing about his purposes.

How should we receive Him? Two opposite courses are suggested in our lesson—that of Herod, and that of the wise men. The one should warn us, the other should be an example to us.

1. Herod's utter ignorance of this event, though he lived among those who possessed and read the sacred books, is without excuse. He had light, but did not care to use it. Beware of falling into the same mistake. He "was troubled" (3) when he heard. Yet he needed a Saviour if any man did. And Christ was willing to save him. But he did not desire to be saved from his sins. The prophecy quoted to him by the priests (14-6) was his star. If he had followed it with sincere desire to find a Saviour, how differently his career would have closed.

But he took an opposite course. He was called "The Great," and was undoubtedly a strong and able king, but he was great chiefly in his wickedness and cruelty. Yet he was most unhappy, and the birth of the Saviour only increased his unhappiness. Hence his desire to destroy Jesus (7, 8, 13, 16). It was a foolish and wicked course. It could not succeed, because it was an attempt to fight against God, and to do this by hypocrisy and cruelty. We shall not any of us imitate his crimes; but his indifference, his rejection of the light, his desire to keep his sins rather than accept Christ—these are repeated by many. What a strange thing, to keep Christmas and yet reject Christ!

2. The wise men are worthy of our imitation. Whence they came, how many they were, how they had heard of the coming of a Saviour, how the star was connected with his birth—are questions to which no certain answer can be given. What we know about them is: (1) They were wise men. In their distant land they had a religion which did not satisfy them. They had a very slender knowledge of the coming of a Great Deliverer to the Jewish nation. They wisely believed the little they had learned; and when they saw the star (a miraculous star, evidently) they were prepared to follow it. The journey was long and perilous, but they would follow the star anywhere if it did but lead to Him. Travelers visiting the catacombs in Rome have sometimes taken with them a thread and a light, so that when they desired to return from those abodes of darkness and death they could find their way. Such a thread and light were the expectation and the star to these wise men. How much more we know; and how many "stars in the east" are guiding us to Christ—the Bible, godly homes, Sunday schools, Sabbaths are we wise enough to follow them?

(2) They were diligent seekers. Proof of this is found not only in their long journey, but in their conduct when they reached Jerusalem. Were they not surprised that an event which was so interesting and important to them was unknown in Jerusalem? Yet they did not abandon their search because of difficulty. What kind of seekers are they who find? Let one read the answer in Heb. xi. 6.

(3) They were devout worshippers. Whom did they worship? The Virgin, as some do to-day, or both? Note how carefully the statement is made—"worshipped Him" (11). "Three things are here," says Dr. Mark Frank—"falling down, worshipping, and offering: the first, the worship of the body; the second, of the soul; the third, of the goods." These must be our offerings to Christ as our King. When we come to Him as Saviour we come empty-handed. No price can purchase his salvation. But knowing Him as Saviour, let us own Him as King, and pay Him the homage of our whole being.

The Brighton Convention.

FIVE Conventions, conducted on the "Keswick" lines, have now been held at Brighton. The first, or what is familiarly known as the "great" Brighton Convention, is still remembered by many who attended it as a time of marked spiritual blessing. It is encouraging to find that interest in the movement, since its public inauguration in the town, has not only been maintained but has steadily increased. Not a few in the locality and for miles around have, as a result of the meetings year by year, experienced new power and stimulus in the Lord's service, as well as victory over besetting sin.

Brighton presents a specially appropriate field for the dissemination of such truths as are taught at the various gatherings for the deepening of spiritual life held annually throughout the country. All the sins and vices so prominently associated with London life are apparently in equal proportion practised in this celebrated rendezvous of pleasure-seekers; and it is amply evident that nothing less than a watchful, prayerful frame of heart, and a daily endowment of the Spirit's power, can effectually combat the strong and subtle temptations which are to be met at Brighton.

The Convention, which lasted four days, was held within the Dome, a building capable of accommodating some two thousand people. The proceedings were conducted much in the same way as they are elsewhere. Each day was appropriately begun with a prayer meeting at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, Old Steine; and these smaller (but none the less profitable) gatherings, doubtless, were a fit preparation for what was to follow. The Convention meetings proper took place in the Dome morning, afternoon, and evening. Obviously, the final meeting of the day was most largely attended, many who, by reason of their daily avocations, were unable to be at the other two gatherings, swelling the congregations at night. Thursday evening's meeting was especially large, the gallery as well as the body of the hall being well filled.

From beginning to end the Convention was characterised by that quiet, devotional spirit on the part of hearers and speakers which ever accompanies a patient, earnest search after the truth of God as revealed by the Holy Spirit. There were no after meetings, but on one or two occasions an opportunity was given for those who had received blessing to testify to the fact by standing in their seats. In each case from twenty to fifty or more of the audience responded.

TUESDAY.

Captain H. BARING presided at the initial gathering in the Dome in the morning. After united praise (led by a special choir made up from different churches in the town) and prayer and reading of Scripture, Rev. JOHN BRASH addressed his hearers from Phil. ii. 5, 6, 7, 8: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who made ... Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and ... humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Mr. Brash pointed out that Christ came into the world not only to redeem the world, but to be an example. As an example He stooped to become the servant of all. The Saviour had the supernatural at his command, but in his ordinary life He "emptied Himself." He never drew upon his own resources in order to gain fame or human admiration. An ungodly man, added the speaker, could not make himself "of no reputation." There was always a circle of friends whose smiles he courted.

Rev. F. B. MEYER based an address on Rom. xiii. 11, 12: "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand." No doubt, remarked Mr. Meyer, many of you have come to the Convention saying you will stay it all through, and attend all the meetings, but I want you to understand that there is no need to wait for the next meeting, but that now, at once, you may "cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light," and so go forth to meet the breaking day of millennial glory, which is surely becoming brighter and brighter upon the horizon. Some people say, "Give us a robust, a manly religion," and I can assure them it is the people who have put on the armour of humility and faith who are best able to bear the heat and burden of the day, and who are the true champions in the hour of battle.

Rev. FRANCIS PAYNTER conducted the afternoon meeting, and following the singing of the hymn, "Search me, O God, my actions try," Rev. S. A. SELWYN took as the subject of an address Jer. xlviii. 11: "Moab hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel; therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed." The speaker alluded to various things of which every Christian ought to be emptied. Amongst these he mentioned, first, self-esteem, self-righteousness, and self-assertion. They had also, he said, to be emptied of harsh judgments of others. When they heard a bad report of anybody, let them put it in their pockets, or in the fire, and when they hear a good report, pass it on—and that would do something to stop the venomous tongue of envy. In conclusion, Mr. Selwyn spoke of jealousy as another black spot in the character of some Christians.

At the evening meeting, Captain H. Baring presiding, another address was given by Rev. S. A. SELWYN, his subject being 2 Chron. xxix. 10, "Now it is in mine heart to make a covenant with the Lord God of Israel." He showed how, in many instances, idols are allowed in the hearts of Christian people, and he proceeded to urge that they must make a covenant with God to bring out all the idols and the uncleanness and give themselves entirely to Him.

Rev. EVAN HOPKINS founded an address on the words, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear." He said that in many Christians faith was paralysed, the hand of faith was withered and could not touch Christ or receive from Him the gifts of his grace. Like the man with the withered hand, they must have faith that Christ could heal their spiritual paralysis and impart to them health of soul. It was the unconsecrated will that was the hindrance to faith, but when that was yielded it was easy to believe God.

WEDNESDAY.

The usual preliminaries at the morning meeting included a statement by Captain Baring to the effect that the Convention expenses were very heavy, the use of the hall itself costing them between £50 and £60. It was hoped, however, that through the generosity of friends there might be a surplus, which would be sent for the relief of the distressed Armenians.

The first speaker was Rev. S. A. SELWYN, who enlarged on the words, "The waters shall be healed" (Ez. xlvii. 8). Mr. Selwyn explained that in these words they had a picture of the heart without Christ and with the tyrant enemy, Self, in all its power. Yet another picture was of the heart where Christ might be, but where He had not got the control. What they wanted as the result of that Convention was to dethrone self and let Christ rule them entirely. Rev. E. HOPKINS afterwards spoke from Heb. xiii. 5, 6: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," etc. It was really another exposition on faith. He remarked that faith was confidence in the Faithful One, and one word of the living God was enough to sustain all their faith.

Rev. J. BRASH, in the afternoon, dwelt on the text, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine" (St. John vii. 7). Obedience, he said, was the order of spiritual knowledge. He did not mean that they were not to bring to the study of great spiritual themes all the faculties which God had given to them, but he did mean that it was no use to investigate these doctrines merely under the cold light of intellect; they must consider them with a willing, obedient heart, in order to pass through obedience into still clearer light. Rev. E. HOPKINS followed with an address on God's ability to save to the uttermost all who come unto Him by Christ (Heb. vii. 25). His chief object was to point out that the primary application of these words was not to the sinner seeking salvation, but to the saved soul.

In the evening Rev. C. G. MOORE spoke with regard to life's deprivations, and their meaning and bearing upon Christian character and experience. Mr. Moore showed that many of God's gifts were with them, but instead of holding these in the Spirit of Christ they held them in a way that was no joy to God, and that would bring no gladness to them in the days of eternity; and so God, seeing this unworthy tenure of those gifts, took them away. But He often restored them in a way that was a joy to him and a blessing to their possessors for ever. Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE spoke on the same subject as that taken by the last speaker, showing how Jesus Christ only lends us through the experience and deprivation that He may Himself satisfy every need of our nature, and be to us a thousand times more than He has ever been in the past.

THURSDAY.

Rev. W. HOUGHTON enlarged, at the morning assembly, on the greatness and glory of the Christian believer's inheritance in the Lord Jesus Christ, as a present possession, and as a pledge and earnest of much more that is to follow (Col. i.). There were, he pointed out, four great blessings in this chapter already possessed by the believer: (1) meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light; (2) deliverance ("who hath delivered us from the power of darkness"); (3) the blessing of translation ("translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son"); (4) the blessing of redemption.

Rev. E. HOPKINS followed with an address in which he spoke specially with regard to the promise of the Holy Spirit as prophetically revealed, as historically fulfilled, and as experimentally realised, and he went on to point out that the Spirit could not work in Christian people until they were wholly yielded to the will of God.

Rev. E. W. MOORE chose as the subject of an address, in the afternoon, the words, "Ye are the temple of God." He proceeded to consider what those characteristics are which distinguish the temple of God. The thoughts, he said, which were suggested by the temple included separation, dedication, habitation, manifestation, sanctification, adoration, communication. In conclusion, he showed how each of these characteristics ought to apply to the spiritual condition of the Christian.

Rev. C. G. MOORE drew a lesson of faith and patience from the incident of the raising of Jairus' daughter (St. Mark v). He traced the whole story, pointing out the great length of time during which Jairus was kept waiting before Jesus arrived at the house, the interruption caused in the journey thither by the woman who was healed of the issue of blood, the bringing of the sad news that the child had died, the encouragement given to "only believe" and then the raising of his daughter to life.

In the evening, Rev. E. W. MOORE delivered an address on Humility. He said the man was most humble who most forgot himself and was not occupied either with good self or bad self, but went straight forward to do his duty. If there was one thing that more than another provoked the displeasure of God, it was the sin of pride. The garment of humility would suit all climes, it would never wear out for it was none other than Jesus Christ Himself, who was the same yesterday, today, and for ever.

Rev. Preb. WEBB-PEPLOE gave the closing address, which he based on Heb. vii. 15, 16: "There ariseth another priest, who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." The former portion of his remarks were a denial of the accusation brought against the Gospel, that the doctrine of substitution is an altogether disproportionate and immoral theory. When it was considered that by Christ's substitution man was intended to be restored to the image and likeness of God, the conception was, he contended, infinitely magnificent. It was by the power of Christ's endless life that man would be thus restored. As Christ could not know the power of that endless life as man until He had submitted Himself to the death of the cross, they, too, must die, and as the cross was the place that gave death to his humanity, that He might rise again in the power of an endless life, they must take the same position. Dying in Him they lived by Him, rising with Him they were permitted to live for Him, and living for Him here below they would live with Him again for all eternity.

FRIDAY.

The meeting in the forenoon took the form of a praise meeting, and despite the stormy weather there was a fair attendance. Capt. BARING, who presided, read a large number of letters, testifying to spiritual help afforded during the Convention. Verbal testimonies also filled up a considerable time, after which a suitable address was given by Rev. R. Atkins on the subject of following Christ.

The afternoon and evening gatherings were of a missionary character. At the former General Stileman presided. Rev. JOHN WILKINSON pleaded the cause of the Jesus. Rev. E. STEAD (C.M.S.) urged the claims of foreign missions. From China, India, and the isles of the ocean the voice was calling to Christians, "Come over and help us." Rev. A. N. JOHNSON (L.M.S.) referred to the immensity and variety of foreign mission work. The London Missionary Society had, he said, printed the Gospel in forty different dialects.

Rev. W. J. PRICE (B.M.S.) was the first speaker at the evening meeting, which was conducted by Captain Baring. Alluding especially to the needs of India, Mr. Price estimated the gods and goddesses of the Hindu Pantheon as at least 233,000,000, many of which were impersonations of avarice and lust and crime. Rev. J. NETTLETON (W.M.S.) contrasted the cannibalism and barbarity which prevailed in Fiji in former days with the Christian Fiji of to-day. Dr. HENRY SOLTAU (Lond. Med. Mission) described the work of the China Inland Mission, with which he was formerly connected. That Mission had had a wonderful history, and there was now only one province in China without a resident missionary.

London Poverty.

"CONSIDER THE POOR."

THE closing in of winter, the bitter touch of frost in the air, affect but slightly the vigorous and well clad. Many, indeed, find a positive enjoyment in the rigours of the season. But it is far otherwise with the poorly-fed and thinly-clad poor, who in the hard winter suffer sorely.

Commissioned by the Editor to make investigations into the present state of things, I have instituted inquiries in various districts chiefly populated by the humbler classes. Thus I have gone East and West—to Whitechapel and Bethnal Green in the one direction, to Latimer-road and the Potteries in the other. On the South, Bermondsey and Walworth have been taken as representative, while St. Giles' and a poor corner off Gray's Inn-road have represented the central areas examined. The result of these inquiries has been to show that while, as yet, the distress is not so widespread and prevalent as in times past, yet there is a painful amount of destitution and misery, which earnest mission workers are endeavouring, with the scanty funds at their disposal, to alleviate.

Apart altogether from the thriftless and intemperate class, whose distress may be regarded as chronic and well-nigh hopeless, there are three sections who have peculiar claims on sympathy and help. These three classes may be described as the unemployed, the sick, and the aged.

THE "OUT-OF-WORKS."

Both on the south side of the river and in St. Giles' I have been sorely grieved to find numbers of men out of work, although as yet they are not so numerous as in some former years. As one walks along with observant eye, it is painful to notice the gaunt, white, despairing men—mutely enduring, tramping aimlessly on in quest of the work which seems so hard to find. At home, mother is trying to soothe the complaints of the half-famished children, or in many cases a mere girl is left in charge while the mother is out charring or trying to find charring to do. The room is bare, cold, and dreary. The few moveables are gradually disappearing to keep the wolf from the door; but dull and dismal is the look-out when father returns in the evening with the same sorrowful tale, "No work, no chance for us." Questions may easily be raised as to the best means of aiding such families. Are we to induce them, were it possible, to go into the workhouse? So doing, they must break up their home and become paupers, never perhaps to resume their independence; and to this they have an invincible and praiseworthy objection. The practical and present solution adopted by all mission workers, in real and sympathetic touch with the people, is to help such families in a temporary and passing way, tiding them over until employment be once more obtained. The workers I have in view are men and women who know the people around them, and are not to be taken in by impostors, as more central operators, removed from the actual locality, might well be and often have been.

In connection with this class, the widows ought to be mentioned. Many such are in sore straits, with young families round them and but little work to be had. My present aim is not to divert attention from the general need to isolated cases, else I might easily give touching instances of poverty and pain both among the unemployed and the widows—

SICK AND HUNGRY.

Then there are everywhere, and within range of all manner of workers in poor localities, the sick poor. Father is laid aside. Probably he has struggled to stick to his work as long as he was able to stand, and thereby has aggravated his illness. No sooner is he down than the family income fails, while the demands increase. Here and there one is glad to find small resources, such as club money coming in; but, alas, often it is otherwise. The sick one ought to have certain comforts and nourishments to aid his recovery; but how is he to obtain these while his children are starving? Here it is, again, that the nurse or lady visitor is of peculiar and effective service. It will not be her fault if the necessary things for the invalid are not found; but how difficult it is to find these when the Mission funds are drained, and there is little coming in. Nor is it only the father whose illness affects the family. It may be the mother, on whom so much depends, or some grown-up son or daughter who have been augmenting the slender domestic income. Penury is often pitiful enough, but when aggravated by illness it becomes painfully pressing.

THE AGED POOR.

Then, amid all this mass of poverty, there are to be found everywhere aged ones, frail and tottering. How they exist at all is often a mystery. They dwell among their people. They have spent a long life in the particular court and alley, and they cling to it with characteristic tenacity. They are told—too often for their peace of mind—that they ought to go into "the house"; but go they will not, "until," as one told me the other day, "I'm carried there." Everywhere, in the most out-of-the-way corners, in back rooms little better than cupboards, in attics or in cellars, lonely aged ones may be discovered—often true children of God. It has been again and again my privilege to sit by such aged saints and listen to their calm testimony to the faithfulness of God, who has never failed to supply their need. But alas, many have no such hope, no such Helper and Friend; and while messengers of Christ find their way to these with the story of grace, they ought to be enabled to minister some small aid or comfort to the aged one. How potent the Gospel may be, even amongst those of advanced years, has recently found fresh illustration in "Father Dan," over whom that veteran, Mr. Holland, is rejoicing, who has been converted when over a hundred years of age.

In dealing with this poverty and distress, mission-workers seek first to relieve the children, and, so far as may be, the needs of the parents. From all quarters and all manner of missions come pressing pleas for help in dealing with the poor. Surely facts such as these have only to be made known in order to call forth sympathy and generous aid. At present, I have avoided naming particular missions or special cases. Suffice that there is great and sore need. All who wish to help, should send their gifts to the care of the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, who will place it where the present need is greatest, and in the hands of workers certain to turn it to the best purpose.

PEARL FISHER.

Armenian Refugees in Varna.

SIR,—Although many thousands of Armenians have escaped from their own country, and are no longer in peril of fire, sword, axe, or prison torture, the condition of only too many is pitiable in the extreme, and demands immediate and most substantial aid. I have seen a letter, written from Varna, Bulgaria, where about 5000 refugees are congregated, from a member of the Armenian committee there. In describing the misery amongst the poorer classes of the refugees, he says: "Till now our struggle was against hunger alone, but to-day we have another foe to face, perhaps even more terrible; I mean cold." Many of the poor creatures fled with only the clothes they had on!

Miss Fraser, until lately a missionary in Van, has been working her hardest amongst these people since the beginning of November, and when she wrote to English friends had succeeded, with the assistance of helpers on the spot, in organising a certain measure of relief. In order to live, those who had them, had sold their clothes, bedding, etc. Miss Fraser writes:—"Now everything is gone, the rent is due, and they are desperate; it is most pitiful to hear their bitter tales. There are a good many families who are suffering really more bitterly than many of the very poor, who have been used to living from hand to mouth. Many well-educated people are among the refugees; a man whose family I know well, came to me yesterday with the cold perspiration pouring down his pale face, and trembling all over, to beg for assistance. His wife and three children were all in bed together sick; he had been a well-to-do merchant, and I can imagine how difficult it was for him to ask for aid. I have taken him on as a helper, and he is proving invaluable. I am going to start the people tomorrow making clothes and bedding." The perplexing question of how to house so many, has been partly met by arranging to take some large buildings at Shumleh, which can be rented at a fair price, and the Government will generously provide tickets on the railway.

Three members of the Society of Friends started for Bulgaria last week, with a sum of money from their fund, in order to continue relief organisation. It will, however, require many thousands of pounds to keep alive during the winter this mass of poor people—about 5000—who want everything, and amongst whom there is much sickness. With sufficient means an orphanage might be established for the little ones whose parents have been massacred, and an industrial bureau, so that the people could again become bread-winners—for they beg for work, and no greater boon can be bestowed upon them than to render them independent of charity. For all this money is needed, and those sympathisers who have sympathisers who have hesitated to send their offerings to Turkey in the fear that they might fall into wrong hands, may with every confidence bestow them here. The Bulgarian Government is behaving nobly. The Bulgarian people are receiving these forlorn, exiled and heart-broken ones, and we must do our part to re-establish those homes, to dry the tears of these mourners, to renew in these sorrowful hearts peace and hope and confidence in their fellow-men.

Mr. E. W. Brooks, Duvals, Grays, Essex, is the treasurer of the Friends' Armenian Fund.—Faithfully yours,

(Mrs.) MARY HICKSON,

Hon. Sec. Armenian Rescue Fund.

ARMENIAN ORPHANS.

Dr. Barnardo cabled to Sir Phillip Currie, British Ambassador at Constantinople, on Friday last, offering to receive gratuitously and at once into his homes, one thousand destitute Armenian orphans. On Saturday last the Ambassador telegraphed in reply requesting him to communicate with the Foreign Office. Dr. Barnardo has accordingly written to the Marquis of Salisbury to inform him that his committee will make immediate provision to receive and maintain one thousand Armenian children of either sex, who being orphans are also destitute, and will if needful subsequently receive and provide for a larger number. Already some Armenian orphans whom Dr. Barnardo had previously accepted are on their way to England, where they will be boarded-out in rural homes.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 13.

"I WILL INSTRUCT THEE AND TEACH THEE IN THE WAY WHICH THOU SHALT GO."—Psa. xxxii. 8.

"LEARN of Me," said the Master, and indeed there is no teacher like Him, no school like his. We stand at the door of the school-house, saying, "What I know not, teach thou me," and He does not hesitate to undertake our case. But there are several points of difference from our methods. In Christ's school there is but one Master for all the scholars, and they all learn from the same books; the pupils begin with the upper classes and end with the lowest; and those that are most proficient, and have been longest under his tuition are most conscious of their ignorance. There are no holidays; but every day is a holy day. The school never breaks up, but the students leave it for Home, and the prizes are sent after them, and given when they arrive.

We need more than personal instruction; we are travelling through an unknown land, and need direction for the way. This also is guaranteed, but not as in the cases of tourists, who extract all information from their friends before they start from home, as to the places they are about to visit. Our guide accompanies us. He counsels us with his eye upon us, detecting every pitfall and chasm, and warning us; perhaps even guiding us by the movement of his eye.

How greatly then do we need the quickened sense. The eye fixed on his eye; the ear open to his slightest whisper; the foot quick to place itself down in his footprints. The horse and mule need bit and bridle, but it is enough for us if the heart fears to miss the least indication of the Master's will. Be willing to know; it then becomes his part to make thee know somehow. If not in one way, then in another.

MONDAY, December 14.

"THE EARTH IS FULL OF THE LOVING-KINDNESS OF THE LORD."—Psa. xxxiii. 5.

The Psalmist means that there is no spot in it where the traces and footprints of God's love may not be discerned, if only the eyes and the heart are opened. Just as every corner of a room which faces the south is filled with the morning sunlight, unless artificial and violent means are adopted to keep it out, so every part of human life is full of God's loving-kindness, unless it is blocked out by sin. You think that your lot is absolutely destitute of God's loving-kindness, but may not your eyes be blinded? May there not be more than you suppose? May you not be so occupied with the one irksome thing in it as to be oblivious to ten thousand marks of tender compassion and unobtrusive mercy?

Your chamber is very bare and comfortless, but it is part of the earth, and it is therefore full of God's loving-kindness: look around for it. Your home seems uncongenial and trying, but it must be full to the brim of loving-kindness. Your daily life is hard and trying, but there is as much loving-kindness in it as if it were easy and prosperous. There is indeed more loving-kindness in these trying and difficult surroundings than in happier ones. We need more love, and we get it. We should enjoy it, if we looked out for it.

The loveless heart can detect nothing but disappointment and unkindness. But the heart that loves, and sings, and rejoices in the Lord, detects the evident tokens of God's love, just as the child of nature knows when friend or foe has passed through the forest-glade, by indications which would be unintelligible to our unpractised eye.

TUESDAY, December 15.

"THE LORD IS NIGH UNTO THEM THAT ARE OF A BROKEN HEART."—Ps. xxxiv. 18.

What broke your heart? Unkindness? Desertion? Unfaithfulness on the part of those you trusted? Or did you attempt to do something which was beyond your power, and in the effort, the heart-strings snapped? A bird with a broken wing, an animal with a broken leg, a woman with a broken heart, a man with a broken purpose in his life, these seem to drop out of the main current of life into shadow. They go apart to suffer and droop. The busy rush of life goes on without them. But God draws nigh. The Great Lover of man is always at the best when the lights burn low and dim in the house of life. He always comes to us then. He shall sit as the Refiner.

Where do you see love perfected? Not between the father and his stalwart son who counts himself independent, or between the mother and the girl in whom love is awakening in its first faint blush; but where the crippled child of eleven years lies in the truckle-bed, pale and wan, unable to help herself. There the noblest fruits of love ripen and yield refreshment. The father draws nigh to the little sufferer, so soon as he gets home at night, and the mother is nigh all the time to sympathise and comfort and minister. So brokenness attracts God. None know Him so well as those who suffer. It is dark, you think yourself deserted, but it is not so. God is there, He is nigh; call to Him, a whisper will bring a response.

There, little one, don't cry;
They have broken your heart, I know;
And the rainbow gleams
Of your youthful dreams
Are things of the long ago;
But heaven holds all for which you sigh—
There, little one, don't cry.

WEDNESDAY, December 16.

"THEM THAT ARE QUIET IN THE LAND."—Psa.

xxxv. 20.

A significant title for the saints, which has been adopted by one great body at least. In every land God has had his quiet ones. Retired from its noise and strife, withdrawn from its ambitions and jealousies, unshaken by its alarms; because they had entered into the secret of a life hidden in God. We must have an outlet for the energies of our nature. If we are unfamiliar with the hidden depths of eternal life, we shall necessarily live a busy, fussy, frothy, ambitious, eager life, in contact with men and things. The man whose house is shallow, but one room in depth, cannot help living on the street. But directly we begin to dwell deep—deep in God, deep in the watch for the Master's advent, deep in considering the mysteries of the kingdom, we become quiet. We fill our little space; we get our daily bread and are content; we enjoy natural and simple pleasures; we do not strive, nor cry, nor cause our voice to be heard in the street; we pass through the world, with noiseless tread, dropping a blessing on all we meet, but we are no sooner recognised than we are gone. Get quiet, beloved soul; tell out thy sorrow and complaint to God. When men rage about thee, go and tell Jesus. When storms are high, hide thee in his secret place. When men seek for fame, and applause, and their passion might infect thee, get into thy closet, and shut thy door, and quiet thyself as a weaned babe. For if thy voice is quiet to man, let it never cease to speak loudly and mightily for man in the ear of God. Oh to be a Quietist in the best sense!

THURSDAY, December 17.

"IN THY LIGHT SHALL WE SEE LIGHT."—Ps. xxxvi. 9.

There are many dark things around us in which we detect light only when we behold them in the light which streams from the face of Jesus. In his light we see light in them. Yonder lies a bit of charcoal, black and opaque; and even when it has been changed by chemistry to crystals, it is dull and dense, so long as it is in the dark. Who could guess that such depths and fountains of light exist in that insignificant atom? But let it be brought into the rays of the morning sun, and as it flashes and glistens, in that light we see its light; fountains of light welling up; caverns of light, where the elves and fairies of childish story hide.

So it is of the Bible. Its pages seem devoid of help and comfort, till we open them under the light of Jesus. In his light we see light. "Then opened He their understandings, that they should understand the Scriptures."

So it is of nature.—The Greek, lover of nature though he was, never saw in her face the loveliness which has been the theme of Christian poetry and art. In the light of Christ's parables and allusions we see light.

Heaven above is softer blue,
Earth around is sweeter green;
Something lives in every hue,
Christless eyes have never seen.
Birds with gladder songs overflow,
Flowers with deeper beauties shine,
While I know, as now I know,
I am his, and He is mine.

So it is of human love.—There is a new preciousness, tenderness, thoughtfulness, blessedness, where the love and light of Jesus reign in home and heart. We see a loveliness and beauty in our dear ones that had eluded us till we beheld them in the love of Jesus.

FRIDAY, December 18.

"DELIGHT THYSELF ALSO IN THE LORD."—Psa. xxxvii. 4.

One of Tauler's hymns is a lovely specimen of how a man delights in the Lord. He takes a number of familiar instances of close affinity and interdependence, and applies them to the intimacy subsisting between him and his beloved Lord;—

As the bridegroom to his chosen,
As the king unto his realm,
As the keep unto the castle,
As the pilot to the helm,
So, Lord, art thou to me.

But we cannot delight thus without effort. We must withdraw our eager desires from the things of earth, fastening and fixing them on Him. The current of our being must set towards God. We must cultivate the habit of holy intimacy with Him, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain. We must accustom ourselves to hold up before us the successive attributes and works of God, till they strike our admiration, and elicit our homage.

Then we shall find rest unto our souls, because He will give us the desires of our hearts. When God Himself is our desire we shall be for ever delivered from disappointment, because we can always have Him; we shall be removed from risk of penury and want, because we can have as much of Him as we need; we shall be beyond the fear of loss, because He changes not. They who want God possess Him. To long for God is to have that for which you long. To delight in God is to delight in One, of whom there is an infinity for everyone, so that there need be no stint, no jealousy, no envy, no satiety. Everyone can have as much as he can hold. Your joy no man taketh from you.

SATURDAY, December 19.

"LORD, ALL MY DESIRE IS BEFORE THEE."—Psa. xxxviii. 9.

God knows our desires. We cannot always put them into words, we dare not trust them to the ears of our dearest, but they lie open to Him—what we desire to be in our holiest moments; the thorn in the flesh from which we long to be delivered; the prayer for one who is dearer to us than life. "Lord, all my desire is before Thee."

Think of the desires of the saints—for the realisation of their ideals; for the salvation of men; for the glory of the Redeemer; for the Divine answer to the scoff, the sneer, the taunt of infidelity; for the coming of the King, the restoration of his ancient people, the setting up of the millennial reign.

Lo, as some ship, outworn and overladen,
Strains for the harbour, where her sails are furled;
Lo, as some innocent and eager maiden
Leans o'er the wistful limit of the world.

So even I, and with a pang more thrilling;
So even I, and with a hope more sweet,
Yearn for the sign, O Christ! of thy fulfilling,
Faint for the flaming of thine advent feet.

But remember, He does abundantly above all we ask or think.

There is always a defect in every earthly joy, a something which shows itself for a moment to elude us.

It blossoms just beyond the paths I follow,
It shines beyond the farthest stars I see;
It echoes faint from ocean caverns hollow,
And from the land of dreams it beckons me.

But it never can be thus, with any desire that God has taught us to cherish. Of these, as the ages pass, we shall say: It was a true report that I heard, but the half was not told.

The Story of Pentecost.

Acts ii.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"YOU want again the story of that Day of days! I wonder not, since to me also it stands alone from out the past; unsurpassed, nay, more, unparalleled! The day that I first saw the Divine Master, when my first Teacher, the holy Baptist, pointed to Him as he walked, and said, 'Behold the Lamb of God'; the day that He came to my house and raised my wife's mother from weakness to sudden health; the day in which He designated me first among the Apostles; the day when I was with Him on the Holy Mount; the day of mingled tears and song, when He met me in the garden of his grave, and with a word blotted out the memory of my desertion and denial from his heart; the day when we stood on Olivet and beheld Him return whence He came—all these were memorable and rapturous, the days of heaven upon earth, but they pale before the glory of that Day of Pentecost as stars in the light of dawn. It was the beginning of days, wherein it seemed as though I suddenly passed from childhood to manhood, from the dim shadow of ignorance and material views of the Kingdom, into a deep experience of its spirituality and power."

Tell us, Peter, so far as possible, the phases of thought and emotion that swept across thee on that day of days. Canst thou recall them and translate them into mortal speech?

"No man can tell all he hears when he is caught up into the third heaven. Words are spoken there which it is not lawful to utter. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, the things which God reveals by his Holy Spirit. But, so well as I may, I will untwine the strands of woven memories."

"We were all together in one place; it was the upper room, where John and I had prepared the Passover just seven weeks before. It was a pentecost of days from the Resurrection. The place seemed hallowed ground, because the fragrance of the holy Supper lingered there; it was there that the Master manifested Himself to us in his risen beauty at intervals during the forty days, and He had bidden us tarry there until we received the promise of the Father. There were 120 of us in all—the Apostles (with the exception of Judas), Mary, the Lord's mother, and several of his brethren, and many others who had companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John unto the day that He was received up from us. I well remember the emotions with which we entered that room on our return from the Mount of Ascension. Though we were bereaved of the presence of our beloved Master, we were filled with great joy. We were so sure that He was all that we had been led to hope, and was about to do for us that of which He had spoken so often, that we spent the time partly in the upper room, and partly in the temple, blessing God, and continuing steadfastly in prayer. Each hour we expected that the Comforter would come: each dawn we said to ourselves, This will be the day: and each eve we quieted our hearts as weaned babes, and said, It will surely be to-morrow. But the vision tarried. The second Sabbath had passed. It was on the morrow after the Sabbath, the day on which the priests were presenting in the temple the first loaves of the new harvest, that the Lord, whom we sought, suddenly came to his temple, even the messenger of the Covenant, in whom we delighted."

"It was the early morning. We were sitting before the Lord, when suddenly there was a sound as though a mighty hurricane were passing over the city, and more especially rushing through the house; yet it was not wind, for not a door rattled, not a window shook. There was the sound, but no other symptom, of a hurricane of wind. I was startled, and looked up, and the place seemed filled with fire. Presently the central beam broke into a number of separate rays, one of which settled on the head of each of my companions. As I glanced around the room no one was without that coronet of flame, and each face glowed with that unearthly beauty which I had often seen passing over the Master's worn and weary features in his hours of private prayer."

Did the halo of fire encircle thine own brow?

"I never stayed to think. If it were so, I wist it not, for my heart was full of other thoughts, which rolled in on me like the waves of the sea."

What thoughts?

"I was unconscious of all else but Christ. It seemed as though He was presented to me in a new light. All his words and acts formed themselves into a connected whole of transcendent and sublime significance. Previously I had known Him after the flesh, but from that hour old things passed away, and all things became new. The Lord was there before my face, and my heart was glad: He made me full of gladness with his countenance: He showed to me the pathway by which He had entered into his glory. It seemed as though I could track his progress, behind the cloud which had veiled his heavenward progress from our straining gaze, to the right hand of God. I saw Him thread his way through the principalities and powers, the hosts of wicked spirits in the heavenly places. Like a shaft of light through thick darkness, He sped upward and home. Heaven after heaven dropped beneath Him, as He passed through them to stand beyond and above them all. Finally He appeared in the presence of God, and sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on High, being made so much better than the angels, as He hath inherited a more excellent name than they."

"But the most wonderful thing is to follow. Through the years in which we knew Him best, He was perpetually receiving from his Father the words He spake, the commandments by which his life was ordered, the power by which his miracles were performed. On one memorable occasion He said, 'The words which Thou gavest me, I have given them'; and on another I remember seeing Him receive from the Father honour and glory when there came a voice from the excellent glory. But I had not thought of Him receiving aught after He had passed within the veil. Yet so it befell. His own words were fulfilled: 'I will ask the Father,' and in answer to his request He received from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost. The glory which He had with the Father before the worlds were made, became mightily resident in his glorified human nature. It pleased the Father that in Him all fulness should dwell. As He had before received for Himself, so now He received for his body, the Church; that He might fill it throughout, and that it might become the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

"In a new and deeper sense God made Him, whom our people crucified, both Lord and Christ, the medium and channel of untold blessing to us all. For having received of the Father, on our behalf, and as our Representative, the promised Spirit, He poured Him forth, with signs that devout men of every nation under heaven could not fail to appreciate, 'which ye now see and hear.' Having received gifts for men, even the rebellious, He gave gifts, that the Lord God might dwell among us and in us through the might of the Holy Spirit."

"The remarkable feature of that day, and of the days that followed, was that our attention was not fastened on the advent of the Divine Spirit, but on Him through whom He came; not on the stream, but its source; not on the light, but its sun. The Spirit showed to us the things of Christ, and brought to mind what He had said while yet present with us, revealing the meaning of Scripture and the fulfilment of its sublimest visions. They say I was swept onward in holy ecstasy, that I spoke words that cut men to the heart, that the crowd was swayed before me as corn by the breeze, that I seemed possessed by an altogether new power. It may have been so. Whether I was in the body, or out of the body, I hardly knew; this only I remember, that my heart was full of the risen beauty and glory of my Lord. I beheld Him more radiant than the fairest angel, the First-born from among the dead, the Prince of the kings of the earth, the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Mighty God; and I could not but speak the things which I saw and heard."

And what was the outcome of it all?

"Marvellous! marvellous! As I began to speak I lost consciousness that it was I who was speaking; the thoughts that seemed in my mind, the words that fell from my lips, were such as had never before occurred to me. A voice, and not a speaker; a witness, and not an advocate; a channel, and not a fountain spring. And as their murmurings subsided, and the voices of the critics were silenced, and the hubbub died out in sighs and tears, as of those that mourned for their first-born, I was not surprised, any more than I could attribute the result to anything in myself, for I knew that it was due to a Power which was not of man, nor of the will of the flesh, but that God was fulfilling that which He had spoken of the prophet Joel, and was pouring out of his Spirit upon all flesh. As you know, 3000 were on that day added to the disciples of the Lord, and commenced to manifest the reality of their experience by the transcendent beauty and power of their lives. It seemed as though the reign of universal love had begun. It was one long summer-tide of bliss. 'All that believed were together, and had all things common. Day after day they continued steadfastly in the temple, and broke bread in their homes, taking their ordinary meals with gladness and simpleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people.'"

And were these blessed experiences permanent?

"Yes, indeed! They could not be otherwise, so long as we remained in abiding fellowship with the Lord. When I was suddenly called upon to face opposition, and bear witness to his name, I was conscious of a definite and mighty infilling (Acts iv. 8). There were times in the common experience of the Church, when the infillings of the Spirit made good any leakage that had been experienced, and filled us with ecstasy (Acts iv. 31). But, apart from these, there was a perpetual infilling which kept us full."

"Repent ye, therefore, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, unto the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto Him."

Behold the servants of the Lord, be it with us according to thy word!

Home of Rest, Worcestershire.—The Home, "Peth-u-El Lodge," Broadway, is intended for tired workers, needing rest and change, for a longer or shorter time, specially for ladies of limited income. Miss Weston warmly welcomes and tenderly cares for all who come to her. Broadway is a charming old village, with delicious bracing air and lovely country walks. Cotswold Hills 1000 feet above sea level. Address, Miss Weston, as above, enclosing stamped envelope for answers to enquiries.

Strangers' Rest, Antwerp.—In our last we made mention of the proposal to start a Rest in this much-frequented port, where many and peculiar temptations beset the seamen, and where there is no place of safe resort for them. The ladies who hope to undertake this work are Miss M. A. Smith, for eighteen years a worker at the Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff Highway, and Miss Hanna Boetzmann, of Christiania, formerly a worker in the Scandinavian Home, West India Docks. Communications may be sent to Mr. W. C. Parkinson, L.C.C., 18, Carleton-road, Tufnell Park, N.

THE LATE Mr. C. H. Mackintosh.

WE recently announced the death of this well-known Christian teacher. At home and abroad his published expositions of Holy Scripture were held in high esteem, though his name was not very widely known, for his writings were uniformly signed "C. H. M."

CHARLES HENRY MACKINTOSH was born in Glenmalur barracks, co. Wicklow, Ireland, in October, 1820. His father was a Captain in the Highlanders' Regiment, and had served in Ireland during the Rebellion; his mother was a daughter of Lady Weldon, and of a family long settled in Ireland. At the age of eighteen the young man experienced a spiritual awakening through letters received from his sister after her conversion, and obtained peace through the perusal of J. H. Darby's "Operations of the Spirit," being specially helped by words to the effect that "it is Christ's work for us, not his work in us," that gives peace.

Entering a business house in Limerick, the young Christian gave attention to reading, and diligently applied his mind to various studies. In 1844 he opened a school at Westport, throwing himself with much enthusiasm into educational work. His spiritual attitude at this time may be inferred from the fact that he aimed at keeping Christ enshrined in the citadel of his life, and making Christ's work his chief concern. At length, in 1853, he feared that his school was becoming his primary interest, and accordingly he gave it up. In the meantime his pen had been busy with expository Notes on the books of the Pentateuch.

At intervals during the past forty years the volumes of Notes have been issued, one each upon Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, and two upon Deuteronomy. (2s. each. Morish.) These works, which are characterised by a deep-toned evangelical spirit, have been published in successive and large editions, and the prefaces were signed by his friend "A. M." (Andrew Miller), who correctly says of the teaching: "Man's complete ruin in sin, and God's perfect remedy in Christ, are fully, clearly, and often strikingly presented." As an expositor, "C. H. M." had a perspicuous style, and presented his views with much strength. Some of his deductions were of a type which the generality of believers would regard as peculiar; but for loyalty to God's Word, and unswerving trust in Christ, no writings could be more stimulating.

His study of Leviticus was thoughtful and luminous. We make a brief extract from the introductory chapter:—

Too many even of the people of God seem to think that this section of inspiration contains nothing of any interest or value to them. They regard it as a detail of rites and ceremonies with which they have nothing to do—a record of bygone institutions, affording no instruction or edification to them. That this is a great mistake, thousands are now discovering. Very many who, for years, looked upon the Book of Leviticus as little more than a dry catalogue of Jewish ordinances, are now discovering in it an exhaustless mine of spiritual wealth, for which they cannot be too thankful.

We have referred to his loyalty to God's Word. His contempt for sceptical unbelief in all its lights and shades was expressed as follows, in his Notes on Deuteronomy:—

Nothing can be more miserably contemptible than the books which infidels write against the Bible.

Every page, every paragraph, every sentence, only goes to illustrate the truth of the Apostle's statement that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." . . . To one who has really learnt, through grace, to confide in the Word of God, to rest on the authority of Holy Scripture, all the infidel books that were ever written are utterly worthless, pointless, powerless; they display the ignorance and terrible presumption of the writers, but as to Scripture, they leave it just where it ever has been and ever will be, "settled in heaven," as immovable as the throne of God. The assaults of infidels cannot touch the throne of God, neither can they touch his Word; and, blessed be his Name, neither can they touch the peace that flows through the heart that rests on that imperishable foundation. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them."

After ceasing scholastic work, "C. H. M." went to Dublin, where he began speaking in public. For many years he boldly stood forth in defence of the Gospel, and to proclaim the truth; and God owned his labours in a remarkable degree. When the Revival swept over Ireland in 1859-60, he was very active, and some account of his labours may be found in the early volumes of Things New and Old. He was a man of great faith, and was ever ready to testify that though God had often tried him, He had never allowed him to endure want in the matter of life's necessities while engaged in Gospel work, and without material employment.

During the last four years of his life he resided at Cheltenham, and when unable, through the weakness of advancing years, to do much on the platform, he still continued to write. His last series of tractates was entitled "Handfuls of Pasture." As long as possible, he followed his much-loved work of visiting the sick and solitary of the household of faith; but, his wife having died a year or two ago, there came a time when other disciples visited him in sickness and solitude. As the months went by he sent forth his "Handfuls" and circulated his booklets among friends and acquaintances.

The influence of his writings cannot be estimated. He was continually receiving letters from all parts of the world, acknowledging the satisfying character of his teaching on the books of Moses. His first tract in 1843 was on "The Peace of God"; when, in 1896, he despatched a manuscript to his publisher on "The God of Peace," his hand was stayed; and a few months later he entered into rest. His Miscellaneous Writings have been bound up in six volumes, corresponding with his Expositions.

He peacefully fell asleep on November 2, and four days later devout men carried him to his burial in Cheltenham Cemetery. His remains were laid by the side of those of his beloved wife; and in the presence of a company gathered from many quarters, Dr. Wolston, of Edinburgh, discoursed on the burial of Abraham, from Gen. xxv. 8-10, and Heb. xi. 8-10. Before dispersing, the company sang J. N. Darby's beautiful hymn:—

O bright and blessed scenes,
Where sin can never come;
Whose sight our longing spirit weans
From earth, where yet we roam.

St. Chrischona Mission.

IN an annual statement, Pastor Rappard says:— "We began last term with seventy-five students. The fact that all these young men are Christians, desirous of serving the Lord and of living to his honour, accounts for the discipline which is gained without difficulty. Our chief study is the Word of God. Day by day teachers and leaders gather around this precious mine, drawing therefrom the gold of truth. We do not, however, neglect mental culture in different departments of knowledge. Learning how to learn, how to think, how to work, is a great thing. Beside the studying, we lay great stress upon the living. Habits of self-denial, of order, and of manual labour are very useful for future evangelists and missionaries. Hence at least one hour of each day is devoted to such occupations in the house, the kitchen, the farm, and the various workshops.

"Our students come from different countries. This year, as in the last, sixteen brethren left our institution in order to enter upon the spheres of labour assigned to them. Of these, nine are working as evangelists or city missionaries in Germany; four in Switzerland (one of the last named, an Italian by birth, is now an evangelist in the canton of Ticino, where the population speaks Italian); one is engaged to teach and preach in a remote village of Austria; one, himself of the house of Israel, is a missionary to the Jews; and lastly, one has been called to the post of tutor in the Institution itself.

"Besides training men for work in connection with different missions and churches, the Pilgrim Mission carries on a work of evangelisation in Switzerland, Germany, and Slavonia. We employ about forty evangelists, and are happy to say that the work is crowned by manifest tokens of the Lord's blessing. Mission halls built in various localities are centres of light and life. It is most encouraging to note how many of those who before were enemies, turn to the Lord. Yet we long for more power of the Holy Ghost, and we beseech our friends to join with us in earnest prayer that a mighty awakening may be granted. The Home of Rescue, Pilgerhutte, has welcomed a greater number of inmates than in any preceding year. The fact that several men, who had seemed really to benefit by their stay in the Home, afterwards again fell into intemperate habits, has led us to prolong the time of their stay, and we now scarcely ever keep them for a shorter sojourn than one year. We have the joy of knowing of several who have not only forsaken their evil habits, but have received the Lord Jesus into their hearts.

"Our receipts during the year 1895 amounted to £6110. Our expenditure was £6827, leaving us a deficit of £717. It is chiefly the building of new Mission Halls which accounts for this amount, but, as everything has been done as economically as possible, we trust that soon the deficit may be covered.

An enthusiastic meeting in connection with the temperance work of the three London Wesleyan Districts was held in Wesley's Chapel, City-road, on the Monday following Temperance Sunday. [167]

The New York Mission.

THIS combined Gospel effort among the New York and Brooklyn churches is being earnestly sustained, with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey as the leading figures of popular attraction. The New York Herald has the following somewhat quaint leaderette under the heading of

AN ELOQUENT SERMON.

"We certainly ought to keep Mr. Moody right here in New York as a fixture. His preaching and Mr. Sankey's singing have the right kind of electricity in them, and the sort of religion which they preach and chant is needed in wholesale quantities.

"Facts are facts, and here is one which ought to convince the most stubborn. A man went to hear Mr. Moody—well, say a week ago. He had a conscience like a chunk of ice, and he had also one hundred dollars that belonged to the city. Mr. Moody talked with the velocity of a limited express train about the difference between believing and doing. He said in flat-footed fashion, that there isn't much use in trying to get religion until you have made restitution, provided you have something which doesn't belong to you. That was a red-hot shot fired with smokeless powder and it hit the target squarely.

"The man was there, and was evidently the bull's eye of the target. Mr. Moody kindled a fire, and warmed up this man's conscience, and got it into fair working order. At any rate, he sent that hundred dollars to Comptroller Fitch with a gentlemanly note, saying it 'rightfully belongs to the city.' That is good work to do. And a man must have something like a heart as well as a pocket-book who is affected in that way. Mr. Moody preached a powerful sermon on that occasion, but we venture to say that when the unknown sent that money to the city he preached a very much more powerful sermon than Moody ever delivered. The evangelist ought to stay here right along."

Another very interesting public comment on the movement is a short editorial in the N.Y. Independent on

MR. MOODY'S POWER AS A PREACHER.

"While Mr. Moody lives and draws large audiences there will not be wanting proof that people are not tired of Gospel sermons. Mr. Moody preaches the Gospel. There is no doubt about that. He sets forth the fact of sin as uncompromisingly as John the Baptist, and the fact of salvation for the repentant as confidently as Paul or any of the Apostles. His style is homely, but direct. He is sometimes brusque, but he never fails to win. There are few men who have as much power to force a truth upon the convictions. His points cut their way to the heart by their keenness, and he enforces them by a wealth of illustration which leaves no possible chance of confusion.

"It is his sermons to sinners that are most characteristic. There is one, for example, on the well worn text, 'Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.' He makes of this text a battering ram to batter down the defences which the unsaved build around themselves. When he has done, the points are securely lodged in the very citadel of conviction.

"This kind of preaching should not be left to evangelists. It may not be regarded as the highest and most correct style of pulpit work. It is not so smooth and polished, not so dignified and rhetorical as sermons termed grand, splendid, magnificent, but it is apt to be more effective with the masses. It is the masses which we need to reach. The Church is weakest among those with whom it should be strongest. May it not be partly because the sermons are too imaginative, too speculative, too rhetorically refined? There is a rugged strength in Mr. Moody's sermons which grips the mind as with hooks of steel, where the smooth periods of elegant discourse flow like unimpeded water through a sluice."

"During the afternoon service to-morrow in this city (says the New York paper of Nov. 21), Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Newark ministers will summon their congregations to participate in a great religious revival, which, they say, because of the Cooper Union meeting, has already acquired an immeasurable power. It was decided yesterday that services with the one object of securing conversions shall begin to-morrow.

"The meetings which have been held in Cooper Union for two weeks, and were first to be tried for [1108] only one, will be continued through next week, and if the growth of interest is proportionately as great as it has been during the last fortnight, it is by no means unlikely that they may be continued indefinitely. There are at least one hundred churches in this city which will aid in this revival, thirty in Brooklyn, and two hundred in Philadelphia."

The Homes of the Poor.

LOOK into one of them on a wintry day, when, everything without cold and cheerless, it appears far more dismal and dreary within. The room is lower than the roadway, and even when the sun shines, very little light enters. Scantly furnished and gloomy at the best of times, how miserable it is when no money is earned. There is then not a spark of fire in the grate, no food in the cupboard, and the children, with their pale, pinched faces, are telling a sad tale of want. Perhaps the bread-winner will come in after hours of exposure with a mere pittance—himself cold and wet and hungry—and then what is to be done? Such houses are hidden away in the wilderness of London's need, except from those who for Christ's sake lovingly search them out. It is into such as these that the Mildmay Deaconesses carry from day to day not only the message but the ministries of a Saviour's love, and it is for such that help is asked during the long weeks of winter. The following sketches give some idea of the condition in which our poor ones are found.

Up in the roof of one of a uniform line of houses in a London street lives a little old woman of seventy-nine. She has only recently come here from the tiniest room, where only one could move at a time, and is thankful for the change, by which she now has room for her visitor as well as her scanty furniture, and quiet for her Bible. She can look up brightly and say, "The Lord is very good to give me this." "I do want a bit more firing in winter," she said, so simply that it was most pathetic. Her drawn face speaks of intense need at times; still her trust in our Father's goodness is most childlike. "He has never let me want, Miss, and I don't believe He ever will."

"Dinner's ready, come in," calls the mother, and three little children pick themselves out of the gutter, and with eagerness make a rush to the house and watch with impatience while "mother" cuts from a loaf three slices of bread, and, smearing a little dripping on them, hands one to each with the words, "Now, then, be off; you can't have any more." Cold and hungry, they make their way back to their playground, where, with imaginary feasts of mud pies, they try to think they are not so very hungry.

Come with me for a brief hour. We must mount this dark staircase, enter this tiny back room, poorly furnished, but neat and clean. The only occupant is a woman; with bent head she swiftly plies her needle, for bread must be earned, and time is precious. This gross of steels will bring her 3½d. when finished! Surely she was never born to such a life of slavery! True—but a ruined life is behind her. Rescued some five years ago from a state of utter despair, she is now friendless and penniless because by God's grace she resolved to walk in the narrow path.

All help given through the Mildmay Missions is distributed with the utmost care, and many a downcast one takes heart again and is made willing to believe in the love of Jesus by these tokens of the love of his children. We may fearlessly say that nothing comes amiss in the way of relief, for somewhere or other in the thousands of needy homes everything is wanted—food, firing, clothing, doctoring, means of livelihood. (Mrs.) E. CODNER.

Care of Conference Hall Office,
Mildmay Park, London, N.

King's Own Mission, S.E.

DEAR FRIENDS,—I desire to ask your attention to the interesting mission now being carried on at St. James' Hall, Royal-road, Kennington Park. Previously these premises were in the hands of Mr. Zierenberg and his wife, but in consequence of the exposures in Truth, they were compelled to close the building. The hall seats upwards of 1000 persons, and there are besides other large halls and rooms. These premises are situated in a densely-populated neighbourhood, greatly in need of an aggressive work such as this.

The late Mr. J. E. Tresidder, who well knew the needs of this district, earnestly desired us to take the hall for mission-work. After much thought and prayer, and consultation with Mr. Josiah Nix and myself, the hall was taken by Mr. O. L. Heatley, a devout, shrewd, and Spirit-filled man of God. The prejudice in the neighbourhood against the hall at the time was intense, owing to its bad antecedents, but so deeply was Mr. Heatley convinced that the call to this special and difficult work was from God, that he dared not resist it. So, throwing himself upon the Lord, he took the hall, which was opened nearly two years ago.

The first meeting was held in the open air, and consisted of five persons; that meeting weak and unpretentious as it appeared bore fruit. One woman was convinced of sin that morning, was eventually converted, and is a member of the mission to-day. Another was induced to come to the evening service, at which only fifty persons were present; she was convinced of sin, sought and found the Saviour, and is also a member of the mission. Three of her daughters have also found the "Pearl of great price." Last but not least her husband too rejoiced in the knowledge of sin forgiven, and has since gone to see "the King in his beauty."

"Who hath despised the day of small things?" On that Sunday in January, 1895, the membership was nil, organisation nil, workers three. To-day there are upwards of fifty members; seven hundred houses visited weekly by twenty-one consecrated men and women, most of them through the work of the mission; about 200 children attending the Sunday school, with a staff of sixteen teachers and officers. There is a vigorous Band of Hope (senior and junior), an adult Gospel Temperance Society and Good Templar Lodge, an adult Bible-class on Sunday afternoons (men and women), a Women's Meeting on Monday afternoons, a Young People's Bible Band, a Bible-reading every Friday evening, and Prayer-meeting every Sunday morning—all in full swing. Vigorous open-air work is carried on all the year round. Over 200 temperance pledges have been taken.

Many friends have generously supported us from the beginning, but we are anxious to obtain a larger number of annual subscribers. Rev. S. W. Keesey, of the Sutherland Congregational Church, Walworth, and Rev. J. P. Gledstone, of Streatham Congregational Church, are fully acquainted with the requirements of this neighbourhood and the character of the Mission; both join me in commending this work as worthy of the confidence of the Christian public. About £100 is needed to balance the account for the present year.—Yours sincerely, WILLIAM GREEN, Hon. Treas.

Paris Society of Evangelical Missions.

The December issue of the Journal des Missions Évangéliques intimates that in the spring a French pastor will go out to Madagascar to take up the work begun by MM. Langa and Escande. A month or two later a second missionary will go out, primarily to undertake educational work. The Society is in communication with several teachers who may shortly proceed to the island. Reinforcements for Zambesia are being prepared. A prayer Union is being organised on behalf of the Society and mission effort in general.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission.

—On Thursday afternoon a meeting in connection with this Mission was held in Exeter Hall Parlour. The chairman was Rev. R. Douglas, vicar of Bredgar. Rev. H. C. Sturdy, of Dorking, brought forward instances of success attained through medical missionaries being able to heal the sick, and so by this means bring the people to listen to the Gospel message. Dr. Ali Alamuddeen, the doctor in connection with this Mission, spoke on the Druses, and also gave much interesting information with regard to the work being done at Baaklem, the headquarters of this Mission.

Letters to the Editor.

ENGLAND AND ARMENIA.

SIR,—In private life we distrust the repentance which is not accompanied by all possible reparation. National repentance stands on the same ground, and this consideration may explain the doubt of England's sincerity in her present sympathy with the suffering Armenians. During the last three months our wicked pro-Turkish policy of half a century, which culminated in the Cyprus Convention of 1878, and which practically gave over the Armenian people to Mohammedan violence and lust, has been condemned and repudiated in innumerable public meetings and by the Press at large.

The strongest language expressing our sense of the frightful fault committed on behalf of British interests has been accepted as substantially correct, and yet no one in authority has said a word respecting compensation to the surviving remnant of the outraged people. A sum, which would be large in relation to many worthy objects, has no doubt been raised by congregational collections and personal subscriptions, but, in relation to the destitution of half a million of people, whom we have ruined, it is utterly insignificant, and the raising of it is not a national act at all.

It would be interesting to note the calculation of the debt, as far as it could be expressed in figures, which our legislators and leaders of public opinion would recognise, if the question could be quite dissociated from British responsibility and British interests. No one in that case would name anything less than millions. Have we not then moral sense enough among us to supply the lack of leaders who will not take the initiative of naming a sum which would really relieve a nation which is perishing through our fault? If a British officer falls into the hands of brigands, the Prime Minister of England promptly advises the payment of the ransom demanded. Why should not the remnant of the Armenian people be redeemed by money—and by British money—from the bloody but impecunious hands that hold them, if the alternative is leaving them to destruction? The question of the future control of the Turkish tyranny would not thereby be settled, but only simplified. And why should not the nation whose policy has broken up innumerable homes do promptly what is possible to provide new homes for the hapless refugees by the establishment of a colony on an adequate (for we cannot say a liberal) scale?

Public opinion has been ready even for war against the infamous oppressor. Such a war in any imaginable association would be likely to cost 100 millions; the Crimean War cost us twice that sum. The reparation we suggest would be incomparably less expensive than any other which seems possible to penitence or honesty. If, however, we confine ourselves, as a nation, to words of self-humiliation, the settlement of our debt to Armenia will surely be undertaken by the Judge of Nations, and his claim may startlingly correspond with that against a kindred nation on account of slavery, the eradication of which cost a million of lives and 1000 millions sterling.

I submit that to further arouse the national conscience, and to indicate an immediately practicable line of action, some such resolution as the following should be passed by public meetings and especially by our churches and congregations: "That the peculiar responsibility for the sufferings of the Armenian people, now generally acknowledged by the British public, calls for a national act of reparative sacrifice, which should take the form of a parliamentary grant of at least five millions, to be expended partly in the securing of liberty, and partly in the promotion of an Armenian colony on a scale commensurate with the need."—

Yours truly, J. F. B. TYNLING.

The following letter appears in The Manchester Guardian:—

SIR,—Everyone must have been struck with the shrinkage in the dimensions of England since our ignoble failure to help the Armenians has confronted both the world and ourselves. A highly exalted personage lately said to a well-known attaché just home from Constantinople, "Well! what do you think of your chief now?" The latter replied, "I fear I must be excused from answering so pointed a question!" Whereon said the exalted personage, "I will tell you what I think. He has reduced England to the size of Switzerland!" Just so,

Neither geographical area nor big populations count for anything. Bulky China is really but a very small State, and goes for nothing nowadays in influencing the world. On the other hand, the Transvaal has proved to be very large, and in the recent controversy was vastly bigger than England. Armenia at present is much larger than England. Every day Armenia gives evidence of a martyr-spirit which has never been surpassed. Her people face suffering compared with which death in its ordinary forms goes for nothing, rather than deny their Lord. Armenia rises higher and higher in this supreme respect, and is exalted far above our ignoble heads, who could relieve her at a stroke but will not.

I am one of those who refuse to believe in our impotency in these matters. It is our "interests" which cripple us. M. Hanotaux finds them in France, but they are also here. We, too, have "Turkish bonds," and their weight, and other similar weights as well, hinder obvious duty and reduce us to powerless insignificance. Comparing moral reasons with reasons based on "interests," we say that one of them should chase a thousand, and two should put ten thousand to flight. Napoleon told us that "Providence was always on the side of the big battalions." This sounded very wise. But how did Napoleon end?—I am, etc.,

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

DEAR SIR,—There seems to be little fear of your numerous readers' interest in this subject becoming exhausted, so I venture to offer the following reflections, which have not been included in the letters which you have published.

(1) The Prayer is, I think, founded upon the Lord's own recent experience in the wilderness temptation. "He was led up of the Spirit...to be tempted of the Devil," has its unmistakable counterpart in the petitions—"Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the Evil One." (R.V.) The greatest blessing of all temptation is that it leads the soul to God in prayer, and in prayer is victory gained by the faithful soldier, as by his great Captain. (Matt. xxvi. 39.)

"This is my beloved Son" (Matt. iii. 17) was the Father's assurance of love with which, as with a shield, He armed our Champion at his entering the lists. "If thou be the Son of God" was Satan's first fiery dart of suggested doubt, with which he assailed the Lord. How beautifully then does the Prayer open with "Our Father"! Does it not say, "Beloved, now are ye sons of God," and He "hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying 'Abba Father'!" It is the answer of faith to every doubt of Sonship that assails the children of God.

"Hallowed be Thy name"! This note of worship answers the fiend's blasphemous suggestion that worship should be offered to himself (iv. 9).

"Thy kingdom come." Had Christ given way before the offer of all the kingdoms of the world (iv. 8) (which shall become his in course of time) now made by the tempter, the kingdom would really have been that of Satan, not of God. But He wanted no glory other, or sooner, than that which his Father should give Him. "Thy" is emphatic here again.

"Thy will be done"! It was this spirit of lowly obedience, for "He learned obedience by the things which He suffered," this submissive patience under trial, which had enabled our blessed Lord to refuse the tempting offer of bread in his hunger, and of glory in exchange for lonely poverty. So He gives us the prayer, which had been first his own, as power against all our self-pleasing. Its echo was heard from his own lips years afterwards, when once again the power of darkness strove mightily with Him. "O my Father, if this cup may not pass from Me, 'Thy will be done'!" (Matt. xxvi. 41-42.)

"Give us this day," etc. It was with the offer of stones to be made into bread, that the deadly battle opened. But the Lord was willingly dependent upon his Father, and "if a son ask bread will he give him a stone?" (vii. 9). To perform that simple miracle would have been an act of insurrection. It would have proved discontent with the Father's discipline of love in trial. Hence we are taught to pray for daily supplies as gifts from God, not as ours by right of labour.

The following petition alone of the eight clauses has no counterpart in the Great Teacher's experience. For, blessed be God, He had prevailed in this great struggle with the author of sin, and needed no forgiveness (Heb. vii. 26, 27). But knowing how feebly we should follow his example, how certainly we should at some point be defeated in the holy war, in infinite grace He gives us leave to seek the Father's pardon (1 John i. ii.). This petition in the prayer is enough of itself to condemn the too prevalent claims of some in our day to have committed no conscious sin, or even to have parted with all propensity to commit sin.

The final petitions we have referred to already. It is this obvious connection between the temptation and the prayer that satisfies me that the latter is the precious treasure and privilege of all believers, dispensational arguments notwithstanding. For as the Lord's temptation and triumph are used in the Epistle to the Hebrews as the foundation of his Priesthood and resultant succour of every tempted child, so the prayer that He teaches as sweetest fruit of that dark hour, gives the soul its utterance in every like distress.

(2) Now, if I presume not too far on your space, let me show the wonderful result of what I may call the symmetrical analysis of the prayer. Dr. Bullinger has shown in his book on the Psalms, how frequently the meaning of the passage is elucidated by the order and arrangement of its clauses, not only in the poetical parts, but also in the Gospels. He does not refer to it, and yet there is no more remarkable instance of this than in the prayer of prayers.

It consists of two great parts. Four clauses in the first and four in the second. The first four relate to God, his worship, his kingdom, and his will. The second four relate to God's children, their need, their sin, their weakness, and their great enemy.

Now, arranging these in parallel columns, each pair is found to be related, thus:—

- | | |
|-------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. A. Our Father, etc. | 8. A. The Evil One. |
| 2. B. Hallowed, etc. | 7. B. Lead us not into temptation. |
| 3. C. Thy Kingdom, etc. | 6. C. Forgive us, &c. |
| 4. D. Thy will be done. | 5. D. Give us...our daily bread. |

Thus the first clause corresponds with the last, the second with last but one, the third with the last but two, and the fourth with the fifth.

A.A. How remarkable it is that beginning with the name of God, the prayer should end with that of Satan! We flee from the one, we run to the Other.

B.B. The hallowing of God's name—that is, worship—is now shown to be the object of holiness in our life.

C.C. The throne of righteousness hereafter, and the throne of grace now.

D.D. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," i.e., by doing his will. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me" (John iv. 34). Time and space would fail me to enlarge, but the careful student will observe how immensely rich the store of truth and instruction is that lies in the symmetry of the prayer when fully explored.

(3) As to the condition of our Father's forgiveness for the slips and faults of his loved children being the maintenance of a like spirit in our own heart towards offenders, I have looked through the Epistles to the Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and 1 & 2 Thess. this day, and have found the like principle set forth in them all. It is not the forgiveness of the rebel, it is the pardon of the child. The former rests on the blood of the cross and is wholly free and wholly unconditional to faith, the latter is strictly conditional upon confession and a gracious spirit to others. The former is a matter of union—the latter of communion and immunity from chastisement (1 Cor. xi. 31, 32).

(4) Finally, is not the true meaning of prayer in the name of Christ most truly set forth in the letter of Mr. Horace Noel in your last issue, and does not the Lord's Prayer become in this view the most literal "prayer in the name of Christ"? that is possible, for He actually gave us the prayer and commanded us to pray it? "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name," relates to the time previous to His coming forth as our teacher and Lord.—Yours truly in Him. GEO. F. THURNE.

Rev. D. M. Cameron has been warmly welcomed home from America, where he has been evangelising during the past three months. He started work in Montreal in the first week in August, and after a visit to Northfield, went on to Hartford, Kingston, Brooklyn, Ploughkeepsie, Rochester, Belows Falls, Niagara, and Philadelphia, closing with a week's mission in the Y.M.C.A., Montreal. Much blessing, it is stated, has resulted from these labours of this well-known evangelist.

THE BOOK WORLD.

American Sacred Poesy.*

Those acquainted with "The Poet's Bible" will know that Mr. Horder is no 'prentice hand, but brings to his task both literary skill and wide knowledge. That he has spared no pains in his attempt "to give a fuller presentation of the Sacred Verse of America than has previously existed," is abundantly evident, and we think he may justly claim success in this endeavour. The book abounds in passages of true poetry; the names of some of the writers represented ensure a high degree of literary beauty; whilst the fact that many other names are comparatively new to English readers is a feature not without its advantages. The list is, indeed, remarkably comprehensive; and the copious notes appended to the compilation, conclusively point to painstaking research.

The selections from Ray Palmer, Bryant, Whittier, Longfellow, and others, show much discrimination. One of Whittier's, "At Last," though not as well known as earlier poems, seems to us fully equal to any, and we cannot resist quoting a few stanzas from it:—

Be near me when all else is from me drifting:
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine
And kindly faces to my own uplifting,
The love which answers mine.
I have but Thee, my Father; let Thy Spirit
Be with me then to comfort and uphold;
Nor gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.
Suffice it if—my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through Thy abounding grace—
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place.
Some humble door among Thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows for ever through heaven's green expansions
The river of Thy peace.

In stanzas such as these the secret springs of devout and musical song are touched.

The feature in the volume which pains us is the strange mixture of what is good and true with what is, to our thinking, wholly unscriptural. We protest against including in a book of sacred poems, pieces which seem to us to be only "sacred" in the sense in which pagan relics or worship may be described as "sacred." A compiler is at perfect liberty to reject that which is unsound and indefensible. Whereas his readers may not always be able to "take forth the precious from the vile," he is in a position to do it for them. No doubt a compiler would feel himself bound to represent, in a fair way, the authors whom he lays under contribution; but has he not an equally grave responsibility towards those who may, rightly or wrongly, accept the estimate of a Christian minister, and one who claims to have given the best, and "after a careful weighing of reasons?"

With pleasure we read on p. 227 some simple but devout and stirring verses on "The Inspiration of the Spirit." Turning the very next page, we find two poems which, without doubt, are intended to encourage, and even suggest the language of prayers for the dead; a practice we should regard as being without any Scriptural warrant whatever.

Quite as gravely we object to other parts; to the too ready use of the word "Calvary" as applied to our human woes and anxieties; and, perhaps most of all, to such suggestions as are, we think, contained in the following:—

If He could doubt on his triumphant cross,
How much more I, in the defeat and loss
Of seeing all my selfish dreams fulfilled,
Of having lived the very life I willed,
Oh! bring all that I desired to be?
My God, my God! Why hast thou forsaken me?

We almost tremble to transcribe in such a connection words which, if they mean anything at all to us, surely mean something incomparably more than that, and diverse from it! We can never lift human nature by lowering that which is Divine.

Notable Scotsmen.†

MANY of the sons of Caledonia have had the gift of somehow impressing their character and career on the annals of their nation. At this time when there is a remarkable renaissance of distinctively Scottish literature, Messrs. Oliphant and Co. have done well to launch this series of short but well-written monographs of some of those north countrymen who have left an enduring mark on the life or literature of their time. The series has already made a place for itself in the attention of the reading world, and we do not wonder at it. The biographies are brightly written, without needless detail, and they come from the pens of those who combine knowledge with sympathy. The subjects being chosen from varied departments of life, the whole will form an admirable transcript of national character and achievement.

Fittingly enough the series begins with that gifted son of letters, "Thomas Carlyle," whose eventful career and immortal writings finds ample justice at the hands of Mr. H. C. Macpherson. In the closing sentence of an eminently readable book Carlyle is aptly described as a modern John the Baptist, and preacher of the great doctrines of repentance, righteousness, and retribution. "Allan Ramsay," wigmaker and pastoral poet, has a capable and candid interpreter in Mr. Oliphant Smeaton. The next two volumes on "Hugh Miller" and "John Knox" we have already noticed, and here commend them anew to all lovers of noble and courageous Christian men. "Robert Burns," by Gabriel Setoun, will be read with eager interest, for no Scotchman of modern times has embalmed his name and his work so deeply in the heart of his countrymen all the world over, as the wayward child of poetic genius, the best of whose ballads are a never-failing well-spring of social enjoyment. Mr. Setoun extenuates nothing, but sets nothing down in uncharity or malice in his estimate of Burns. In "The Balladists," by John Geddie, the interest is of course dispersed, but it affords a treat to all lovers of popular minstrelsy.

The two latest issues of this capital series have much to recommend them from the religious and philanthropic standpoint. "Sir James Y. Simpson," by his daughter, Eve Blantyre Simpson, is a biographic gem, telling a famous tale of medical devotion and discovery that the world will never forget while pain exists within its borders; and telling it in a fashion in keeping with the joyous, masterful nature of the man. The story of "Richard Cameron," of Covenanting renown, is of necessity not so well rounded, but Professor Herkless makes his hero and the stirring events of his time to stand out in clear relief. Scotland reaps to-day the blessed fruit of the fidelity to conscience maintained by the Covenanters, too often at the cost of their lives.

We ought to add that the "Famous Scots" series is well printed and presented by the publishers, whose enterprise we hope will be appreciated. The books are marvellously cheap at the price.

ANOTHER BIBLE HELP.

The latest volume of Bible Helps is The Illustrated Bible Treasury, the work of many scholars in Europe and America, which has been prepared under the editorship of Rev. William Wright, D.D., and is issued by Nelson & Sons (7s. 6d.). Though designed to meet the needs of preachers and teachers, the volume is not below the attention of the most profound Bible students. For preachers and teachers, however, it is a thesaurus at once rich in contents and admirable in arrangement. After a section devoted to general information regarding the Bible in its original tongues and English translations, there are chapters on the various books of the Old and New Testaments. Then follow sections on chronology and history, the geography and physiography, antiquities and customs of Bible lands and Bible times, as well as information regarding the apocryphal books which are now so frequently quoted for the light they throw on historical and ethnic problems.

These subjects fill one-half of the goodly volume of 700 pages. The writers who have had a hand in the work include Colonel Conder, Canon Tristram, Archdeacon Sinclair, and Professors A. H. Sayce, James Robertson, Willis J. Beecher, M. B. Riddle, Marcus Dods, George Adam Smith, J. Rendel Harris, W. M. Ramsay, B. B. Warfield, and J. F. McCurdy. These are men of various tastes and tendencies, but the tasks allocated to them, and the limitations and conditions of the enterprise, have afforded no opportunity for the exhibition of speculative opinions and disquieting views. The editor has accordingly succeeded in placing in the hands of thoughtful students a work of positive value singularly free from the controversial spirit.

The second half of the book is devoted to a concordance to the Authorised and Revised Versions, combined with a subject-index and dictionary of Scripture proper names. This combination of several lists under one alphabet has resulted in a very serviceable work of reference; by the use of distinctive types anything like confusion is successfully avoided. The reading matter in this book is accompanied by as many as 350 illustrations, archaeological and topographical, beautifully "brought up," all of which will be welcome to the student. There is also an indexed Bible Atlas.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Christmas Arrows. The "Quiver" Annual will win its welcome in many family circles by reason of its bright pictures, and its seasonable and attractive contents. (Cassell & Co. 6d.)

Early Days, volume for 1896. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This is a capital book for the little ones. There is instruction as well as entertainment, and all within easy reach of youthful minds.

Hand and Heart, edited by H. Somerset Bullock, M.A. (2s. "Home Words" Office), is a useful paper, pleasantly written. There are many short stories, also high-toned talks and sketches. The illustrations are in keeping with the excellent letterpress.

The Guide. Volume for 1896. The bound parts of this young man's paper, provide an abundance of excellent reading. There are useful articles on "Great Books," thoughtful "Letters to a Young Christian," and sketches (by Professor Ferguson, of Glasgow) of "Men I Have Heard." These are also biographical papers on "Pioneers of Progress" (with portraits), poems concerning Covenant times, spiritual meditations, and literary selections. (2s. London, Nisbet & Co.; Glasgow, William Love.)

When Hearts are Young. By Deas Cromarty. (2s. 6d. Boudon, Henrietta-street.) This is a simple but very pretty Scotch tale. It offers no very complicated plot, but the characters fall into line naturally and with an easy grace which absorbs the reader's interest well to the end. It is written, too, with a literary style of no mean order, as will be inferred from such as happy phrases as the following:—"When the wish of your heart comes to the door and smiles at you, and begs to be let in, you cannot say much." "A lone cottage on one side of a burn seems to have nothing to say to the farm steading on the other side; away go burn and road as if in haste to reach some livelier spot." "A long hollow that crept round Meall Mor in utter silence, not daring to disturb the giant." "Sketching under an umbrella which kept responding to the flirtation of a north-west breeze."

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Holiday Tasks. By H. M. Debenham. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) A series of cleverly-conceived fairy tales, which will no doubt wield a charm on the imaginations of our young readers.

Nobly Planned. By Miss B. Manwell. (1s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) The story of three girls who have to fight their way in the world, whose brother goes sadly and terribly wrong, and who by loving patience and prayer is at length restored.

Manor Coombe. By M. S. Conrie. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The trials and fortunes of Ella Elphinstone, the orphan niece, will interest our young people, showing how a simple desire to do her every-day duties as a little Christian won a great reward.

The First False Step. By R. G. Soans. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Schoolboys will find this a most interesting book, while parents may rest assured of the excellency of its tone and purpose. How one sin necessitates another is well illustrated in a story which is full of incident.

Horice; or, Not all Gold that Glitters. By Mr. L. Shorey. (G. Stoneman.) A girl's story, telling of a young married couple whose happiness is wrecked by intemperance, a long sorrow, and a final repentance. It may help to warn young women to be careful as to the habits of their life companion.

The Christmas issue of "The Girl's Own Paper"—Our Christmas Wreath (R.T.S. 6d.)—comprises an attractive array of seasonable stories, music, pictures, puzzles, and articles. The companion publication for boys is bright and diverting, and bears the title, The Boy's Own Paper Special Christmas Number.

Paul, a Little Mediator, by Maud E. Butler, tells the story of an orphan boy. It is a book that should be welcomed into Christian homes. It introduces, in narrative form, the earliest truths which Christian parents tell their children. A Flight with the Swallows, or Little Dorothy's Dream, is a pleasant story for children by Emma Marshall. (9d. each. Partridge & Co.)

Black Gull Rock. A story for girls. (Nelson & Sons.) A vivid and stirring tale of a maid compelled to live among Cornish smugglers and wreckers, whose misdeeds she loathes. At the risk of her life she defeats one of their vile plots, and is at length delivered, when all ends well. Jock o' th' Beach (Nelson, 1s. 6d.), is a companion story for the boys, full of daring adventures. A child saved from a wreck, grows up strong, sturdy, and God-fearing, spoiling the schemes of lawless men, and rendering good service to Queen and country.

* THE TREASURY OF AMERICAN SACRED SONG. Selected and edited by Rev. W. Garrett Horder. (Henry Frowde, 10s. 6d.)

The Book World.

Sunday School Lessons. Fifth series. By Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D. (1s. Eyre and Spottiswoode.) Here are outlines of Bible studies for the young for fifty-two weeks. The subjects selected give opportunity for Gospel instruction in a form suited for youthful minds.

The Fireside Christmas Number is entitled Goodwill to Men (6d.), and it is quite a budget of sketches and articles from well-known pens, and amply illustrated. Two other bright annuals are Peace on Earth and The Red Quill (1d. each), which are extras of "The Day of Days" and "Home Words" magazines respectively. (Home Words Office.)

Faithful Words for Old and Young, edited by H. Forbes Witherby, is a little monthly of sterling worth. The bound volume containing this year's parts has, among other features, "Sidelights on Scripture," based on the results of research in the East; "The Story of the Jesuits," told in twelve articles full of facts of great significance and urgent importance; and some very useful Bible-class Outlines. (1s. 6d. Holness.)

The Missionary Martyr of Thibaw is an addition to the useful series of "Popular Biographies" issued by Messrs. Partridge and Co. (1s. 6d.) Its title-page describes it as "a brief record of the life and consecrated missionary labours of Charles William Lambert." Mr. Lambert was formerly on the staff of the China Inland Mission, and during the latter five years of his brief career laboured independently in Mandalay and at Thibaw, in a remote part of Upper Burmah, where he was murdered in May, 1895. The narrative of his missionary efforts is largely made up from his own diaries and letters; it will be read with interest by many who knew him, and will doubtless stimulate some to emulate him in serving God.

Sowing and Reaping. By D. L. Moody. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) Few of Mr. Moody's public discourses have been more characteristic of his peculiar genius as an evangelist, or more widely used to arouse a spirit of anxious inquiry in the hearers than those on the solemn subject of "Sowing and Reaping." These utterances have been amplified and revised by the author, and are now published in book form. Needless to say, the exposition and application of a fundamental law in God's universe are here very impressively set forth. If the book can be got into the hands of careless ones we should expect it to be the channel, by the power of God's Spirit, of saving blessing to many a reader. We commend it as a gift book to unconverted friends.

N.E. London Gospel Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was lately held at Earlsam Hall, Kingsland, Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD, of Wimbledon, presiding. The meeting was largely attended, and fully representative of the various centres of work, including the Homes at Lancing-on-Sea.

After a season of prayer and praise, Mr. CHORLEY gave an account of his twenty-sixth year's stewardship and thirty-first year of the work. While no particular developments, beyond the opening of a new mothers' and infants' home at Lancing, had to be reported, yet quiet, earnest plodding had been pursued day by day. Faithful service had met its reward in the salvation of some at each centre; while specially encouraging results followed a fortnight's mission at Kingsland. Many of the happy converts were present that evening. The report also spoke of several of the older scholars having confessed Christ and joined the assembly during the year. The representatives from Lancing were ready to bear witness to the same happy results of the testimony to the Gospel among the poor ones staying at the seaside homes of the Mission.

Much regret was expressed that Mr. Chorley has been for some time in a weak state of health. Some of the friends of the Mission are suggesting a sea voyage, but he feels the claims of the work and his partial improvement must prevail for the present. Among those who added their testimony to the value of the work were the chairman, Mr. John McCall, Ned Wright, Mr. Robert Campbell, and others.

From the financial statement read, the receipts from all sources amounted to £2738 14s. 9½d., and the expenses £2816 14s. 4½d. But for a balance from the year before, the account must have closed on the wrong side. The interesting report would be gladly sent to any enquiring, upon application to the director, Mr. Wm. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

Among Continental Jews.

FROM the Occasional Record of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, we gather that there are some wide-open doors for evangelistic work among the Hebrews of the Continent. The Mission not only carries on a varied work in London, but assists effort in West Germany, where there is so much need of sympathetic interest in Jews and concern for their highest welfare. In August last the director (Herr C. T. Lipshytz) made a tour through Germany, Austria, and Poland, and in a sketch of the same he describes deeply-interesting experiences and conversations. We make some extracts:—

"During my stay in Budapest, I was visited at the hotel by many Jews, who did not like to speak to me in the streets. Both when thus engaged, and when making calls in the Jewish quarter, I was deeply impressed with the fact that God's Spirit is working among the people. My books were readily received, and in some cases asked for, by interested Jews. In the distinctly Jewish quarter of the city, I found myself among some of the fanatical class, who pronounced all manner of curses upon me. While in Budapest I paid a visit to the venerable Rabbi Lichtenstein, and much enjoyed his Christian fellowship.

"At Vienna, one family with whom last year, after great opposition, I just managed to leave a Bible, joined in hearty greetings. I ascertained that they had read the Book, and that it had done its work; their eyes had been opened, and they had realised their need of Jesus, the Redeemer of Jew and Gentile. The lady of the house remarked: 'Little did I think when you called on us last year that the book which you left contained such glorious things. Now we read it every day, and in times of trouble we are often comforted by it.' Similar words of thankfulness were spoken by many who in former tours had accepted books and tracts; and I was greatly encouraged thereby.

"At Prague, my heart was grieved when visiting in the Ghetto. This is a great field altogether unoccupied. Throughout Bohemia and Moravia there are large Jewish populations without a single witness for Christ. Leaving Prague, I went to Leipzig, where I gave away tracts as in other places. My tour began on July 30 and ended September 14. I spoke many times in places of worship and in the precincts of synagogues; my conversations were in many cases long, sometimes quite animated. I am glad to know that the Lord stood by me in many an anxious moment."

The Needs of France.

IF the spiritual needs of "the Lady of Nations," beloved by many and admired by all, are being laid upon many hearts just now, may we not take it that God has a special purpose to bless her? We "know not what to pray for as we ought," so that when we are prompted to such a prayer, which must, by its nature, be according to God's will, we may surely believe that it is inspired by the Holy Spirit because "He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God."

We desire to see the French brought to the Saviour. Experience has shown that every great evangelistic movement has been ushered in by (1) Believing and persistent prayer; (2) Revival within the Church.

In France, as in England and elsewhere, the great need is that the Church, through each individual member, be restored to love and faithfulness to the Church's Head and full communion with Him. We cannot estimate our indebtedness to the Huguenots of France. Perhaps in the near future we may need and obtain help from them against the snares of Rome.

May I draw attention to some special religious conditions, opportunities, and needs in France just now, the knowledge of which may guide to intelligent prayer:—

CONDITIONS.—(a) Great material prosperity. (b) Secular education. (c) An increase in drinking habits and depraved literature in the lowest classes. (d) A decided reaction from infidelity towards religion (especially among the educated classes), which is turning almost exclusively to the profit of Roman Catholicism. This is attributed by some to the low spiritual state of Protestantism and its divisions, but is probably due to (e) "Modernism" in Protestant pulpits, especially doubts cast on the deity of Christ, and the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures (happily by no means universal, but still too prevalent). (f) A spirit of patriotism, so intense that, when it does not take the place of a religion in itself (which practically it often does) exalts Roman Catholicism as the national religion of France, as opposed to the Protestantism of her traditional foes, England and Germany, and excites opposition to foreigners, especially English, evangelising either in France or her colonies. This feeling is shared even by Protestants, though, of course, not by all.

OPPORTUNITIES.—(a) Many devoted and thoroughly orthodox pastors, preachers, and other Christian workers. (b) The whole machinery of the McAll Mission, which only needs to be extended and worked more and more by the French themselves to become a universal blessing. (c) The immense colonies of France, second only to those of Great Britain, besides the two vast mission-fields of Basutoland and Barotseland which the Paris Evangelical Mission has made its own. The genius of the French tends naturally to centralisation, and it is an immense boon that instead of a variety of rival societies, these two great ones divide the Home and Foreign Mission-field, and are supported by members of all denominations.

NEEDS.—(a) The old Gospel. (b) Intelligent study of God's Word. (c) The awakening of a missionary spirit.

Some of the things we should pray for most in regard to France are that—(1) Every believer may be led to feel his or her personal responsibility for bringing the Gospel to the unsaved. (2) That young men and women, especially of the educated and wealthy class, may be led to offer themselves for mission work. At present only a few missionaries of the Paris Evangelical Mission are actual French citizens. (3) That their fathers, and especially their mothers, may be willing to let them go (the greatest hindrance of all). (4) Finally, that all believers may be drawn more and more to the Lord "to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, even Jesus who delivered us from the wrath to come."

Aggressive Work.—24.

WHEN on holidays during the summer I came across an elderly Roman Catholic priest, who was also on holiday. Priests are not usually ready to converse upon religious subjects, but this man was, and so we talked for a considerable time, and afterwards parted quite friendly. We met again a day or two later, and continued our conversation, and for several consecutive days we met and talked, until at length he said, "May I ask the object of your conversations with me? Do you think you are likely to change my views? for if you do, allow me to inform you that it is quite impossible, and should you have this upon your mind our intimacy must cease at once, therefore I bid you good morning."

I had found him extremely ignorant of his Bible, if he had one, for he knew literally nothing about it. There was, however, one thing he rejoiced in knowing, and that was he belonged to "the true church," and was satisfied. I had quoted and explained many passages of Scripture, which he was unable to question or controvert, therefore one cannot help but hope that in some way or another good would result. This man was a fair sample of a large proportion of the Roman Catholic clergy, and no wonder the people are so painfully ignorant of the way of life.

I met another of these priests during a previous year, but he was a Jesuit and an educated and gentlemanly man. In the past thirty years I have talked to quite a multitude of priests, but found none so conversant with Scripture as this man. We saw each other frequently, and each time our conversation turned upon the Bible, and it was astonishing how far we agreed. Of course, upon some points we quite disagreed, yet we always separated in a friendly spirit. At first he talked as though he were conscious of superiority, owing, no doubt, to his priestly office, but as he found I was able to meet text with text, and at the same time take the initiative, he gradually accepted a lower position, until at length he evaded me by crossing the street or disappearing in a doorway when he saw me coming. Evidently he had had enough of the question, and must have given me up as rather a hopeless case. It is somewhat difficult to know how such a man can remain a priest, and one cannot help but feel sorry for him; but I suppose the curriculum through which such men pass is so effective, and Romanism as a system is so blinding and enslaving, that not many have the moral courage to come out and be separate from the accursed thing.

Two well-dressed young men, strangers to each other, sat upon a form in one of our parks. I took an opportunity of placing myself between them, and commenced conversation about the weather, etc. Then I asked if they were both on the way to the Better Land, where there would be no bad weather? I said I had been on that way myself for many years and rejoiced in it. One of them soon owned that he had been on that way seventeen years. I asked how the Lord had brought him in, and he explained that one day he was looking through a parlour window which was partially frosted. Right opposite was a wall with posters upon it, and the poster he saw was a Salvation Army advertisement. He said to himself, "That is about the last place I would visit, as I don't believe in them." However, in the evening he met the Salvation Army itself, marching through the streets with brass band and singers. He was arrested there and then, and following them along the streets, entered their mission hall with the rest. That night he was convinced of sin and soundly converted to Christ, and had since remained a follower of the Saviour.

I then told him how the Lord brought me in thirty years ago, and turning to the other young man, I asked what he thought of all this. He was silent but thoughtful. I spoke to him for some time. He took the booklet I offered him, and gave me his address for me to send him Dr. Mackay's book "Grace and Truth," but I have not heard of him since, although it was a hopeful case.

D. M. DRYSDALE.

A Rich Man's Gospel.

1. Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth.
2. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation (answer) for our sins.
3. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.
4. But whose hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, nor in tongue, but in deed and in truth.
5. Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.
6. How much owest thou unto my Lord?
7. Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and your spirit, which are God's.
8. Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature.
9. How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?
10. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.
11. Then shall the King answer and say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, YE DID IT UNTO ME.

Children in Armenia.

AN OCCASIONAL PAPER of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society says:—

The massacres left some 20,000 orphans in Asia Minor, the overwhelming majority wofully, utterly destitute. New and special steps for these desolate children have been taken, and loudly call for efficient support.

Marash.—Mrs. Lee, wife of Rev. L. O. Lee, of the American Mission, has fully commenced a new orphanage for fifty of the martyrs' orphans, and is very happy in housing and providing for these little ones.

Oorfa.—Miss Shattuck, American missionary, has received up to the present time eighty orphans, housed in three different places in the city. "Every one of these children represents a slain father."

Van.—Dr. G. C. Reynolds, of the American Mission, two months ago, began a new orphanage in the city of Van for fifty; these were soon gathered, and then began the sad task of refusing scores of other applicants, half-naked and starving.

West Broussa.—The American missionaries in this city were preparing to start a similar work for martyrs' orphans when the outbreak in Constantinople delayed their proceedings. The proposal has been resumed and is now in hand.

All these orphanages are intended to meet the extraordinary emergency that has arisen for the relief of thousands of pitiful children, and appeal to the tenderest emotions of every Christian heart.

Copies of the paper may be had from Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

The Christian Lifeboat Crew held its monthly muster on Tuesday week at Ratcliff Highway Welcome Home. The address given by Pastor Fuller Gooch on saving souls and lives, based on Luke vi. 9 and ix. 51, will long be remembered by those who were present. Miss Child, after giving out the text for the month, "Walk before Me," gave an encouraging account of the past month's work, the special feature for praise being the opening of the new branch in Barking-road, which is already doing a good work. Prayer was asked for the forthcoming special meetings in connection with the unloading of the Christmas boat, also for the "free suppers," which it is hoped Miss Child will be able to give during the cold weather.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

THE annual gathering of the friends and supporters of the Strangers' Rest for Sailors, Ratcliff Highway, is always a reunion of earnest workers. It was such on Friday last week, but as the weather was very wet, in succession to several days of damp and rain, the assemblage was unusually small. Yet such as they were, the meetings were hearty, and enjoyed by those who were privileged to attend them.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. J. E. MATHIESON presided, and in the opening devotions Tibet and Zanzibar were specially remembered before the Lord, particular mention being made of Miss Annie Taylor and Miss Ferguson, who are already on the borders of the Great Closed Land, and of Miss Bussell, who is about to join the brave little pioneer party. The Chairman read a portion of Psalms cvii., and in some appropriate words spoke of the sailors and their needs. He remarked upon the fact that the Strangers' Rest was originated nineteen years ago, and recalled with interest his own share in the work along with the late Reginald Radcliffe and Miss Macpherson. He emphasised the great value of mission halls, and urged the workers to be faithful in days of darkness and indifference.

The hon. sec., Mr. J. T. ISAAC, gave an account of the work done at the Rest during the past year. He said the attendance of sailors had not been so large as formerly; for sailors do not come to London in the numbers they once did, and steamers carry larger cargoes and fewer men, who are for the most part Lascars. In other ways things have changed, and the men are now more promptly paid off, and get to their homes more quickly than in years gone by. Yet during the year 956 meetings were held in the Rest, attended by 11,680 men, who had come under sound Gospel influence and had taken good literature to the ends of the earth. The workers paid about 1200 visits to the premises during the year, and all out of love to the work. The Rest had been used by sailors as a correspondence centre, and the other advantages of the institution had gladly been accepted. The blessing which has attended the work was also cause for thankfulness.

Dr. NEATEY delivered a brief address on John xii. 2, 3, speaking of service, communion, and worship, and showing their connection and relation. Dr. GARRON spoke on Phil. ii. 9-11, dwelling upon the assured victory of Christ, and finding in the passage prospect of a wondrous revival of religion, when multitudes of knees shall bow, and tongues confess that Jesus Christ is Lord. On the one hand, he met with persons who were content that their own souls were saved; on the other hand, he met with many whose thoughts were filled with the expected return of the Lord—to-morrow or the day after. Personally, he believed the next thing to expect was a religious awakening on a scale beyond any past experience. It is "evil men" who, according to the Apostolic prediction, are "waxing worse and worse," not the Church of God; so he was looking for grand things before the Lord's return. A brief address was also delivered by Rev. GEORGE TURNER, who spoke of the tendencies of our day, showing the sad influence of wealth and luxury upon Christian people.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. HERBERT W. TAYLOR. After a season of prayer, an address was delivered by Rev. T. GEORGE, B.D., on Psalms cvii. 30. Pastor FULLER GOOCH followed, taking Rest as an acrostic, and speaking on Renewal, Energy, Strength, and Trust. At the close of this instructive meditation, the company partook of the Lord's Supper.

As usual, Mr. ISAAC appealed for sympathy in the tree, and asked for gifts for the Sailors' Christmas tree and special treats. The articles needed are mufflers, scarves, socks, helmets, housewives, steering gloves, plum puddings, and other items for the feast, and articles of clothing suitable for sailors' families. Address, Mr. J. T. Isaac, Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E.

Rest in Toil,

Self-ease is pain; the only rest
Is labour for a worthy end,
A toil that gains what it yields,
And scatters to its own increase,
And hears, while sowing outward fields,
The harvest song of inward peace.

Village Tales.

V.—TOM RODD'S "TAMING SICKNESS."

TOM RODD was "the village blacksmith," and he made as fine a figure of a man as one could ever wish to see. At an early age (he was not quite thirty now) he had married Mary Stillwell, an honest, hard-working girl from the next village, who, just after her first baby was born, yielded herself to the power of Christ's love and salvation, and was thenceforth "a new creature," a changed woman.

"What's this change that's come upon thee, lass?" demanded Tom, "'Tis not to my liking, and I'll none of it."

"But, Tom, my husband, you took me 'for better, for worse,' and you'll find this is 'for better,' because 'tis for God," quoth Mary, growing bold as she felt the need for boldness.

"Let me be the judge o' that," said Tom. "If 'tis for God then 'tis not for me, your husband, and you act against your marriage vows."

"I know I promised to love and honour 'ee, Tom, and I'll do it as far as lies in my power, by God's grace—you see if I don't," said Mary.

Tom burst into a roar of ironical laughter at this declaration.

"You're none so foolish, I do declare, to go and leave out the one word that's worth more'n the other two together—you promised to 'obey,' my lass, and that's what it'll have to come to—you must obey me."

Mary was staggered at this view of the case. She did not want to shirk her wifely duty, and obedience had come so easily to her that it had never chafed her, and she had never questioned it. But now—now that Tom wanted her to give up her Lord, she began to wonder if that was what obedience meant. Then she thought: "I've a mind to go and ask Miss Priscilla. She is that good and kind, and such a Christian, she'd tell me my duty plain." But she had no need to call. Miss Priscilla looked in at the smithy about a new kitchen poker Tom was making her.

"Now, ma'am, is a grand opportunity for you! Mary has set herself up against her husband—her lawful husband, ma'am—and I look to you, as bein' a power among us, to put her right," said Tom.

This was very diplomatic of Tom; but Miss Priscilla had not known him for many years—years of patient effort and prayer on his behalf—without also knowing the point at issue. She had been the earthly instrument used to bring Mary to a knowledge of Christ, as her Saviour from sin, and she foresaw troubles ahead for the young mother. But she had resolved to wait until they should present themselves before speaking of them to Mary.

"Well, I shall be calling on your wife presently, and will sound her on the subject," was her reply to Tom; "you know, Tom, she has her Saviour to serve first of all, and you cannot yet help her to do so."

Miss Priscilla left the smithy and was soon in Mary's comfortable kitchen, where the young mother was ironing the week's wash.

"Oh, Miss Priscilla, I felt such an orphan! But you comin' in has made me happy again—I've so much I'd like to ask you, please." Whereat Mary told out all her difficulty, and presently she and her friend knelt to "take it to the Lord in prayer."

They prayed aloud, and Tom was very tenderly and lovingly handled in their petitions. Meanwhile, the blacksmith himself stood outside the open kitchen window, and hearing what was asked, he vowed to himself: "Just to spite 'em both I'll go and get drunk, that I will! 'Tis what I've never done, but I'll do it now, and I'll tell Mary 'tis what she drives me to. That'll frighten her into obedience!"

That evening Tom stood in the bar of "The Plough and Harrow," and, to his own shame, drank until he felt it was time to be going home if he meant to go there without help from others.

"Well, good-night!" he said to the landlord. "I'm none so drunk but I can feel ashamed of myself; but 'tis the tamin' o' the shrew." As he stepped out into the cool night air he felt as if someone smote him across the eyes, and a sensation of being lifted from the ground made him turn round and, as he thought, exclaim, "Now, then, s-shan't p-put up wi' that, you know!"

He began to feel happier than he ever remembered being in his life before; all responsibility seemed to be lifted from his shoulders—no, he wouldn't go home yet, he would take a long walk—he would—but at this point thought became difficult, he only wanted to walk very quickly, but could not manage it. In some way he had reached a distance from home, and unfamiliar shapes rose up about him; he grew unhappy and quarrelsome, and fought these shadows, only to find that each blow levelled him in some unaccountable way with the road. Stop! he must pursue that phantom! On, on, on, until—crash! and thought, and vision, and motion, and feeling are all at an end.

"Well, what's the meanin' o' this?" asks Tom Rodd, a pitiable enough looking object now, as he lies stretched on his bed, a mass of surgical bandages, as far as his head is concerned, and with his left arm broken, and in splints.

"Oh, just a little pull-up by the way, to give you time for reflection," says the doctor; "but you can go to sleep now."

Which Tom cannot do. He is in too much pain, and he wants to know how it all happened, and no one will tell him.

"Come, Mary, lass," he says, and he notices that his voice is not so strong as usual, "can't 'ee tell me what's brought me here?"

But Mary puts something to his lips, and presently he sleeps.

Days and days passed like this, in a state between sleeping and waking, until one day, as Tom awoke from a doze, he heard voices in conversation, and caught the meaning of much that was being said.

"He must have taken a glass too much, a thing I never knew him do before; and then wandered on until he fell into the old lime-pit."

The voice is Mary's. She is talking to the minister, and it is of him!

"Yes, Miss Priscilla was telling me about his having been in the bar of the 'Plough,' and when I called there just now, the landlord said that Tom had left, saying something about the 'taming of the shrew,'" said the minister. "It seems, however, more like the taming of Tom Rodd!"

"Oh, sir, I should mind nothing if Tom would only become a Christian!" was Mary's reply. "I'd work night and day for that, sir."

"Well, Mary, there's no need for that," said the minister: "You remember, our Lord finished the work of salvation: all you have to do is to trust and to rest in the Lord, and to watch and pray. Tom needs great kindness and forbearance, and you exercise both, we know. And God waits to be gracious to him."

Tom heard all this, and he knew now the reason he lay there; he fully remembered that night at the "Plough and Harrow," and his foolish words, and he thought of his cold forge; the silent hammer; the money he was not earning; of Mary and their child; of himself; and he was filled with remorse. "I am a ruined man!" he cried, to himself; "and I have ruined others! And just because I would have my own way, hang me!"

But he was not yet strong enough for such thoughts, and wearily fell asleep. That evening Miss Priscilla sat in the shadow of the window-curtains of the cottage bedroom; Mary was sewing at the foot of the bed; the baby was asleep, and an air of peace brooded over everything when Tom awoke.

Miss Priscilla was reading the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah in low tones, and Mary was drinking in every word, asking questions, which Miss Priscilla would answer in her quiet and simple way, and Tom listened.

Every evening Miss Priscilla read in this way, and the moment Tom showed he was awake, she would close the Book and go quietly out. This at last annoyed Tom; he began to look forward to the readings, though he did not let anyone know he heard a word, and determined he would give no sign of awaking, so that the readings might go on undisturbed.

The evening of the day before he was to sit out of bed for the first time Miss Priscilla finished a reading of the tenth chapter of St. John with prayer. How Tom listened! And when he heard the words, "Dear Lord, we ask Thee to soften our dear patient's heart, and to turn it in thine own way to thyself," the tears coursed down his cheeks and a sob escaped his breast.

When Tom found, on his return to the smithy, that the fire had never gone out in the forge, that work had gone on regularly, and that Miss Priscilla had employed a skilled smith from the nearest town to keep things going, he could only say, because of the thanks in his heart—"God bless her! This is all a part of the Lord's graciousness."

"Fancy such words from Tom Rodd's lips!" said one who heard.

But Tom Rodd, like Mary, his wife, is a new creature—"old things have passed away"; his days of convalescence (and they were slow, for brain fever followed the injuries to the head) were spent in the society of Mary, Miss Priscilla, and the minister, and he learned of God apace.

"Cling-clang, cling-clang," rings out the smith's great hammer, and to some it is as good as "the sound of the church-going bell," for during three nights in the week the smithy is a place of praise and prayer for the men and lads of the village, and Tom Rodd is their leader. "Good-night, mates," he says, as he shuts the smithy doors; "carry the good news as you go, and God be with you till we meet again!"

"To think that's Tom!" says an old ostler. "Ah, that was a tamin' sickness!"

But Tom, who knows he is "a brand plucked from the burning" by God's grace, says, "Ah, wife, you're the winner. Praise God, we're of one mind in Christ Jesus!" M. B. GERDS.

Rev. John McNeill.

THIS evangelist concluded a nine days' united mission in Blackburn on Monday, Nov. 30. He came at the invitation of the clergy and ministers of the town, who with the local branch of the Y.M.C.A., made the necessary preliminary arrangements.

It was evident by the Tuesday evening that the Exchange Hall, although the largest public hall in the town, was altogether inadequate to accommodate the great throngs which made their way from all quarters of the town and neighbourhood. On the Thursday evening hundreds had to be turned away. To cope with the crowds that gathered day by day, Mr. McNeill decided that on the second Sunday the afternoon meeting should be for women only, and the evening meeting for men. At both meetings the hall was packed. In the afternoon hundreds were unable to gain admission. The evening meeting particularly will not soon be forgotten. Many men were visibly affected, and testimonies have since been received showing that the power of the Spirit was present convicting and converting those who had previously been avowed enemies of the Gospel.

Throughout the week the addresses were characterised by marked power, and were listened to with rapt attention; those on the Friday and last Monday evenings being particularly impressive and helpful. A noonday meeting for prayer was held daily from Tuesday to Friday, inclusive, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., which Association, to use the words of Mr. McNeill at the closing meeting, was the "backbone of the mission." It is felt that one of the results of the mission will be a distinct impetus to the work of this newly-formed branch of Y.M.C.A. work.

Mr. McNeill was supported on the platform during the week by representatives of almost every denomination in the town, eight of whom were clergy of the Church of England.

An Exhortation.

"Look to Christ for salvation. Look at Christ as our Example. Look for Christ as our Hope."—Rev. John Wilkinson.

"To" Jesus look should sin your spirit burden,
He waiteth to bestow the rest you crave;
No lips but his can whisper absolution;
He died that sinners He might freely save.
"At" Jesus look if you would walk uprightly;
Let his example be your daily guide.
Go; follow closely in his every footprint;
And let the way He went your course decide.
"For" Jesus look; expect Him any moment;
Behold his coming draweth very nigh.
When hands are busy, let the heart be watching;
He soon will reappear in yonder sky.

Austrian Alpine Mission.

SINCE the removal of my beloved husband, and in accordance with his dying wish, this Mission has been under the superintendence of Rev. A. W. Clark, D.D., of the American Board, and that gentleman, with his excellent wife, spent the summer in Gratz, doing all in their power to further the cause of Christ in the city, and also in making arrangements for future evangelistic efforts in the southern parts of Austria. Two evangelists are now labouring there, one in Gratz and one in Carinthia. The two Homes for sick and aged Protestants, Friedensheim and Emmaus, greatly need the sympathy of Christian friends. They extend help not only to Austrians, but, as occasion offers, to others. English, German, and Swiss sufferers have already enjoyed its benefits.

Circumstances having necessitated my leaving England in order to make a home for and to devote myself to my family, my dear friend, Miss M. M. Francke, a Mildmay deaconess of great experience, has undertaken the superintendence of the Homes, to the blessing and comfort of the inmates, and to my own great relief. The past summer has been a very trying one, the houses having been filled with suffering, helpless, and aged ones, and gifts having come in very sparingly. It is right to say that the American board is in no way responsible for any financial help, and that Dr. Clark's kind supervision is entirely honorary. Reports may be had from Mr. McCluer, 52, Aberdeen-road, Highbury, or from Miss M. M. Francke, 1, Leechgasse 28, Gratz.

Drift and Cripple Children.

MR. C. L. BOYER'S work among the Drift and Cripple Children of East London enjoys the confidence and support of many practical philanthropists. That it deserves all the encouragement it receives was the testimony of many witnesses at the meeting held on Tuesday last week in celebration of the fourth anniversary.

The meeting was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. About three hundred cripple children formed the choir, and there was an audience of about two thousand persons. The assemblage was made up of all classes; poor as well as rich had been invited by ticket, and the result was a large and hearty gathering. The director's report was deeply interesting. During the year the workers had paid 12,772 visits to the cripples in their homes, and 7820 meals were provided for the poor little ones. Garments to the number of 4180 were given to the cripples and their brothers and sisters, also toys, picture books, etc. Surgical instruments were supplied in many cases; in the summer many children were sent to the Holiday Home at Margate, and others were given an outing in Epping Forest. In conclusion, Mr. Boyer intimated that 730 cripples are now being dealt with by the Mission.

Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON, who presided, commended the work in a hearty address. Rev. J. P. LANSLOWNE, a local minister, gave his impressions, which were altogether favourable. Mr. H. E. LESTER, of Leytonstone, spoke kind words, and made a substantial donation towards wiping off an adverse financial balance. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. DOGFAN LEWIS, D. ROE, Mr. J. F. SHOREY, and Dr. A. SCATLIFF (Margate), the last-named dwelling upon the beneficent influence of the Holiday Home. During the evening visiting friends contributed musical selections, and the cripples sang several choruses.

Evangelical Church of Italy.

THE recent General Assembly of the above Church was, as always, deeply interesting, but there was one subject which well nigh absorbed the whole attention. Day after day it was our joy to sit and listen to wonderful tidings of God's grace from various quarters of the mission field, in the shape of hamlets and townships breaking away from the Church of Rome for the sake of the Gospel, and imploring us to send them evangelists.

As our forty-eight agents are all busily occupied, and our funds are, as usual at this season of the year, behind, the brethren are very much on their knees before our providing God, pleading for men and means to enter in by these open doors.

May I ask the prayers and sympathy and help of your readers in such a crisis.

The Aberdeen Mission.

YOU will be interested to know that the mission under the Free Church Presbytery progresses to its close with increasing blessing. Mr. Charles Inglis was followed by Mr. Frank L. Smith, who remained with us for five weeks. His services were greatly enjoyed by believers, and have been also blessed in many cases of conversion. He has much skill in pointing believers to a higher and fuller consecration of life. He uses illustrations with great effect.

We have been no less delighted with the labours of Mr. W. Douglas Dunn, whose visit, to our regret, could only extend to two weeks. His labours in Old Aberdeen were wonderfully blessed. From Aberdeen he went to the fisher village of Torry, which has been the scene of many revivals, and his ministry there was also much owned.

Last of all, we have had Gipsy Smith, who closed our town work with a week of services. He began by preaching in two of our largest churches on Sunday, to full audiences, and in the evening he held a service in our music-hall, which was crowded with from two to three thousand persons. There was great power with the message. Many awakened ones professed anxiety, and several declared their acceptance of the Saviour.

The work in our rural charges is proceeding also, and will continue to the 18th of this month. Every congregation in this large Presbytery will have thus been embraced excepting two which, owing to exceptional circumstances, have been unable to fall in with the movement. We thank God and take courage.

HENRY W. BELL,

Convener of Presbytery's Committee.

Open-Air Mission.

BETWEEN one and two hundred members of the Open-Air Mission sat down to tea in the class-room beneath the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday week by invitation of the pastor and church officers. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon presided at the meeting which afterwards took place in the church. Mr. Cockrem, secretary of the Mission, made some references to the services being carried on. Out of the 1100 members of the Mission a proportion were set apart for work at races and fairs, eight or nine hundred of such gatherings being visited. It was hard work from a Christian standpoint, but a blessing attended it.

Rev. C. B. Sawday gave some reminiscences of the late Mr. Kirkham, and paid a high tribute to his energy and character. Rev. Thomas Spurgeon followed with an excellent and practical address on "This Sycamore Tree (Luke xvii. 6). To be an open-air preacher as Christ, he said, was one of the greatest honours that could fall to mortal man.

Sailors' Rest, Constantinople.

DEAR SIR,—The Sailors' Rest, so long carried on by Miss Green-Armytage, has entered new premises on the Quay, where it has a frontage on the harbour and is easily accessible by sailors. The additional annual expense will be considerable, but the removal has been justified by the large number of men who already frequent it. The premises contain, on the ground floor, coffee-room and kitchen, a reading-room, which is also used as a hall for religious services, and a room which may be fitted up for the use of officers. Upstairs there is accommodation for the port missionary.

The friends whose generosity enabled Miss Green-Armytage to take the new premises, also presented the Rest with a very fine boat. We are now anxious to fit the boat with a petroleum engine. This is a necessity, as much of the missionary's time is taken up in visiting the ships in the harbour and in the stream; the current of the Bosphorus is always very rapid, and the wind is sometimes very strong, so much time is consumed in getting from ship to ship. We wish to put an engine into the boat that the missionary may be able to do more work and with greater comfort. When the boat is engined, it will be used also for collecting men from their ships for the services in the Rest.

The engine will cost about £100 sterling. Will any of your readers help the good work by presenting us with this sum or by giving contributions toward the engine fund? We shall be glad also to receive help towards the general expenses of the Sailors' Rest.—Yours very faithfully,

Temperance Notes.

No children under fifteen years of age are henceforth to be served with liquor in any South Australian licensed house.

The Irish Temperance League is doing good work with its coffee stands, of which it has now eighteen at various busy points in the streets of Belfast.

Rev. Seth Backhouse, of Ashton-under-Lyne, has held a temperance mission at Penarth, in South Wales. The various ministers of the town took part. The British Women also rendered valuable service.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Archbishop-Elect, has taken a large house at Dulwich, which will be opened in connection with the C.E.T.S. as a home for female inebriates. Each patient will be bound to stay a year.

The National Temperance League is arranging a great demonstration to be held in Queen's Hall on May 21, in celebration of the progress of temperance during the Queen's reign. An opportunity will be taken to honour the veterans who were teetotalers sixty years ago.

The "White Ribbon Women" have made a great demonstration at the W.C.T.U. Convention in St. Louis, U.S.A. Miss Willard, as president, received a warm reception. It is stated that no less than 107 temperance women occupied pulpits in St. Louis on Convention Sunday.

The Bishop of Manchester, presiding over the annual meeting of the C.E.T.S. for that diocese, said legislators could do nothing unless they were assisted by a solid mass of public opinion. Canon Kelly said the temperance movement was making steady progress. The Bishop of Carlisle pointed out that there are more than 1000 villages in England without a public-house.

Boston (U.S.) is girt with municipalities from which the saloon is excluded. In such places as Newton, Quincy, Hyde Park, Watertown, Cambridge, Somerville, Chelsea, there is no open sale of liquor in saloons. The bibulous must go over the capital line, as a rule, and enter Boston territory to slake their thirst. Why should not anti-saloon districts inside of Boston be allowed this privilege of exclusion?

A young woman, charged in London with drunkenness, said she damaged the notice-board outside a police-station because she desired to be locked up and kept away from drink. She had been many times in prison for drunkenness, and she resolves to keep from drink which she made while locked up broke down on her release directly she came near a public-house. Mr. William Livesey is again urging temperance reformers to concentrate their efforts on securing Sunday closing.

Mr. A. T. Davies, of Liverpool, says that the population of Liverpool is now 641,063, the licences numbering 2291, a reduction of 144 in five years. There are neighbourhoods in Liverpool in which intoxicants are not allowed to be sold, and are all the better for it, the houses being in great demand. Since the licences for the sale of drink at the local coursing meetings had been stopped the drunkenness and rowdiness had ceased. Female intemperance is, however, increasing.

The Royal Commission on the Liquor Laws will meet for the last time this year on Dec. 16 and 17, and will resume on the first Tuesday in February. The evidence given last week chiefly concerned Nottingham and Leeds. Sir Samuel Johnson, town clerk of Nottingham, said that the law was administered with great exactness in his borough. Mr. John Thornton, clerk to the justices of Leeds, showed a diminution in the drinking habits of the place.

Hospitality Invited.—I have about 450 little boys in our London Homes who have no friends to entertain them at the festive season. Are there any kind readers of THE CHRISTIAN who will be willing to lodge, feed, and take care of one, or at most two, from Thursday afternoon, December 24, to Monday afternoon, December 28, inclusive? For many reasons, boys cannot be allowed to go for a shorter time than the above, and those who are generous and kind enough to respond to this suggestion should send their letters addressed to me, so as to reach 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, as soon as possible, but not later than the first post on Tuesday, December 22. It is obvious that if these boys are not provided for, I must endeavour to spread a Christmas table for them, and with the present state of funds I know not how to do so. Friends disposed to receive a little guest into their house are asked to remember that all my boys are total abstainers, and must not be invited to take stimulants of any kind whatever. Their ages vary from six to sixteen, and correspondents will kindly say about what age they would like their young guest to be. I must ask friends living in the country who respond to this, to defray the return fares of the boys.

THOS. J. BARNARDO,

Y.M.C.A.

HALF-YEARLY NATIONAL COUNCIL.

TWICE a year the members of the National Council scattered throughout the country (excepting Scotland) come together to hear reports as to the progress of the work and to confer upon any matters of special and national importance that may emerge. This assembly, held last Friday at Exeter Hall, was a deeply interesting as well as encouraging occasion. It was truly delightful to find so many gentlemen, from far and near, busy with their own affairs, yet willing and glad to travel to London and give a day to the consideration of the needs of the nation's young men and the best ways of meeting them. The venerable president of the Association, Sir Geo. Williams, was, of course, in the chair, and by his side was the secretary of the Council, Mr. W. H. Mills.

After a morning devotional meeting, fraternal and confidential conferences were held between the members of the English, Irish, and Welsh executives with the view of advising as to the strengthening of Association work in Ireland and Wales. During the morning session arrangements were also homologated as to the mission to be held in connection with the Y.M.C.A. by Mr. W. R. Lane throughout the whole of next year. Mr. Lane will begin this important engagement with the dawning of 1897; probably his first mission will be at Aldersgate-street. Much expectation is very properly cherished as to the outcome of this prolonged effort in recruiting the ranks of the Y.M.C.A., and, better still, the ranks of Christ's disciples among our youth all over the land. Mr. Lane was the speaker at the mid-day prayer meeting at Exeter Hall on Friday.

The afternoon session of the Council began with reports from travelling secretaries, in which the brighter elements of advance were prominent, though there were not wanting the darker shades of retrogression and discouragement. Those who reported were Mr. W. Hind Smith, who seems to have a kind of roving commission; Mr. J. C. Moor, for the North of England; Mr. F. C. Bennett, for the Midlands; Mr. W. H. Roberts, for the South-West; Mr. R. D. Thomas, for Wales; and Mr. R. McCann, for Ireland. It is not possible in this brief statement to give details of the labours of these brethren, whose visits must be a channel of great help and blessing to the Associations throughout the country, in the way of advice and stimulus. It was specially cheering to hear of the numbers of cases in which they had been instrumental in reducing or clearing off local debts, preventing the closing of branch associations, in founding new centres of effort, and in infusing fresh life in places where zeal had run low. Mr. Hind Smith observed that he had never known a year in which the district conferences were so encouraging. Mr. Smith is now a veteran in the service, but he carries with him a spirit of perennial buoyancy, so that the chairman jocosely described him as "a smart young fellow," to whom it was a delight to listen.

The Welsh travelling secretary, Mr. R. D. Thomas, has only been a short time in office, but he seems to bring to his work plenty of Welsh fire and go. His report had gleams of humour in it which served as an excellent foil for the more sober records of spiritual work or financial progress. He spoke very appreciatively of the help given to him by Mr. McCann, who, during a short visit, gave lantern lectures in different places, and in that way created no little evident interest among certain "dry scientific" Welsh folk, who needed, as Mr. Thomas remarked, to see something before they could believe. One little place visited in Anglesea has a tolerably big name, and Mr. Thomas considers it ought to be recorded at length, so we give it as he kindly wrote it down—Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwondrobwllantisiilllogogoch. The average Briton given to correspondence will feel thankful he does not have to date his letters from this remarkable village.

Mr. McCann's report from Ireland was specially interesting, especially what he told about the Tralee Association, which, he says, has been in a state of chronic revival for the last two years—scarcely a meeting held without conversions. These travelling secretaries add to their other functions that of evangelist, and through their preaching many young men are won, not only for the Association, but for Christ.

A great deal of routine business relating to the composition and work of the Council was thereafter transacted. Sir George Williams was of course reappointed president of the Council by acclamation. He said that while health permitted, his services were at the disposal of the Association, and it would be a dark day to him when, by stress of bodily infirmity, he had to retire. Reports of an interesting kind were submitted with respect to various departments of the work. These showed, as the chairman remarked, that they belonged not to a declining but to a progressive institution which is being made an instrument of salvation and help to many young men.

The work of the Y.M.C.A. abroad was the subject of discussion. In this connection a brief address, made by Mr. H. Conder, president of the Bombay Association, was heard with much interest; he was very heartily received in view of his immediate return to India, and thanked for his practical help given during his fourteen months' furlough in the old country. Mr. Budgett Meakin related some impressions of the work of the Y.M.C.A. in foreign lands he had visited during his recent round-the-world tour.

At the close of the business the members of the Council were entertained to dinner by the president, by whom, as well as by Dr. Harry Guinness, Rev. E. J. Kennedy, Canon Fleming, Mr. Haley, of Wakefield, Mr. Procter, of Birkenhead, Mr. Thornton, of the B.C.C.U., Col. Philips (as representing the affiliated Soldiers' Christian Association), Lord Kinnaird, and others, brief statements were made bearing on the progress of this grand Association.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE Countess of Warwick, accompanied by her sister, Lady Algernon Gordon, opened a sale of work last week at the rooms of the Warwick Y.W.C.A.

A new branch has been started at Brimscombe, Gloucestershire. At a tea given in the schoolroom a large number attended, and a pleasant evening was spent.

At the fourth anniversary meeting of the Dewsbury branch, Mr. W. H. Lee, presided, and Mrs. Shaw gave an address, chiefly on intemperance. Miss North and Miss Blanshard also spoke.

Miss Entrican, travelling secretary of the Y.W.C.A., spoke recently at a meeting of the Wolverhampton branch, and in an earnest address, pleaded for definite Christian decision and consecration.

The annual report of the Southport Y.W.C.A. has just been issued, and testifies to the excellent work done by the Association. Sprung from very small beginnings, the branch has in due time made rapid strides, and is the centre of spiritual influence in the town. The total number of members is 220; 275 have stayed in the Home, against 210 last year.

At the annual meetings of the Cork branch Rev. Canon Daunt occupied the chair, and Mrs. Daunt presented the report, which was very satisfactory. Funds, however, were needed to purchase a larger and more commodious building for the demands made upon the institution. Miss Reynolds delivered an impressive address, reviewing the general work of the Association.

The annual meeting of the Wakefield branch was held last month. Mr. Haley, president of the Y.M.C.A., presided. A Missionary Parliament has been started, and by this means greater interest it is hoped will be roused by having the needs of many lands reported and discussed. Rev. W. E. Bartlam spoke encouragingly on the benefits resulting from the work of the Y.W.C.A. in the town.

The anniversary gathering of the Barnet branch was held on Thursday, December 3. Mrs. Bevan, president of the branch, was present, and gave a most interesting address on "Talking, Reading, and Working." The report showed that thirty-nine new members had joined during the year. The missionary cause is well remembered, as the members work for India, Tangier, and Labrador. One of their number, Miss Hart, was to leave for China on December 10.

The annual sale of work on behalf of the various institutes connected with the Bournemouth Y.W.C.A. was held at the Havergal Hall. The Hon. Mrs. Abel Henry Smith opened the sale, which is intended to further reduce the debt of £7450 remaining on the building. The debt was originally £15,000, but has been reduced largely owing to Miss Wingfield Digby's exertions, and the generous help of friends, especially of the late Dr. Scott. It is hoped to realise £450 from the sale in order to pay off one of the mortgages.

The Buenos Ayres Y.M.C.A. rooms have been moved to No. 1414, Calle Suarez Barracas, where it is hoped to hold good evangelistic meetings, and where strangers will be warmly welcomed.

Galway.—In connection with the Seamen's Memorial Home at the Dock there is a temperance coffee-bar and reading-room, open to the public, and fairly successful. If funds were obtained this might be enlarged and made more attractive in order to reach Roman Catholics as well as Protestants. The hon. sec. and treasurer is Miss E. G. Shaw, Brinkwater, Galway.

University Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD.

THE United Kingdom Band of Hope Union has been holding meetings in Oxford and the neighbourhood. The Hon. Conrad Dillon, at the annual meeting, urged all present to do more for the cause than they had done, and spoke of the hopeful character of the work of the Army Temperance Association.

A meeting in connection with the Christian Social Union was held last week. The Bishop of Durham dealt with the question of arbitration, the realisation of which, he thinks, is being brought nearer by the growing belief in the brotherhood of man. Canon Scott-Holland and the Dean of Christ Church also spoke.

Mr. McCann, formerly travelling secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in India, recently gave an interesting lecture on "India," speaking of the lives of the natives and the work of the Y.M.C.A. there.

The annual meeting of the S.P.G. took place last week. The subscriptions showed a slight falling off. Dr. G. W. Pope told of the progress of Christianity among the Tamils in Southern India.

Rev. E. K. Hubbard, of Nyassa, Victoria Nyanza, gave an account of the work there to the University Missionary Union last week.

The P.S.A.

I HAVE often been asked whether the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon service, though useful in attracting working men, has not an injurious influence on the regular meetings of the church, the Sunday-school, and other institutions. Let me give the following facts in connection with a church in the suburbs of Manchester where I was lately preaching. The facts are narrated by the pastor, Rev. H. Brayshaw.

The P.S.A. was commenced in November, 1892, its object being to gather those who were indifferent to religion, so far as might be inferred from their non-attendance at any place of worship. The present average membership of the P.S.A. is 1600 enrolled; the average attendance 1050 every Sunday afternoon. It is self-supporting, and last year this society with the P.M.E. (Pleasant Monday Evenings for women) gave £80 to the church fund as their share of expenses. The effects have been increased attendances at the regular services; the chapel filled in the evening; increased attendance at the Sunday-school, from 500 to 800 scholars; church membership nearly doubled, more than 100 members having come direct from these two societies.

I venture to state what I have found to be essential conditions of success. Earnest and general invitations to all, cordial welcome, hearty encouragement by pastor and officers, sympathy without control, members appointing their own presidents and committees, the tone of the meetings not political or secular but earnestly evangelistic, plenty of hymn-singing, prayers and addresses very short. The whole service should be hearty and free from formalism. Vocal expression of feeling should be encouraged, as well as active service for the sick, and mission work for reclamation of the fallen and votaries of the public house. Earnest prayer and a faithful declaration of the Gospel always are ever attended by marks of the Divine presence and blessing. It is essential that there be no endeavour to promote any denominational object or any appearance of it.

NEWMAN HALL.

Requests for Prayer.—For special services at Brixham, by Mr. John Elliott, commencing Sunday, Dec. 13.—For blessing on the Weaver Brothers' Mission at Pontymoile.—For blessing on special evangelistic service at Congregational Church, Broadstone, Dorset, from the 11th inst.—For blessing on a fourteen days' mission by Mrs. Baeyertz, in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town-road, from Wednesday, December 9. Praise.—For blessing received during special services at the Gospel Hall, St. Neots.

The Country Towns' Mission is putting forward increased efforts to carry the Word of God to the people living in our villages and small towns, especially where extreme ritualistic teaching prevails. A large proportion of the Society's missionaries are now labouring in groups of villages where the spiritual need is becoming increasingly great, there being, sometimes, no resident Nonconformist minister. The work of the Society is, therefore, of great importance. The missionaries visit regularly in the homes of the people, especial care being taken of the aged and sick, and of those who, by reason of infirmity, are not able to attend a place of worship. The report of the past year speaks of exceptional spiritual blessing on the work. The offices of the Society are at 18, New Bridge-street, E.C. The secretary is Mr. G. H. Mawer.

Evangelistic Notes.

Castle Hedingham.—A three weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, closed on Sunday evening, 29th ult. The attendance throughout has been very encouraging, and there is evidence of real good having been done.

St. Neots.—Mr. Richard Spragg has been holding special services with much power and interest in the Gospel Halls at St. Neots and neighbouring villages. The Word has been blessed to the conversion of souls, and the thrilling history of Mr. Spragg's life was made a blessing to not a few. F. NEWMAN.

Brunswick Rooms, Southampton.—Pastor Burt Sharp, of Hereford, has been conducting, in the Brunswick Rooms Evangelistic Mission, an eight days' mission, which has proved to be a season of blessing. Christians have been stirred up, backsliders restored, and souls converted. J. T. HOLLOWAY.

Milborne Port.—A three weeks' united mission has been held in the Victoria Hall by Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelisation Society. Each church in the town was well represented, and the interest in the services steadily increased, the hall being crowded some evenings. Mr. Vivian's expositions of the Scriptures were most clear and searching, Christians have been greatly blessed, and many have been converted to God.

Worcester.—After conducting a Gospel Temperance mission at Hereford, Mr. Wm. Forbes held an eight days' mission in the Public Hall, Worcester. The attendance was good. It would have been more gratifying, however, if the unreformed element had been more conspicuous and the pledges taken more numerous. Mr. Forbes concluded his visit to the city with evangelistic services at Lowesmoor Chapel. JACOBUS.

Peckham Rye.—Mr. C. Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded on Sunday, November 29, a fifteen days' mission at the Peckham Rye Tabernacle. These special services have been productive of much good, several persons professing to have trusted the Lord for their personal salvation. Mr. Lazenby's plain, forcible statements and firm adherence to Gospel truth, together with his telling illustrations, have won many hearts. H. J. K.

Kirkcaldy.—United meetings have been held in Raith Parish, Abbotshall Free, and Bethelfield U.P. Churches. Mr. T. W. Canning began when the first week of the united mission was over, and there has been much blessing. There have been a number of definite conversions, and some backsliders have been restored; yet it is not these who have felt the full force of this special mission. The shower has fallen largely on the Christians, who have been quickened and strengthened in the faith.

Tralee, co. Kerry.—A very successful mission has been conducted, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., by Mr. J. Stuart Holden. From the first great interest was aroused, and the attendance increased nightly to the end of the mission. Many of God's children have testified to blessing received, and not a few of those who were "out of the way" have been led to Christ, the Way, the Truth, and the Life. The winter's work has opened with great promise, and we rejoice to see the band of young Christian workers increasing in numbers and influence. We are looking forward to a visit from Major Whittle, in the spring of 1897. O. H. M.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond is holding a special mission in Peterboro', in New Hampshire. All the evangelical churches are united, and much good is being done. A local paper containing an account of the work speaks in a very encouraging manner. Large numbers of young people came in from adjoining towns, and nearly all who were not Christians before coming professed conversion at the meetings. One of our pastors, Rev. Dr. Gane, who has laboured with Mr. Hammond in Canada, and speaks with great enthusiasm of the extent and permanency of his labours there, said that "THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN" (published by Morgan & Scott) had accomplished more than any other book in calling attention to the necessity of labouring for the conversion of the young. FLORA J. TUBBS.

Marshfield, Glos.—A fortnight's mission held in the Congregational Church in this town by Mr. C. B. Joliffe, of the Evangelisation Society, was brought to a close on Sunday, November 29th. The Lord has graciously granted blessing. Not only have numbers been nightly attending the services, but souls have been brought to the Saviour, and believers built up and encouraged in the faith. The closing meeting will long be remembered by those who were there, for its searching power and solemn influence. The Word was simply, clearly, and faithfully set forth in the most loving manner; and God's people pray for much blessing to be manifested as the result. The mission was closed by the gathering of many believers, of various denominations, around the Lord's Table, and all felt it to be indeed a happy time. J. E. H.

(1116)

Bethesda Town Mission, Portsmouth.—A fortnight's mission has been held by Gipsy Cornelius Smith in our three mission halls, and God has blessed us in a marked degree. The good seed sown for many years by Commander Key has borne fruit, and many have been converted. A man came to a meeting declaring that there was no salvation for so great a sinner, but being convicted came night after night. On Friday he was brought to Christ, and at the praise meeting on Monday gave a clear testimony as to his acceptance with God. Another case was of a man being saved whose Christian wife had been praying for him for fifteen years; a son and a niece also being brought in, and two daughters recently. A midnight meeting for the fallen was also held.

GEORGE H. FISON, Superintendent.

Luton.—A visit marked by much interest has been paid by Mr. Newton Jones to Wellington-street Chapel, Luton. Searching and helpful Bible-readings have stirred believers to more complete surrender to God. The forceful presentation of a full Gospel has led a goodly number of adults to decision, while the bright and happy seasons of service among the young will be long remembered. The methods adopted are free from all excitement, quiet, Scriptural, and effective. Children under fifteen who appear to receive the Saviour as their own, take home a printed form to sign with their parents' consent. Between one and two hundred of these forms were handed in, duly classified, and referred to the ministers and superintendents of the respective schools to visit and follow up. Illustrative diagrams, a happy gift of song, and the ring of thorough consecration combine to make this mission effective.

Cheshire Villages.—Many people consider it is useless to attempt Gospel work in the villages of this county. They say the country people of Cheshire are thrifty and morally good, besides they are not impulsive but unmovable and conservative. Yet we have been privileged to see a most successful month's services in the two villages of Over Alderley and Alderley Edge. The services have been conducted by Mrs. Restall, who has sung and preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ with telling and wonderful effect. Night by night the audiences have grown till the place has been packed each night; but best of all many people have publicly confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and this has made our hearts overflow with joy and praise. Over forty of the names taken are men; among them are farmers and their sons, coachmen, gardeners, postmen, and labourers. I myself know nearly everyone personally, and many of them have walked five miles to the meeting, and then had to walk the same distance home, and be at work at 4.30 or 5 o'clock in the morning. Surely this indicates how eager the people of our villages are to hear of Jesus and his love. May I ask prayer for each convert, and also for the dark villages of this, our beloved homeland.

FRANK WEAVER.

Personalities.

Principal Miller has returned to duty at Madras in better health than he has enjoyed of late, notwithstanding his somewhat exacting official services as Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland.

Mr. Henry Kidner, the secretary of the London Y.W.C.A., forms the subject of "Our Own Men and Their Work," in Sword and Trowel for the month. After his conversion at Stafford Rooms he gave himself actively to Christian work, entered the Pastors' College, became pastor at the Mumbles and at Minchinhampton, and in 1884 was chosen for his important post at the Y.W.C.A.

Rev. D. B. Spence, of Constantinople, has intimated his purpose to retire from the service of the Jewish Mission of the Church of Scotland, to which by this time next year he will have given thirty years of his life. In view of this, and in view of the fact that Mr. Spence's health has suffered seriously from the anxieties entailed by the recent massacres in Constantinople, the Jewish Mission Committee have resolved to send out a young minister to relieve him of the heaviest part of his work, and to prepare himself by learning the language and the ways of the Jewish people for entering upon Mr. Spence's labours when he retires.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost.—The following appears in The New York Independent of November 26:—"No wanderer could be more warmly welcomed back to this country than our own Dr. George F. Pentecost, who has for several years served as pastor of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church in London. He found the church in a much weakened condition and he has built it up, organised its work, and leaves it strong and successful. He comes to the First Presbyterian Church in Yonkers. We are not surprised that he prefers the liberty of the American churches to the humiliating subordination which Non-conformity must endure in England."

Mrs. Bella Cooke.—A peculiar and interesting service was held on a recent Sunday evening at Rose Hill Methodist Episcopal Church, East Twenty-seventh-street, New York, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Mrs. Bella Cooke's membership with that church. Some time ago we gave a portrait and sketch of this invalid, who for over forty years has lain in the corner of her little room, doing remarkable service for God even in her sick chamber. The leading thought all through the jubilee service was how Jesus could take the weak things of this world and confound the mighty, and how all that God wants is to have willing hearts that He may show his wondrous works in them.

Obituary.

MR. B. TICE, EGHAM.

Egham has sustained a severe loss by the death of this devoted servant of God, who passed peacefully away on November 23, after several months of suffering. He will be sadly missed by the local Y.M.C.A., of which for many years he was president, also by the Egham Home Mission, with which he had been connected about twenty-five years, being the hon. secretary and treasurer, and usually taking services on the Sabbath at one of the mission-rooms. He was for many years a member of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The funeral took place on Friday, November 27, at the Englefield Green Cemetery, and was the largest Egham has seen, the whole line along the streets being thronged with people, both old and young, rich and poor.

MR. ROBERT LAWS, ABERDEEN.

The father of the well-known missionary, Dr. Laws, passed away, aged 78, in Aberdeen. He was all his life connected with the U.P. denomination, and was an elder in St. Nicholas U.P. Church. His interest in church work was one of his most eminent characteristics, and he gave a striking example of quiet and constant devotion to the duties of the eldership. He had only one child, now the well-known missionary, Dr. Laws, who, while a student at Aberdeen University, worked in his father's cabinetmaking shop, and the practical training which he there received in a handicraft, so far from interfering with his subsequent career, has proved of the greatest advantage to him in the mission work to which he has devoted himself.

REV. JOHN MORRIS, D.D.

Another familiar form has passed away from us by the death of Rev. John Morris, D.D., who for forty-two years was Principal of the Memorial College, Brecon. Though a Welshman, born at Carmarthen, he never held a Welsh pastorate. Trained in the Blackburn Academy, he laboured for seventeen years in Yorkshire before entering upon professorial work. When about twenty-five years of age he came into collision with the followers of Robert Owen, the Socialist, against whose teaching he preached in the open-air. On one occasion he was subjected to questioning on the part of a hearer. This led to discussion, in which the young minister won the day, and his opponent, who was an intelligent seeker after truth, acknowledged his error, and became a Christian minister.

"Faint yet Pursuing," a booklet by Rev. P. B. Power, has for its sub-title, "Compel Them to Come in" (No. 2). It has been written specially for Christian workers, and from telling the stirring story of Captain James Kearney White and his lifeboat rescue exploits, it proceeds to plead the cause of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society and the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, with both of which the worthy Captain has for long years been honourably associated. The exciting nautical incident is described with remarkable vigour by Mr. Power, whose animated style is well known; and the pages are calculated to encourage Christian workers, especially such as are brought into contact with masses under the deluding influences of Romanism. Board-School Children's Free Dinner Fund.—There was nothing exceptional in the sufferings of the poor last year. The winter was singularly favourable, yet the need of the children in board schools in poor neighbourhoods, for good food was, we believe, never more clearly demonstrated than in the report now issued. There are many signs of a more severe winter to come, and already the rise in the price of bread is very keenly felt in homes where necessities are bought by pennyworths. The children to whom this Fund ministers, are the children of widows, of working people ill or out of employment, and children recovering from sickness, who cannot obtain the good food they need in their homes. Besides, there are at the tables, children living in the worst and lowest conditions, whose deplorable need it is impossible to question. During the past year, 161,882 free meals were given. The hon. sec. of the fund is Anna Pennington, 16, Crossfield-road, South Hampstead, N.W.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AT the close of the year may we not ask our readers' renewed co-operation in enlarging our circulation? A quarter of a million of money has passed through our hands for hundreds of Missions and Institutions at home and abroad; could not those interested in these works put forth some fresh and increased exertion to extend the influence of THE CHRISTIAN? We have largely promoted the agency of Evangelists, and have thus helped churches and preachers: cannot they, even more than they have done, commend our paper in the circles in which they move? Above all, we have been true to the Gospel and to the integrity of the Scriptures, apart from denominational distinctions. Will those who value it on this account accept our thanks for all they have done in the past, and now make an additional effort to increase our strength and usefulness?

Knowing the desire of a large number of our readers to use their gifts wisely at this season of the year, we have for their convenience gathered together, in the concise form of a "special supplement," notices of a few well-known mission agencies. Those who have funds for disposal will find reliable outlets in any of these channels, as also those which are mentioned in our "Donation List," under "Appeals," or in the advertising columns.

We doubt not our readers will meditate with eager interest on Mr. Moody's letter to the New York Independent (p. 11). We entirely agree with him in thinking that the Modern Criticism, carried on in a spirit unfriendly to the Gospel as so much of it is, politics discussed in the brief hour of all the week traditionally and professedly devoted to discuss the question of questions, "How can a man be just with God?" ; the preludes on current topics, and the shows to amuse those whom it is the business of the preacher to awake to their peril of eternal perdition—that these and other similar attractions are both effects and causes of the pitiful pandering to the world which makes the pulpit so often powerless. All true Christians will surely pray that Mr. Moody's earnest appeal may be taken to heart on both sides of the sea.

If there are fewer conversions now than there were some thirty or forty years ago, as is generally admitted to be the case, what is the reason? Is it because the sinfulness of sin is not so much insisted upon; that there is seldom any urgent appeal to flee from the wrath to come? Is it that there is no mention of a Satanic thralldom from which sinners need to be saved? These stern truths have been too commonly discarded, with the result that sinners pass their days in carnal security, and conversions are rare.

Mr. A. J. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance, draws attention in a letter to the Press to the approaching week of united and universal prayer, January 3-10, 1897. He says:—

The outline of the programme of suggested topics for daily intercession is as follows: Monday, January 4, Thanksgiving and Humiliation; Tuesday, The Church Universal; Wednesday, Nations and their Rulers; Thursday, Foreign Missions; Friday, Home Missions and the Jews; Saturday, Families and Schools. The week will witness an earnest appeal to God on behalf of persecuted Christians in the East—Armenians and Stundists especially—such as perhaps has never been witnessed before.

It is earnestly hoped that in every place Christian people will unite in this concert of prayer. If all the denominations cannot be induced to co-operate, let those who are willing see to it that they gather themselves together in sympathy with fellow-Christians in all the lands of the Old and New World and, with tens of thousands of native Christians in the various mission fields and in the far-off isles of the seas.

The full programme and other information regarding the Week of Prayer will be gladly supplied on application to the office of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C. The arrangements for the London meetings will be found on page 22.

The happy termination of the dispute between managers and employees on the L. and N.W. Railway will cause a sense of gratitude throughout the community. The occurrence of a vast strike on the eve of the travel and re-unions of Christmas would have been a widespread calamity. Mr. Ritchie's success in healing the breach was immediate, and both the directors and the men are to be congratulated on the conciliatory temper they displayed. The season of peace and goodwill has been saved from a sorry exhibition of class hatred and bitterness.

Next Sunday evening Mr. Josiah Nix concludes his conduct of the lantern services, held under the auspices of the Polytechnic, at the Princess's Theatre, as he is shortly to take up the work of an evangelist in the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion. We earnestly hope these services will not be allowed to drop. It is no small matter to secure an audience of 3000 persons to hear the Gospel plainly set forth; and, being gathered, why must they be scattered? The "signs following" have been most encouraging to Mr. Nix and his helpers. Is there no hope of the Polytechnic continuing them; or, failing that, the West London Mission, or some such well-established agency?

A discussion of the question of liturgical worship has been going on in The Independent and Nonconformist. Very varied opinions obtain among ministers as well as laymen as to the desirability of introducing a liturgical element into the worship of Nonconformists. Some who have tried it seem well satisfied; others are disappointed with the spiritual results. All seem agreed that if it is to be introduced at all it must be sparingly, and in such a manner as not to interfere with the place of "voluntary" prayer in the service. This is surely a sine qua non in all future forms of worship. Nothing can take the place of free and unfettered supplication for the special wants and needs of the hour, which are different in all congregations, and cannot be uttered so freshly and impressively as in language suggested at the moment.

In connection with this subject it is a frequent charge against Nonconformist congregations that they are lacking in reverence in their attitude during public prayer. Any change that would do away with this lamentable feature in Divine worship should be welcomed. Whether it can be attained by the substitution of liturgical for voluntary forms of prayer is more than questionable. What is really wanted is that devotional Spirit which would shape its own appropriate form. It is a mistake to think that the mere substitution of one attitude for another can do much to stimulate this Spirit. The most reverential posture may only serve to conceal a wandering, listless mind more effectually; and there may be much real reverence associated with an unorthodox posture. Propriety is of no value unless it is a symptom of real and genuine devotion, and it is on this that stress should be laid.

"Protestant," writing from Grantham, sends to The Daily News a copy of instructions given to a number of candidates for confirmation at the parish church, "most of which were boys not over sixteen years of age." This document, which resembles all of its class, contains instructions to these boys how they are to make their confession. The boy is to ask himself with regard to the second commandment, "Have I read dangerous books—been to Dissenting services—gone to fortune-tellers—broken my fast before Communion, etc.?" Here is the old sin of the Pharisees—"teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," manufacturing sins out of things which are no sins, mixing human judgments of things with Divine, and generally confusing the moral sense. It is lamentable that the instruction of the young should be in the hands of such teachers.

The Roman Catholics are showing "the wisdom of serpents" in their far-reaching and insidious use of the Press as a means of propagandism. It is a part of their policy to have, if possible, some one on the staff of every newspaper, whose secret care it is to safeguard the interests of Romanism, negatively if he can do no better, but positively if his influence serves sufficiently to do so. Besides this there is an attempt to be made to start another Romanist paper, of which the Duke of Norfolk is to be the proprietor, and which is to be a "brighter Tablet." According to The Westminster Gazette, its politics are to be Tory, and it adds significantly, that "an attempt is being made to ride into popular favour on the wave of Conservatism which has poured over the Catholic body as a result of the educational proposals of the present Government." The trend of events could not be more suggestively put.

The clerical party in Italy have been rebuff in the result of its mission to the captives of war in Abyssinia. These were somewhat ostentatiously released not in response to Monsignor Micario's visit to King Menelik, but as a compliment to the King of Italy and on the Queen's birthday. The disappointment at the Vatican is extreme. The Papal party had been so sure of success that with a view of turning the event to ecclesiastical ends, a picture, of which 18,000 had already been printed, was to have been distributed broadcast, representing the Pope seated and Mons. Micario introducing a chained captive, shown in a kneeling attitude, with hands upraised to the Pope, under which was the motto, "Leo XIII. liberates the Italian captives"! A fine instance in high places of the proverb, "Pride goeth before a fall."

There has been held a six days' cycle race in New York, during which the serious effect of these prolonged contests on the body and mind of the competitors has been shown in an unmistakable manner. Several of those who persevered at high pressure till the fourth day manifested signs of mental delusion, brought on by excessive strain. They were at times only kept conscious by the efforts of their physicians and trainers. The Daily Telegraph correspondent calls it "a sickening exhibition of brutality," and says that one doctor asserts that the men who rode to the finish shortened their lives by ten years. When the secular Press takes this point of view, there is some hope that the days of these inhuman contests are numbered.

There has been nothing more saddening in connection with the Armenian outrages than the fact that they have often taken place while England was torn with excitement, and loudly demanding that such things should for ever cease. Could the great meetings only have seen what was actually going on in far away valleys, and on mountain sides, and in busy cities! It comes as a shock, that on September 15, the Kurds and Turks were at their dreadful work at Eghin. While these words are being penned or read, massacre may be raging in another place. "Put not your trust in princes." The story of the cause of the Crimean war, as now related by Lord Bath to Canon McColl—a story of revenge on the part of the British Ambassador at Constantinople—and the story of the Berlin Treaty, are enough to make Englishmen ashamed. These massacred Armenians are our responsibility.

All those who are interested in Armenia ought to read the trustworthy narrative of the Eghin massacre in the morning papers of Tuesday last, sent by a Constantinople correspondent, and based on an interview with Mrs. Rendel Harris, of Cambridge.

Notwithstanding occasional depreciatory remarks made by travellers on the work of missionaries, the testimony of well-qualified witnesses to the value of that work continues to increase. None are better able to speak than Sir Henry H. Johnston, British Administrator of Central Africa, and none have spoken more plainly. His references to the purity of motive which, in the main, actuates our brethren, to the patience with which they toil on, to the devotion with which two men will step into the breach where one has fallen, show that they are not always misunderstood. He justly said that they make all the experiments and others reap the profits. This is notoriously true of Madagascar. Even in Africa, as the Administrator remarked, "from the womb of the missions was born the African Lakes Company and the coffee-planting industry." This is only an illustration of the world-wide services of missionaries, which are confessedly a safer foundation to build upon than the adventures of the traveller or the dealings of the trader. The fact is that nothing is so good for men everywhere and in all things as the Gospel.

An esteemed correspondent at Southend writes deploring the fact that a "charity concert," on behalf of a Roman Catholic institution, has just been held in that town, under the patronage of Evangelical Protestants. Surely these are not the days for Christian people, Churchmen or Nonconformists, to support Popish institutions. When Mediævalism threatens to overwhelm Gospel simplicity, it is of the greatest importance that those who are set for the Gospel should raise up a standard against the enemy. But the concert at Southend was of a worldly character throughout. All the more is it astonishing that ministers should have supported it, practically commending it to the patronage of young and old. Is not the world in the Church, that the Church should so advance the interests of the world?

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

LANGUAGES MADE EASY.

THE course of lessons which will commence in our issue of 7th January next is calculated to prove of immense benefit to all young men and women who are laying the foundation of their future career, as well as for others engaged in business which demands of them a vast amount of mental exercise; while to those who are desirous of acquiring a foreign language, men and women who have studied Mr. Kilburn's system are unanimous in declaring it to be invaluable.

Our readers would do a good service to any Sunday-school teacher or Bible class leader, to encourage the study of the languages in which the Scriptures were originally written, by the aid of the principles set forth by Mr. Kilburn in his forthcoming articles. Young men and women, too, desiring to enter the mission field, but who are baffled by the difficulties of acquiring a foreign tongue, will find that by Mr. Kilburn's method these difficulties have to a great extent been removed. And to students of all classes, the course of Lessons on Names and Languages will be found to yield remarkable results.

THE FIVE TESTS.

As we have said in previous issues, there are five tests which we should apply to every system of memory training; and to the following questions the replies which we have quoted from the Press and from personal testimonies are merely a few from hundreds which have been penned testifying to the usefulness of Mr. Kilburn's system.

1. What has the author himself been able to do by it?

A row of thirty figures which Director König had given him (Rev. J. D. Kilburn) eight days before, he knew still, and repeated them, not merely forward and backward, but he could give them in any way, leaving out three figures, then give the others, or begin with the thirteenth, etc. A row of twenty figures which a reporter wrote, was repeated to him twice, and he knew it forward and backward.—Graser Tagespost, March 22, 1896.

2. Have others been able to use it?

After some introductory remarks Pastor Kilburn wrote the following numbers on the blackboard, and the writer of this account now gives them from his memory, as a proof of the value of Pastor Kilburn's method of teaching. The earth contains 263,000,000,000 cubic miles. If one could remove a cubic mile per day, it would require more than 700,000,000 years to remove the whole. Uranus is eighty times as large as the earth; Neptune is ninety times as large; Saturn is 900 times as large; Jupiter is 1300 times as large; the Sun is 1,348,000 times as large as the earth. If one could remove a world the size of the earth from the sun every day, it would require more than 3600 years to remove the whole. The solar system is travelling at the rate of 33,000,000 miles per year. It will require more than 18,000,000 years before it completes its orbit. To go from great to little, there are 240,000 different species of insects on the earth; some of these are so small that 4000 of them are only equal to a grain of sand. At the same time, Pastor Kilburn wrote the following texts of Scripture on the board:—John i. 1-3; Col. i. 16; Ps. xxxiii. 6; Is. liii. 3-5; Mal iii. 16, 17.—Der Reichsbote, May 22, 1896.

3. Is it fanciful and complex, or natural and philosophical?

Rev. Chas. G. Moore, Medallist in Philosophy of the University of Edinburgh, writes:—

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's Memory Lessons are founded on sound philosophical principles. They are likely to be useful to all who thoroughly master them.

Le Chevalier Prochet, D.D., Commandeur de l'Ordre de la Couronne, Pasteur President de l'Eglise Vaudoise d'Italie, writes:—

I quite agree with the foregoing opinion, and wish to see those lessons taught in my country.

4. Is there likely to be more difficulty in learning it than benefit derived from using it?

"After a lesson from the Rev. J. D. Kilburn on how to remember facts, illustrations, anecdotes, etc., we were able to commit the following sentences, etc., to memory, so that we could repeat them with ease in the exact order in which they occur.

"This was done, not through reading them several times over, but after hearing them read once.

"They are not fanciful sentences chosen because there is some connection between them which would help in remembering them. The first eleven are suggested by the incidents recorded in Our Own Magazine for June, the next four by texts which form a Bible reading. They recall the incidents and texts referred to."

(Then follow a list of the sentences, with the signatures of several well-known men and women who attended Mr. Kilburn's lesson.)

5. Is it injurious or helpful to the mind as a whole?

The Kreuz Zeitung of May 21, after reporting the results of a lecture on how to remember numbers, etc., and the results accomplished thereby, says of the system: "It differs greatly from all the systems known, and does not confine itself to numbers. It is based on the principle of comparison and combination, and thus changes the mechanical work of memory into a work of the understanding."

We should be glad if our readers would procure from our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, a supply of leaflets (which will be sent post free) for circulation amongst those who are likely to benefit from Mr. Kilburn's course of lessons.

Mr. Moody's Schools.

DEAR SIR,—Through your widely-circulated paper we desire to reach hundreds and thousands who love Mr. Moody and are under lasting obligation for his written and spoken words. In February he attains his sixtieth birthday, and it is proposed to make a presentation of money, to complete the scheme of college buildings at Mount Hermon, Northfield. For many years he has greatly desired this; and it is pleasant to think of giving pleasure to one who has been so great a blessing to us all.

We want to have a large list of subscribers to hand to him, expressive of the good-will of Christians in Great Britain and her colonies, and shall be glad to receive even the smallest donations.—Yours truly,

The London Teetotal Federation and Advocates' League has been "established for the purpose of extending the advocacy of temperance principles and federating existing lodges, societies, open-air missions, and other agencies, and for the purpose of efficiently organising the electoral strength of temperance voters throughout the Metropolis." A conference has been held at Livesey Hall, Scrutton-street, Shoreditch, which was attended by about 115 representative temperance workers, and presided over by Mr. James Bedford.

Some Plain Words,

FROM MR. D. L. MOODY,
IN "THE (NEW YORK) INDEPENDENT."

IN a recent issue of your paper I saw an article from a contributor which stated that there were over three thousand churches in the Congregational and Presbyterian bodies of this country that did not report a single member added by profession of faith last year. Can this be true? The thought has taken such hold of me that I can't get it out of my mind. It is enough almost to send a thrill of horror through the soul of every true Christian.

If this is the case with these two large denominations, what must be the condition of the others also? Are we all going to sit still and let this thing continue? Shall our religious newspapers and our pulpits keep their mouths closed like "dumb dogs that cannot bark" to warn people of approaching danger? Should we not all lift up our voice like a trumpet about this matter? What must the Son of God think of such a result of our labour as this? What must an unbelieving world think about a Christianity that can't bring forth any more fruit? And have we no care for the multitudes of souls going down to perdition every year while we all sit and look on? And this country of ours, where will it be in the next ten years if we don't awake out of sleep?

I wish some of you editors of the influential papers, who are in close touch with the ministers and clergy, would tell us what the matter is. Is this the result of what they call the "Modern Criticism" of the Bible? Is this a specimen of the better times, when we would get rid of the old stories about Moses writing the Pentateuch, and the sun and moon standing still, and the fish swallowing Jonah? How much of all this is owing to the Politics our ministers have been preaching lately, and the Talks on the Labour question, and the Stereopticon-shows on Sunday evenings, and all those other things that have been driving out the blessed Gospel of Jesus Christ? When ministers go into preludes on current topics, how can they expect any afterludes of conversion?

Do Christian editors and ministers in these days believe in conversions as they used to do? Won't your great paper please answer this question? I hear of some men in high places who talk as though all that was a thing of the past. "It's education now that men want," not salvation; is this the fact? Are the churches going to turn over all the work of saving men to the Salvation Army, and the Volunteers and the Rescue Missions? I know of a city, of about 50,000 inhabitants, where it seems to be the common talk that if a man wants to find Christ he must go into the Young Men's Christian Association to find Him. What a shame that churches should be run on such a plan that that kind of thing could be said!

I am pleading just now every chance I get for all our churches to be open every Sunday night for the preaching of the Gospel. I wish our religious papers would help me send that cry all over the country. It is time we gave up the abuse of the opportunity in substituting temperance meetings and Sunday-school concerts and Endeavour rallies and all that kind of thing, right enough in their place, but not the one thing needful. Working-men and their families can often get out but once on Sunday, and that is in the evening. Why, then, should not they have as good a chance to hear the Gospel as other people? Why should they be put off with that kind of an apology for a church service which is often seen?

Let some change of this character be brought about with the Week of Prayer at the beginning of the New Year. Let the ball be set a-rolling then, and it will gain large momentum before spring, and there will be great results. Won't you please help all you can, in every way, to get the churches praying and preaching and working for souls?

In a leader on Mr. Moody's communication The Independent says:—

We can do nothing else but endorse Mr. Moody's appeal. The article to which he refers was written for the very purpose of pressing the appeal for more evangelism. While we do not wholly accept the basis of facts on which Mr. Moody makes the appeal, yet we do most earnestly desire that our pastors should, during the season now upon us, devote abundant and persistent labour to the work of securing converts. To accomplish this end nothing is better than to make the Sunday evening service an evangelistic one. We are not saying that that should be the nature of the service every Sunday evening in the year; but we believe it ought to be, as a general rule, for a good part of the year. The first duty of the preacher is to bring souls into the Kingdom, and afterwards to instruct them, help them, bind them to the Church in every possible way—but first to find them. And if a church is eager and earnest in this work of making converts it is pretty sure to be successful in the other departments of church life.

But what about these thousands of churches that receive no accessions? It is a sad fact that there are multitudes of such churches. They certainly need evangelists or evangelistic preaching by their pastors; preaching that has earnestness and faith in it. But it must be remembered that from these we are to deduct the hundreds of churches that were organised in 1895, and for which no accessions are reported for that year. We are to deduct also the large number from which no report is received through the failure of church clerks to respond to the application for statistics. Then there is a considerable number of churches that are practically dead; hundreds that do not keep up any worship, and which ought to be absorbed for the good of the cause and to the betterment of Christian unity. The others that report no accessions, as will be seen by reference to the year-books, are mostly very small churches of a dozen or twenty or thirty members. They ought to have received accessions. Perhaps they had no pastor; perhaps it is a very scattered mountain or prairie neighbourhood. But, apart from these cases, there remain a considerable number of churches of which we can only say they have shamefully failed of showing the first and most important evidence of life—that of putting forth new flowers and fruit. They need to be evangelised.

Mr. Moody's whole article is a series of interrogation points. He wants to know if the fruitlessness of these churches is "the result of what they call the 'modern criticism' of the Bible?" whether it is "owing to the politics our ministers have been preaching lately, and the talks on the labour question, and the stereopticon-shows on Sunday evenings," and "the preludes on current topics." We certainly do not believe that these are the causes. The critical study of the Bible is a very different thing from its religious study. But no honest and fair study of the Bible has any tendency to make people think any the less of the duty of repenting of sin and giving their hearts to the service of God. Ministers that preach on doing their duty to the State also preach on doing their duty to God. We are surprised to have Mr. Moody say that he knows of "a city" of about 50,000 inhabitants, where it seems to be the common talk that if a man wants to find Christ he must go into the Young Men's Christian Association to find Him. We would like to know the name of the city. It is very hard to believe that such a city exists in the country.

But with all this true, the great sad fact remains of an enormous number of people in our larger towns and cities, and in our smaller towns also, that have not the Christian faith and life, and for whom the churches work languidly, whom they too often leave to the evangelistic methods of their Young Men's Christian Associations and Salvation Army. But these also are a part of the great Church. They are its agencies; they are made up of its members; they are companies of believers working for Christ, and are to be counted in and not out in the reckoning of results. Mr. Moody does well to be astonished and pained at the thousands of churches which reported not a single member added by profession of faith last year. It is enough to send a thrill of pain through the soul of every true Christian. These churches and all our churches need more and not less evangelistic services, and we call upon our pastors to listen to Mr. Moody's appeal.

A Call to Prayer and Work.

By MR. MOODY.

NEVER during the past century has the Church of Christ had such an opportunity for the spread of the Gospel as now presents itself. Never has the world manifested a greater interest in religious teaching. All substitutes for Christianity have proved a failure, and the nation is seeking once more for the old paths. Let the Church arise, and make ready for the work.

First, let us have a revival of righteousness among ourselves, and then open wide our churches to those whom we have so long neglected. There were three thousand churches, in two denominations alone, last year that report no accessions or professions of faith. Is it the will of God that millions upon millions of dollars are expended upon these places of worship, to be used but once or twice a week, while our neighbours are needing his message? Is it not time that the Church should arise? If we refuse to work in his service, be assured He will turn from the regular channels and find servants who will do his bidding in spreading the Gospel to every living soul.

During the remaining days of this year let us all wait upon our Master for a special preparation for the coming winter; and when the New Year opens, why should not every Christian Church in America and England begin the season with a thirty days' service of Gospel meetings? Why not set aside all other diversions, and church work itself, during January, in a united work for the spread of the Gospel? The world needs it sorely, and was never more ready to receive it, and it is the privilege of the Church to proclaim it. If every church will but answer to this appeal with open doors and hearty response; if every pastor will exert himself to spend and to be spent in the Master's service at this special season; if every officer will give his sympathy and co-operation to the work—the Church will have cause to remember January, 1897, both in time and through eternity.

A revival of righteousness in our midst is the only solution to the social problems which meet us on every side, and the only way of arousing the Church to active life. If poor and rich are not brought together in God's house, where can they meet? If new life does not come into our churches what is to become of our children? Let us pray and make ready, and then unite in a mighty work for God throughout the month of January.

Sligo.—Rev. J. W. Harrison, of Arklow, and an evangelist recently visited this town, and met with rather a noisy reception, but a great number that day heard the Gospel. The secretary and an evangelist of the Open-Air Mission for Ireland visited the town. A number of men and boys were on the platform, waiting for the preachers, who were assaulted as they left the station. One or two of the rowdies used their fists freely. No serious injury, however, was done, and the usual place of preaching was reached. During the progress of the meeting much hostility was exhibited, but no one was injured.

Mizpah.

"The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another."—Gen xxxi. 49.

THE long sojourn in Padan-Aram was over. Jacob, whose stay there had been a protracted series of "diamond cut diamond" encounters with a nature as astute and subtle as his own, had yielded to the constraint of Providential guidance, and taken his departure, with wives, children, and flocks, from the land where they had been gained. In that strange country the God of his fathers had been with him, and though he had proved himself ignorant and undisciplined, he had been graciously cared for and blessed. Had he been content to trust to that blessing, instead of seeking success by his own crooked ways, he would have come out now, not only with "two bands," but with an unstained conscience, and without the roots of bitterness which had been planted by his ill-example in his family life, and which in after days bore nauseous fruit in the cruel deceits practised on him by his sons.

And yet we must not overlook the bright spots in his Mesopotamian sojourn. He has evidently to some degree favourably impressed Laban, whose sordid nature had recognised not only Jacob's worship of Isaac's God, but the Divine protection and favour that had encompassed his path, and had even extended to those who were related to him. Just as in our own day. Many a son, who is but half-hearted in his allegiance to the Christianity of his parents, is yet reaping substantial benefits from it, blessed for the parents' sake, as Laban was for Jacob's. Perhaps if the history of those twenty years were more fully written, we should find many extenuating circumstances that would prove Jacob less blameable than he appears. God at least still espoused his cause, and even condescended to address Laban on his behalf. And through the whole of that remarkable scene at Gilead, where the stricken father, overtaking the fugitive, pours from his stricken heart a passion of upbraiding, and complaint, there is not a single charge brought against Jacob's moral character, except the theft of the images, which proved to be the act, unknown to her husband, of Laban's own daughter.

Finally, after the reproaches and mutual recriminations, that, under the circumstances, were perhaps so natural, then comes this solemn memorial service, at which Laban most unexpectedly officiates, a tender fatherliness coming out very beautifully in the words of the covenant, and an unlooked-for devoutness in the appeal to Jehovah for his ratification of their oaths.

We cannot but feel great pitifulness towards poor Laban, as, after that pathetic leave-taking, he, in the early dawn of the following day, "returned to his place." It was a lonely place now, no longer a home for him, as he missed the able management of his stalwart son-in-law, the affectionate tendance of daughters, and the sweet prattle of grandchildren. But it is comforting to hope that his desolate old age would be brightened by an increasing knowledge of the God of Abraham, and that he would learn by experience how tenderly He could watch over and care for him when "absent" from those who had hitherto been the sunshine of his life. The whole scene in its vividness and pallor seems but of yesterday, though thousands of years have swept over the sands of time since Laban and Jacob left footprints there. And the Mizpah covenant remains. The word is often used as an expression of mere sentiment—a gage d'amour exchanged between friends on the eve of a painful separation. But to those who look beneath the surface of things it still points to one whose faithfulness and power can be confidently invoked in life's saddest hours, even at "the parting of the ways" of those who love. Let us take courage. If the absence involved means keen loneliness at one end of the chain, we can always be linked to the presence and companionship of "our Father," and there are some who can testify how, in such times of need, He has fulfilled his own promise, spoken to us by his Son: "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you."

The "Mizpah" thought too is full of solace to those whose sorrow at separation is intensified by dreaded peril to the loved one who has gone. Only the heart of a Christian mother can know the anguish of parting from a son who is leaving home without any certainty—on her part—that his principles are strong enough to bear the test of inevitable temptation. But the Lord can "watch between him and thee," poor mother. On the watch-tower—that is the literal meaning of our motto-word, and it pictures the Lord Jehovah there, watching for opportunities of blessing the absent one we commend to Him.

We are painfully conscious of disabling limitations to our intercourse with dear ones far away. How often we think eagerly of influence that would especially meet their need, of some book that would counsel and stimulate, of a course of action apparently so desirable; and, again, on the other hand, of habits and associations that might possibly prove so dangerous. And yet we can offer neither suggestion or warning, our knowledge of the disposition we have to deal with convincing us that it would be deemed "interference," and would cause irritation rather than benefit; and so we have to "be still," that most difficult of duties to some natures, and under some circumstances. But will it not make it easier to us if we take a firm hold of this Mizpah bond, if we remember that the Lord, He who is a Father to the fatherless and a Judge of the widow, is on the watch-tower, taking in the whole situation, and knowing how to bring his wonderful resources to bear without friction on the most unmanageable cases. "The right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly."

Is there not here also a suggestion of contrariety of interests which it is thus left to God to adjust? This is of continual occurrence, causing family feuds which have separated chief friends. There are times when wise legal advice is resorted to and taken, and where—in business affairs especially—an equitable bond is the end of all strife. But far more frequently interests are involved that are too delicate to be touched without harm from without. And then we have the privilege of this Divine mediation—so powerful that it can regulate the movements of a universe, so gentle and tactful that it could regard the feelings of a Jewish tax-gatherer, and work a miracle lest he should be offended.

Some patient souls there are who are thankful to put all their intricate affairs under this control, not fretting at apparent delay, but content to wait the unfolding of processes which, in Providence as in nature, are often slow. To those who thus wait for the Lord there comes no shame of disappointed hope, but a sweet surprise of blessing. A net-work of influence has been set in motion so minute as almost to elude observation, but the result is potent; and as difficulty is cleared away, opposition overcome, and hearts won, there arises the cry of joyous triumph, "What hath God wrought!"

So by this brief meditation we are brought to the old counsel, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." M. C. F.

Ministerial Ordination.

To be a true minister of Christ, a man must in the first place have experienced a real heart-conversion to God: he must be "born from above." He must have a desire for the work, enkindled in him by the Holy Ghost. He must have certain qualifications for it which the Christian people will recognise. He must have some seals to the service which he has attempted for God as a mere private member of the Church. He must in some fashion have the call of his fellow-Christians; and he must, in a fully constituted Church, be solemnly designated to the office. In Apostolic times this was done by the laying on of the hands of those already in office, who acted, in this matter as in others, as the representatives of the Christian people.

This is Ordination, in the New Testament sense; and a solemn and precious thing it is for the Church of God. As for the present pretentious theories arising out of the essentially priestly notion of Apostolic Succession, whether Roman or Anglican, we can imagine how Paul would have overwhelmed them with one of his impassioned syllogisms. As for Peter, we really think he would have used some very uncomplimentary expressions towards their advocates.

Oblivion.

"God...who comforteth us in all our tribulation."—2 Cor. 1-4.
"God shall wipe away all tears."—Rev. vii. 17 and xxi. 4.

If deep and wide roll'd Lethe's tide,
Anear my feet to-day,
My memories of agonies
I would not drink away.

Though mandragore, of poet lore,
With soporific dower,
I now might take, and grief forsake,
I would not use its power.

If lotus-flowers of magic powers
Beside me floating lay,
No sorrow yet, would I forget—
No hour of dire dismay.

If poppies, too, beside me grew
Oblivion to invite,
Recall all pain, no more again,
I would not if I might.

For if the mind no more could find
The days when heart did break,
The echoes of comfortings
It could no longer wake.

Of days when here, God hath drawn near
To kiss away my fears;
So I would wait till, at Heaven's gate,
He wipes away my tears.

Paris.—The meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life lately held in this metropolis of pleasure have left a blissful impression upon the hearts and minds of many who were privileged to hear Messrs. Paynter, Luce, and Houghton. Many believers thank God for the utterance by his three witnesses of the great truths concerning thorough consecration to the Lord and separation from the world, dependence upon the Holy Spirit, supreme exaltation of the Divine Saviour, and the final authority of the whole Bible. God grant that like gatherings be renewed in Paris. J. H. A.

Lower Zambezi Mission.—A circular setting forth the objects of this mission intimates that Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Anderson hope to return to their sphere in April next. During his four years of labour on the Zambezi, Mr. Anderson translated a portion of the Scriptures into the Sena language, and did other important pioneer work. A committee has now been formed, and the office of treasurer of the Mission has been accepted by Mr. R. H. Hutchinson, 6, Croxted-road, West Dulwich, S.E. The work will be conducted on evangelical and unsectarian lines. Friends desiring to communicate with Mr. Anderson should address him at 79, Thornlaw-road, West Norwood, S.E.

Young Men and Temptation.

By SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS.

NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS TO THE Y.M.C.A.

After a loyal reference to the approaching celebration of the Queen's sixty years' reign, and a note of encouragement as to the growth of the Y.M.C.A., Sir George proceeds:—

THE motto text selected by the National Council, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matt. xxvi. 41), suggests to us the topic of "Temptation, and what should be our attitude towards it," and is a subject the consideration of which cannot fail to be of practical usefulness to us.

Temptation in the Bible has two meanings. It will avoid confusion of thought if we remember this. For instance, it means to test—to try—to prove. This is illustrated by the life of Abraham, of whom it is said in Genesis xxii. 1, that "God did tempt Abraham." And in this sense God tempts men now. He tries their faith—He tests their sincerity. Such temptations are wholesome.

But temptation, according to the general acceptation of the term, has a far different meaning. It is the evil that is without appealing to the evil that is within. In this sense we are all tempted. We are encircled by temptation, because we are placed in a world where evil abounds. So in speaking of temptation we touch a chord which finds a sympathetic response in the heart of every member of the Young Men's Christian Association.

What need have we, therefore, to be on the alert, and to listen to our Divine Master, who, knowing the conditions of our life, and with his penetrating insight into human character, speaks to each one of us in the words of our motto text, and says, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

Prayerful watchfulness is an absolute condition of personal spiritual growth and effective successful service. It is the path of safety—the way to victory. It has been well said that "watchfulness without prayerfulness is presumption, and prayerfulness without watchfulness is hypocrisy." So it is. To pray to be kept from evil, and then to read a suggestive novel, or to open the ears to impure conversation, or to associate with companions of questionable character, or to put ourselves into favourable position with "the sin which doth so easily beset us," is the most aggravated form of inconsistency it is possible to imagine. It is like asking God to preserve us from fire, and then deliberately put our hand into the flame. Temptation boldly met, heroically fought, and courageously overcome, in the strength of Christ, will develop in our character those moral and spiritual excellencies which compose the highest type of Christian manhood.

What has been our attitude towards temptation during the year that has just gone? Have we resisted or have we fallen? We do well to remember that when we fall under temptation, in the fall we lose something of will and character-forming power, which cannot be recovered—one fall makes its repetition all the easier, just as the resistance of evil makes evil the more easily resisted. Further, it is impossible to measure or gauge the probable effect upon others produced by our fall. We make it either harder or easier for those under our influence to resist temptation by the strength or weakness of character which we display when we are tempted.

The Y.M.C.A. exists for the purpose of assisting young men to overcome temptation. All its agencies have this end in view. We are in effect a "Temptation Resisting Society." We seek to shield young men from the seductive, contaminating allurements of evil, and thousands upon thousands bear their grateful testimony to the protecting and sheltering influences of the Y.M.C.A. Provision is made for the social, intellectual, and physical needs of young men; but our supreme purpose is to lead them to Christ. We believe that He is their soul's supreme necessity, and that the grace of God alone is sufficient to enable them successfully to meet and overcome the manifold snares and temptations of daily life. And it is in proportion as the members exemplify the saving grace of God in their lives, and by their wise counsel and consistent conduct attract others to the same secret source of strength, that the Association fulfils its God-appointed mission. As we enter upon another year of service let us do so in the spirit of our motto text, "Watch and Pray."—Abridged.

Famine in India.

DEAR SIR,—The famine is rightly the great topic of interest in India at the present time. Although the whole of the country is not affected, the stricken areas are very large, covering altogether hundreds of miles. Some rain has fallen within the past few days, but the benefit of this is chiefly prospective, as affecting crops just sown or about to be sown. At the best it must be many months before matters return to their normal condition; and in the meantime millions will be without sufficient food, and hundreds of thousands will be in danger of perishing of actual starvation.

Unable to feed their children, parents take them to mission homes and orphanages and implore the missionaries to accept them, and often it happens that after leaving the children the parents return and piteously beseech to be fed themselves.

In one class of cases hunger, weakness, and despair are followed by suicide. The sights that many missionaries have continually to witness are heart-rending in the extreme. I know of some who have already broken down beneath the constant strain.

I must add my testimony concerning the great need of Christian sympathy towards these starving multitudes. Your readers will find some pathetic particulars in an article contributed by my wife to the January issue of The Sentinel, published by Dyer Brothers, 31, Paternoster-square, London.

I am receiving pecuniary aid for the famine-stricken from Indian readers of The Bombay Guardian, and would be glad of similar help from Christian friends in Britain. Missionaries at work in the famine-stricken districts are the almoners of money sent through me.—Sincerely yours,

ALFRED S. DYER, Editor, Bombay Guardian.
Kheturadi Plain Road, Bombay, November 28.

The committee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission have received most distressing accounts of the sufferings amongst the women and children in the afflicted districts. The greater part of the Society's work is carried on in the North-west Provinces, where the famine is likely to be felt most acutely. We have also missionaries in other parts of India, such as the Punjab and the Bombay Presidency, where there is much distress. The Government are providing relief works, on which large numbers of men, women, and children are engaged. But the provision they make as a rule fails to reach the secluded women and children in the Zenanas, multitudes of whom will be in danger of starving. Our lady missionaries in their visits to the homes, possess special facilities for reaching these women and children, and of testing in each family the reality and extent of their distress. In many cases the missionaries may be the only helpers who can reach them. There is also extreme distress amongst large numbers of young children who have been left orphans or have no friends to care for them.

Help, to be effectual, must be given quickly, and funds should be placed in the hands of the Society's workers which will enable them to meet the existing distress, and to be ready with plans and arrangements in case it becomes more acute.

I, Pall Mall East, S.W.

KINNAIRD.

A very touching account of the misery and suffering caused by the famine is sent home by Rev. A. Müller, of the Kurku Mission, who writes from Saugor, C.P. India. He says he has seen starved women, children, and lads lying like bundles of rags or crouching nearly naked in the streets. Rows of them could be seen sitting in a field—1450 of them, men, women, and children—wailing, imploring one to give them food and also some rags to protect them from the bitter nightly cold. It is stated that since July 600 people have died in one famine poor-house. Help for this effort may be sent to Mrs. Baxter, 33, Drayton park, London, N.

Hampson Hall, Redland, Bristol.—Special services held in this hall have been followed with blessing. Souls have been saved, Christians cheered and stimulated, and at least one led to offer himself for the foreign mission field.

Galway, Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in the Congregational church for some time past. Two ladies from London have been labouring with blessed results. Following these meetings, Mr. David Rea conducted services. The meetings are still going on, and the work of grace continues. The street preaching is also encouraging.

Messrs. Whittle & Stebbins in Edinburgh.

By A CORRESPONDENT.

SINCE your last report of this work these evangelists have conducted a week's mission in the Newington Established Church, and one in Broughton Place U. P. Church. The meetings commenced with these churches being well filled, if not crowded, on the Sunday, but the week-night meetings have not fulfilled the expectation of those interested. Perhaps a week in one district is hardly sufficient to arouse an interest in special Gospel effort in a city like Edinburgh, especially in stormy weather such as we have been having. Then there are so many claims on people's time and attention; they only begin to know about the meetings when they are finishing.

Major Whittle certainly has not spared himself; it is refreshing to see how strongly he deals with sin, and insists on its being forsaken, and his presentation of the Gospel is clear as crystal. We know of not a few cases of decision, and have had testimony of blessing received by Christian workers.

The fourth week of the Mission commenced in the Barclay F.C., last Sunday, which was crowded. This church is well known for its earnest evangelical ministry and work. Major Whittle spoke with much feeling of the visits of Mr. Moody and himself on former occasions, when there was great blessing. The Major's subject was "Repentance," a topic not very popular in these days. It was a most powerful and impressive address and was calculated to strike and stick. He is a man in sympathy with his work, and while he deals faithfully with men in regard to their condition as sinners, it is evident his heart is full of tenderness and desire for their salvation. His whole address was a powerful appeal to let God have his place in the hearts and lives of his hearers. Many rose in the after-meeting, desirous to be prayed for, and we trust the Holy Ghost led not a few into rest and peace in Jesus. We trust that this week's meetings may be the best of any. We feel that for the remaining meetings there must be a real laying-hold of God. Major Whittle is conducting the afternoon prayer-meeting each day with this special object in view. Let us pray that there may be a breasting-up of the fallow ground and confession of sin among the people; and in the workers, hearts all aglow with Holy Ghost compassion and fire, willing to spend and be spent in this sublime work.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS.

Major Whittle has also conducted meetings for young people in the Free Assembly Hall every Friday afternoon. The attendance has increased each week, over 800 being present last Friday. As reference has already been made in your columns to the nature of the addresses, suffice it to say that the Major has a wonderful gift in this way; Sunday school teachers, parents, and even divinity students, might find it profitable to be present, and take a lesson from the interesting manner in which the truth is set forth by means of object lessons. One little fellow who was present, and heard the "candle sermon," was able some days after to write to his father, and give him a full account of what he had seen and heard. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins have led the praise at these as at the other meetings. The song, "Scatter smiles and sunshines" seems to be the favourite with the young people. We believe much blessing will result from these meetings.

WOMEN'S MEETINGS.

Mrs. Stebbins is conducting meetings as above, four days a week at 3 o'clock. We believe she has been much used in this special line of service.

The Dwarfs of Central Africa.—The Presbyterian Church of the United States has accepted the offer of Miss Margaret MacLean, of Glasgow, to support a mission to the dwarf peoples of Africa. With Gaboon and Corisco as centres, the American Presbyterian missionaries have taken the Gospel to the dwarfs among the Mabeya tribes. They are planning an advance, and for that purpose have asked for additional workers. This curious fragment of humanity, whom Stanley met in his travels, have for some years been laid upon Miss MacLean's heart; she has now given £1500 to establish a mission among them, and promises £500 a year in support of the work. Some particulars of the people have been given in the monthly organ of the mission, The Church at Home and Abroad (1834, Chestnut-street, Philadelphia), the December issue of which announces the completion of the arrangement now reported.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 20.

"I AM A STRANGER WITH THEE, AND A SOJOURNER."
—Psa. xxxix. 12.

SORROW and pain had taught the Psalmist some deep lessons touching on the life of men around him—they seemed to be shadows pursuing shadows. They walked in a vain show, and were disquieted in vain. At their best estate, i.e., when most firmly rooted, they were only a breath, curling from lip or nostril into the chill morning air, and then gone for ever. The outward life and activity of man seems to him as the shadow which darkens for a moment a whole mountain side, and, whilst you look, it is gone.

Amid all these vanities, the child of God is a pilgrim to the Unseen. He passes through Vanity Fair, with his eyes steadily fixed on the Eternal City, whose Builder and Maker is God. Abraham first described himself as a stranger and sojourner, when he stood up from before his dead, and craved a burying-place from the sons of Heth. All his children, those who inherit a like faith, must say the same. Faith cannot find a home on this side of the stars. It has caught a glimpse of the Infinite, and it can never be content with anything less.

But we are sojourners with God. He is our constant companion. What Greatheart was to the women and feeble ones, that God is to each of his saints. We may be strangers, but we are not solitary. We may be compelled to relax our grasp from the hands of beloved ones, but never alone—the Father is with us. Good company, safe escort, is it not?

MONDAY, December 21.

"LO, I COME; I DELIGHT TO DO THY WILL, O GOD."
—Psa. xl. 7, 8.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews (chap. x.) lays great stress on these words. He says that this yielding up of Christ's will to his Father's was consummated on the cross, and was the inner heart of our Saviour's passion. "By which will (surrendered and given back to God) we have been sanctified." He then proceeds to suggest that it is only as we enter into a living oneness with Jesus in this that we can pass from the outer court and have boldness to enter into the holiest of all. This, He says, is the new and living way. Jesus entered into the holiest because He gave Himself absolutely to his Father. We cannot expect to go thither till we have become possessed of the same spirit.

It is a solemn question for each. Have we all stood at the cross, as the slave of old at the doorpost of his master's house, and said, "I love my Master. I will not go out free"? Have we been united to that cross, as by the boring of the awl? Have we so embraced the will of God that we are prepared to follow it, though it lead to the Cross and grave? Can we say, with our Lord, "I delight to do thy will. Yea, thy law is within my heart"? Then there is no doubt of our being able to stand unabashed where angels veil their faces; and we shall undoubtedly be commissioned to go forth to preach righteousness in the great congregation.

"BLESSED IS HE THAT CONSIDERETH THE POOR."
—Psa. xli. 1.

The realm of Blessedness is all around. It may be entered at any minute and we may dwell in it all the days of our life. Our enjoyment of blessedness is totally undetermined by outward circumstances. If you stand in some great retail emporium and watch the faces of the women, you will be greatly instructed. Yonder sits a richly-dressed lady with society and fashion, dress and money at her command, but her manner and tone are utterly weary and dissatisfied, whilst across the counter a girl waits on her, whose thin face and simple attire tell their own story, but her expression and bearing betoken the possession of an inner calm and strength, an inexhaustible fund of patience and sweetness. Such contrasts meet us everywhere. The realm of blessedness dips down into humble and lowly lives on every side of us. Have we entered it?

Christ's beatitudes give us eight gates, any one of which will immediately conduct us within its confines. But here is another. Blessed is he that considereth the poor. Even if you cannot help or relieve them to any appreciable extent, consider them, let them feel that you are thinking of and for them, do not hurry them when they recite their long, sad story; put them at their ease, treat them with Christian courtesy and consideration. Begin at once. There are plenty around you, who, if not poor in the things of this world, are poor in love and hope and the knowledge of God. Silver and gold you may have none, but such as you have be sure and give.

"DEEP CALLETH UNTO DEEP."—Psa. xlii. 7.

There are wonderful harmonies in nature. Voices call to one another across vast spaces. The depths below the firmament call to the heights above. The deep of the ocean calls to the deep of the azure sky. Listen, O my soul, to the mighty voices sounding ever through the universe of God.

The deep of Divine Redemption calls to the deep of human need. It sometimes seems as though the opposite were true, and as though the cry originated in man; but it is not so; God is always first; and as He looks into hearts stricken and desperate, conscious of unfathomable yearnings, and infinite capacity, He calls aloud, and the depth of his heart appeals to the depth of the heart of man. Would that it might ever answer back.

The deep of Christ's wealth calls to the deep of the saint's poverty. He looks down upon our attenuated and poverty-stricken experience with an infinite yearning. He cannot endure that we should go through life naked and miserable, poor and blind, when he has got gold, and precious stones, and white raiment. Harken, O daughter, and consider. Forsake thy father's house. Come unto Me, and receive from my fulness. Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

The deep of the Holy Spirit's intercession calls to the deep of the Church's prayer, when He awakens in us groanings that cannot be uttered, and burdens us with the will of God.

Whatever depths there are in God, they appeal to corresponding depths in us. And whatever be the depths of our sorrow, desire, or necessity, there are correspondences in God from which full supplies may be obtained. Does your heart pant for God? Hope thou in Him, for thou shalt yet praise Him.

THURSDAY, December 24.

"O GOD, MY GOD."—Psa. xliii. 4.

What a change within the soul one short hour spent in God's presence will prevail to make! The Psalmist is opposed by an ungodly nation, and resisted by a deceitful and unjust man. He mourns because of the oppression of the enemy, he questions whether God has cast him off. Then led by those twin angels, Light and Truth, commissioned and sent forth for that purpose from the presence of God, he enters in thought and spirit within the precincts of the Divine Tabernacle, and stands before the Altar. Immediately the clouds break. Putting his puny hand upon the great God, he appropriates all He is and has, as though it were his own, and takes again, in a very ecstasy of realising faith, his harp, too long silent, and breaks into rapturous melody.

Have you not sometimes groped in the dark, till those two angels have come to lead you also to the altar where the High Priest stands? Then what a change! Your circumstances have not altered, but you have conceived a new idea of what God can be to you. You have said, This God is my God for ever and ever. You have said, O God, my God. You have chided your soul for being disquieted and depressed whilst such a heritage is yours. You have spoken of God, first as the God of your strength, secondly as the gladness of your joy, thirdly as the health of your face.

Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong. Or others—that we are not always strong, That we are ever overborne with care, That we should ever weak and heartless be, Anxious or troubled when with us is prayer, And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

FRIDAY, December 25.

"THOU ART MY KING, O GOD, COMMAND VICTORY."
—Ps. xlv. 4 (R.V.).

Before a man can say that God is his King, he must have very definitely consecrated himself to God. The relation of too many believers to Christ falls short of this supreme act of the soul, and in consequence their lives lack directness, power, victory over temptation. My reader, thou hast been sorely tried by over-mastering temptations before which thy resolutions have been swept as children's sand-heaps by the tide. Wilt thou quietly consider whether from the very depth of thy being thou hast ever said to God, Thou art my King? The kingship of Jesus is always associated with victory, and just as soon as his supremacy is acknowledged, He will begin to command deliverance and victory.

Behold, thy King cometh to thee, having salvation. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of Glory shall come in. He is the merciful Saviour. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour. But it is always Prince first. If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, thou shalt be saved.

What a battle-shout this is! Whenever temptation is near, when the foe seems about to take the citadel by assault, when heart and flesh quail before the noise of battle, then to look up to the living Christ, and say, Thou art my King, O Son of God, command victory. There is no devil in hell but would flee before that cry of the tempted and tried believer, and God could not be neglectful of such an appeal. Jacob is only a worm, yet even he is more than a conqueror when God fights for him.

SATURDAY, December 26.

"MY WORK IS FOR A KING."—Psa. xlv. 1 (R.V.).

This dignifies the meanest occupation. By this motive the Apostles urged their converts to daily duty, slaves though they were in the houses of rich and godless owners. They were taught to look upon their lot as the will of God; and to do service as unto the Lord, and not unto men, seeking the praise of God as their sufficient reward.

As we take in hand the bits of carved work which once stood high in the cathedral roof, but now lie almost hidden by rank vegetation, and consider the exquisite carving, which the artists never thought would be so minutely inspected, we feel that each unknown craftsman did his work for the King. There is no doubt that the religious intention of their work elevated their meanest toils to the level of sacred service. Let us endeavour each day to realise that everything may be done for Jesus which shall be done at all. Do you take food? It is that the body may be deft and quick to execute his purposes. Do you rest and seek recreation? It is that your energies may be recuperated, and that the tide of nervous power may return with fresh vigour. Do you manufacture, buy and sell, advise and preach? All may be inspired by the one purpose, that his will may be done, his kingdom come, which is righteousness, peace, and goodwill to men.

Such a life, however, is only possible when the heart overflows, bubbles up and over, with goodly matter. The heart must always be in contact with the fervent love of Christ. It is only as the Divine heat passes into us that the affections will boil up and overflow in holy act. Let us make the things about the King before we speak them. Let us give time to muse, that the fire may burn.

"I Don't Know God."

THESE words were stammered from the lips of a young deformed girl, whose surroundings were those of an English workhouse, to which she had lately come from the home of her childhood. She was sixteen years of age, but looked very much younger, and had never been able to walk.

Fingers, hands, arms, all seemed bent in unnatural directions, and the joints looked useless, while the head could not be held upright without support. Speech, too, was imperfect, being somewhat like that of a baby beginning to talk, but not quite so distinct. Most of what poor Katie replied to me I could only understand through the nurse, to whom the tones were familiar.

Yet it was evident that the brain had sufficient knowledge of what was going on around to recognise faces she knew, and names of absent relatives. Therefore, looking to God to enable me to say something to his glory, which this poor afflicted one could understand, I spoke of Him. This it was which drew from Katie, in the simplicity of her heart, the real ignorance of the soul in its natural state, expressed by the words, "I don't know God."

In a similar way, Katie took up each brief thought brought before her childish mind, and commented upon it in her own way. When I told her that God had sent his Son Jesus, who "died for all," she at once said with an enquiring look, "Was that his name?" Then followed the same plaint, so sad for me to listen to—"I don't know Him."

So I told her that He died for me, and this drew from her the question in wondering tones, "He died for 'oo, did He?" I went on to tell poor Katie a very little about the precious and wonderful death of the Lord Jesus, but all seemed new to her dark soul and she appeared to say, "I don't know that;" so I ceased, fearing to attempt too much. I therefore left her, feeling most thankful for many a gift from the hand of God, and not the least the unspeakable privilege of being able to speak of Him as known to me through the death of his beloved Son.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii, 3).

Will you, my young readers, learn this precious verse, counting upon God Himself to make you possessors of this priceless gift, for the sake of his Son? The story of this poor helpless girl, weak in body and mind, is simply brought before you to show a little of what you have, when you hear of one from whom God, in his wisdom, had withheld much.

Are you, dear young reader, any further advanced than she was? or, if truthful, must you also say, "I don't know God," "I know not Jesus"? See what the same bountiful Hand has mercifully given you—health, growth, understanding, comforts, education, home, and many more mercies, far too numerous to mention.

Do you ask, in common with poor Katie, "Is that his name?" Then may you practically know the meaning of that beautiful word, "Jesus," as given in Matt. i. 21. God's Son is the Saviour, and faith says, He is my Saviour. Can you say so, and sing from your heart—

Sweetest Name on mortal tongue,
Jesus! blessed Jesus!

"HOW DID HE DIE?"

Sweetly the broken accents fell upon my ear from the lips of poor deformed Katie, who, but a few weeks before, had said, "I don't know God." As she gazed in my face, and waited eagerly for a reply, I saw that the Spirit of God had awakened within her some interest in God's beloved Son—the Saviour of sinners. I therefore sought to tell her a little more of what God in his love had done, after drawing gently from her memory the little truth which the Lord had graciously caused to reach her soul, and find a lodgment there.

Katie could tell me that God had sent his Son from heaven, that his name was Jesus, and that He had died. It was with wondering looks that she listened while I told her that cruel men had nailed the hands and feet of Jesus to a piece of wood. Then, as if some sleeping thought had been awakened within her, she suddenly said, in inquiring tones, which were somewhat startling in their scriptural sound—

"On a 'tee, was it?"

Feeling myself the power of the actual words of Holy Writ, I answered, with some feeling in my heart and voice—

"Yes, Katie, Jesus 'bare our sins in his own body on the tree.'"

The little which this dark mind could take in of the light of God only served to show me the power and reality of Psalm cxix. 130: "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple."

It was interesting to hear the broken remarks and simple questions with which poor Katie occupied herself and me as I went on to tell her that Jesus was laid in the grave, and that He rose up out of it and went to heaven. Her eyes had already seen a never-to-be-forgotten sight in the death of her mother, which had been the cause of Katie's removal from home to the workhouse. So, as we spoke of death and the grave, there came again and again from her lips the touching wail of sorrow—

"My mother is dead."

Death, then, she could understand, but rising again seemed to astonish her, and also the fact that He who died and rose would soon return.

"Jesus may be here at any moment, Katie. Would you not like to go?" I asked.

"No, I 'ood not," was the decided reply.

"He will take all his own with Him. Would you not like to belong to Him, and go where you would walk and talk like other people in his beautiful home beyond the sky?" The question touched her in her helplessness, and as decidedly as before was Katie's reply—

"I 'ood like to go."

A deeper need had yet to be felt, but, thinking it wise to say no more, I rose to go, saying—

"For whom is God's Son coming, Katie?"

"For 'oo," was her ready response.

"Who else will go with Him?" I asked.

"Me," was the short but cheering reply, and with that personal word on her lips I left her, looking to God in my heart that He would make it a reality in hers. Faith alone can say in sincerity, "Jesus is coming for me," and God only can bestow faith. But you, my dear reader, are responsible to receive what God so freely offers. With his Son as your Saviour, you will have the richest portion God can give.

"As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God" (John i. 12).

No other way to heaven is found
But by the Saviour's blood;
'Tis that alone which saves the soul,
And brings it near to God.

"FOR ME."

The love of God presented to the soul, and the precious work of Christ on the cross, requires a personal application in every case. Therefore God graciously showed this weak-minded girl what He thought of her, as well as what He had done in giving Jesus for his glory and her need.

Katie believed what the living and true God had said, and could then say, "For me," by his perfect authority, in the simplicity of her heart and soul.

Can you, my young reader, do the same?

Children under eight any three, under twelve any six of Question I.

UNCLE TOM.

In the Name of the Children.

"WHAT is the use," the cynic asks, "of giving dolls and toys to pale-faced little workhouse girls and friendless little boys? You waste your money," he declares, "when gifts like these you send, and do not even earn the thanks of those you would befriend."

"Far better let the children be," he tells us with a sneer, "Playthings are sadly out of place for those in their low sphere. What can they want with dolls and toys? How can they understand The meaning of those useless gifts you send with lavish hand?"

So says the cynic, but he speaks, as cynics often do, Without the faintest knowledge of the things he would pooh-pooh. So says the cynic; in reply a little tale well tell— The story of a tragedy that but last week befel.

A simple annal of the poor: a bare and dark backroom; A tiny, blue-eyed girl of four, left sitting in the gloom; Left all alone, poor little mite, as on the darkness creeps, With none to answer should she call, or soothe her if sue weeps.

Alone and yet not quite alone, for see against her breast, Wrapp'd in a tattered woollen rag, a battered doll is pressed. A common, ugly doll at best, but oh! to her so dear, That in her sweet solicitude she shows no sign of fear.

Her thoughts are only for her doll; lest it should feel alarm, She whispers words of love as she enfolds it in her arm; Her loneliness, her helplessness, she quite forgets to see, And when she shivers she but thinks how cold her doll must be.

The fire has almost smouldered out, but now it is her aim To fan the dying embers there once more to living flame; Her doll must be warm before it goes to bed, and so With childish efforts she attempts to make the ashes glow.

Then tenderly she lays her doll, close to the grate, to sleep, And sets herself, devoted still, her loving watch to keep; When, as she bends for one last kiss, the flames—mischance most dire!— Leap for a moment from the bars and set her dress on fire.

When presently the neighbours come, it is, alas! too late; And all that love and skill can do cannot avert her fate. The dollies still where it was placed, snug in its cosy bed, But ere the stars have ceased to shine the little girl is dead.

Then, let the cynic have his say. One incident like this Enables us his sneers and gibes to scornfully dismiss; And gives us, too, yet stronger cause that earnest plea to make, Which every Christmas we repeat for charity's sweet sake.

Thousands of girls—remember that!—whose lives have known few joys Are waiting for their Christmas dolls: thousands of friendless boys, For whom such words as "home" and "love" no meaning can possess, Depend on you for their one taste of Yuletide happiness.

Pardon us, then, if we essay your generous hearts to touch, For what to you but little means implies for them so much. The price of but one luxury, that you will scarcely miss, May fill a score of children's lives with yet untasted bliss.

Come, then, we reckon on your aid; you've often helped of yore, And never was your help required so urgently before. The need has never been so sore, make it our happy fate To find our sympathy till now has never been so great.

—Truth.

(I have before me applications for some thousands of toys—old or new—cards, scrapbooks, etc., for distribution among children who in some cases have never had a toy in their life! So I can find a welcome for as many as my little friends can send me.)

The Finsbury Working Lads' Institute, Poole's Park, Seven Sisters'-road, continues to be the home and club of a large number of the lads of the neighbourhood. It is hoped real and permanent benefit has been derived by those so much needing Christian care and instruction, benefits which an Institute like this is so well able to confer. The total number of members enrolled has been 169. The latest report gives a good account of educational and all other classes, of the reading-room and library, the gymnasium, clothing club, and other useful operations, as well as the Sunday evening services and the Bible-classes. The committee ask help for the work and towards clearing off the deficit of about £30. The hon. secretary is Mr. E. Pope, 44, Endymion-road, N.

The World of School.

THERE are many agencies at work in our great public schools for the advancement of the true life of the boys. Sermons in the school chapel, Bible instruction in form, the personal influence of head-master and house-master—all these things have influenced many a boy at this, the hardest and most critical period in his life. In his four years or more of public school life his character is being formed; friends are around him exercising their influence, whether for good or ill. So there is no time more important, and any help which will advance his truest life is of value. When the Church Parochial Mission Society sent out their missionary into this part of the field of work, they did so with the full assurance that it was God's work, and therefore would command God's blessing and furtherance.

REV. NORMAN BENNET, of Trinity College, Cambridge, who undertook, a year and a-half ago, the post of missionary to public-school boys, is an old Uppingham man, and therefore well in touch with public-school life. The wonderful success which has attended the work is a more than sufficient answer to any question which may have been raised as to the expediency or usefulness of it. There are close upon in our land, and about 420 secondary schools, with a population of many thousands of boys. Of these, Mr. Bennet has, in his first four terms of work, touched thirty-five—at the invitation of the head-master in each case. He has preached in over thirty school chapels, given more than 200 addresses, to which he has had a voluntary attendance of over 4000 boys. He has also lectured more than twenty times on Palestine. This Palestine lecture Mr. Bennet believes to be a great means of bringing before the boys the realities of the Bible and of Christ. He gives it in Arab dress, and at each school invites four or five boys to put on Eastern dresses by way of illustration. Being an account of his own experiences, the boys come away with their faith in the Bible strengthened, and with one more link added to the great chain of conviction.

SIXTY LARGE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The work, however, does not end here. Often at the commencement of Term are sent to the various schools which Mr. Bennet has visited, and thus he is enabled to keep in touch with past work. Individual work, too, has been rendered possible by the hearty co-operation of the boys, and Mr. Bennet looks back with thankfulness to the hundreds of fellows whom God has enabled him to help forward along the way of life.

MR. BENNET'S SCHOOL SERMONS.

It will thus be seen how really the work has progressed and how great are the opportunities of work in the future. Head-masters, house-masters, form-masters, and boys, alike have encouraged and furthered the work, while the chaplains of various schools have given Mr. Bennet their hearty welcome and co-operation. We are glad to see that Mr. Bennet has published a volume of his school sermons (2s. Elliot Stock). We hope that many of our readers will further Mr. Bennet's work by aiding its circulation. It is entitled "Be True," is dedicated to Edward Thring, of Uppingham, and deals in a practical way with school life.

Boys' and Girls' Refuges.—The Manchester and Salford Refuges and Children's Aid Society, Strangeways, Manchester, states that during the month of October 458 children have been dealt with in the various Homes, 63 of whom were fresh applicants for help in one form or another. Some were restored to friends, others sent to other institutions, some were given temporary help for one or more nights, and sixteen were admitted to the permanent benefits of the institution. Several elder girls were received at the Open-All-Night Shelter, three or four brought in the middle of the night by constables who had found them wandering about the street without money or shelter.

Soldiers and the Y.M.C.A.

FOR some time past the Soldiers' Christian Association has been affiliated with the larger and older institution, the Y.M.C.A. Desiring to further the best interests of our soldiers, the London Central Association organised what was called "A Military Convention" at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday last week, so that counsel might be taken with delegated representatives of the S.C.A. as to any possible extensions of the work. Some 150 delegates were present, gathered from various military depôts, so that red coats were greatly in evidence at the time-honoured rendezvous in the Strand.

At noon there was a reception of delegates, and at one o'clock a praise and prayer meeting was held, when Captain Dawson gave an appropriate and very stimulating address. The Conference commenced at three in the Lower Hall, with Capt. WISELY, R.E., in the chair. He spoke some earnest homely words to his comrades, specially urging them to a maintenance of the financial burdens of the work without having to seek outside help. The main topic of consideration—How the Y.M.C.A. could best promote the further work among soldiers—was introduced in an interesting and comprehensive little address by Col. Philips. At present, he said, scarcely a fringe of the Army is touched. Wherever there is a military depôt and no Soldiers' Home, an open door exists for the services of the Y.M.C.A. Association rooms might be opened to the members of the S.C.A., and Y.M.C.A. workers should embrace every opportunity of influencing for good the unconverted soldiers. Few, if any, commanding officers, he felt certain, would object to efforts in this direction. The benefits would react on the Y.M.C.A., and give it the backbone that comes from all aggressive endeavour. They would, moreover, earn the gratitude of thousands of praying Christian parents who have sons in the army. In concluding his address, Col. Philips expressed the hope that this Conference would become an annual fixture at Exeter Hall.

Two delegates and an Army Scripture Reader afterwards contributed to the discussion. All were rejoiced at the progress made in recent years in the special work of evangelising among soldiers, and looked forward hopefully to an extension of the work. A good suggestion sent up in writing to the chair was that Y.M.C.A. members should look out for particulars as to young recruits in their various districts, and send such information to the Scripture Reader attached to the depôt whither the recruit is sent. Some time was given to the subject of increasing the number of regimental branches of the S.C.A., but nothing very practical was adduced. Mr. W. B. Harington referred to the work of the Soldiers' Prayer Union, which has been a channel of blessing to many of the Christian men in the Army.

The closing hour of Conference (under the presidential guidance of Mr. H. Conder, of Bombay) was taken up with brief reports of the work now being done in different regiments or batteries. Some thirty delegates contributed snap-shot reports, most of them being full of interest, and proving that an earnest spirit of zeal is permeating the Christian men in the army, and showing itself in efforts to reach the unsaved. Prior to the reports an excellent little address to the delegates was given by Mr. W. R. Lane, who magnified the supreme importance of personal Christian character, and of systematic Bible study, in helping the men to wield an influence for good among their careless comrades.

A mass meeting of soldiers was held in the evening, when a Gospel address was given by Mr. Lane. Earnest exhortations were also given by Sir George Williams and Canon Fleming, the latter of whom recited a poem, "Wanted—MEN!" At the close a number of men professed decision for Christ.

The Late Richard Weaver.—Any friends having any information to give of the work done in different parts of the country in former and recent years by the late Richard Weaver are kindly requested to communicate with the Rev. J. Paterson, White Memorial Church, Paisley-road, Glasgow, who is preparing a biography of the deceased evangelist.

Recent Experiences.

By THOS. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

THE cold weather recently experienced has been seriously felt by the abject poor, and if it continues it must intensify the suffering which is always the normal experience of thousands during the winter. My faithful colleagues whose time is wholly spent in house-to-house visitation are often appalled at the mass of suffering revealed among those who in milder weather can only just keep the wolf from the door. I quote from the jottings of one or two of these visitors to the depths of poverty. On the bare table of a wretched room in the East End, in which a poor mother and six children lived, lay the dead body of a little child of six, waiting for the parish coffin which was to encase it. The body could not be left in the bed, for there the mother and children slept. The cause of death was described as bronchitis following measles; but semi-starvation had as much to do with the end as active disease.

In another East-end room a poor creature was discovered suffering from pneumonia. Her life was despaired of. Her bed was placed between two floors, one of which opened out directly on the squalid court. That bed, with the thinnest possible covering, was also shared by her husband and four children; for there was actually not room for them even to lie on the floor!

In yet another dismal room in a tenement house crowded with poor lodgers, a baby was ushered into the world six months after its father's death; to share, if it survived, with six half-starved brothers and sisters, the crusts and crumbs provided by neighbours, all of whom were as poor as the mother herself; and she had sold every stick and garment for food before she took to her bed! There was not even a rag in the room to put round the new-born infant, until a woman in an adjoining tenement, with that wonderful kindness which the poor always show to the poor, took off her only flannel petticoat, worn to holes by frequent washings and long wear and tear, and wrapped it round the child! In other rooms there is not a scrap of fuel; no food, the cupboards actually bare; and no work or prospect of it. Yet withal, there is usually a modest shamefacedness at exposing their poverty and an unobtrusiveness in demands for help, which constitute a most pathetic feature in these scenes of want. Of course, in each of the preceding instances, I and my colleagues administered wisely and promptly the aid suited to every taste, but oh, how much more could be done among our decent and deserving poor had we but the means!

It is however from the very streets that we rescue the really homeless children of the Waif and Stray class, who frequent the lodging-houses when they can scrape the doss money together. These come round to our doors, or waylay our agents in their daily rounds with irresistible pleadings for at least a warm meal. In many cases all I can do is to supply food or a warm garment, or a pair of boots, for there is often present some element which would make it undesirable that I should admit them to the Homes at once.

But the children may be—may! must be fed; and so our Free Dinner and Breakfast Table is always at work, and night by night in our own lodging-houses numbers of homeless waifs are gathered in out of the storm and stress of want and cold, and so each day my great family, or rather, God's great family, grows. It is mournful at such a time as this to have to feel that all one's activities are checked by want of funds, and yet such has been the case, and it is still so. On the first day of this very month, December, my total receipts from all sources was £79 odd; being the smallest amount received on the same day of the month for the last seventeen years. Surely there are thousands of readers of these pages who, if they did but REALISE how urgent is the need, would not hesitate for an hour, at a time of such grave pressure, to send special help which would lift some of these almost overwhelming burdens off my shoulders. Happy they who are able to share in the fellowship of such a work for Christ's poor!

Of the street children admitted, what shall I say? For the story is an old one, and I may only weary the readers of THE CHRISTIAN by reciting fresh examples of phases of poverty and hopelessness similar to those they have often heard or read of. But I know not what else to do, for I make no pretensions to mere originality. I am bound as a humble chronicler to set forth the common-places, as well as the curiosities, of history; and while such poor Waifs and Strays plead for help, while they are admitted, and, by God's help, shaped and moulded into brave men and good women, surely the tale of such rescues and transformations, however often told, must still stir some hearts into a sympathy that is Christlike and human! And if the great Roman dramatist could declare that nothing that concerned humanity was indifferent to him, surely WE, who are Christians, and who have learnt, at the cradle and at the cross of the Saviour of mankind, the inexpressible value of humanity, since He assumed it and tasted its depths of suffering—surely we cannot be indifferent to the vox humana which rises to the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth from the surging crowd of child-life found in our city slums! It is with this hope and in this profound belief that I dare, at this Christmastide that brings HIM afresh to all our minds, to write some of the simple records of Waif and Stray rescue which form the principal annals of our Home life.

Ever since that night, or rather early morning, years ago, when I found a poor lad lying half asleep in one of the stone bays of London Bridge, I have had a very tender place in my heart for those lads who have reached their fifteenth, or sixteenth, or even seventeenth year, and who find themselves at that age workless, homeless, and friendless, when our own boys are looking out on life with the brightest prospects. Never shall I forget that poor fellow's pathetic reply as he, rubbing the sleep from his eyes and trying to work life into his numbed arms, stood before me, holding fast the while by the broom, his only implement of work. "Sir," he said, "I have never had a friend in my life. I haven't got one now. I am all alone. Nobody cares for me whether I live or die. If I took to stealin', it wouldn't matter to nobody. It's more often starvin' than livin' as it is, and I don't much care what becomes of me." I did my best, and I hope not ineffectually, to show the poor lad that he had one Friend, the Friend of all such forlorn waifs as himself, who, unknown to him, had loved him, and who had sent me out to seek and save him. Gladly did I welcome that poor fellow that very night to our new Labour House for Destitute Youths, a branch that had just then been opened. To many of these, who, in like cases, have been as forlorn as he, have I thankfully since then bidden a hearty welcome.

One such case, for example, was that of a poor lad who came to me from Taunton having been charged before the magistrates with being a homeless tramp, without any visible means of subsistence. The lad replied to the charge, as quoted in the local press: "I haven't got no home and no friends, and nobody cares what happens. I may as well hang myself; nobody would miss me, and it would be the end of my troubles." Poor fellow! It was well for him that others thought differently. When the magistrate before whom he appeared remanded him, an application was made to me for his admission. Soon after the boy was received into our Labour House. After training and testing, he proved himself a fine honest fellow, his only fault, forsooth, being his abject poverty. When by-and-by a stalwart-looking group of emigrants went on board one of the Allan steamers, James, the outcast vagrant lad of Taunton, was as blithe as any of them, looking out, with a new hope such as he had never known before, upon the bright prospects opening up for him beyond the seas.

Recently Edward Worth, a great fellow of seventeen years of age, applied at my door for shelter in a pitiable condition. It was not difficult to see that he had been a regular tramp. He had set out from Sheffield months before in search of employment, and ever since he had been tramping about the country in the same vain quest. Any odd jobs that turned up gave him just bread at the time, and perhaps occasionally a night's shelter; and at length he arrived in London, destitute, homeless, half-starved, and almost despairing. Here he had even a smaller chance than in the provinces, for other lads, more experienced than he, "knew the ropes," and so day by day he was getting more and more crushed out of the struggle.

Finally, another lad in the lodging-house, pitying his evident ignorance and inability for a street life, directed him to my door. Thereupon I traced his whole story. His father had been a file-cutter in Sheffield, who had died eleven years previously. His mother was also dead, and for nearly nine years Ned had had to struggle on alone. I was glad to find that he had kept actually honest, and that there was not one serious blot upon his record. He had indeed been several times warned by the police as a vagrant, and on one occasion had slept in the police-station in consequence. But would a better fate have befallen even our Divine Lord Himself, or any of His immediate followers, if they had lived in nineteenth-century England, and had no shelter from the wind without, or no food for the hunger within?

I very often tell my lads, it is no shame to be poor, for Christ was as poor as any of them. But it is a shame to sin, to lie, to do mean actions, to be unscrupulous and dishonourable. I know that thousands of young fellows who have been under my care, and who have been as homeless as Ned before they were rescued, have gone out afterwards into life with this conviction so burnt into them that in days to come they will live, whatever their struggles, honest and honourable lives—it may be in a lowly rank, but still doing good upright work for a decent livelihood. Not a few of them find themselves on the highway to comfort and prosperity; and my heart has been inexpressibly gladdened by tokens which reach me almost daily from far and near of young lives given to Christ, and of a noble purpose begotten of their stay in the Homes. Through the teaching there administered, they have already begun to redeem their lives from baseness, and to devote themselves to the service of their Saviour and their Lord.

Now if the danger to the boys of homelessness is great, what shall I say when like shadows fall on the lives of their young sisters? "God help them," I often cry involuntarily, when there come to my door young girls of ten, twelve, or fourteen, who have already not only been inured to privation and want in its most cruel and continuous forms, but who also appear to have "passed through the fires to Moloch." Oh, the pity of it! Listen to the sad story of little Jess. She was found asleep with an immoral woman, on a few rags and shavings in a corner. The whole story of Jessie cannot well be printed here; but some day, when I dare do so, I will tell it out to a startled audience. That woman was Jessie's own mother, but she was lost to every sense of decency—I had almost said of humanity. While I omit a great deal that, for reasons which may be guessed, I dare not set forth here, one item of the child's life must be mentioned at all costs, if only to indicate the unspeakable dangers of the whole surroundings from which Jessie had been rescued. It was, that Jessie always accompanied her mother on her evil errands!

And there was none to help Jessie, none to care what became of her; and day and night, body and soul, the little mite was in direst jeopardy! None to help, did I say? That was not literally true, thank God! There was one in the town where Jessie and her mother lived, who, attracted by the very horror of the case, applied to me. It goes without saying that Jessie was admitted at once; and never did my doors open more gladly or more widely than they did for little Jess. Look at her portrait, and let the mothers and fathers who read these pages, and who have darlings of their own shielded from every evil thing, lift up their hearts and voices in prayer for this child of sin and sorrow, and in thankfulness that their children have been spared all that this fair young child has had to pass through in the early years of her life. Ah! Jessie is one of my daughters now. I am proud of her, and one day—but we shall see!

"Oh, little feet, that such long years
Must wander on through hopes and fears;
Must ache and bleed beneath your load,
I, nearer to the wayside inn,
Where toil shall cease and rest begin,
Am weary, thinking of your load!"

Thrice happy those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who, in the midst of their Christmas festivities and family joys, are able with a Christ-like largeness of heart and width of sympathy to look beyond their own home-circle towards the vast company of poor Waifs and Strays, who wait to be gathered and sheltered within the fold—poor lads and lasses for whom this Christmas season will bring no Christmas joys unless His servants are filled with the spirit of Him who said, "Whoso receiveth one such Little Child in My Name, receiveth Me."

The Homes of Hope.

THESE Homes have now been established for thirty-five years, and have been greatly blessed in affording timely aid and succour in their hour of need to those who, through youth, inexperience, and misplaced affection have strayed from the right way.

For many years the committee have made the rescue of young mothers a special feature of their work, and out of 3562 young women and girls of tender years, in every variety of circumstance, entailing suffering and sorrow, 1421 belong to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper sin. The last report describes the sad condition of many of these betrayed ones, and gives details what is being done for their rescue.

The Preventive branch, on behalf of unfallen, but endangered girls, and the Reformatory branch, are also doing valuable service. Illustrative cases, statistics, and many important particulars may be found set forth in the report. The whole operations are carried on with a view to teaching the young women personal salvation as the one true source of strength and hope.

There are three distinct Homes devoted to the reception of the classes named, and these stand at present in great need of hearty help. Full information may be had of the secretary, Mr. W. Hornibrook 4, Regent-square, W.C.

"Ruth Elliott" Home of Rest.—The report of this Home for poor children has to tell of heavy demands for sanitary works and of the inroads of burglars. Many pathetic and singularly touching stories are told of the pale-faced and often crippled little ones received into the Home for rest and recruitment, while numerous letters from parents and children attest the benefits derived from a stay in the Home. The lady superintendent is Miss Priest-Peck, "Ruth Elliott" Home, Enfield, N.

The National Refuges.

THOSE of our readers who remember with what heartstirring eloquence the late Earl of Shaftesbury used to plead on behalf of the National Refuges and Training Ships Arethusa and Chichester, of which Society he was for so many years president, will rejoice to know that the good work possesses an enthusiastic champion in his successor, the Earl of Jersey, who, together with the Countess of Jersey, takes a deep and personal interest in the Society's well-being. A stirring appeal has just been issued by his lordship, in which he describes the nature of the work and its claims. The object of the view is stated to be "to provide a home, a good useful training, and a start in life for every homeless or destitute child who is brought under our care." It further appears that the eight Homes and two training-ships of the Society provide accommodation for one thousand children, and five or six years ago that number were being maintained, but owing to lack of funds the present number is only a little over 800. This fact is much to be regretted, and we feel sure it only needs for the Christian public to realise its importance in order to secure a more satisfactory state of things.

Whilst on the one hand we see ample signs of want and destitution, we also know there are very many persons whom God has richly prospered, and who could speedily enable the National Refuges' Committee to fill up every vacancy in their excellent Homes and ships.

Lord Jersey truly says he does not write without personal knowledge of the work of the Society. It is one of the noblest traits of our English aristocracy, that much personal interest is being taken in the claims of the poor and needy. It is gratifying to remember that in the higher circles of society there are those who, not merely at Christmas-time, but throughout the year, maintain a kindly interest and sympathy in those less happily situated.

Special prominence has recently been given to the increasing need of British sailors for British ships, and some writers in the daily press have handled the subject as though no opening existed whereby poor boys of good character could readily receive the requisite training for a seafaring life. It is now thirty years ago since the philanthropic and far-seeing Earl of Shaftesbury sought to supply this very need by establishing the Chichester as a voluntary training ship at Greenhithe, Kent. Since 1866 the Chichester and her subsequent consort, the Arethusa frigate have received over 6000 poor boys of good character, and drafted them either into the merchant service or Royal Navy.

Very interesting details of these operations can be readily obtained by anyone who will call upon the secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, at the London Home and Offices, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C. At this address, too, can be seen every morning anxious applicants for admission, whose pitiful stories would touch the hardest heart and unloosen the tightest of purse-strings. The method of investigation is simple and effective. An experienced inquiry officer promptly tests the accuracy of the statements, and in an incredibly short time the matter is settled, to the great joy and relief of really deserving and necessitous cases. It is this very promptitude which proves such a boon, not only to the poor but also to those interested on their behalf, and commends the work of these Refuges and ships as being eminently worthy of support. One of the latest developments is the establishment of a Technical Home at the London premises. Here may be seen sturdy youngsters sent up from the Society's Homes at Twickenham and Bisleigh, learning the more advanced technicalities of tailoring and shoemaking, so that on leaving the Society's care they may be in a better position to fight life's battle, and far less likely to drift back again into poverty. During the past two or three years the committee have had to face the stern necessity of making considerable outlays on the buildings, which after so many years (the work began fifty-three years ago) required extensive repairs and alterations in order to be efficient. These heavy outlays were not met by additional contributions. Thus there remains a large debt on the work, which calls for special help. The utmost economy is exercised in the management, and for every shilling that is entrusted to the treasurer, Mr. W. E. Hubbard, ten pence halfpenny goes directly to the maintenance of the children. A well-known and highly-respected firm of accountants audit the monetary transactions, and a special finance committee gives personal supervision to expenditure.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

NINETY years ago this excellent Society was instituted for the purpose of assisting the aged Christian poor of both sexes, and of every Protestant denomination.

Like so many other institutions, it originated through that revival of the spiritual life of the churches in the latter part of the last century which was, under the Divine blessing, so largely the result of the preaching of George Whitefield and others.

The first year's operations resulted in an income of £18 6s. 3d., distributed among the three pensioners then upon its books. In the year 1857 there were 432 pensioners, and the number has steadily increased, so that at the present time there are 1405 receiving pensions amounting to upwards of £10,500 per annum; 1,017 are upwards of seventy years of age, and of this number 290 are more than eighty, and fifteen are over ninety.

Aged pilgrims such as these, associated with various denominations of Christians, constitute the class eligible for the help of the Society. Their busy day of life is over, the sunshine and the shade, which alternately marked its path, have alike disappeared, and the soft tints of evening gather over the sky. Life's sunset hour, its twilight season, have arrived, and the dim eye, the silvered lock, and the feeble step, indicate that the special and tender care and help needed by old age must be supplied.

Another feature of the work is the four homes at Hornsey Rise, Camberwell, Stamford-hill, and Brighton. In these buildings 180 of the pensioners find peaceful dwellings in the evening of their days. This branch requires £1800 per annum for maintaining the homes and the funds for providing medical attendance, nurses, coals, etc., for the infirm inmates.

The committee endeavour to make these asylums "homes" in every sense of the word. A touching instance of the feeling with which many of the inmates regard them may be interesting. An old gentleman, who had formerly been a merchant, and a subscriber to the Society, became, through reverses in business, a pensioner and inmate of the Camberwell Asylum, where he lived for many years greatly respected. He was seized with illness when visiting some of his relations, and they wished him to remain with them. "No," he said, "I must go home to die," and accordingly he was conveyed to the asylum, where he finished his course with joy.

A bright and cheerful Christian dwells in another asylum. She has been a widow for many years, and has had severe trials. She says, with a curious mixture of metaphor: "My husband was removed in the strength of his manhood, and I am still a creaking gate, but the Master will cut down the corn as soon as it is ripe."

The medals on the breast of a veteran in another asylum indicate that he served his country at Balaklava and on other battlefields. Subsequently, he became servant to a late eminent ambassador, and has seen much of men and things. His intelligent and interesting narratives vividly illustrate the power of prayer, to which he gratefully declares his life a standing testimony.

The late Earl of Shaftesbury, when presiding at the annual meeting of 1883, said:—"This Institution, apart from the benefit and relief it gives, is a great moral institution, and is set to create in men's hearts and minds a feeling of reverence which is necessary in things moral, political, and religious. Old people are apt to be regarded as burdens, whereas it should be a joy and a privilege to minister to them. For this reason I specially commend the charity to young people."

Full particulars of the work of the Society will be gladly supplied by the Secretary, at the office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

"Take My Hand!"

THE DYING REQUEST OF A STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE BOY.

"ASK God to take my hand." This was the touching request of Ernest Ireson, a little fellow of twelve summers, as his mother sat by his side, expecting every hour would be his last.

He had taken farewell of his friends and companions; they had gone out one by one, and now only his mother remained of whose presence he could take any count, and suddenly the thought was borne in upon him that presently he must pass beyond her reach, and traverse the last part of the way alone. His request was not suggested by fear—he had been calmly resting in Jesus for some time, and was only awaiting the summons which should call him home. The ravages of consumption had left him wasted almost to a skeleton, and with scarcely strength enough to move in bed; but though heart and flesh were failing, God was the strength of his heart, and so he maintained a brave courage to the last.

It was a touching sight as the widowed mother sat by that corner cot, watching through tearful eyes the passing of her own child beyond the reach of her hand and voice. Again and again the language of simple trust and hope had been heard; again and again farewells had been spoken, and messages whispered for the loved ones who had gone before. As the last steps of life's brief pilgrimage were being taken, and the frail traveller felt the gloom gathering, by which even the redeemed are for a moment amazed, the path of life, which slopes from darkness up to God, stood revealed to his quickened gaze, and the most fitting sequel to the last-spoken farewell was the pathetic request—

"Ask God to take my hand."

However effectual the prayers of a righteous man may be, the prayers of a widowed mother are not less availing, and to a dying child they were as soothing as an angel's lullaby, and so he fell asleep.

Only a day or two before little Ireson passed away, he sat up in bed and wrote the following letter, but his strength was spent before he signed his name.

"Dear Mr. Charlesworth,—Just a few lines to let you know how I am trusting in Jesus. I have given my heart to Him for some little time now, and I feel very happy for it. And I hope all the boys and girls will do so too."

A few hours before the end the nurse reminded him that he had not put his name to the note. He replied, "I can do it now!" The letter was spread on the cover of a book, and taking a pencil in his wasted fingers, he subscribed his name thus:—

"I remain,

"Yours truly,

"E. IRESON."

"I remain!" Quite true, dear child! But not in the home of your adoption and with the friends you had learned to love! We think we hear thee beyond the darkness of the tomb, exclaiming, "I remain!" From the home where Jesus is, there is borne to us the echo of a familiar formula transmuted into a note of triumph—"I remain!" And we shall meet thee again in "The sweet by-and-by." Till then, we cherish the blessed memory of thy too brief course here below and of this pleasing episode in the latest stages of thy earthly pilgrimage.

"Take my hand!" is the piteous prayer of boys and girls who shudder at the dangers of the way, or, having fallen, know their weakness and their need. It is impossible to look upon a group of children gathered from the alleys of our towns, and not feel a pity toned with sadness! No hand seems to hold them, and it is not difficult to forecast their probable future. The Orphanage deals with but one class, but what a large class it is!

We are not going to pauperise ourselves or our friends by begging, as if the Lord Jesus sought an alms for his children; but we notify the need to our Lord's disciples, and their love to Him will prompt a free-will offering. Our beseeching has been done in a higher sphere; and now as a brother looks for kindness from his brothers, and as one servant of a good Master expects aid from all in the same service, so we may reckon upon willing help from those who love our Master and his little ones.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, D.D., care of the Secretary, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, London.

George Yard Missions.

THE Lord still permits us to labour on among the very poorest people and children of East London. It is nearly half a century since He laid upon our hearts the temporal and spiritual condition of the people living in the back streets, courts, and alleys of the Eastern part of London. We have always felt that if they are to be reached at all, it must be in their own lanes and alleys, and that by God's servants, who, walking in the footsteps of Jesus, bear in mind that He talked to one sinner by the well-side of Sychar, and was at the same time ready to attend to the thousands gathered on the grassy slopes of Bethsaida.

Our hearts are drawn out in sympathy towards the very poorest of our fellow creatures. We rejoice to see the children flocking to our schools and meetings, and it cheers us to know that the Lord is carrying on a work in many young hearts; but for this their lives would be miserable indeed, at the best their lives are very sad and hard, often hungry, ragged, barefooted, and sometimes homeless, in spite of poverty they are often very cheerful, and make the courtways and alleys sound and resound with some sweet hymn of praise.

We are thankful to see so many young people present in the classes and at the meetings specially held for them. The Christian Band of Young Women find their meetings to be very precious, the presence of the Lord is always felt; there they meet Him and gather spiritual strength; they have believed His promises: "I will strengthen thee"; "I will help thee"; "I will uphold thee"; "I am thy God." Trusting in His word, they have been enabled to face the world in the factory and work-room, living out Christ before the ungodly and unsaved ones.

The work among the men and women is still carried on. Hundreds attend the evangelistic services, Bible-classes, and other meetings. Our largest rooms are often filled with attentive listeners; the Gospel in simple language is faithfully proclaimed. Christ has His right place; He is the base, the centre, and the head, and He has won to Himself many precious souls. We grieve when we remember that there are thousands in London unreached, and we feel that the command of the Great Master must be obeyed—"Preach the Gospel to every creature."

We have begun our winter campaign, and are much encouraged by the kind welcome given, by the people in the lodging-houses, by the rough and careless ones whose lives are steeped in sin, and who readily listen to us when we speak to them of the great love of God in giving His only begotten Son to die for sinners. It is a privilege to talk to these poor creatures about a Saviour's love, and it comforts us to know that our labour is not in vain in the Lord. There are all around us many living witnesses, grand trophies to the power of redeeming grace even in the worst and roughest cases.

In the past the Lord in His great love and goodness has supplied our need, often in a wonderful way. The future is in His hands, our trust and confidence is in Him.

Will the Lord's people pray that workers may be sent into this portion of his vineyard? There are children who greatly need the fostering care of those who are ready to sympathize with the neglected and lost ones and become their friends.

There are over thirty missionary agencies in connection with this Mission, which commenced in so small a way and was greatly encouraged and helped by the late Lord Shaftesbury, among them being the following:—Rations of food to hungry children, Infant Day Nursery, Week-day and Sunday Schools, Children's Services, Evening Classes for Boys and Girls, Band of Hope, Fresh-air Home for Children, Work among Elder Girls and Young Women, Institute or Evening Home, Bible Classes, Prayer Meeting, Inquiry Class, Christian Band, Clothing Club, Lending Library, Work among Lads, Work among Adults, Evangelistic Services, Prayer Meetings, Bible Classes, Various Clubs for Clothing, Coals, Blankets, Bibles, etc., Mothers' Meetings, Training Home for Motherless Girls.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday. The director is Mr. George Holland, Ragged Schools and Mission, High-street, Whitechapel, E.

London Poverty.

THE VEIL DRAWN ASIDE.

AMONGST the industrious, respectable poor there is a praiseworthy independence of spirit which prompts them, when out of work, to hide their sufferings to the last possible moment; but at times, with startling suddenness, the veil is drawn aside, revealing an unsuspected abyss of sorrow and distress. Thus it was one day last week, when walking along crowded Fleet-street, I saw, outside the windows of Black and White office, a middle-aged, fairly respectable man stagger and fall. Ready hands were outstretched to help, but ere medical aid could be procured he was dead. No clue was found to his identity; the verdict of the coroner's jury was, in effect, "Died of starvation." Doubtless he had locked up his terrible lack within his own breast, seeking help of none, vainly tramping hither and thither in search of work, till strength failed, and the struggle was over. In the busiest thoroughfare of the richest city in the world he succumbed to sheer want of food.

This painful incident set me thinking whether in my last week's paper I had emphasized sufficiently one very important point. It is true, as stated, that the distress, up to date, is not so widespread as in some former years; but, on the other hand, it must be borne in mind that those who are out of work are suffering just as sorely as in past winters. The fact that fewer of their neighbours are, as yet, in need,

DOES NOT LIGHTEN THE FAMILY DISTRESS.

Moreover, the mission-workers, who specially labour amongst this class, are this year peculiarly straitened for funds, and many of them are altogether unable to do so much in the way of relief as they have done in the past, or as they see to be needful.

There have been special and rightful demands on Christian givers in the awful sufferings in Armenia and famine-stricken India, but work at home and among our own distressed poor should not therefore be allowed to suffer. To neglect or overlook these is to do a serious injury to the existing and important institutions, missions, homes, and so on. These cannot close their doors when funds are low, and resume when other claims cease. They must be fully maintained, or languish and decay. My theme is the poor, but this momentary digression, based as it is on personal knowledge of the state of things in many London missions and societies, will not be deemed out of place.

Moreover, not only is home mission work hindered, but relief operations for the suffering poor are in many cases from lack of funds. This, surely, must be amended, while the other is not left undone. The bare, poverty-stricken rooms, the gaunt, white, famished features of the children, the hopeless weary look on mother's face, the grimly despairing countenance of the father, who fears he has "lost his chance"—these haunt me and compel my pen.

Says an East-end worker of large experience:—"It is with distinct forebodings that we look forward to the winter upon which we have now entered. For some years past the poor with all their difficulties have at least had cheap bread, but this year, while there is every indication of a severe winter, we are already confronted with the terrible fact of a very appreciable rise in the price of bread of no less than 25 per cent., and there is every reason to fear that there will be a further considerable rise. It is difficult to realise what this means for the very poor."

Individual cases might easily be given, but I refrain, as my purpose is not simply to bring gifts to one family, but to stir generous giving on behalf of relief work in general. Our Editor's Poor Fund is open. Let it be well replenished, and workers among the poor will be promptly aided thereby.

PEARL FISHER.

Friendless and Fallen.

HOW difficult it is to bring the claims of these unhappy classes before the general public! I will, however, try to do so, and have selected the four following cases (three being very recent ones) to convey to the mind of the reader something of the work we are endeavouring to do in Christ's name, and through the help of his servants.

"CHEER UP, BESSIE."

A few months ago a highly respectable motherless girl was living at home keeping her father's house. The reading of novels filled her mind with romantic notions, and as she was a good reciter, and had won considerable applause from her friends by her recitations, she conceived the wild idea of leaving home to go on the stage. She knew her father would be opposed to such a step, and so without saying a word she ran away from home and came to London. For two or three days she managed fairly well with the few shillings she had, but when they were gone, and destitution stared her in the face, she began to regret her hasty step. It was at this juncture that she heard of this Institution, and her friendless condition in London, with all its temptations, was a sufficient plea for her immediate admission. Several days elapsed before she could be induced to let her father know where she was, so ashamed did she feel for what she had done; but when at last she yielded to the advice given to her, a telegram was received almost directly after her father received her letter, saying, "Cheer up, Bessie; letter coming." The letter was couched in the most affectionate terms, promising forgiveness, and containing money for the poor girl to return home. Since her restoration she and her father have both written expressing gratitude for the merciful protection afforded at a time of great peril.

FROM OVER THE BORDER.

The two following cases narrowly escaped a life of infamy, and their rescue is a cause for great thankfulness. They were Scotch girls, and worked in a factory in their native town, living at home with their friends. One day a woman with whom they were acquainted, and who for a season had been to London, and returned for a time, suggested the advantages which a life in this great city would secure them, and offered to show her interest (?) in them by paying their fares to London when she came up again if they would accompany her. Instead of consulting their friends, they were so fascinated with thoughts of the large wages they would soon be earning that they left home without a word of warning. On reaching London the woman took them in the first place to a public-house, where she was almost immediately joined by three men who appeared to be acquainted with her, as they at once entered into conversation. The suspicions of the two girls were aroused, and upon the men attempting to speak to them they became alarmed and left the house. All that night they wandered about the streets, and when they were directed to this Institution and admitted they were (as one of them afterwards said) "Very glad to get in here." Both these girls are back again with their friends, mercifully preserved from what might have been to them worse than death itself.

A SAD, SAD STORY!

The next instance, the most recent of those here recorded, is of a very different kind. She is a physically strong young woman, but for years has been the occasion of anxiety to her poor old father. She has no mother to care for and love her, and to that cause may be attributed, at least in part, the want of proper training so necessary to one in her condition of life, especially when beset with evil tendencies. Having become restless in her situation, she ran away to London and for several days lodged at one of the so-called "private hotels" that abound in the neighbourhoods of our great railway termini. When she had spent all and was destitute, she was mercifully met with and brought to this Institution, and admitted. Through the kindness of a gentleman who became interested in her, there was a prospect of placing her in a Christian family as servant. At this time it was not known that she was other than a virtuous girl, but it was thought to be strange that she should so resolutely refuse to return to her friends. A few days however sufficed to reveal the fact that she needed Hospital treatment, and then it became known that at the private hotel at which she had lodged, a man had also stayed with her, who was responsible for her condition. Very bitterly does she bewail her sin and folly now that it is too late. She will, however, be helped as soon as her health will allow, and it is hoped that by God's blessing she may become a brand plucked out of the fire.

These instances might be multiplied, but the patience of the reader will be exhausted. These are, however, but illustrations of scores more or less similar, that are dealt with by this mission of mercy every year. I have often wished that those who sympathise with our work could see and hear for themselves some of the pitiful cases of betrayal and desertion which come to our notice. They would plead, as no voice or pen can plead, for enlarged means to enable us to go on with the work of saving the lost. When it is stated that nearly 40,000 young women and girls have been assisted to make a fresh start in life; that the way of salvation has been made known to all who have been admitted; and that an extensive evangelizing work is carried on in the Homes by a staff of nearly 300 voluntary workers, no more need be added to commend this appeal to the Christian reader and secure his co-operation to the utmost, as well as his prayers, that the Triune Jehovah may be glorified in the salvation of all those who are admitted.

West London Mission.

MANY readers may be forgetful of the fact that the relief of the poor is a very important branch of the many-sided work maintained by Rev. H. Price Hughes and Rev. M. Guy Pearse and their helpers in this Mission.

We desire to impress on your readers the claims at this kindly season of those whose homes may have been replenished in the summer, but now, when work is scarce, will be stripped again to stay the sufferings of cold and hunger. There are also those who, though not quite destitute, yet need help; they shrink from receiving a parcel during the year, but would not decline some seasonable gift at Christmas. Then we must not forget the sick; our nurses long to take into the darkened homes in the slums fruit and flowers and food, to which these sick poor are unaccustomed. Finally, there are those to whom this will be the "last Christmas"—our patients in our Home for the Dying—that as life's evening closes around them they may anticipate the angel's song and share the "Peace upon earth, goodwill to men."

The following is a typical case among those we meet:—

There came into the Sister's office, one morning, a very poor woman, asking help. She told a sorrowful story, and one of the sisters visited her home. When her knock was heard at the door, the children, fearing it was the landlord, crept under the bed. There was very little furniture; the room was very bare; no fire, no food. The weather was bitterly cold; the only covering on the children was a petticoat. The husband was out of work.

We supplied the actual necessities, and in a fortnight's time another baby was born. Every day the man sought work, but met with no success. They say but for us they must have all almost starved.

When hope seemed almost gone, a neighbour begged the woman to drown her misery in drink. If it did not mend matters, it would help her to forget them. But the Sister's influence was stronger, and the temptation was resisted. Presently the man found work. Though still poor, they are struggling bravely, and their greatest comfort has been found in the sympathy and help found in the Mission. Will the privileged ones who are happy in the anticipated joy which Christmas brings, that of giving and receiving, remember those who never know such joy?

We need meat, groceries, poultry, vegetables, fruit, just the same kind of things that your readers themselves enjoy. Sister Katherine will be glad if all who send flour, groceries, and dry goods would do so not later than December 17, and perishable things, such as meat and poultry, on December 22. Parcels should be addressed to Craven Hall, Marshall-street, Golden-square, London, W.

SISTER LILY.

60, Greek-street, Soho, London, W.C.

Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill.

THE brother whose portrait we give to-day is well known in Christian circles as a pioneer in organised home mission work. As a preacher to the poor in music-halls and at street corners, and as a promoter of mission work upon new and special lines, he became first known to the people of Glasgow. For fifteen years he laboured unremittingly, gathered about him and trained workers, collected means, and planned fresh departures of work with unwearied hopefulness, which made success a foregone conclusion.

Mr. MacGill was the nephew of the late Dr. MacGill, Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow. When seventeen years of age, returning one night from the theatre, he found his sister dying, and that night proved the spiritual crisis of his life. Powerfully converted himself, he desired that others should know what God had revealed to him. His minister gave him a class of gentlemen's sons to teach in the Sunday-school. The ardent young worker induced the superintendent to go with him into the slums and form a bona-fide ragged school. There were not many such in 1849. From that day until now he has devoted his entire life, with great perseverance and originality, to the elevation of the lowest class of our population, and with remarkable success.

One visible result of his Glasgow work is the existence of the Grove-street Home and Mission Institute, Glasgow, one of the first large buildings erected in this country as an undenominational centre of organised evangelistic work. The mission is a bee-hive of Christian industry. Situated in a densely-populated neighbourhood, it has proved to be an immense power for good, and there is every appearance that it will continue to be so for many, many years to come.

The stem from which this elaborate organisation sprang was the little Ragged School which Mr. MacGill began with two little boys and two little girls, whom he found making mud-pies in the kennel one Sunday evening. He had got from Dr. Norman Macleod the key of the old waiting-room connected with the swift boats of the Forth and Clyde Canal. He took it, collected workers and money, and formulated his plans, which he carried out with great freshness and ingenuity. When the girls began to leave the Ragged School on going to the mills and factories in the neighbourhood, to retain hold of them the Mill Girls' Religious Society was formed, and soon 1600 girls, in classes, every night of the week, were receiving instruction in the Bible, in reading, writing, arithmetic, in sewing, and in housewifery, taught by the older and better-educated mill-girls. This movement made a great impression on the factory population of the district.

When the boys began to leave the school to go into the foundries, the Foundry Boys' Religious Society was started, with flute band, smart uniform, drill, cricket clubs, trips to the country, etc. This organisation was the parent of a great many similar organisations, spread over the country to both the spiritual and temporal blessing of thousands of poor lads. By - and - by a children's church was instituted, which also has been an example to many. In Glasgow alone there are between 20,000 and 30,000 children meeting in children's churches, and the movement is spreading.

As it was found that the homes of the children were cursed with drink, a Bible Students' Society was formed to fight godlessness, drunkenness, impurity, and waste, with the Bible, the pledge-card, the white cross, and the savings bank book. Within a few months this organisation numbered a thousand solid members, had shut up several public-houses, and blessed hundreds of homes. During the time that Mr. MacGill led the enterprise upwards of 21,000 men took the pledge.

His next enterprise was every year to gather into the Free Trade Hall upwards of 2000 of the deserving poor. There they got a real New Year's feast. Other operations were bit by bit added to these varied enterprises, until thirteen halls and class-rooms were all busily at work throughout the week, everything being done by volunteers.

For the last few years the field of Mr. MacGill's operations has been the Manchester City Mission. Following the lead of that organisation, almost every church has now its forward movement, which, to a larger or less degree, is spreading religious life all around. One important work, which Mr. MacGill has been enabled to do since he went to Manchester, has been connected with the rescue of poor girls and the reclamation of drunkards. He has organised bands of working men, who are called "Ambulance corps." Their duty is to go out on Saturday nights from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Sunday morning and pick up drunkards and poor girls. The former they take to their homes, the latter they take to a shelter which has been specially provided for them. The accommodation for the girls has been doubled through the influence of this work, and a very marked improvement has been noticed in the streets and places of amusement.

In connection with the City Mission nearly 30,000 meetings are held per annum. To give freshness and brightness to these meetings, Mr. MacGill has written sacred words for upwards of five hundred of the most popular secular airs of this and other lands. The missionaries and deaconesses have been trained to sing those melodies with taste, and the effect is most attractive to the Manchester poor, who are a music-loving people.

Over the Sea. From Poverty to Plenty.

THE time is Christmas. The scene, a country station of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not far from the border-line of the United States. The night-express has just passed; there will be no more traffic till morning. The young station-master, tall, lusty, and intelligent, closes his office and enters the cosy house where his wife is awaiting him. A picture of simple, homely comfort is that little home, and James W— thanks God as to-night he surveys his position. Trusted and respected, happily married, with good prospects; at the age of twenty-five James W— has won all this.

Sixteen years ago he was a homeless child in Liverpool, until led to Mrs. Birt's good care at the Sheltering Home.

Another peep at the schoolhouse of the same section of country. The scholars are boys and girls of all ages from six to twenty. The teacher is a young Englishman, brought to Canada when nine years old by Mrs. Birt, and to-day the scholars are presenting him with a testimonial of their regard, for he has taught this school acceptably for six years, and is now taking up the study of law, having saved sufficient to pay his expenses at college.

Follow one of the scholars, a boy of fourteen, to his farm-home. Two hundred acres of well-kept land lie around the white-walled, red-roofed homestead, with its large barns and stables. This is a young Liverpool emigrant, and his employer, the owner of the farm, was also brought out through Mrs. Birt's agency sixteen years ago.

These four boys were utterly orphaned and friendless until the Sheltering Home, with its motto, "God setteth the solitary in families," took them in, and in due course emigrated them beyond the sea, where in the great wide lands there is for them, provided they are willing to work, a ready welcome. During past few years hundreds have thus been sent out from these Homes, hundreds who left to themselves must have drifted about the streets of Liverpool, until, too early yielding to temptation, they fall into wrong-doing, have been given a new chance in the land of plenty. Farmers are glad to get boys likely to turn out useful in farming-work, and in receiving them they undertake to provide board, schooling, and wages. No better occupation could be found for such boys, as a few years of open farm life, in the time of growth and development, lays the foundation of a strong, healthy, and vigorous manhood. The greatest vigilance and care are exercised to see that the children placed out are properly treated and kindly cared for.

Hundreds are to-day starving and hopeless in the great city of Liverpool who have it in them to do as well if they are given the chance.

Last week a clergyman applied for the admission of five orphans found beside the father's dead body in a small room, two of them ill with typhoid fever.

A Scripture Reader was asked by an old man of eighty to bring his grandson to the Home. The boy has left school, but being in rags cannot get a situation.

After educating him at the public cost, shall he not be saved from the streets? And there are little girls who need rescuing even more than the boys. Here many girls are in the gravest danger, while on the other side there is room and welcome for them. There is an almost unlimited demand for respectable industrious girls in Canada, and those who have gone have done well, and in the vast majority of cases turned out a credit to the Home.

£10 will be the means of transplanting one little life to a career of independence and comfort in Canada. 250 are admitted each year. It is hoped to give 5000 poor children a Christmas dinner. Contributions should be sent to Mrs. Birt, Sheltering Home, Myrtle street, Liverpool. £500 additional income required to replace subscriptions lost by death.

The Hon. Treasurer is Mr. J. J. KENNA, 18, Mel-lor's-buildings, Liverpool.

A Parliamentary Return states that the taxes on intoxicating liquors and the liquor traffic for the past year amounted to £35,860,804.

The Tower Hamlets Mission.

IN bringing the needs of this great branch of work before the kind readers of THE CHRISTIAN and the public in general, it is certainly con amore as regards a deep conviction of its merits; for it may truly be said that it is one of the largest, one of the poorest, and one of the most hard-working Missions that exists. It may also be said that in no such organisation is there less spent upon "officialism," so many are the voluntary workers from within its own centre—earnest, devoted men and women, who give their only spare hours to visiting cases, verifying the statements of applicants for help, and conveying to them the assistance so willingly granted when funds permit. In all this, the spiritual is blended with the material aid, and many have been the hearts lifted out of the slough of despair and death by some timely comforts bestowed in food, or clothing, or firing, or the brokers turned from the door by the landlord being satisfied with his rent.

Situated as this Mission is, on the Mile End, in close proximity to some of the most miserable and degraded districts, it touches a very large area of experience, and it is agreed by many who have lived in the neighbourhood for years that the improvement all round within the last ten or twelve years is most palpable. There can be no doubt that the Evangelical influence of the magnificent services in the Great Assembly Hall alone, night after night all the year round, must tell, and have told, upon the thousands of individuals of all sorts and conditions of men and women, who are attracted within its hospitable precincts, where the good old Gospel, and no other, is ever preached, and where the well-known hymns, accompanied by the splendid organ, inspire or revive hopes of better days in store for those who turn round to God.

The hon. superintendent, Mr. F. N. Charrington, who started this Mission, and has already devoted more than half his life to it, and much of his substance, is no stranger to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, neither is his able and faithful coadjutor, Mr. E. H. Kerwin, J.P., the honoured secretary. They are men, both proved and tried before the public for more than a quarter of a century, and their disposal of the funds entrusted to them is always at the inspection of anyone who cares to see. This winter, we fear, promises to be a severe one, and already the devouring wolf of poverty is at the door of hundreds of families. Clothing is needed, food is needed, firing, above all, is necessary, if lives are to be saved; for cold, especially for the children, is even more fatal than hunger, and when both are combined in any poor household, what can describe the sufferings of young and old?

As I write a picture rises up before me, which seems indelible, and made me realise what the condition of the poor may be, unknown to any but themselves. It was that last hard winter, when the snow was swept up in dirty heaps for weeks in the streets, standing at the window, I saw a respectable looking working-man stoop with avidity, and pick up a piece of crust which lay on the top of one of these filthy mounds, wipe it on his sleeve, and devour it eagerly! This was an object-lesson never to be forgotten, and one could imagine what might be the state of starvation in his home! for the poorest Englishman is particular not to eat dirt if he can help it.

And now, kind readers, if we appeal to your hearts for help, shall it be in vain? Christmas is near at hand, and the earnest desire of all who are connected with the Tower Hamlets Mission is that several hundreds of the poorest families should have at least one good dinner on that blessed day, which commemorates the coming of Him who belonged to the poor, and who loves them. It is only those who have lived and worked amongst the poor in such a district that can imagine the agony of those workers who are obliged to say No to the many hundreds who crave for this treat, simply because funds are insufficient to meet the demand, and who have to witness the despairing faces of the poor mothers and the bitter tears of the little ones, who generally accompany them. May God give you to realise this, and that opportunity brings responsibility, so that now you may help generously.

"Give as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door;
Give as you would if to-morrow
Found that your waiting was o'er;
[11.5.]

Give as you would to the Master,
If you met his searching look;
Give as you would of your substance,
If his hand your offering took."

The Children of the Poor.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

"WHO bids for the children?" exclaimed a great preacher, pleading the cause of the neglected little ones. Answering his own question, he proceeded to show how the great adversary seeks by every subtle device to hold them for his own; while, on the other hand, the loving Saviour stands ready to receive and bless. Snares and temptations beset the children of the poor on every hand. Home training and example is frequently far from healthy. And even the educational advantages of the day often fail to mould the character aright, from the lack of definite Christian influence and teaching. But, on the other hand, there are earnest servants of Christ, bidding, in their Master's name, for these neglected children, labouring devotedly to win them to Jesus, to bring to bear on them the influence of Christian love and ready helpfulness; teaching, training, and guiding them to lead honest and useful lives, to shun the temptations of the streets, and to walk in the fear of God. Left unhelped, there is danger that many of these children will grow up to be a

But, in addition to this work in the local schools, the R.S.U. itself has large and important operations. The Drift and Home Cripple branches now radiate all over the metropolis, comforting, helping, and cheering more than 5000 little prisoners of pain and sorrow. Then also there are the Ashley Mission in Bethnal Green, the Shaftesbury Welcome and Hall in Battersea wholly sustained by the R.S.U. Besides, there are nine Holiday Homes, to which 6678 children and young people were sent this summer.

Moreover, at this season of the year, the pressure of poverty is felt sorely in the areas around the scattered schools. Many are out of work, and there is much sickness and distress. The teachers mark the wan and wasted cheeks of their hungry scholars; they note the thin, tattered garments in which the little ones shiver with cold. Thus the family distress becomes apparent, for the most deserving are the most reluctant to make known their need. This state of things is going on all over London, and from every quarter come urgent pleas for help from the R.S.U. Benevolent Fund, or for clothing from the Poor Children's Aid Branch. But how are these to be met? Funds are at the lowest ebb. Help must be obtained, unless the destitute are to be left unrelieved. Let it be remembered that the best and most efficient almoners are such workers as these, who are in close touch with the poor, and know who deserve aid.

All manner of clothing for boys and girls—jackets and knickers, dresses, petticoats, and stockings, infants' clothing, and, for the aged and sick, blankets, rugs, and other warm coverings, serge, calico, flannel, or other useful remnants—can, if sent, be made up by willing hands for the poor children. Moreover, among the hosts of sick and crippled, there is an eager and wistful demand for toys, dolls, scrap-books, used Christmas cards, and other little things which bring some ray of pleasure into weary lives.

For these, as well as for large and liberal gifts of money in this time of peculiar need, the council of the Ragged School Union earnestly plead. Surely amid the claims of the season the cry of the children of the poor will not fail of generous responses. The secretary of the Ragged School Union is Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Manchester Ragged School Union.

The thirty-eighth annual meeting of this Union was held last week. The Lord Mayor of Manchester presided. The Hon. Secretary, Mr. Ackroyd, read the annual report, in which it was stated that the year had been one of quiet, steady progress. Two new schools had been opened during the twelve months, one at Collyhurst and the other at Openshaw. The number of schools in the Union was thirty-eight, with 977 officers and teachers, and an average weekly attendance of 12,471 scholars. The chief work of all the schools was the Scripture teaching, which was given every Sunday evening. Twenty-eight of the schools had a band of hope, seventeen had mission services for adults, nineteen had mothers' meetings, sixteen had sewing classes, and seven had scholars' clubs.

The Lord Mayor, in a brief address, said thanks were due to all connected with the Union for their noble work for the ragged and neglected children of Manchester. He exhorted them to go forward with their beneficent efforts, assured, as they might be, that great would be their reward. The Lady Mayoress addressed a few stirring words of counsel to the young people present. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. J. E. Mercer, and by Rev. J. E. Roberts.

Blind Women.—The Phoenix Home for Blind Women, 44, Alma square, Hill-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., reports nine inmates, and many eligible applicants refused for want of room. At the United Sale of Work, held last spring in the Albert Hall, for the Society for Promoting Female Welfare, a stall was granted to the Phoenix Home for Blind Women, and £32 was realised. Knitted articles made by the blind women, and some dolls, dressed by one of the clever women, sold well. The work done at the Home has been good on the whole. The number of kind gifts that have been sent in is most cheering, and the many deeds of kindness shown to the women, reading to them, writing for them, inviting them to tea, taking them walks in the park, have given them many pleasant hours. Details of this interesting little Home may be had of the superintendent, Miss Prosser, at the address given above.

The "Bridge of Hope."

THIS Mission not only continues, but it increases. It is now so well known to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, that it is scarcely necessary to detail its threefold character of Night Shelter, Rescue, and Preventive work. As an undenominational mission, helping hundreds of poor outcast girls, brought by workers, police, and police missionaries from all parts of London and elsewhere, we have a strong claim on the Christian public. We need their help very specially just now to meet the demands made upon us from many quarters.

I know there are many "bitter cries" from many quarters, and even amongst our own bairns and older girls, who have no luxuries of which to deny themselves, there has yet been found a sweet spirit of self-sacrifice, that their mite may go to the Armenians, of whose sufferings they have heard.

But whilst our sympathies and prayers go beyond our own doors, we are urgently needing funds for the daily bread of our large family. Every day and every hour we have fresh applications from those who are ready to perish. God has given us the joy of seeing many such saved from worse than death, and none are sent away hopeless.

A sight of the occupants of our Night Shelter would, I think, be a more eloquent plea for the continuance of this work than any other we might produce. One poor woman has just said to us, "Oh! do help me somehow. I've struggled so long, and now, if you turn me away, I must go to the river." It was no threat just to excite our pity, but the last despairing appeal of one out of whom all hope had been crushed by constant disappointment and failure.

Then there are the children. We have already 160, but there are many, many pitiful cases waiting to be helped. It is terrible to know of their danger and misery, and not to be able to lift them out of it. Many of these young things have never had a chance, or even a loving word. The Cottage Homes at Chingford are always open to inspection, and visitors will be heartily welcomed.

Such work as this cannot be easy, but it is blessed, because it is a work for Christ, who alone is our inspiration, as year in and year out we toil in this hard field.

Just now the situation is critical, and we urge our long-trying and faithful friends to help us during the little remaining time before Christmas. Hundreds of weary ones and hungry children will come seeking our aid before then. "Whoso receiveth one such little one in my name, receiveth Me."

Already we feed, clothe, and provide for over 200 every day in the different Homes, and more than 6000 meals have to be provided every week.

In addition to this, we have for many years, during the winter months, given daily breakfasts to between eighty and a hundred of the most destitute of the children attending the Board School just opposite the Refuge. They are selected by the teachers, and only those are sent who would otherwise be without food. These hungry little claimants are about our doors again now the cold mornings make them painfully conscious of their hunger. But we cannot help them from the general funds, and so we would remind our friends of this special need. In every detail the strictest economy is practised, and the whole expenditure in every department is covered by a little over £4000 per annum.

Whilst remembering the Armenian orphans and widows, and the famine stricken people of India, we dare not forget the cry of the starving and perishing at our own doors. The work is really one, and we need hearts of sympathy reaching out to all.

Whilst we plead for the necessary means for the carrying on of the Mission, we rejoice in the constant evidence of God's presence with us. Wanderers are gathered, not only into a place of shelter, but into his fold. That He will supply all our needs we have no doubt, but we believe He would have us make our wants known to those who hold their wealth in trust for Him.

Cripple Girls at Work.

I WAS much interested recently in a special feature of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission among sickly crippled little girls, some fifty in number, engaged in making flowers, boxes, etc. The bright surroundings of the room, the kindly influence of their teachers, and the earnest, intelligent interest of the little sufferers, create a deep impression.

I learnt from the secretary, Mr. John Groom, that for twenty years this branch, of the many agencies of the work, had been steadily increasing, and only needed the generous support of the Lord's stewards to extend its blessing to many more crippled children.

These little ones were all rescued from the ranks of street flower hawkers, where their deformity was supposed to elicit sympathy, secure a ready sale for their flowers, and command alms. Inclement weather and other hardships soon robbed them of their health, and then those who hitherto greedily took their earnings and squandered them in drink cast them off as a burden.

Here the Mission took the little sufferers in hand, and after a little training it is wonderful to see how the nimble fingers manipulate and form the most beautiful flowers, giving pleasure to the workers and showing skill of no mean order. Thus these children are effectually removed from the sin and dangers of the street, and by their own skill and labour are no longer a burden on their friends nor a drain on charity.

It is interesting to note in the report of the Mission that the total earnings of these little workers amounted last year to £1,300, thereby contributing something towards the support of this much-needed work.

The poor afflicted ones cannot work as do the more sturdy and healthy, and are often laid up with pain and sickness, too often the result of former cruelty and neglect.

Much good might be done if Christian sympathisers, at this season of the year, when natural flowers are so scarce, would order for the decoration of their drawing-rooms and tables some of these sweet copies of nature.

Full particulars would be gladly supplied by Mr. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Birmingham Medical Mission.

THIS Mission has now come of age, having lately celebrated its twenty-first anniversary. The patients attended to since the Mission started number 92,800, and they have been seen nearly 400,000 times. The last year, too, has, in this respect, been the best year, the number of patients attended to having been 6,040, and the attendances on them 27,728.

The medical superintendent, Dr. Crabbe, and his zealous helpers, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and their co-workers have each in their several spheres been as active and able as ever. The poor people, too, have during the year entered with increasing sympathy into the operations, rendering help as they are able, and often beyond their ability, both in time, money, and effort. £120, mostly in the smallest coin of the realm, has this year been contributed by them in freewill offerings towards the General, Sick, and Benevolent Funds. The various organisations which have gathered in and around the Mission are nearly all worked by those who have in some way been blessed through its agency. These include the Sunday-school, Bible-classes, mothers' meeting, out-door services, Gospel temperance, and Sunday evening meetings.

Turning to the direct medical mission work, we find that the chief sowing field has been the daily address, when the sick and sorrowful assemble to listen to "the sweet story of old, when Jesus was here among men." Recently, a minister was called in to see a dying woman, who found her resting on the sure foundation. She said: "It's all settled long ago. Nearly twenty years ago I gave my heart to my Saviour, when I was attending at the Medical Mission. Since that time I have had my ups and downs; but I've held on my way till now. Tell Dr. Crabbe that I die in peace." This is fruit after many days.

Communications should be sent to Dr. Crabbe, Floodgate-street, Birmingham.

Female Guardian Society.

THE operations of this useful society includes a large Training Home in the High-street, Stoke Newington, and a Probational Home in Old Ford-road, Bethnal Green. Lord Kinnaird speaking lately on its behalf, maintained that the utility and need of the Society is beyond proof. On the House of Lords' Committee re Infant Life Protection, he had listened to some startling facts and figures, pointing to the importance of institutions like this, and to the fact that in all probability there would be ample scope for the greatest possible activity during the life-time of every one present. If proof of the quality of the work done were needed, it could be seen in the report by perusing some of the many interesting letters. The restorative, educative and preventive work of the Institution were worthy of all support. He noted with pleasure that the line upon which reformation was mainly sought was by striving to get the young women converted to Christ.

Turning to the report we find that the number of girls in the Homes average eighty-one, under careful oversight and training. It is stated that "whilst many sweet young lives are driven to the streets to insanity and death by cruel treachery, many who fall into sin are weak and feeble-minded women, unable to stand alone and easily led astray, primarily by their own sex, being nothing more than overgrown girls with the frailty of women."

Every effort is made to instruct the inmates in the truths of Scripture. A former inmate, when on her death bed in one of the London hospitals, said to a representative of the society who visited her, "When I was in the Training Home I thought it a hard task that I should be compelled to commit to memory the 23rd Psalm, 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' but the Psalm has come home to me, and is of great comfort to me now that I am dying." Other valuable evidence that the society has not laboured in vain may be seen in the correspondence presented in the report.

Unhappily, like many other institutions, the society is at present in very great and pressing need of help. Yet, as facts show, its work is of the greatest value and importance. The secretary is Mr. W. Edwin Page, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N.

The Shipwrecked Mariners' Society.

THE recent gales, and the boisterous winds that whistle in our ears even as we write, lend point to the claims of this Society, which is devoted specially to the aid and succour of sailors and passengers cast upon our coasts. In most cases these come ashore or are rescued in a penniless condition—losing their all in the going down of their vessel. Hence the value of this Society, which now stands in need of assistance in carrying out its philanthropic work. It may be regarded as a charity which has a pressing claim on the inhabitants of our sea-girt islands. Not only does it (as its name denotes), through the medium of over 1000 honorary agents, ensure that sufferers by shipwreck are at once cared for, clothed, fed, and sent to their homes, but, whenever a fatal disaster at sea is announced, steps are at once taken to seek out the widows and fatherless orphans, and promptly administer such temporary relief as the circumstances of the case necessitate.

Moreover, the Society endeavours, though it is lamentable to observe with what partial success, to persuade all sailors and fishermen to make some provision for themselves in the future, when suffering from sickness, old age, or poverty; as well as for their families in the event of their death, by becoming members of the Society. In many other ways it seeks to benefit fishermen and mariners, and alleviate distress amongst the seafaring classes. Last year 10,831 persons were assisted, making a total of nearly half a million since the institution was founded in 1839, in which year Her Majesty the Queen consented to become its patron, and has ever since supported it by a handsome annual subscription. The secretary is Mr. Gerald E. Maud, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall, S.W.

Mrs. Meredith's Work.

THERE are few people who do not pity those just released from prison. The more we consider their dreadful position the more we shall feel for them. In many cases they determine to start on a new life, and, as far as possible, forget the past; but, after many unsuccessful efforts to get employment, they are discouraged and fall back, and find themselves once more within prison walls.

The heart of Mrs. Meredith was, many years ago, touched for her sisters in this unhappy position, and she set about a scheme in order to help such cases. It is now thirty years since she commenced a laundry, where women, on release from prison, might obtain employment. To this has been added the manufacture of felt slippers. By this means the women are enabled to regain their good character, and so obtain suitable situations, and live useful and honest lives. In many cases the Gospel message which is brought before them has led them to know the power of a Saviour's love. No fewer than 782 women have been employed here in the last twelve months.

But Mrs. Meredith's care for those in trouble did not end here. Twenty-five years ago it was also laid upon her heart to help the little girls of those prisoners, or who were worse than fatherless through the cruelty of those who should have been their best friends. The Princess Mary Village Homes at Addlestone were started. Twenty cottages are now filled with girls of all ages, from a few months to seventeen years. There is in all a family of about 200 children. Besides the twenty cottages, each of which is presided over by a mother, there are schools, chapel, laundry, sewing-room, and training-home, and in these the little ones are taught, trained, and prepared to go out to domestic service, and a good start in life is given them at the age of seventeen years. These servants are much sought after, and almost always turn out well. During the twenty-five years that these Homes have been established, nearly 1000 girls have been rescued and trained, a large number when we consider that many of them are in the Homes for fifteen, sixteen, and even seventeen years.

This work is to a great extent dependent on the pecuniary support of charitable people, and at present much help is needed. Further information will be gladly given by Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

Marylebone Medical Mission.

IN the poor and crowded district of Marylebone and Lisson-grove, this Mission continues its double ministry—healing the sick and preaching the Gospel. The dispensary is open three days a week, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Here the sick poor who are able to crawl out come to see the doctor, who has a busy time of it. Many come from long distances—as one recently spent her last coppers in reaching the Mission. Why, it is sometimes asked, do these travel so far when help might be had nearer home? The reply is that there they find sympathy and the comforting message of the Gospel. Those who are too weak and ill to attend the Mission are visited by the medical superintendent, followed, when need be, by the nurse. This year 2,975 have thus been visited in their own homes.

At this season there is, besides the regular spiritual and medical work, great and urgent need for relief work in view of the agonising condition of the poor when the bread-winner is ill, when father or mother is lying sick, and the children are waiting for food. The starving children demand pity, but the first business of the Medical Mission is the sick patient, and often the cure requires the supply of nourishment, warm covering, and fuel. Thus no part of the work is more pressing than that of relief—not general relief, which might be characterised as pauperisation, but relief in the time of sickness, and in order that the sick one may be strengthened to recover and resume wage-earning. Not long ago a poor child was found very ill with chest complaint, lying in a cold, fireless room, with no covering but a few rags, and positively no food in the place. Then, again, a young man ill with bronchitis was similarly found in a most deplorable condition of cold, want, and neglect, needing medical treatment certainly, but needing also food and blankets.

Help is earnestly asked in dealing with these by the medical superintendent, Dr. R. Chambers, 12, Bell street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

Christmas Appeals.

BEACON LIGHT MISSION, CHAPEL-STREET, STRATFORD.—For funds to provide a good Christmas dinner to the deserving poor in the immediate neighbourhood.—Mr. COUNCILLOR RIPPIN, Superintendents' Mission, appeals for funds to provide dinners on Christmas Day for 500 poor children of Hoxton, some of them being helpless cripples.—Address, W. J. ORSMAN, Shackwell Green, Stoke Newington-road, N.E.

THE SALVATION ARMY CITY COLONY urgently asks help to give as many thousands of homeless and destitute men as possible (who shelter under its roof) a good meal at Christmas. Address Commissioner E. CADMAN, 272, Whitechapel-road, E.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.—It been my privilege for above thirty years to provide above 500 free dinners at Christmas to cheer the homes of the poor casual dock men and their families. Will the Lord's people help me.—C. COLEMAN, 150, Boleyn-road, West Ham.

THE SERMON-LANE MISSION, located in the centre of a densely populated and very poor district, appeal for funds to carry on the varied agencies connected with the work, to provide Christmas dinners, and to relieve the destitute and deserving poor.—P. COOKSEY, 52, Amwell-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

REV. PHILIP GAST writes:—"For over thirty years, in Clerkenwell and St. Luke's, I have relieved the destitute, the widow and fatherless. Never was there greater need than now. So many of my past helpers have entered into rest, I am compelled to look to others for help.—Address, Spencer-place Chapel, 12, Noel-street, Islington, N."

GROVE MISSION, SOUTHWARK.—For many years we have had the joy of supplying the poor of Southwark with a good Christmas dinner, and earnestly I plead for your readers' generous support this year. The "out of work," the aged, the sick, and the destitute children receive special consideration. The superintendent is Mr. JOHN W. WESTON, 31, Park-street, Southwark, S.E.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION, LIMEHOUSE, E.—For work in the courts and alleys of this district, where darkness, indifference, and ungodliness reign, and where our visitors are carrying a practical Christianity amongst their poor neighbours, living with, feeling with, sympathising with, and helping them, and teaching the "Gospel of Christ."—Mr. JAMES BLAIR, 24, Salmon-lane, Limehouse, E.

RED WHITE AND BLUE INSTITUTE, PENTONVILLE.—We are hoping to have a big Christmas tree for our poor people and should be very grateful for help to fill its branches. The articles are to be sold for the benefit of the Institute, but at an almost nominal price all kinds of things, garments, toys, cards, books, and so on.—Address, the Secretaries, Misses DRESSER and JAY, 19, Cumming-street, Pentonville, N.

CHISWICK MISSION.—Winter is now with us, and all its needs, therefore I appeal again, as in years past, for £200, so that the poor may be assisted at Christmas. We want to give one cwt. of coal to each member of the mothers' meeting; a tea to the scholars of our Sabbath Schools; assistance to widows with young children; comforts for the sick and aged.—The Treasurer is Mr. DAVID TWEDDIE, 224, Goldhawk-road, Shepherd's Bush.

ST. THOMAS'S, LAMBETH.—One of the very poorest parishes in South London. Help is wanted for relief of the aged, sick, and needy, including maternity cases, blankets, and flannel; soup and bread for poor and deserving families; Christmas gifts of meat, grocery, coal, and bread for the poorer members of the church and mission-room congregations.—J. B. BARRACLOUGH, St. Thomas's Vicarage, Lambeth, S.E.

ASHLEY MISSION, Peel Grove, Bethnal Green.—For assistance in providing Christmas dinners and other relief for the deserving poor of Bethnal Green. This mission is open every day all the year round for the very poorest children and others. There are poor matchbox makers attending this mission who earn but a few pence daily when in work. Do help us to make Christmas bright and cheerful.—T. MILLER, Hon. Supt., 104, Well-street, Hackney, N.E.

POPULAR AND BROMLEY.—We are anxious to bring some brightness and good cheer into the homes of the poorer people at Christmas, and especially the children. Among other things we are arranging to give a Christmas Treat at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle. In addition to a good meal, we hope to give various articles of clothing. Will those who would like to share in this work kindly send their gifts to Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, "Williston," New Fillebrook-road, Leytonstone?

UNION TABERNACLE, Wandsworth-road, situated in a poor and densely-populated part of London, is a centre of continual home mission work. In the cold weather free meals are provided, a number of afflicted poor are helped as far as funds will allow. Who will help to provide a good dinner, a warm fire, and clothing for our needy brethren and sisters, and so bring a little cheer into their hard and monotonous lives?—Rev. D. M. CAMERON, "Thurlow," 515 Wandsworth-road, S.W.

THE BOROUGH POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.—The hon. secretaries draw attention to their annual invalid children's toy exhibition and free tea and entertainment to 800 poor children. Last year we distributed through the medium of established local agencies toys to over 2000 poor and invalid children living at home, and we are anxious to do as much on the present occasion. Gifts of either toys, food, or money, should be sent to G. F. CORNFORD, or G. H. LYCETT, The Institute, 103, Borough-road, S.E.

ST. ANDREW'S YOUTHS' INSTITUTE, Barnsbury, N., in a poor and populous district of London round the neighbourhood of the Caledonian-road. The work which is carried on at the institute is directed to the religious, social, and physical well-being of poor lads. Towards this end there are Bible-classes, a literary society, various kinds of lectures and meetings, and a gymnasium. The work is in urgent need of help, which may be sent to the secretary, Mr. P. T. W. HOLE, 446, Cannon-street, E.C.

HOUSES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND MEN AND WOMEN, HANLEY-ROAD, CROUCH-HILL.—Our need is great and pressing. Our inmates number eighty-two. The great age and infirmity of many of them require and have day and night nursing. While the benevolent public will at this season of the year be seeking to lessen need and distress, we earnestly hope that in the common good-will of Christmas-time our aged and afflicted ones may not be forgotten.—HENRY AND ANN BRIGHT, Hon. Superintendents, 77, Hanley-road, N.

PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' FUND AND HOME.—Funds are sadly needed to support this effort to relieve the sufferings of lonely or homeless gentlewomen, as well as governesses who are mostly in the decline of life, or are slightly afflicted. Others have not only to earn their own living, but have to help loved ones also, the struggle for existence is indeed fierce. The superintendent would be glad to be able to continue invitations to spend a fortnight in the Home free, and also to send money gifts for coats as well as good clothing.—CLEMENTINA KINGDOM, Superintendent, 22, Chatham-place, Brighton.

ROBERT BROWNING HALL, SOCIAL SETTLEMENT.—Last year your readers helped our large family of over 600 children to a happy Christmas. This year the family is much larger, and its needs are, of course, far greater. I want to ask the lads and lassies in the warm and comfortable homes to remember their brothers and sisters in the slums and courts, and to think how they would enjoy Christmas in the midst of the poverty which makes it impossible for fathers and mothers to buy warm clothes and Christmas gifts. All the boys and girls will find their own Christmas happier if they have helped to bring its joy to some poor little one who is out in the cold. Toys, garments, boots, money for Christmas dinners and coals.—BESSIE M. STEAD, Robert Browning Hall, Walworth, S.E.

To the Rescue.

"To the rescue!" shouts the seaman,
Through the howling midnight dark,
As athwart the seething waters
Pilots he his trusty bark;
"To the rescue, man the lifeboat,
There are precious lives to save;
Aid the shipwrecked ere they perish,"
Sounds o'er tempest, wind, and wave.

"To the rescue, to the rescue!"
Is the sturdy fireman's cry.
Fiercely are the embers glowing,
And the scorching flames leap high:
Yet at duty's call he riseth,
There are lives from death to win,
So to save them doth he hasten,
Through the smoke and glare and din,

To the rescue, to the rescue!
'Tis our Great Rabboni's call;
"Follow Me," my footsteps pressing,
His command to one and all.
Hasten quickly ere they perish,
Those for whom I came to die,
Sorrow-bowed pain's furnace treading,
Lo! their moan is heard on high.

To the rescue, to the rescue!
Speak to all God's words of peace,
In the name of Christ your Saviour,
Bid the prisoner release;
To the rescue, to the rescue!
At his mandate quickly rise;
Be his ministering angels,
Clad in lowly human guise.

To the rescue, to the rescue!
Seek the little ones who roam,
Tend the suffering, bid the orphaned
Welcome to your heart and home.
To the rescue, to the rescue!
Fold them all in love's embrace,
Christ will say, "To Me ye did it,"
When you see Him face to face.

To the rescue, to the rescue!
Lift the fallen ones from shame,
Feed the hungry, clothe the naked,
Toil the drunkard to reclaim.
To the rescue, to the rescue!
Snatch the brands from out the flame,
Lead the lepers to the Saviour,
Who to cleanse and heal them came.

To the rescue, to the rescue!
Seek the lost, the sick, the sad,
Take the dying ones to Jesus,
He will save and make them glad.
To the rescue, to the rescue!
Labour hearts to Christ to bring,
Until all shall love each other
In the kingdom of our King.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

Deptford Ragged School.—The annual meeting and conversazione was held on Thursday week in the schoolroom of the Brockley-road Chapel. Rev. J. Lewis presided, and extracts from the annual report were read by the hon. sec., Mr. Edwin Dodd. These showed that upwards of 1500 children and adults attended weekly at the Sunday-school, sewing classes, Bible classes, mothers' meetings, and boys' club and band of hope. There were also boot clubs, penny bank, and slate clubs. Both pecuniary and personal help were asked for to extend the work, the committee feeling that much more remained to be done to raise the poor. Cripples in New Cross and Deptford had been visited and registered; many had been sent to seaside and country or supplied with surgical appliances; there were about 170 of them. Brief addresses followed by Mr. Tapper, Miss Coles, Revs. Justin Evans and C. H. Grundy.

Letters to the Editor.

"WHAT IS A CHURCHMAN'S DUTY?"

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to reply to the letter of your aggrieved correspondent, "A Churchman." In withdrawing from a travesty of the holy ordinance, he is, in my judgment, taking a right and wise course. I should do the same myself were I so unfortunate as to be in similar circumstances, even though I have been for nearly forty years in the ministry of our National Church. And if "Churchman" will look at the third Rubric, following "The Communion of the Sick," he will find, I think, authority for so acting, in the principle there laid down, that under certain circumstances (which are mentioned) there may be the "eating and drinking of the body and blood of our Saviour Christ, profitably to the soul's health, although one may not receive the sacrament with one's mouth": "believe and thou hast eaten." It is true this is said in reference to private Communion in the case of a sick person; but the principle is the same in all cases, and the words "any other just impediment" would, I fully believe, cover your correspondent's case; for surely such practices as he complains of may be properly so described. I entirely approve, therefore, of his quietly withdrawing (not, however, "during the Prayer for the Church Militant," but at its close).

I would recommend "A Churchman" (1) to persevere in abstaining from attendance upon an ordinance which is not "the Lord's Supper."

(2) To induce those who sympathise with him in their opposition to objectionable practices in church, whether by the rector or anyone else, to withdraw quietly, so soon as the "Prayer for the Church Militant" is ended.

(3) To give nothing at any offertory which precedes the practices complained of, and generally to withhold financial assistance.

(4) To draw up a representation of those practices, to be signed by those who are earnest and determined in their opposition to them, and present it to the rector, asking for his help and kindly consideration in a matter which he has power to correct, and which imposes so great a burden on the consciences of the remonstrants.

(5) To lay the whole matter before the Lord in earnest, continuous prayer. (Perhaps I ought to have begun with this, for "without Him nothing is strong, nothing is holy.")—Yours faithfully,

RECTOR.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.

DEAR SIR,—Regarding as I do your journal as the most unsectarian, most Evangelical, and most "liberal" in the true Gospel sense—that is, liberal in the non-essentials of the faith, I ask for a little space wherein to bring before your readers who are deeply interested, as I am, in the conversion of Jews, a proposal or suggestion which may end some of the hindrances to this glorious work.

There are at present so many different societies engaged in spiritual work among the Jews, that impostors abound—men who go from society to society professing belief in Christ as their Messiah, and requesting baptism repeatedly. This brings a scandal upon the Christian Church—that is, the comparatively small section of it which carries out the command "To the Jew first"—and gives rise to the sneer of The Jewish Chronicle, which heads all articles relating to these missions by the words, "The Traffic in Souls."

Yet I know many genuine, out-and-out converts, and every single one of them becomes a missionary among his brethren. Therefore I take courage, and do not lose heart, though the matter of physical relief by money, clothes, recommendations to employers, etc., is often a source of trouble and vexation.

Now, I propose that each society for the conversion of the Jews should appoint one representative to form a Central Council, meeting at stated times in London, and at all times in postal communication with the convener or secretary, so that lists may be kept of all inquirers, converts, baptisms, proved or suspected impostors, and their addresses. I have strong reason to believe that, from a certain lodging-house in Liverpool in a low neighbourhood, begging letters, signed by different names, but in the same handwriting, with different stories of conversion, pecuniary straits, etc., are sent to the supporters of Hebrew Christian missions. My friend Mr. M. Levinsky succeeded in proving a glaring imposture of this kind lately. I enclose my card, and remain, yours faithfully,

A LOVER OF ISRAEL.

"AIGRETTE" FEATHERS.

DEAR SIR,—Attention having been called in your "Notes and Comments" to the question of "aigrettes," it might be well to explain wherein exists the exceptional cruelty involved in the slaughter of the particular bird from which these feathers are derived. Briefly stated, the facts are as follow: The heron which produces the "aigrette" plumes is a bird of solitary habits, and only congregates in sufficiently large numbers to render the hunting of them profitable during the nesting season. They have been described as "just before, during, and immediately after this season wearing these plumes as part of their bridal array."

"When they are killed, and the few handfuls of coveted feathers have been plucked, the slaughtered birds are left in a white heap to fester in the sun and wind, in sight of their orphaned young, that cry for food and are not fed." Mr. Hudson, the well-known hunter, has described the cries of the starving young as "heart-rending."

It will thus be seen that the question involved is not only that of the killing of beautiful birds to obtain their feathers, but the starving to death of their young. Surely no woman of humane and tender feelings will continue to be a party to such un-Christian cruelty when she once clearly apprehends the facts.—Yours faithfully, HUMANITARIAN.

Mission to Coalies.

ONE of the many sectional operations of the London City Mission is the Mission to Coalies and Carmen, among whom four missionaries are labouring in various parts of London. The body of men who gain their livelihood in coalyards, and in the work of delivering coal to consumers, is very numerous; and it is by no means possible for such a small number of missionaries to visit the whole even at long intervals. Yet the effort means interest in the coalies, and is a promise of greater things in days to come.

A meeting of the men employed in the Stratford district was held on Thursday last, in the Conference Hall, West Ham-lane. It was preceded by a tea, at which some of the coalies were accompanied by their wives. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. COMPTON RICKETT, M.P., who addressed the men in earnest terms, appealing to their practical intelligence and higher feelings. Mr. F. TITE, treasurer of the Mission, gave a brief description of the work, intimating that at least two more missionaries were required to visit the coalies and hold meetings for them in the yards and elsewhere.

Mr. T. BURKE, one of the men, gave a capital "testimony." He had until recently led a life of indifference to the claims of God, but through a loving word spoken to him, he sent his children to the Sunday-school. From that step he advanced to a hesitating visit to Divine service in a chapel; then he "thought upon his ways," and found himself "all wrong." He has since given his heart to God, and his wife and several of his children have done the same. Mr. Burke's words, evidently from the heart, must have set some of his "mates" thinking very seriously.

A brief Gospel address was delivered by Mr. J. PRENTICE, missionary, and Mr. C. BOARDMAN followed, affectionately commending Christ to the attention of all. Forty-five years ago he decided to "taste and see," and now, on grounds of personal experience, he declared the great goodness of the Lord, for whom his love becomes stronger every day. Other addresses followed, and a happy evening was spent.

Ipswich United Meetings.

A SERIES of profitable and helpful monthly united meetings is being held in the Public Hall, Ipswich, on the second Thursday of each month, for the deepening of the spiritual life and the quickening of the missionary spirit. A prayer union has been formed by the friends responsible for these gatherings to seek that blessing may come to every church, chapel, and mission-room in the district.

Good meetings were held in October and November, while on Thursday last the December monthly gatherings were held. In the afternoon the proceedings were largely devotional, and in the evening Dr. Harry Guinness gave an interesting account of the Congo Balolo Mission and its work. The hon. sec. of this movement is Mr. Clarkson Piper, Ipswich.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ecc. xii. 13.

ALL the lessons of this series have been occupied either with the life of Solomon, or with his wise sayings. The review will take the form of a general view of his career.

How promising its commencement. Recall his anointing, and the first appearance of God to him (Lessons i. and ii.). What wisdom he showed when God made such a remarkable promise to him! It would be unsafe to offer to do what some men would desire. The qualities needed for a useful and prosperous and God-honouring career appear in him—integrity, wisdom, piety. For a young man to start life without these means certain ruin.

How remarkably he was prospered. The evidence that God had answered Solomon's prayer soon appeared in his great wealth and splendour (iii.), and the wise proverbs he uttered (iv.). There is a prosperity of fools. What is said concerning that? (Prov. i. 32). But there is another prosperity to be desired (see Psa. i. 3). Which are you seeking?

How zealous he was for God.—The building of the temple was the great work of his life. He threw all his heart into its erection, and was foremost in the work of dedication (v. and vi.). The temple was not only a monument to the zeal of Solomon; but was a continual reminder of God, and a call to his worship. Surely he is pursuing the right course. To be full of service for God is a good way to avoid falling into sin.

How widely his fame spread.—Even the Queen of Sheba, as far away as Arabia Felix, heard of his devotion to the service of his God, and of his wisdom and prosperity (ix.). Such honour means increased responsibilities. A good name when it is won needs to be carefully guarded.

How terrible his fall.—Tell of the warning message given in the second vision (viii.). This seems to have been God's method of restraining his servant from doing evil. But subtle forms of wrong-doing had long been at work. What were they? And to what awful depths he fell (x.)! What lessons does his fall suggest?

The review closes the year. In looking back let the thought dwell not on Solomon alone, but on our own lives. What sort of a record have we made? Solomon's is now open to our view. Will ours be open to the view of others in coming ages?

If the record is black with sin—what then? (Isa. xliii. 25.)

Zambesi Industrial Mission.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the outbreak of war in Nyasaland, and to the attack made upon some of our mission stations in Southern Angoniland, I am sure you will allow me through your columns to assure the friends of this Mission that according to our latest despatches, dated two days after the attack was made, all the Europeans at the various stations attacked were safe, and that no material damage had been done to any of the mission stations.

All the native villages surrounding each station had however been totally destroyed, and many of the natives speared to death. Even should the war be brought to an immediate close through the operations of the British forces, there will be very much suffering and hardship, and probably famine in the whole neighbourhood in which our Angoniland stations are located.

The wet season is now on, and houses will require to be built, and food provided for many hundreds of people. We should be glad to be the medium of passing on any help to these natives under British protection whose homes have been so wantonly destroyed. R. CALDWELL, Secretary.

1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

"First Fruits."—Two men were baptized at Paoingfu, the new station of the American Peking Mission, last June—"the beginning, we trust, of a strong Church built upon a strong foundation."

Ymuiden, Holland.—Rev. C. S. Adama van Scheltema, of Arnhem, writes: "Ymuiden is a new village on the canal from Amsterdam to the North Sea. It would have been a model village but for the ginshops which were immediately opened. The English fishermen come to our Sailors' Rest, and Miss Edith Woodman has laboured among them with much devotion. At length we have had to enlarge the buildings, and are burdened with a debt of £1000. As boats from British ports use the Rest, Miss Woodman's work should have a place in the hearts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN."

Scottish Notes.

Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH gave an address at Glasgow last week on the Darkest England Scheme of the Salvation Army, chiefly with reference to rescue work among women. A home for women has been established in Glasgow High-street to accommodate over 140 persons.

The Scottish Coast Society employs twelve missionaries, who labour for the spiritual welfare of the many seafaring men, fishermen, etc., along the East Coast of Scotland, from Berwick to Arbroath. Meetings are held and good literature distributed. The Mission is a channel of great benefit both physical and spiritual.

Professor Davidson, of the New College, Edinburgh, is unable to accept the position of Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church by reason of the state of his health. Though Professor Davidson is quite able to attend to the duties of his chair, his medical adviser has strongly urged him not to put his strength to the additional strain of the work which devolves upon the Moderator.

The Glasgow Medical Missionary Society had its annual meeting last week, Lord Overton presiding. It was stated that during the year 8000 visits had been paid to the homes of the poor; and 41,000 free consultations at the dispensaries, besides evangelistic and temperance effort. One of the superintendents, in reporting on the work among women, said that stomach ailments were very common, and it would be a great boon if factories had a restaurant attached, where wholesome meals were supplied at a reasonable cost.

During the past year, the Highland Orphanage, Inverness, has received two legacies to the amount of £4000, which has been placed to the credit of capital account, except £100 transferred to maintenance. £2000 came from the Trustees of the late Earl of Moray, and the remaining £2000 from a bequest left to be apportioned by the Attorney-General for England. There were other smaller legacies from various friends. The number of children in the Home rose at one part of the year to sixty-eight, but several left for situations, and at the date of the report the total was sixty, consisting of thirty-one boys and twenty-nine girls. It is expected that some extension of the buildings will be required in the coming year, but the funds in hand will suffice for the purpose. The Institution, says a local paper, is doing work which cannot be over-estimated.

University Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD.

The Day of Intercession for foreign missions was generally observed by the churches here. It is a healthy sign to see so many uniting together to ask God's blessing upon missionary work.

The Wycliffe Hall men have gone, or are soon going, out to the mission field. Rev. J. S. Callis to Uganda, Rev. W. S. Cox to Sierra Leone, and Rev. E. A. L. Moore to India.

A great interest is now taken in missions by members of the University, and the weekly meetings are well attended. The last meeting of this term was addressed by Rev. H. Gouldsmith, of Calcutta. The Hannington Hall is to be opened at the beginning of next term; it is to contain a large room for meetings, a library of missionary literature, and other offices, and will no doubt be a help to the cause. Missionary bands have been formed at Wycliffe Hall and for the University, for the spread of knowledge and the study of missions.

The October term is over, and the men will be scattered through the country, spreading an influence wherever they go. This fact emphasizes the importance of winning Oxford men for Christ, because they have such possibilities of usefulness.

The national council of the Christian Endeavour Union met in Oxford last week. Rev. Alfred Davies spoke of the relation of the Society to the Churches, and Rev. C. Bonner said that the test of all movements was the character of the men which they formed. He believes the Society will justify itself on this ground.

Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association.

An enthusiastic meeting was held on Thursday last at Cross-street Baptist Chapel to inaugurate an Islington branch of the above. Mr. Wontner Smith, of Harecourt Chapel, took the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Jones and Weston, of Cross-street Chapel; Angus, of Salters' Hall; and Worrall, of Hornsey. This branch will conduct a weekly meeting, itinerating between the neighbouring churches, and it is believed a stimulus will be given to aggressive evangelising through its agency. The local secretary is Mr. G. A. Angus, 3, Alwyne-villas, Alwyne-road, Canonbury, N.

Personalia.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn is at present sojourning on the Riviera. Letters may be sent to him addressed, Eza, Alpes Maritimes, France.

Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell, who has been minister of Milton Church, Rochdale, for seven years, has intimated his resignation, owing to the active part he feels called to take in the education question.

Mr. Ephraim Venn, late of Shaftesbury, Dorset, has removed to Western Elms Avenue, Reading, Berks. He hopes to render service as pastor and evangelist at Bridge Hall, Reading, and in the district.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown has announced his intention of resigning his pastorate at the East London Tabernacle at the close of the year. He has laboured in this pastorate for thirty years with remarkable success, building up a great congregation, and organizing evangelistic and mission work on an extensive scale. He has felt the great strain of the work for some time, and besides he has had, as our readers know, sore personal bereavements and long-continued anxieties.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker writes from Berne on December 8:—"I am once more en route for Russia, and am now visiting several towns in Switzerland, Bâle, Zurich, Berne, Lausanne, Vevey, Geneva, Neuchâtel. Next week I hope to go to Vienna and Budapest, and thence to Constanta in Roumania, where the opening of a new hall will take place and a conference of Russian, Armenian and German brethren at Christmas. I hope to cross over to Odessa and to spend the Russian Christmas in Odessa (twelve days later, January 6, 1897). I shall be very grateful for prayer on my behalf, that an entrance may be given me without hindrance. My address till December 27 will be, care of Herrn Patwakan Tarajanz, 30, Strada Militara, Constanta, Roumania, and later, care of General Consul Colonel Stewart, in Odessa. Hitherto the Lord has helped, and has opened wide doors for the glorious message of his Gospel."

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS H. CARTHEW.

News has been received of the death of this well-known African missionary of the Methodist Free Churches. He was a native of Cornwall, his father being a miner. Entering the ministry in 1880, he laboured as assistant to Rev. David Brock in the Woodstock Circuit. While there he was asked to undertake missionary work in Sierra Leone, where for four years he rendered splendid service. Returning home on furlough, he was invited to undertake, in 1887, the charge of the East African Mission, and a few weeks ago fell at the post of duty. He was only forty-one years of age. The telegram announcing his death does not give particulars. He was in every respect the beau idéal of a missionary. Physically strong and of commanding presence—he was known among the natives as "The Lion"—he displayed a rare combination of intense enthusiasm and sound judgment. He was thoroughly aggressive, and the mission under his charge has made substantial progress. His death will come as a shock to the denomination, the more so that it was anticipated he would be in England on furlough in time to take part in the forthcoming Exeter Hall meeting.

Correction.—In the sketch of Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill, on page v. of the Mission Supplement, several corrections came to hand after the central pages had gone to press. In line eight of the sketch read "thirty years" for "fifteen"; in line fourteen, column two, read "City Hall" for "Free Trade Hall"; in closing paragraph read "above 20,000" for "nearly 30,000."

Work Among Navvies.—It is stated that at Woodford Halse, near Byford, a young lady, niece of a wealthy M.P., has taken up her abode among the navvies employed on the new Grand Central line to London. She has provided a huge boarding-house, and has made it pay, although no intoxicants are sold. In twelve months she sheltered 5000 navvies, and as many as fifty are turned away nightly for want of room.

Clubs and Drink.—There seems every probability that the agitation against clubs, carried on as vigorously by the licensed retailers of alcoholic liquors as by the temperance party, will soon bear legislative fruit. A police return has been prepared respecting clubs in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and it is said that with a view to early legislation on the subject, exhaustive evidence respecting clubs will soon be laid before the Royal Commission, the police returns being the groundwork which the evidence will be the means of developing.

Evangelistic Notes.

Northumberland.—A successful mission has been concluded in the Wesleyan Chapel, Ashington, by Mr. Summers, district evangelist. The children's services were largely attended, several young people were converted. The noon-day meetings have been very helpful and blessed, the Bible-readings from the book of Nehemiah being most instructive and searching.

Plumstead.—Mr. Edward Hurditch concluded a fortnight's mission at the Station-road Baptist Chapel on 7th inst. The meetings throughout have been well attended, the place on Sunday last being crowded. Many have decided for Christ, backsliders have been restored, and Christians have been built up. The afternoon Bible readings have been specially helpful.

Newburgh, Fife.—Messrs. Taylor and Kennedy have closed a six weeks' mission in Newburgh. Christians have been quickened, and many have professed conversion. The services were supported by the local ministers. Our open-air meetings were greatly blessed, crowds listened, and deep impressions made. Addresses were delivered at the quarry twice a-week at the dinner-hours, the men listening willingly. W. G. T.

Beckenham.—A ten days' Gospel Mission has been concluded at the Clock House Hall by Messrs. P. R. Hurditch and F. H. Hutchins. The meetings were marked by a spirit of deep earnestness and prayerful dependence upon God. The singing of Mr. Hutchins, with the preached Word, have resulted in the conversion of not a few. Believers have also been strengthened in the work of the Lord. G. S.

Hoxton, N.—A successful special mission has been conducted for seventeen days at the Jubilee Chapel, London, by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander. By means of house-to-house visitation, tract distribution, open-air meetings, and the services in the chapel, a large number of persons have been brought under to hear the Gospel. Many entered the inquiry-room. It is hoped that most of these exercised faith unto salvation. Many others were evidently awakened and impressed.

Belfast.—Rev. C. H. Yatman's Mission in Donegall-square Methodist Chapel, which has just closed, has been unusually rich in results. Large crowds attended the services, the people were deeply impressed with the preacher's powerful appeals, and many were added to the Lord. Mr. Yatman has gone to Russia for December, but returns to Dublin for January, after which he purposes visiting Belfast again for a mission with Dr. Crawford Johnson in Grosvenor Hall.

New York.—So great is the religious interest awakened by the revival meetings in Cooper Union under the conduct of Mr. Moody, that the meetings are continued yet this week, and may be indefinitely. Mr. Moody is reported as saying on Friday that he had been engaged in evangelistic work for thirty years, that he had never taken more pleasure in a series of meetings than in those which are now being held in this city, and that he had never seen New York stirred religiously as it is to-day. Coming from Mr. Moody, whose long and large experience in evangelistic work qualifies him to speak intelligently and authoritatively, this is extremely encouraging and gratifying testimony. The interest seems to be rapidly spreading, not only in Greater New York, but beyond, and pastors of churches within a radius of fifty miles of the city have been advised to begin daily evening services. Many will undoubtedly do so, if they have not already.—Christian Intelligencer.

Dublin.—Mr. William Thomson, jun., held in November, a month's mission in Merriem Hall, and from the first Sunday evening, we had much blessing every night. Night after night, the workers were busy in the after-meetings till after ten o'clock leading souls to the Saviour. In one business-house in town all the hands but one have been brought to decision for Christ. The afternoon children's meetings were also mightily blessed, and many Christians have to thank God for changed lives from blessing received at the Bible Readings. The concluding service, for converts, was indeed a meeting which will ever be remembered by those who attended it. The body of the large hall was well filled with those who had been restored or converted during Mr. Thomson's missions at Blackrock Town Hall, Grosvenor and Merriem Halls; and after five short addresses from Messrs. H. W. Hardman, H. W. Figgis, A. Lawrence, T. P. Law, Q.C., and J. D. Bogree, we had many, many testimonies from those who had been saved and blessed.

A HELPER.

Manton Smith's mission engagements for the four opening months of the New Year are:—January 9 to 17, Todmorden; 23 to 31, Ryde, Isle of Wight; February 8 to 14, Camden Town; 20 to 28, Kenyon Church, Brixton; March 6 to 14, Loughton; 20 to 25; April 3 to 11, Sowerby Bridge; 17 to 25, Jarrold-on-Tyne.

THE BOOK WORLD.

NEW YEAR BOOKLETS.

THERE are some booklets for which we look with interest year by year, confident that a true and timely word from the Divine treasury will be forthcoming. This year's product, up to the present, has not been disappointing.

Singing and Serving, by Rev. Charles A. Fox, deals with fundamentals of Christian experience. Thankfulness to God must go hand in hand with devoted service; and both these must be in and through the Holy Ghost. The heights as well as the depths are surveyed in these stimulating pages.

What Shall I Wear? by Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, is an eulogy of humility, conducted on Scriptural lines. Among many other things, it is shown that this dress is sure to fit, suits all climates, and will never wear out. The counsels which fill Mr. Moore's pages sadly need to be emphasized today.

Emptied—for New Year Replenishing. By Sophia M. Nugent. With a wealth of teaching we are helped to consider—The Hands Emptied (Levit. viii. 14), the Altar Emptied (2 Chron. vii. 1), and the Tomb Emptied (Matt. xxviii. 6). While we read we are led to examine ourselves as to surrender and service; and in conclusion we praise God for the heart-searching.

The Lord my Banner; or, Laying up the Colours. This New Year's address by Lady Beaujolois Dent is a thoughtful and pointed exposition of Exod. xvii. 15. It is in every way suitable for enclosure in letters and distribution among Christians.

New Year's Bells. By Dr. J. T. Wrenford. For many years this earnest servant of Christ has sent forth a New Year's address, and once more his modest booklet comes to hand, bearing a stirring and seasonable message from the New Year's peal and its solemn reminders of the uncertainties of fleeting time.

These are all issued by Partridge & Co.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Rest and Reaping. Vol. x. Edited by Charlotte Mason. (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d.) Many Christian workers find profit and guidance in this unpretending little monthly, so admirably conducted by Miss Mason. Together with notes as to work at home and abroad, there are Scriptural expositions, papers on various themes, and poems from many pens.

Our Own Magazine, Vol. xvii. (Children's Special Service Mission. 2s.) This well-established magazine needs few words of commendation. Its aim is definite and clear—to bring the Gospel before the children, and to seek to win them to the Saviour. Its contents are mainly Gospel narratives, illustrative of Scripture, and brightly written in a style the young people will be sure to read. We believe it has been, and will yet be a means of blessing to many children.

Biblewomen and Nurses, Vol. xiii. (Cassell & Co.) The work of the women sent out by the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission in the homes of the poor and by the bedside of the sick, is widely known and valued. The annual volume of the Society's well-conducted monthly magazine, is of real interest in many ways, telling, as it does, of steady and useful service, while giving pleasing accounts and pictures of by-way London. To peruse it is to learn much of the great metropolis and the poor who dwell therein.

Stormy Days, by Louis Burdett, is a story for boys, replete with incident and life. (1s. 6d. Church of England Temperance Society, 4, The Sanctuary, Westminster.)

Mrs. Hooper's helpful monthly, Our Sisters, gives in the current issue particulars of a large array of prize competitions for 1897, chiefly for women. (1d. Partridge & Co.)

Fine Wheat from Many Fields is a useful little volume, filled with forceful truths, sharp arrows, thoughts worth pondering, and suggestive sentences, collected and arranged by the compiler of "The Tool Basket." (1s. Marshall Bros.)

The Minister's Money. By Eliza F. Pollard. (Partridge & Co. 1s. 6d.) A homely Scotch story of a minister, who falls at Monte Carlo under the spell of the gambling passion, wrecks his own career, reaps bitter sorrow, and, repenting, seeks to undo the wrong he has committed.

Four Psalms is the title of the latest addition to the series of "Little Books on Religion." (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is by Professor George Adam Smith, and its pages present a luminous interpretation and practical application of Psalms xxiii., xxxvi., lii., and cxxi.

Fruit from My Launceston Study. By Rev. D. S. Brunton. This is a budget of good things in the form of condensed sermons and full outlines. Clearly Mr. Brunton knows what to preach, and he makes careful preparation. His unpretending pages should help many a busy minister. (Launceston, Tasmania: J. Stevenson & Sons.)

The extra Christmas parts of Good Words and The Sunday Magazine are, as usual, made up of tales more or less consonant with the season. The former, Good Cheer, comprises several short stories, some of them most pathetic; the latter, Paths of Peace, is one complete tale by C. R. Coleridge, entitled "The Prophet's Mantle." All are well illustrated. (6d. each. Isbister & Co.)

A Jewish Mirror; or, the Scriptures Reflecting Christ. By Rabbi I. Lichtenstein, of Budapest. Mrs. Baron has done well to translate this remarkable pamphlet from its original German. It presents the argument from the Old Testament, in such a form as should convince the minds of many Jews. We trust it will be widely circulated. (3d. From Rev. D. Baron, 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.)

Set to Obey. By Rev. F. S. Webster. (Nisbet. 2s. 6d.) "The secret of pleasing God is just this—a heart set to obey." This sentence, based on a petition in one of the Collects of the Prayer Book, gives the key to the title and the burden of this volume. The bearing of this attitude of obedience on the Christian's daily life, is developed in the terse, vigorous, sometimes daring, style, which characterises this author's writings.

Denominational Handbooks. Two old friends in the way of almanacs, which we find of service every day in the week, are The Baptist Almanac and The Congregational Almanac, issued by R. Banks & Son (2d. each). They are directories of the London churches of the denominations named. In the 1897 issue of the former there is a portrait and sketch of Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, and in the latter one of Rev. H. Harries, of Clapton.

Still Upward; or, Devotional Studies on the Second Half of the Church's Year. By Rev. J. H. Townsend, D.D., Vicar of Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) This is a sequel to the author's excellent work, "Spiral Stairs," and is every way as good. Twenty-eight in number, the discourses are founded on the lessons or Gospel portions for the successive Sundays. They accordingly cover a wide range of teaching, and should furnish much suggestion to preachers.

Fenelon's Three Dialogues on Pulpit Eloquence have been issued, in a handy volume, by T. Baker, Soho Square (3s. net). The pages present a translation by the late Rev. S. J. Eales, D.C.L., along with illustrative quotations from modern writers, and an introductory essay. There is no royal road to eloquence, but there are roads, nevertheless, and these pages contain many useful directions and precepts. The illustrative quotations seem to have been selected with wisdom from a wide field of literature.

Gleanings from Many Fields. Edited by Rev. George Cousins, of the London Missionary Society. (Snow & Co. 2s. 6d.) Beautifully bound and illustrated, this will make a charming present for the young folks. The "gleanings" are gathered from many pens, mostly dealing with child-life in heathen lands. Many a young heart may, in perusing this book, be set on fire with an enthusiasm for missions. News from Afar is the annual volume of the admirable Magazine for Young People issued by the L.M.S. Its bright pictures and well-selected matter will find a welcome in many homes.

McCheyne from the Pew. Extracts from the diary of William Lamb. Edited by Rev. Kirkwood Hewat (Drummond, Stirling. 1s. 6d.) The memory of the sainted McCheyne is fragrant to every Christian Scot, and his Memoirs and Remains, by Dr. A. Bonar, has reached a wholly remarkable circulation, stimulating and deepening spiritual life, under the Antipodean suns, amidst Canadian snows, as well as at home. Still the glimpses afforded in this book of his holy and fruitful life, as seen by one of his elders, have an interest of their own, which will make it welcome wherever McCheyne's name is revered.

Life in West London, a study and a contrast, by Arthur Sherwell. (Methuen & Co., Essex-street. 2s. 6d.) Soho, in which the West London Mission largely works, presents many and serious problems, by reason of the influx of a foreign population, the prevalence of clubs, and the demoralisation springing from its proximity to and association with the sin of Piccadilly. In the course of some years' investigations the author has gathered a mass of facts, which he here presents, on overcrowding, poverty, sweating, drinking, and gambling, and still darker vices. A flood of light is thrown on the locality, which will be of service to workers. Probably many districts in London would well repay similarly close and careful study.

The Prisons' Service Review has been started as a monthly medium of intercommunication for gaol officials of all ranks and grades, and for those of the public interested in the penal system and social problems connected therewith. Contributions are invited on—1, the treatment of juvenile offenders, otherwise than by commitment to gaol; 2, repeated short sentences on inebriates; 3, heredity, weak-mindedness, and incipient insanity as predominant factors in the criminal problem; 4, our workhouse children; 5, recidivism; 6, how far is the management of our sixty Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies efficient and effective? and on what first principles should aid to discharged prisoners be based; 7, indefinite and indeterminate sentences; 8, the present uncertainty of sentences—how far remediable?; 9, the "Submerged Tenth." (Warwick Publishing Co., 6, Warwick Mansions, W.C. Price 6d.)

Rev. Richard Chew: A Memoir. By Rev. Edward Boaden. A well-written Christian biography is always welcome—when God is glorified, not man; and when the story of faithful service is so told that other hearts are fired with holy ardour. Thus we welcome heartily this memoir of an eminent minister of Jesus Christ who for forty-eight years rendered valuable service in connection with the United Methodist Free Churches. His abilities, his clear exposition of the Word, his keen insight, his inflexible adherence to truth, his eloquence, his mastery of men, his zeal for souls, and his consistent life, gained him a commanding position in his denomination. It is very instructive to trace in the volume before us how these gifts and graces were used to the glory of God. The book has interested us, and we commend it warmly to our readers. (Methodist Free Church Publishing Office. Price 5s.)

The Mystery Unveiled; or, an Exhibition of the Divine Purpose in Man's Creation, Fall, and Redemption. By H. P. E. de St. Dalmas. (3s. 6d. John F. Shaw & Co.) In the words of the author, the object of this book is to "elevate the mind of its readers to the Divine standpoint, from which they may be able to take a wider view of the various dispensations through which the Almighty is working to bring into full manifestation his attributes in that New Creation which will be the grand issue of the conflict between the powers of light and darkness which for thousands of years has been maintained." In the form of blank verse, the author outlines the Divine purpose as worked out in history from "the beginning of the Creation of God," dealing, in order, with the Fall, the Patriarchal age, and Israelitish history down to the time of Christ. Then he depicts the story of the Cross and Pentecost, proceeding to present a fore-view of the millennial age and the new heavens and earth. By way of appendix, Mr. George F. Trench gives a summary of the principal considerations set forth in his book "After the Thousand Years," as the foundation of the view that after the millennium and before the eternal state begins, there will intervene a limited period of great glory and perfection. With him Mr. St. Dalmas agrees in placing "the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times" after the thousand years' reign. There are Scripture references throughout the book, and occasional notes, exegetical and illustrative. Some may discount the poetry, and others may challenge positions taken up by the author; but those who read with care and without prejudice will find the pages as soundly thoughtful as they are truly reverent.

A MONTH OF THOUGHTS FOR INVALIDS. This is series "C," named after the initial letter of each day's topic. (2d., 1s. 6d. per doz. The Orphans' Printing Press, Leominster.)

JOHN WOLFGANG, BUSINESS MAN (Is. Headley Brothers), is a suggestive little allegory from which some tired and perplexed souls may gather comfort in life's stress and worry.

THE "ONE THING NEEDFUL" ALMANAC, 1897, containing daily texts, Gospel pleas, and verse, and much useful and profitable information, is now published by R. Brimelow, Southport. (1d.)

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND ALMANAC FOR 1897, compiled by Henry Miller, gives in brief space much ecclesiastical information, the tables of lessons, etc. It will be specially interesting to thorough-going Protestants. (Paper, 1d. cloth, 6d. Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street; Strand.)

JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S ALMANAC is one of the most popular wall sheets. The daily "portions" are as wise as they are terse. SPURGEON'S ILLUSTRATED ALMANAC is a useful companion. It is in booklet form, and there is a text of Scripture for every day, as well as many attractive articles. (1d. each. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Field Lane Institutions.

THESE refugees and ragged schools deal with poverty in its most distressing forms. Men and women crushed by misfortune have found in the Refuge a sanctuary which has saved them from collapse, and, in some cases, from self-destruction. Miserable homes have been brightened with the visit of sympathy and the ministrations of timely aid. About 400 very poor women every week crowd the Mothers' Meeting. Infants, whose mothers are at work for a livelihood, receive in the crèche careful tending, wholesome food, and suitable toys. An active war is waged against intemperance, which clothes so many in rags.

Between 200 and 300 boys and girls, taken from the streets, are maintained and educated in the Certified Industrial Schools. Hundreds of young children are, in the ragged schools, trained for useful service here, and for better things hereafter—whilst multitudes of the outcast poor listen every Sunday morning, at the Ragged Church service, to words of saving grace.

Help is greatly needed for this large work in a poor district. The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

The W. I. Palmer Memorial.

THE committee and friends of the Reading Temperance Society have decided to erect a group of buildings upon the site of the present West-street Hall property in Reading as a memorial to their late president, Mr. W. I. Palmer. Through the gifts and kindnesses of the shareholders of the West-street Rooms Company, the society has acquired the property it has so long occupied at a merely nominal price.

It is proposed to pull down the present buildings, which are dilapidated, and to erect a hall and buildings, the estimated cost of which is put at about £6000. In making their appeal, the committee seek to give adequate expression to the strong desire prevailing for some suitable memorial to the public life of one of the most benevolent of men; and to accomplish this in such a way as shall yield to present and future generations a goodly share of the manifold advantages it was ever his aim whilst living to impart.

The Self-Supporting Missions in Africa, so long carried on by Bishop William Taylor, have been taken over by the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. Bishop Hartzell will shortly leave to take charge of the work. At the meeting of the General Missionary Committee last month at Detroit, Mich., after reference had been made to the praiseworthy devotion of the outgoing bishop, it was pointed out that the sacrifice of the loving wife of Dr. Hartzell was second to none in greatness, and, as if at a signal, the whole company spontaneously rose and sang, "Blest be the tie that binds."

A Maronite Village.—Miss La Grange writes from Tula:—"The village of Tula is in the mountains about four hours from the Cedars of Lebanon. The people are bigoted Maronites all through this region. In this village they are of the lowest peasant class, very ignorant, poor, and oppressed. They have been neglected by the hierarchy, their poverty offering no prey, so we find them shy but not bigoted. They do not come to us, but are ready to listen when we go to them. Most of them know something about Christ, but not much, and it is not a 'saving knowledge' I fear, at least it does not seem to keep them from sinning. Poor people! they are altogether gone astray."

The Y.W.C.A.

MISS MARGERY is about to take up work at Alexandria.

The Countess of Chichester gave an address to the members of the Seaford branch on the 30th ult.

Miss Hill has gone to Madras to help her sister, Miss Agnes Gale Hill, in the work of the Y.W.C.A.

The annual meetings of the Andover branch were held on the 1st inst. Addresses were given by Miss Digby, Miss Caston, and others.

An earnest endeavour is being made by the members of the Ipswich branch to reduce the debt of £700 still remaining on the new building.

At the last feeing-market at Rotherhay, where a number of Highland girls were present, the Y.W.C.A. had the Tower-street Hall door open all day, and also held a number of meetings in the open-air.

The annual sale in connection with the Central Institute, 25 and 26, George-street, realised over £90, including a few donations towards the purchase fund of the new headquarters. The sale was entirely the work of the members of the Institute.

In the province of Zealand, Holland, there are active and flourishing branches of the Y.W.C.A. In the thirty-four villages in that province the work is progressing very favourably, and has proved a means of disseminating evangelical truth among the people.

The winter session at Llandudno was inaugurated by a social reunion, arranged by Miss Hindle, the hon. secretary. A letter was read from Lady Augusta Mostyn expressing regret at her inability to attend, and assuring the members of her deep interest. About seventy members were present.

The annual meeting of the Derby Y.W.C.A. was held on the 2nd inst., presided over by Mrs. Ogle. The secretaries of the various branches presented their reports. The total number of members in Derby and its immediate neighbourhood was 580. The home Association is at present, through want of funds, without an institute.

An active work is in progress at the Y.W.C.A. rooms in Pulteney-street North, Adelaide, where Miss Frew and other honorary helpers have taken charge of the work in the absence of Miss Greenwood, the secretary. There have been many visitors to the rooms, some from Victoria and New South Wales, and one from the Hobart Association on her way to India as a missionary.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave on Tuesday, the 8th, an address on "The Holy Spirit" at the Preparation Home for Y.W.C.A. work in Finsbury-square. Besides the resident students there was a good attendance of secretaries and workers. After explaining the difference between the present dispensation of the Spirit and those that had gone before, Mr. Peploe showed that in this dispensation every believer has the indwelling Holy Spirit (Rom. viii. 9), that He has been poured out. "What is needed, is a full surrender of every part of our being to Him, that thus we may live in the Spirit, be led of the Spirit" and "walk in the Spirit."

Y.M.C.A.

THE new Association at Barrow-in-Furness has been formally inaugurated.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Beaumont gave a reception on the 11th inst. to the Oxford Association.

The Watford Association has issued its annual report, showing much earnest and useful work.

The Bristol and District Monthly Record tells of vigorous and promising operations over a wide area.

The Leeds Chronicle gives brief glimpses of purposeful work in the North for the help and saving of young men.

The first Sunday this month the attendance at the Weston-super-Mare Y.M.C.A. Bible-class was 202. It is hoped to maintain the average at two hundred.

Weekly preparatory prayer meetings for the McNeill Mission, to be held in Manchester next January, are now being carried on at the Y.M.C.A., as well as the Central Hall and the Religious Institute.

The Camden-road Association reports good work in many ways. The recent public reception by Lord Kinnaird was a great success, while the Sunday evening Bible talks by Rev. R. G. Boville have aroused much interest.

Mr. W. Clarkson Wallis entertained members of the Brighton Association at a social conference on Monday evening, the 7th inst., to meet Mr. Hind Smith, of the National Council, and other friends, to talk over the general interests of the work.

The Huddersfield Association, which has celebrated its "coming of age," has six former members in the ministry—one in the Church of England, two in the Wesleyan body, one a missionary in South Africa, one in the Methodist New Connexion, and one in the United Methodist Free Church.

The annual meeting of the Wandsworth Association was held on Thursday evening, 10th inst., in Down Lodge Hall, and was well attended. Mr. H. W. Maynard occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., Mr. W. Hind Smith, Rev. G. Martin Claris, and others.

The Wolverhampton Association reports great progress; during October and November there has been a large accession of members, a restaurant has been started, a reference library (the gift of the president) for the benefit of clergymen, ministers, and other Christian workers has been opened; and a scheme has been inaugurated for reaching poorer youths.

The Mile End Artisan Y.M.C.A. held its annual meeting on the 8th inst. in the Brunswick Chapel, Whitechapel-road. Mr. Henry Conder, of Bombay, occupied the chair, and the speakers were Messrs. W. H. Mills and J. H. Putterill, and Revs. T. P. Lansdowne and W. Daniel; there was a large attendance. The secretary reported an excellent year's work, the members numbering over 200, all of whom were Christian workers and total abstainers.

The new premises of the Coventry Association, situate in a leading thoroughfare in the centre of the town, have, through the munificence of Mr. J. K. Starley, the president, who contributed £750, been handsomely fitted and furnished, and were formally opened by the member for the borough, Mr. C. J. Murray, on Dec. 10. Large numbers of the residents assembled in the afternoon for the opening ceremony, at which, in addition to addresses by Lord Leigh, the Archdeacon of Coventry, Canon Beaumont, Rev. G. Bainton and others, a warm welcome was given by the president and those assembled to the newly appointed secretary, Mr. J. H. Haise. Lord Kinnaird and the Archdeacon were among the principal speakers at the public meeting held at the Corn Exchange in the evening, which was also of a thoroughly successful character.

Christian Endeavour.

In Germany the Y.M.C.A. and Y.P.S.C.E. are working well together.

A Christian Endeavour Society is reported among the sponge-bratherers at Key West, Fla. Every evening they bring their boats together and engage in prayer and song.

A West Cornwall C.E. Union has recently been organised. Nine societies were represented at the first meeting, and others wrote expressing their willingness to be affiliated.

Probably the largest society in Australia is that connected with Yarra-street Wesleyan Church, Geelong. It has five divisions: three young people's and two juniors. In six years the membership has grown from fifteen to 550.

This is from a recent "best news item" in an American paper: "A mammoth petition addressed to Congress, and requesting the abolition of the drinking saloons from the Capitol, is being circulated among the C.E. societies in the district of Columbia."

The Bradford and District Union held a conference on Saturday week at Kirkgate Wesleyan Chapel. Two interesting papers were read relating to the junior societies, by Miss Annie H. Turner, of Idle, and Miss Horsfall, of Ilkley. At the evening meeting, Rev. J. T. F. Halligey (late African missionary) presided, and Rev. J. R. Abel gave an address.

Irish Notes.

MR. JAMES WHARTON has completed a tour through the South and West of Ireland, having visited Ardret, Listowel, Tralee, Milltown, Killorglin, Cork, Kenmare, Drummore, Bandon, Clonakilty, and Limerick. In every place the Gospel was listened to most attentively, with blessing following. He writes:—"One impression I had all along the line, that Popery, poverty, and superstition go hand in hand together, and when once the people surrender their will to that of the priest, these things more or less invariably follow. Open-air work in Cork goes on uninterruptedly every week."

The Irish Women's Temperance Union seeks to pray and work for the redemption of their country from the slavery of strong drink. A branch may be formed wherever ten prayerful women are found in any locality interested in temperance. There are branches in each province, sixty-four in all. Much temperance literature has been scattered abroad. Public and cottage meetings are held, and many women have been not only rescued from the drink, but are now rejoicing in the liberty of the children of God. Miss Hanna, secretary of the Union, and the secretary of the Belfast Central Branch have concluded a tour in the central, western, and southern towns of Ireland.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OWING to the Christmas holidays, this issue has been sent to press a day earlier than usual.

The passage of time has once more brought us round to Christmastide, and our thoughts are naturally engaged in preparation for its social festivities and its higher message. The peril is to forget the latter in the former. It is no small benefit that at this time there is a pause in the customary strain and stress of social relationships, and, by general consent, an interchange of goodwill and kindly greetings among all classes. That which makes men's hearts throb with a warmer regard for one another, and eases the competition of business life, be it but for a few days, must leave some permanent sediment of nobler feeling behind. Still sweeter are the hometies that are renewed, and the glad fellowship of loving friends round the board and the hearth.

But if this be all, it is not enough. The joy of Christmastide is a poor thing if it be not dignified by the recognition of the great fact which it commemorates. The birth of the Son of God, and the innumerable blessings his coming brought with it into the world, are the essential themes of the time. Our meditation should turn reverently towards that mystery which is the Spring of our vast life in this world, and our dearest hope for the next; and thus meditation should be sweet and happy. But for Him, where should we be? What we owe to Him, who can tell? Let the thought of the gracious outpouring of love and pity which began with the first Christmas, and has gone on with ever-broadening stream ever since, till it has overflowed so great a part of the world, dignify all our rejoicings, and sound sweetly like an undertone through all the social delights and reunions of this bright time.

When Sir James Simpson, the great Edinburgh physician, was asked by an interviewer "What do you consider the greatest discovery you ever made?" he replied, "That I have a Saviour." The answer was as creditable to his understanding as to his heart. There is no knowledge to compare with the knowledge of Christ, in whom the Father has revealed Himself; it is life eternal. And there is no knowledge for which we should feel so grateful, if we possess it. The simple candour of the great doctor is also an example of courage in confessing Jesus before men, well observing of imitation. There was no cant about it, and its uncommonness yet simple truthfulness must have produced a good impression.

The question has been asked "What would be the result of a loss of faith in Christ as a Saviour?" The world is unconscious of its debt to many things, and most of all to the revelation made in the Gospels. The light that streams from the sacred page has permeated more or less the whole of civilised life. It is the root-motive of all true philanthropy, it sweetens and clarifies social relations far beyond the pale of the Church and the circle of believers; it penetrates the lives of thousands with its warmth and radiance, who will have nothing consciously to do with religion; it has lent a dignity and a meaning to countless trivialities of intercourse between man and man. Without Christ, this diffused light, like that of twilight, would slowly fade and vanish, taking the joy out of the earth and the glory out of the heavens.

Joy is the distinctive note of Christmas; we seem to hear again the singing of the angels, to feel the glad wonder of the shepherds, the thrill with the awe and gratitude of Mary, the most favoured of women. Christmas gives actuality to the Incarnation. The love of God seeks men anew. We need the quickening of joy; it is our strength. We can dare and do after a baptism of joy what we could never attempt without it; it fires us with courage and hope; it causes hidden seeds of truth to spring up in the heart.

The widespread earthquake which trembled through the country one night last week gave a rude shock to many, and caused so great alarm that at least one person died of fright. As usually happens at these times, there were some who were suddenly reminded of insecurity of life and rushed out into the night with wild words of confession and prayer. Superstitious terror however is not so frequent as it used to be in former times, and the terrible scenes of abject fear caused by physical catastrophes in other ages are rare in these days. Does this prove that we are more religious, or less, than our forefathers? There is at least less of the religion of fear in our hearts; whether there is more of the religion of loving service is a matter that must be judged by other tests.

Rev. F. W. Newland, who had so much to do with founding the Mansfield Settlement at Canning Town, prefers small to large settlements, a few women and men living quiet brotherly lives among their fellows, not a polytechnic. He thinks that the final and most fruitful form of settlement work will be found in small communities of workers "closely associated with the life of the churches in the districts occupied, and in continental touch with suburban congregations." This surely is the true idea; for, if adopted, it saves small or poor churches in poor neighbourhoods from extinction; it prevents suburban churches from being isolated in selfish ease from their poorer friends; and it brings the help of living men and women to the poor and afflicted. It may not impress the imagination so deeply as a vast institution, but it would prove to be so many small rills of holy blessing and influence quietly irrigating barren districts.

The New York Independent, of December 3, has a series of papers on the inter-relations of the great European powers, and thus sums up the situation in an editorial review:—

The real hope of Europe and its prosperity lies in the growth of a Christian sentiment and a civilisation which will give Russia representative government, Germany relief from a half-crazy Emperor who would be a Czar, Turkey total reconstruction under European control, and to Italy, Austria, and all the Powers of Europe, a treaty of disarmament.

Canon Eyton, speaking to a Christian Commonwealth interviewer, evidently with the West End of London in his mind, has the impression that while the tradition of church-going is strong in some neighbourhoods, and some of the popular churches are still well attended, there is a tendency to a decline in church-going owing to two causes. The upper classes leave town from Saturday till Monday, and the middle classes go out of town on bicycles on Sunday. He found on the last Sunday in September in a church that can hold twelve hundred a congregation of one hundred. If churches in other places were blessed with an increase corresponding to the town decrease there would be less to complain of, but this is an age when the tendency to seek our own pleasure on Sundays, and to do so because of the pressure of the week, is exceedingly strong. That men who yield to it are losers both physically and spiritually is certain. The day of rest has a foundation in our constitution as well as in the written law of God, and the neglect of it is invariably hurtful.

We give this week a second summary of correspondence on the Lord's Prayer. In condensing the letters we have left out many personal details; but it may be as well to state here that several of the writers who speak of blessing from the use of the Prayer, inform us that they worship in assemblies where it is never heard, because the teachers connected therewith regard the prayer as belonging to a past dispensation. Taken as a whole, the correspondence may be said to have embodied many important facts regarding the object and meaning of the Prayer, and many helpful items of Christian experience. We have been much interested to observe the progress of a movement promoted by Rev. Charles Bullock to bring home to the minds of busy people the great privilege of setting up family prayer on the basis of the Lord's Prayer. Many workers among the artisan and labouring population look upon this movement as a mission effort of much promise. Particulars may be had from Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., Coomrith, Bourne-mouth.

The ever-deepening poverty of a section of the benefited clergy is a theme that naturally continues to crop up in the Church papers. The Rock recently devoted a suggestive leading article to the subject. It finds just fault with the extraordinary inequality in the distribution of emolument among clergymen. Some of the smallest parishes are associated with the largest incomes. It is "in a position to state that an incumbent holding a living of considerable value, with a comparatively small population, annually sets aside one thousand pounds of his annual income." This is in itself as much as ten times the total income of some of the hardest workers in the Church. An equalising of salaries seems to be the first crying need of the hour. But nothing short of a new spirit of liberality among the people will meet the needs of the case. The law is notoriously slow in reform. But the call of Christian love, which enjoins that the strong should bear the burdens of the weak, ought not to be so hide-bound. It may be asked, however, whether many of these clergy could not be spared for other work.

"How to turn misfortunes into blessings" is an art that is well exemplified in the life and work of Dr. Campbell, of the Normal College for the Blind at Norwood, who was recently interviewed. He lost his eyesight before he was five years old, but he has been as busy and possibly more useful a man than if he had retained it. His life has been devoted to the idea of helping blind people to do, as far as possible, just as other people do, and to get their living by their own exertions. Twenty-four years ago he started his work at Norwood with two small cottages and two pupils, and now there are twelve houses under his charge in which the blind are trained for useful lives, with sixteen acres of ground attached. Music he considers the best sphere for the blind. Last year the old pupils of the school earned £23,000, of which £22,000 was made by music. Here is a lesson for all who suffer from any disability or disadvantage to make it a stepping-stone instead of a stumbling-block.

With what unequal steps the world moves along! What contrasts it presents! While two of its northern continents are civilised and formally Christianised, Asia, Africa, and South America are in the night of heathenism, or in the twilight of civilisation. At the far south-east corner of Europe is Turkey; at the far north-west corner is England. The Queen rules over some of the most highly-cultured peoples in the world, and over some who are barbarous savages. In the United States you may yet see maimed men limping about who were wounded and lamed by cruel masters in the slave days. In the heart of the "Dark Continent" is Uganda, where "wonders have been done by the missionaries," where also you may sometimes meet relics of the barbarous days in the shape of men without hands, nose, ears, or lips; in another part you see the children being taught to read the Scriptures. In London the West End people are in palaces, and thousands of the East End people in the vilest tenements.

The revival for a time of forms of religion which are doomed to vanish away is not an uncommon thing. Judaism struggled hard against Christianity at the beginning; heathenism made a tremendous attempt under the apostate Julian to recover its lost ground; there is a recrudescence of heathenism at the present time in India; and now we learn from New York that the National Council of Jewish Women, concerned at the growing scepticism of many of their countrymen, are striving to promote religion and philanthropy. They say they want their revivals of religion as well as the Christians. The example of the faith and zeal of Christian women is pointed to as a thing to be imitated. We can only rejoice at all this; it is much better than indifference. Yet in itself it is doomed to failure. But the failure may lead the Jewesses to say, "Why could not we prevail?" And thus may come the answer that "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved than the name of Jesus."

It looks as if the churches were going through a process of education by means of the P.S.A. movement. For long they mourned that the working classes could not be laid hold of, but now they see the working classes laid hold of by the thousands. The next thing to consider is how far the same or similar methods should be applied by the churches in connection with the regular diets of worship. The old formalism, exclusiveness, and respectability will have to yield to the warmer spirit of brotherly-kindness. We may surely believe that we are on the way to a finer and more Christlike life, which cannot fail to make its Divine impression upon men.

The futility of culture, education, and enlightenment to stem the innate corruption of the human heart is strangely exhibited in the condition of things brought to light in the recent State trials at Berlin. Into high places, as into the lowest, evil insinuates itself. Public interests are made the stalking-horse of private, ambitious, and official jealousies. A venal press, a corrupt secret police, which fattens on the mischief it is hired to detect, a network of intrigue woven through the tissue of political life—these are the revelations that have been made during this cause célèbre. We have reason to hope in this country that in the air of free institutions these evils are scarcely possible. But nothing short of higher moral ideals as to the responsibilities of public life will keep these evils under, and such ideals can be found only in religious principles and feelings. How to spread the influence of the Christian faith into all the ramifications of life—this is the problem on the solution of which will depend the purifying and uplifting of all offices, and of those who fill them.

Many of our readers, we know, object to any pictorial representation of our Lord, and in deference to them we should have requested that the inset which appears this week might not have had the frontispiece which it bears. But by an error the proof was not submitted to us. On the other hand, those who are familiar with Mr. Tinworth's productions in terra-cotta know the reverence with which he has treated his Scripture subjects, especially those relating to our Lord.

Nineteen Hundred Years.

THE close of the present year, 1896, really brings us to the end of the nineteenth century, as it is admitted that the so-called "A.D." began four years too late. If so, the birth of our blessed Lord reaches this year its nineteenth hundredth anniversary.

Surely this is a fit season for a very unusual celebration, that should be no ordinary holiday with its worldly gaiety and display, but a true holy day unto the Lord, with a grateful commemoration of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus, and a devout humiliation in view of all past unfaithfulness to his doctrine, his example, his commands and his great commission, and a more complete separation unto a life of holiness and of service.

It is but too sadly obvious that never in the history of these nineteen centuries has the world more encroached upon the church or the church been more assimilated to the world. The amazing decline in doctrinal soundness, the decay of vital piety and spirituality, the godless extravagance prevailing even among disciples, the abounding conformity to the world, the practical denial of Christian stewardship, the neglect of private prayer, the growing indifference to public worship, the vastness of the unoccupied field of missions, and the utter inadequacy of present means and methods to overtake this destitution—these, and many other evils and perils now confronting us, demand such a new standard of holy living and giving, praying and preaching, denying of self and serving of God, as can never become actual without a new Pentecost from above.

After much prayer and conference among brethren, it has been determined to call ten days' meetings at New York City, from December 24 to January 3. To this gathering, in which no name will be known as the centre of attraction save Jesus only, all disciples who love his name, trust in his blood, own his authority, honour his spirit, and wait for his coming, are cordially invited.

Those who cannot meet with us are as cordially invited to join in prayer for a new effusion of the Holy Spirit on all disciples, the immediate opening of all doors now closed to mission advance, the raising up of an adequate missionary force, and the universal awakening of disciples to the duty of a world's evangelisation.

It is proposed to crown and complete this gathering by a spontaneous offering to world-wide missions, to be distributed according to the choice of the individual contributors, so far as designated; the remainder to be used as may be determined by a committee appointed by the conference.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

WE are grateful to the numerous friends who have interested themselves in the course of lessons on which are to commence in our issue of January 7. We shall be happy to forward, post free, to any who have not procured them, supplies of leaflets announcing the Lessons, for circulation amongst those who are likely to be benefited by such a course; and it is difficult to say who is not likely to be so benefited.

LANGUAGES MADE EASY,

This system will undoubtedly tend greatly to facilitate the acquisition of knowledge in the various branches of study to which they may be applied. So that it is with confidence we urge our readers to do their best in making known these Lessons to their friends and acquaintance of all ages.

Mr. Kilburn is not desirous of publishing his Lessons in book form. It is his opinion that by giving them to the public through the medium of papers which have an extensive circulation amongst Christians he can address a far greater number of students than could possibly be reached by means of a separate volume, or by lectures to classes organised in different places. He has, therefore, arranged for his Lessons to appear in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN and The Life of Faith. But while the Introduction will be common to both publications, the Course of Lessons will be altogether different. The Author is most anxious that Christian workers throughout the world should reap the benefit of his prolonged study of this subject; having proved its usefulness by applying his system to the study of languages while at college, and having received numberless testimonies of the benefit derived from lectures he has subsequently delivered to students, missionaries, and others, in various parts of the world.

Arrangements are made for the simultaneous publication of Mr. Kilburn's articles in Great Britain and America, thus securing copyright in both countries. They must, not, therefore, be reprinted in either country without the written consent of the Author.

Church-going in Glasgow.

A CENSUS of Church attendance was taken in Glasgow on Sabbath, October 11, and the results have been published by instalments in The Christian Leader. We have now the complete results, and comparing these with church statistics on the one hand, and with the population on the other, we are in a position to draw conclusions of an instructive nature.

It is shown, as far as a census of Church attendance can show, that the Church is by no means keeping pace with the increase of population. When we compare this census with that taken in 1876, we are able to determine what progress or decline the different churches have made during the last twenty years. In 1876, the population in the district over which the census of Church attendance has been taken was 627,985. At that date, 100,954 were found present at the best-attended service in the Protestant Churches, distributed as follows:—The Established Church of Scotland, 29,706; the Free Church, 30,167; the United Presbyterian Church, 30,586; other Churches, 10,495. In 1896, the population is 840,346, an increase of 212,361. Now how much have the different Churches, in point of attendance, increased in Glasgow during the last twenty years? The Established Church, 5552; the Free Church, 6289; the United Presbyterian Church, 292; all the other Churches, 13,042. Among these other Churches, the Episcopal has increased 2428; the Baptist Church 2096, while the Unitarian has fallen from 522 to 261, exactly one-half. The best-attended service of the day in Roman Catholic places of worship gave a total of 19,203. As there was no census taken of that Church in 1876 we are unable say how much it has increased.

If we add the Roman Catholics, we reach the conclusion that out of a population of 840,346, all the churchgoers in Glasgow, as determined by the best-attended service, number 145,332, a little more than one-sixth of the population. I believe that all the Churches are setting themselves to remedy this state of things; the Established and the Free Churches have in hand large schemes of Church extension. It is in the crowded centres of population in the midst of the city, where the Church is losing ground, and where we have commodious places of worship deserted by the people. It is, however, only fair to say, that the largest attendance at any Protestant church was in one of the poorest localities in the city, where there is a vigorous evangelical Free Church. Our contention is that if we had ministers of spiritual power and activity, who could organise and evangelise, people would be brought to church.

There is no doubt much good work done outside all the churches, and much done by all the churches that cannot be shown in a census of church attendance; but it is evident that the churches in Glasgow have a great deal of work before them. Let any man go down to a district where the working classes live, with an earnest desire to understand and help the people, and he will find that it is carelessness and indifference, and neither scepticism nor antagonism to Christianity, that keep people from the Church.

No doubt the fundamental cause of our home heathenism is the natural dislike of the human heart to God and his ways, its distrust of Him and opposition to his will. But as this is a universal feature, it does not explain the specific feature of home heathenism, utter neglect of the forms as well as the substance of Divine worship. To what causes is this phase of irreligion specially due? The following are some of the causes:—Ignorance, want of Christian training in youth, want of Christian influence of any kind. In the very neighbourhood of the churches people are growing up in entire isolation from all the Christian forces of the country.

Another cause of non-churchgoing is drinking and debauchery, fostered by low and loose company, by places of amusement and light literature, all of which tend to release the reins of conscience and give a stimulus to carnal indulgence. Lastly, there are struggle, poverty, and social changes and influences, which cause people to lose heart as well as remove them from the neighbourhood of those whose influence would be beneficial.

How to get hold of those who have lapsed from much that is good, and how to win them to Christ and his service are vital questions that the Church cannot deal with too soon or too seriously. There are signs that many of the churches in Glasgow are setting themselves to deal with the state of matters that the census of Church attendance has revealed. If the Church sets herself to do her work in the name and power of Christ, she cannot fail to succeed, for He must reign.

Papers on Missions.—5.*

GOD AND HIS WITNESSES.

IF God so loved the world that He gave the Son of his love to die for it, it is self-evident that the desire of his soul must be that the world should receive the benefit of that atoning death and justifying resurrection (Rom. iv. 25). If God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, it was a foregone conclusion that He would commit unto his ambassadors the word of reconciliation, and by them beseech men to be reconciled to God (2 Cor. v. 18-20).

Who are the ambassadors to whom He has committed this ministry of reconciliation? Every member of the body of Christ; every member of the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all; for unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Everyone is under obligation to exercise the function in the body peculiar to himself; to employ the talent entrusted to him; to minister the gift with which he has been endowed.

God, who was slandered to the first created pair, by the rebel and usurper, has been content that his love and wisdom, his truth and righteousness, should be vindicated by the manifestation of Himself, and that every one who knows Him should communicate his knowledge to his neighbour, to the utmost of his qualification and ability. "Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings He perfects his praise.

To this end God called Abram from his kindred and his father's house, and separated (sanctified) him and his family and nation, that they might be his witnesses that He is God, and that through them all the families and nations of the earth might be blessed.

To this end He sent forth Jesus from his Father's house, that God might be revealed in Him, and that by the offering of the Son of God (of which the offering of Isaac was a type) his righteousness and love might be declared; and that a new creation in Christ Jesus might be to the praise of his glory.

To this end Jesus sanctified (separated) Himself, with a Nazarite separation, as God's true and faithful Witness, that his people might be truly sanctified (separated, set apart) to be his witnesses. That He might sanctify the people with his own blood, He suffered (as the sin-offering) without the gate. Let us go forth, therefore, unto Him, without the camp, bearing his reproach.

* The previous paper of this series (December 10) was by Rev. Geo. Wainwright, Bournemouth.

To this end the Spirit was poured out at Pentecost: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me"—both at home, in neighbouring countries, and to the uttermost part of the earth.

To everyone who claims John as a brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus, the Covenant Angel comes, whom John saw in the Patmos visions (Rev. x.). He claims the sea and earth which He has redeemed by his own blood, and roars over them as a lion over the prey which he has taken. On his pierced and stretched-out hand lies a little opened book, and the voice from heaven bids John, our representative, and us, take it and eat it up. It is sweet at first, for the words of God are sweeter than honey and the honeycomb; but it is bitter afterward, for Christ's witnesses must know the fellowship of his sufferings, as when He beheld the beloved city and wept over it. Then thou must prophesy; "I will give power unto my...witnesses, and they shall prophesy...clothed in sackcloth." Inside the veil they sit at his feet and hear his word; outside the camp they bear his reproach. Seated in the heavenlies, yet sojourning in the world where their Lord was crucified, they testify that the earthly city hath no foundation, and torment them that dwell upon the earth; looking for the City which hath the foundations, they are the embodiment of the Beatitudes to the pilgrims journeying thither.

God has chosen his people to be holy and without blame before Him in love, not as an end, but as a means to an end—that they may be his witnesses. As He chose and sanctified (or set apart) the golden vessels for holy uses in his temple, so his people are sanctified, that they may be vessels meet for the Master's use—to show forth the praises (virtues) of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light—to preach the Gospel to every creature: "And this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a testimony [to the righteousness and grace, the love and power of God] unto all the nations; and then shall the end come."

Each believer, delivered out of the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, is so delivered and so translated that he may be to the praise of the glory of his grace, who hath made him accepted in the Beloved; that through the Church may be known to the principalities and powers in heavenly places the manifold wisdom of God.

The measure in which this ideal is fulfilled is the measure in which the purpose of our salvation is being now accomplished. The sanctification of the saints is, as far as this life is concerned, for the evangelization of the world, to the glory of God.

'Tis all my business here below,
To cry, Behold the Lamb.

was not merely the experience of an individual; it is a fact and an obligation incumbent on every follower of Christ.

When evangelists and pastors are set forth salvation, not as an end, but as a means to an end—the making known to all men the only true God as the Saviour of all men, specially of them that believe, to the praise of the glory of his grace—the true place of Missions will begin to be perceived. M.

"They had been with Jesus."

Acts iv. 13.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

SOMETHING more is needed than to know Christ after the flesh, if men are to stand before the world in the beauty and might of true godliness, or promulgate the doctrines of Christianity with irresistible force. It is enough to compare the Peter of the Gospels with the Peter of the Acts, to be compelled to admit that three years accompanying with Jesus must be supplemented by something else before a man can give his testimony before rulers and kings, and stand unmoved against the swirling currents of the world's hatred.

It is not enough to have been with Jesus on the Mount of Beatitudes. To stand there and listen to the octave of blessedness, to see evolved the love side of the Law, to wait in the oratory of prayer, to look up to the blue sky of the Father's care, to see how character may stand foursquare amid the crash of the house of life, is full of instruction. Whilst words like these pour in silvery music around, the heart is enthralled, entranced; the imagination glows; the soul yearns to realise the perfected ideal. But no sooner have the accents of that voice ceased, than it sinks back into its former helplessness. To Peter, those words of Jesus must have seemed as far away, as rapturous, but as impossible to realise, as the strains of a Mozart or a Mendelssohn to a street arab sheltering for a few moments within the precincts of a minster. A warm and lovely dream, a conception of vivid colour, a noble inspiration, but both tones and voices alike, dying away as the sheen of sunset on the water.

It is a true witness. Teaching is not enough to transform men. We need something more than the law of a carnal commandment. It was not simply the speech of the greatest orator of the Greeks that stirred his fellow-countrymen against Philip, but the force, passion, and spirit of the man that throbbed in his words; and unless there is a link between us and the source of all power and life, the mere listening to words, though they be those of Christ, can never effect a lasting alteration.

To have been with Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration is not enough. Peter was there. He saw the Master's face shining like the sun, transformed by the radiance of a perfectly serene and holy nature, expressing and manifesting itself to the Father's eye, free from the restraining criticism of an unspiritual apostolate and an unsympathising world. It was a scene which he could never forget, but it did not permanently affect him.

Much has been said and written of the effect of companionship on character and countenance; that those who live together become alike. But the experience of Peter shows that companionship is not sufficient, and that the power of the Lord the Spirit is indispensable, if we shall bear the image of the heavenly. And this is confirmed by the glowing words of Paul:—"Beholding the glory of the Lord, we are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord."

It is to be remembered that some of Peter's most egregious lapses occurred after that radiant light had faded back from the Master's face. The story of the Transfiguration is contained in Matt. xvii.; but in xviii., Peter grudges forgiveness; in xix., he begins to bargain for the rewards of the kingdom; in xx., he is bitter against the aspirants for the chief places in the Kingdom. On the way to the Last Supper, he disputes as to right of priority; at the Supper, he withdraws his feet from the Master's hand; after it, he boasts his faithfulness, sleeps in the Garden, and denies his Lord. To make the son of a timid dove (Bar-Jona) into a man of stone-like strength, something more is required than to stand with his Lord on the Transfiguration Mount.

It is not enough to have been with Jesus in the Garden or beneath the Cross. Peter had been admitted to the inner circle in Gethsemane, he was one of the favoured three, who, passing through the entrance, were within earshot of the Master's cries. To him, three times, the Master came, wearied with treading the winepress alone, yearning for sympathy and fellowship. Peter saw that marred face, heard those words of expostulation, and knew something of the anguish that pressed out the blood-sweat on the beloved brow. If anything should have changed him, surely that ought. But it only availed to inspire a random sword-stroke, to lead him in the wake of the arresting band; and then its power evaporated, and, with oaths and curses, he denied the Lord who was about to redeem him.

The sufferings of our Redeemer on our behalf may excite our natural feelings, tears will flow, compassion like that of the women who followed his cross will make us tender, anger against his cruel foes will make us burn; but unless there is something more than this, we shall drop back into the lethargic, anæmic, vacillating experience, which has characterised our past.

We need something more, and we may have it. Evidently Peter and his fellow-disciples had it. Nothing else can account for the marvellous change which came over them within a fortnight of their Master's ascension. The event which foreboded utter paralysis and collapse became the inauguration of a change greater than that wrought in the world by the substitution of steam-power for manual labour. Had they grudged forgiveness to these heathen? Now the burden of their message is abundant pardon for their persecutors. Had they bargained for what they might receive? Now they were only eager to give. Had they quarrelled for the best places in the Kingdom? Now each longed to take the lowliest place. Had they cringed before the strong hand of the Sanhedrim? Now they were utterly indifferent to the worst that it could say or do: "This is the stone which was set at nought by you builders....We cannot but speak."

May we not put such words as these into Peter's mouth? "I can hardly explain how the great change passed over me, but as I look back on it, it seems as though my point of view suddenly altered. Up to the Day of Pentecost I had always thought of circumstances and events as they concerned myself, but from that day I viewed them as they affected the Lord. This filled me with holy indignation as I faced his betrayers and murderers, and compelled me to charge home on them his death. Then, also, I was conscious of living in another sphere to that of my former ordinary experience. Whether in the body, or out of it, I cannot tell, but I seemed to be standing beside the eternal throne, and as the full contrast between the treatment accorded to the Master there and here broke upon me, I could not refrain from declaring it. It is not boasting to say that I seemed to be reading out the verdict of Eternity on Time, of God on the murderers of Jesus. So impressed was I with the unseen world that opened on my gaze, that I gave little thought to the rising anger of the Sanhedrim; they seemed like a mist of shadowy forms, thin and far away, whose presence was as powerless to arrest my words as dust to turn the balance of the scale."

Thus far, Peter. But what was it that wrought a transformation within him and his fellow-disciples, which had not been affected even by being with the Lord during his earthly ministry? The secret is unfolded in the verses which tell how the church received the tidings of the outbreak of Jewish hatred and persecution. When they had prayed, the place was shaken wherein they were gathered together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the Word of God with boldness.

We need to go no further in our quest. Thrice in the four opening chapters of this book, Peter is said to have been filled with the Holy Spirit; and on each occasion he spoke with unflinching courage as a man who was possessed by the fearless spirit of an Elijah or a John the Baptist. He was filled at Pentecost, and told the crowds they had crucified their Messiah; he was filled in the presence of the Sanhedrim, and told them that they had set at nought God's chief Corner-stone; he was again filled, with the rest, in the chamber where they were all assembled, and spake with boldness. When a man is filled with God, he has no fear of man. By God he runs through a troop, by his God he leaps over a wall. The Spirit of the living Saviour renders him indifferent to the suggestions of prudence or cowardice. He is no longer shackled by the law of a carnal commandment, but possessed by the power of an indissoluble life.

Hast thou been filled? Or, having been filled once, wilt thou not seek a re-filling, a fresh charging with God's power, a new baptism into the Divine Spirit? It will conduct thee into fellowship with Christ's sufferings and death, but it will also impart the power of his resurrection; and like the pulse, which answers to the thrill of power from the heart, so shalt thou answer to the powerful impulses of the glorified Saviour.

Progress in Uganda.

BISHOP TUCKER made (according to The Record) an interesting statement to the C.M.S. committee on Tuesday week. The progress in Uganda was peculiarly hopeful. When he first went out there was but one church in Uganda, now there are 320. In that year there were but twenty or thirty native teachers, now there are about 800. Some 22,000 people are reading an elementary text-book called "The Book of the Law"; 20,000 are far enough to read the Gospel; many thousands more use both. There are 8000 persons under daily instruction, and 2500 communicants. The ladies had been devoting themselves to a study of the language, but had already been granted access to the women within the enclosures of the King, of the Queen mother, and of the late King's tomb.

Subscribers to the Stanley Steamer Fund will learn with satisfaction that the Ruvenzori was, when Bishop Tucker left Africa, nearly completed on the Lake. It was expected that it would meet the new party of ladies on their reaching the shores of the Victoria Nyanza, and take them on to Uganda, thus saving them a fortnight's journey by land. The railway from the coast was going on well, and it was understood that the ladies had travelled some fourteen miles up country by train. It promised to be a substantial work, and one of the very highest value to the missionary cause. Bishop Tucker is able to speak thankfully of progress on the coast. There is now encouragement in the way in which mission work is regarded by Arabs and Swahilis.

Leicester.—The good and useful work going on in the Bedford-street Ragged School Mission has for some time called for more space. At the anniversary meetings, held last week, a new extension was opened, which will greatly facilitate the operations. Indications appeared of much success in the past year. Sympathetic addresses were given by Councillor Faire, Mr. and Mrs. Rolleston, Alderman Sawday, Mr. John Kirk, and Mr. H. Lawrence hon. sec. of the mission.

Waitresses and Barmaids.—The work among this class continues to be maintained by Miss C. M. Gough at 14, Bedford-row, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. At a recent social occasion, attended by some ninety young women, Lady Battersea kindly provided the refreshments. Canon Wilberforce gave a much-appreciated address, in which he strongly appealed to his working sisters to conserve all that is good and noble in their lives, and to exercise great circumspection in their relations with the other sex. Some friends added to the evening's enjoyment by some performances on handbells.

Industrial Home for Boys, 119, Copenhagen-street, N.—The friends of this institution will be glad to know that the report of the educational inspector for this year is again most favourable, the passes being 100 per cent. Of the discipline and general tone of the school, the inspector writes: "Excellent; the order and attention were faultless." He adds "In consequence of the want of funds, the committee have not been able to take in the full complement of boys this year. This is a source of regret, for the work which is being done in the 'Home' deserves the liberal support of the Christian Church."

The General's Christmas Card.

By MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

GENERAL STRAUGHAN paced his large dining-room uneasily, holding in his hand a letter. He had read its contents several times, each time seeming more uncertain about the answer. He was a stern man, who loved no one, and had no one to love him.

"Martha, I want your advice. Read this," he said, as the old nurse came in answer to his ring.

She held the letter near the window and read:—

"God is calling me home. Must I leave your Albert's child to the cold world?" Without reading more, she said:—

"I should think not, when her grandfather can keep her. Don't I remember how poor Mr. Albert went away that snowy day, when you vowed vengeance on him for marrying that Christian woman instead of the rich heiress; and can't I see the last look he gave at his old home, as he started off to that foreign place? You will surely send for the lonely girl; she may be a blessing, and poor dear mistress's prayers be answered after all."

Once more he paced the floor, as Martha closed the door; that woman knew him well. She had nursed his boys, and brought them up, and only one had lived to manhood, and that one, having offended his father's pride, had been banished. Her words had weight, and the consequence was, a few weeks later, Faylene Straughan was on her way to the General's home.

The bitter wind was howling and hissing through the draughty station, where a change was to be made en route, as a gentle girl wrapped her cloak round her, and waited in the little waiting-room. So long it seemed and cold, but to keep from sleepiness she began to examine the contents of her satchel. She took out some papers, and among them a large card. It was one her father had painted as the motto of his life. Amid artistic clusters of flowers, the crimson letters stood out clearly, "Jesus only" (Mark ix. 8).

Sitting alone in the waiting-room, she remembered her mother saying to her, "Fay, dear, wherever you go the brightest sunshine of your life, and the best friend, will be 'Jesus only'"; and now she was going to one who had been unkind to her parents, one whom she dreaded to see. Putting away her treasures, she began to wonder what sort of Christmas it would be, and imagining all impossible things until a voice shouted, "Now, Missie, the train's due," and she was soon rushing along to her destination.

A shudder went through her at the contrast from the sunny South of France to the dreary district she was passing through, and her heart beat fast as she neared Cowley Hall. At the sight of the stern aristocratic man who met her at the door she was alarmed, and seeing the pleasant face before him, so like his Albert's, he was like to trembling. Martha burst into tears at the first look, and conducted her new charge up the broad staircase to the room her father had called his own once, and there she gave her a loving welcome, and hoped she would be a real Christmas blessing to the General, and wiping her eyes she said, as she went down, "And it may be so; who knows!"

Christmas eve was a busy day in the old house.

Old customs had to be kept up. The tenants had a dinner, the servants and gardeners had a party in the best kitchen. The rooms had to be decorated—not by loving fingers whose touch lends the charm, but by the page who had stuck the holly and mistletoe just in the particular places where it had always been.

A fortnight had gone, and already it was noticed there was a change in the master's manner, he was less severe, and more kindly to those about him.

He allowed Faylene to sing to him, and talk about the distant house and those she had loved. The snow was falling fast, and everything outside the house was covered deep, late in the afternoon the huge log burned brightly in the grate, and the General sat in his large chair, and his granddaughter came into the room. "Sit down, little Fay, and let us talk about Christmas. Supposing you felt ashamed of the Christmas times that are gone, what would you do?"

"I think I would try and make this one better, grandpa."

"Supposing all your relations and friends had gone, and there was no one to help you—what then?"

"There would always be someone. Father told me that," she said, shyly.

"Ah, little one, they told you strange things out in that foreign land. But now for to-morrow. How can we make it the best Christmas? I always let the people in my houses and the servants in my house enjoy it, but I hate such days, and you'll be dull."

"Mother told me to be bright, and make you happy, and give you a Christmas cheer. I'll try, and old Martha says God will do the rest."

"A pretty speech for one so young. Now draw the curtains, and I will tell you who is coming to-morrow. I sent invitations to the young folks of the three large houses, and you will have some fun. Martha said it must be so, and she always rules, somehow, poor old soul."

Fay was moving early,—it cost her an effort, but she wanted to give her grandfather that precious card, the one she valued so, she had no other gift. The merry bells rang out their Christmas peal, the trees beside the windows were heavy with the snow, and all was cold and still. In her hand she held the card; then, kneeling down, she laid it before the Lord and asked Him to bless it to her grandfather somehow that day, and then she made ready to go down and put the large envelope on his plate. I was the only gift he had, and he would need no other.

The evening came, the huge drawing-room was brilliantly lighted,—and gaily-dressed girls and boys with older friends arrived, and the usual silence was broken and the house rang with merriment. One and another suggested games and the fun went on. General Straughan, known for his pride and severity, was wondered at, that on such an occasion he could laugh and join at snap-dragon and blind man's buff; but the sunshine of a loving child was thawing the hard man's heart and preparing it for something more. He showed his Christmas card as Fay's thoughtful gift, and laid it on the table, and then the romps were started again, till a cry of fright gave alarm to all. Someone had ventured too near the fire, and the flimsy dress had touched the flame, and in tearing the lighted material off the fire caught on from one thing to another, and a panic seized the company. The gardeners, who were enjoying the party downstairs, rushed in, carried the frightened ones to another part of the house, and soon the room was cleared; but the fire seemed to defy extinction. For awhile the General was in terror lest the flames should go beyond the room. Treasured relics were destroyed, even pictures spoiled, and by the time water had conquered fire the beautiful room was a wreck, and all the expensive things had perished. The company dispersed. Two girls were slightly injured. Faylene sat with Martha in her little room after the fright was over.

The General had worked hard to save his goods, and, distressed at his loss, he returned to the smoky, blackened room. "All ruined," he said, looking round on the desolation, "everything is spoiled; a fine outcome of Fay's Christmas party," and he sighed at the pitiful scene, when, down among the burnt books he noticed something bright. Picking it up he saw the two words, and they seemed clearer than ever, "Jesus only," though the flowers on the card were smeared out by the smoke and wet.

Late that night, Fay thanked God for a happy day, and for safety from the fire, and asked Him to make the words keep with grandfather even if the card was gone.

The fright had driven sleep from the General, but One who alone gives real gladness—was near, as the answerer of prayer. Turn his thoughts as he would, the red letters seemed before his eyes, and many times in the night he looked at the spoiled card.

In the morning he was tired and only cared to rest in his chair, but he wanted Fay. Fresh from speaking to Jesus, the happy girl went to the dining-room.

"What can I get you, grandpa?"

"You have given me more than enough at present, child. Those words—they follow me, they speak to me. Tell me, did they give your father and mother any comfort at Christmas far away? What did they say?"

The blue eyes sparkled, and a glad flush came to her cheeks. "They said if all the world was unkind, and everything seemed dark, they would be happy if they saw Jesus only—like the men in the Bible—when the cloud passed away and no one was near. They were glad and safe with Jesus only, and mother said I should be."

"But what if you see Him—feel Him looking right into your heart and seeing all; yes, all, Fay!"

"I would speak and say, 'Please forgive at Christmas time.'"

Fay went to see how her little friends were after the fire, and her grandfather did speak and say "Forgive..." The name of General Straughan was no longer disliked. During the following months he became a different man, and Fay was like a child at home.

"It isn't like the same house, my dearie," said Martha one day; "and Mr. Albert must know about it. Everybody who has to do with your grandfather sees the change; he's a happy man. God bless you for bringing such a blessing, for I say it's all to do with the General's Christmas card,"

"Jesus only."

Gospel Work in Walworth.

THE new building of the Richmond-street Ragged School was opened on December 15 by the Princess Christian. Mr. J. T. Dunn commenced the Ragged School in a small room in 1858, and for a time it was carried on in a disused cowshed, and at another time in a room over a rag and bone shop. Other agencies were soon added to the school, and Mr. Spurgeon lent his aid in putting up a new school building. The work has so extended that there are now many agencies, and over 100 voluntary workers engaged in the service. The Sunday-schools contain 1300 children, while there is a large attendance at the adult services.

After the Princess had declared the building open, Mr. F. A. Bevan said that some thought that the days of ragged-schools were over, but when they looked at the streets around that building they saw that there was plenty of room for such work. Mr. James Bailey, M.P., and Rev. A. W. Jephson, vicar of St. John's, Walworth, also testified to the great need which existed among the children. The acquisition of the land, the new building, and alterations to the old building, have involved an expenditure of nearly £3000; and, being pledged to open the new hall free of debt, the committee saw themselves within about £400 of the goal on the day of opening.

Children at Southport. Successful work is carried on amongst the children in one of the poorest districts of this town. Sunday and week-day services are held, whilst a girls' sewing club is satisfactorily conducted every week. The crowded gathering of little ones feel the want of a greater number of hymn books. Some may be moved to send a Christmas gift of 150 "Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos" to aid forward the usefulness of our services.

"HE MAKETH WARS TO CEASE."—Psa. xlv. 9.

"MY soul is among lions, and I dwell among those that are set on fire: even the sons of men, whose words are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword." Such is the frequent confession of the child of God. Hemmed in by foes, the butt of vehement hate! But the moment comes at length when God arises to deliver. He utters his voice—the earth melts. In the night the enemy has wrapped up his tents and stolen silently away. War has ceased, and all the land of life lies plain and open.

God makes the wars of the outward life cease, so that as life's afternoon comes the man who had fought his way through overwhelming odds—as a reformer, or inventor, or philanthropist—spends his years amid troops of friends and loving recognition.

God makes the wars of the home cease, so that the disturbing elements cease, or are transmuted by invincible patience and love.

God makes the wars of the heart cease, so that Satan no longer annoys. The storm dies down, and the river which makes glad the city of God purls quietly through the soul. Sennacherib and his vast array lie as the leaves of autumn, silent in the last sleep.

If as yet God has not made your wars to cease, it is because He knows that you have still strength to fight on. Do not faint in the day of battle. Ponder those great words of Cromwell: "Call not your burden sad or heavy, for if your Heavenly Father sent it (or permitted it) He intended it to be neither." It is through the fight that you are winning experience, strength, the approval of your Captain, and the crown.

Some glad day, in the great world of men, God will make war to cease. Weapons will be turned into implements of husbandry, and schools of war into Temples of Peace. The Lord hasten that day!

"HE SHALL CHOOSE OUR INHERITANCE FOR US."—Psa. xlvii. 4.

"Choose for us, our Father." We say it deliberately. If He were to give us our choice at this moment; though there is no one of us that does not cherish a secret longing too deep for words, we would put it back into his hand and say, "Thou knowest better than words can tell Thee what lies closest to our soul, but we dare not take the opportunity of snatching at it; Thou wilt give it or its equivalent in the sweetest form and at the most opportune hour." Would not this be the wisest attitude for any one of us to assume, believing, as we do, that our Father's wisdom is only outshone by his love?

Wilt thou, O, soul of man, standing at the foot of the Hill of God, ask thy Father to choose the track? He knows thy strength and powers of endurance; He knows also thy ardent yearning for the best. Subordinate thy choice to his in all things. Then, whatever the difficulties may prove to be, dare to believe that they are less than what would have opposed thee hadst thou chosen the route for thyself. Never look back; never doubt thy Father's personal interest; the clouds that sweep darkly over thy path may hide Him from thee, but not thee from Him.

And thou, who hast had much experience of God, wilt thou not still say, He shall choose? Thou canst not repent the trust which thou reposedst years ago in his selection. Thou wilt not withdraw thy confidence. For ever more, whatever life may bring here or hereafter, we will cry, He shall choose, He shall choose. Yes,

"Thro' life, thro' sorrow, and thro' sinning,
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed;
Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning,
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ."

"TRAVERSE HER PALACES."—Psa. xlviii. 13 (R.V.).

The pious Jew broke into exclamations as he considered the beloved city of his fathers. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth. In proud confidence he challenged the world of men to walk about Zion, count her towers, and mark her bulwarks. Finally they were to traverse her palaces. But what Jerusalem was to the Jews God's loving kindness is to us, as we think of it, in the midst of his temple. Let us consider its beauty and joy, its strength and glory. "How great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty!"

Traverse the rooms in the Palace of God's love. That council-chamber of the eternal foreknowledge where we were chosen in Christ. This suite of apartments, which began with the unrobing-room of Bethlehem, and ended with the golden stairway of Olivet. Those mansions of the Home-land which He is preparing for them that love Him. That pavilion whither He will lead his bride where He comes to take her to Himself. Then look onwards to the new heaven and the new earth, where God shall spread his tabernacle over his people, and all our loftiest ideals will be realised for evermore.

Life is a traversing of the successive rooms of the Palace of Love. They are not alike; each has its own beauty; each leads to something better; in each God is All. Some seem to pass through the rooms veiled or blind; others miss seeing the King. But those who dare to look for Him everywhere, find Him. Always our Christ for ever and ever, always our guide even unto death, and beyond. Always the present as the rose-bud to the rose, as the acorn to the oak, as the chrysalis to the butterfly. We know not what we shall be, but we know that He shall appear and we shall be like Him.

"WHEREFORE SHOULD I FEAR IN THE DAYS OF EVIL?"—Psa. xlix. 5.

Have I not God? At sundry times and in divers manners, He spake to, and succoured his saints. Will He not come to me, and cast around me the soft mantle of his protecting love? And if I love Him, do I need any beside?

"Who that one moment has the least desiered Him,
Dimly and faintly, hidden and afar,
Doth not despise all excellence beside Him,
Pleasures and powers that are not, and that are?"

Did not He walk with Enoch and then take him home, before the deluge came? Did He not shut Noah in, with his own hand, that there should be no jeopardy from the overflowing flood? Did He not assure Abram that He was his shield and exceeding great reward, quieting his fears against any possible combination of foes? Did He not preserve his servant Moses from the fury of Pharaoh and the murmurings of Israel? Was not Elijah hidden in the secret of his pavilion from the wrath of Ahab? Did He not send his angel to shut the lions' mouths that they might not hurt Daniel? Were not the coals of the burning fiery furnace as sweet and soft as forest glades to the feet of the three young confessors? Has God ever forsaken those that trusted Him? Has He ever given them over to the will of their enemies? Wherefore, then, should I fear in the day of evil? I may be standing on the deck, whilst the ship is beset by icebergs and jagged splintered rocks; the fog drapes everything, as the way slowly opens through this archipelago of peril, but God is at the helm—why should I fear?

"OUR GOD SHALL COME."—Psa. l. 3.

The years pass as snow-flakes on the river, and as each drops into the mighty past, it cries, God will come. Each Advent season, with its cluster of services, herald-voices, reminiscences and anticipations, lifts the message clear above the turmoil and tumult of mankind, God will come. The disappointments of our fairest hopes, the overcasting of our sunrises, the failures of our politicians, statesmen, and counsellors, to effect a permanent and radical improvement of man's nature, all take up the word, Our God shall come.

"Surely He cometh, and a thousand voices
Call to the saints and to the deaf and dumb;
Surely He cometh, and the earth rejoices,
Glad in his coming, who hath sworn, I come."

Dear heart, get thee often to thine oriel window, and look out for the breaking of the day. Did not the Master assure us that He would soon return? Harken, He saith again to-day, "Surely I come quickly." The little while will soon be over, and

He will come first to receive his saints to Himself, and afterwards to come with them to the earth. Why are we disconsolate and dismayed? The perplexities of the Eastern problem, the gradual return of the Jews to Palestine, the despair and lawlessness of men, the unrest of nations, the preparedness on the part of the Church, like so many minute guns at night, keep the heart awake. Oh let your eyes flash with the glow of thanksgiving! Be glad and strong, confident and calm. Let your loins be girded, and your lamps burning. Through heaven's spaces, you shall detect the Advent of your God, and when He comes He will break the silence of the ages with words of tenderest love.

"RENEW A STEADFAST SPIRIT WITHIN ME."—Psa. li. 10. (R.V.).

Perhaps that is our chiefest need: especially so as we gird up our loins for a new stretch of pilgrimage. We do not need nobler ideals. They flash over our souls. We read of Browning kissing, on each anniversary of his wedding, the steps by which his bride went to the marriage altar; and we vow to lift our wedded life higher. We read of the sweet spirit, who had carved over her porch the words, "Ut migraturus habita" (Live as one about to emigrate); and we vow to cultivate more of the pilgrim detachedness. We recall the motto written on Green the historian's grave at Mentone, "He died learning," and we vow that each day shall see some lesson learnt from the great store of Truth. We read those noble words of W. C. Burns, "Oh, to have a martyr's heart, if not a martyr's crown," and we vow to give ourselves absolutely to witness and suffer for Jesus. But, alas! our ideals fade within a few hours, and the withered petals are all that remain. We need the steadfast spirit.

But this God can give us by his Holy Spirit. He can renew our will from day to day, and infuse into us his own unaltering, unalterable purpose. He can make possible, obedience to the Apostolic injunction, "Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Hear what comfortable words the Apostle Peter saith: "The God of all grace, who called you unto his eternal glory in Christ, after that ye have suffered a little while, shall Himself restore, stablish, and settle you." Then we shall move resolutely and unflinchingly onward; every difficulty shall yield before our patient perseverance; like Columbus, undaunted by discouragement, we shall cross unknown seas, till the scent of the land we seek is wafted across the brief intervening distance.

"I AM LIKE A GREEN OLIVE TREE IN THE HOUSE OF GOD."—Psa. lii. 8.

In its dress of evergreen, the olive is at all times a beautiful object. There is every reason why we should resemble it. But what a contrast between such and the wicked man, who loves evil rather than good, and trusts in his wealth rather than in God. There are three ways of becoming like a green olive tree, mentioned in this and the following verses:—

Trust in the mercy of God. To trust when the light has burnt to its socket in the house of life, and the heart is as lonely as Job's amid the wreck of his home. To believe that the mercy of God is not clear gone, nor his tender mercies have failed. To know that all is well, that seems most ill. This keeps the heart from withering.

Thanksgiving.—"I will give Thee thanks for ever." There is always something to thank God for. When someone condoled with the old slave woman, because she had only two teeth left, she replied quickly, "But I thank Him, honey, all the time, that they are opposite each other." Find out with Paul something to be happy about, even when arraigned before a judge, on trial for your life. "I think myself happy, King Agrippa."

Waiting on God.—Not always talking to Him or about Him, but waiting before Him, till the stream runs clear, and the cream rises to the top, and the mists part, and the soul regains its equilibrium. This keeps the soul calm and still. The name of God is good, a wholesome theme for meditation, because it includes his nature. To meditate on it is soul-quieting and elevating. Oh, troubled one, get away to some quiet spot and wait on God. Look away from the wind and waves to the face of Jesus. The Divine Name is written on those dear features. Is it not good? Yea, Heaven looks forth from those true, deep, tender eyes.

What Christmas Brings.

NO doubt the Christmas chimes of joy and gladness are already ringing in your ears, as the festive time has come round once more. Can you pause just a little while and think with me of some of the many things that Christmas brings?

Christmas Joys.—Why are the shops so gay, and books, toys, and presents displayed so temptingly to every passer-by, everyone trying to make everybody else happy, and bring joy and gladness into many hearts and homes? Listen to the angels' message on that Christmas morn more than 1800 years ago, when the world, full of sin and wickedness, was longing for the promised One to come, who should bring salvation, joy, and gladness—"Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii. 10, 11). "Great joy to all people;" do not forget that includes little people as well as the big ones, boys and girls as well as men and women. Our earthly Christmas joy will perhaps be soon over and forgotten; we sing "Fade, fade, each earthly joy"; but if you can sing also "Jesus is mine" you have a joy that is everlasting. Do you know anything about it?

Christmas Guests.—There is another happy thing about Christmas time. We look forward to meeting brothers and sisters, aunts, uncles, and cousins, perhaps. Houses are full of guests, and somehow we find room for them all. Do you, however, remember years ago there seemed no room for the Baby Guest in Bethlehem, and they "laid Him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn" (Luke xxvii)? No room for the One who had left his own bright home of joy to bring peace to this world of strife! Surely they did not know it was Jesus! Would you have made room for Him had you been there? "Oh, yes," you say, "He should have had my place"! But have you made room for Jesus yet in your heart? Is it with you—

Room for pleasure, room for business;
But for Christ, the crucified,
Not a place that He can enter,
In the heart for which He died?

Will you still keep Him knocking outside the door of your heart, where perhaps He has been waiting seven, eight, nine years, or even longer? Or will you say to-day—

Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus!
There is room in my heart for Thee;
Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus,
Thy cross is my only plea!

Christmas Gifts.—One of the many things that makes Christmas so bright is because it is a time of giving and receiving presents. On one's own birthday one almost feels selfish to be the only one to receive presents; but when we celebrate Jesus's birthday we have presents all round, except the poor little children who have no kind friends to give them gifts. A few years ago at Christmas time I watched two little girls gazing into a shop window, where dolls, tops, work-boxes, and all sorts of toys were gaily displayed. At last one said to the other, "Come along, what's the good of looking and longing?"

Poor little ones, looking could not satisfy them. God's gifts are for everybody who likes to receive them. His Christmas gift is Jesus (see John iii. 16), and with Him He freely gives us all things (Rom. viii. 32). Jesus gave Himself (Titus ii. 14), and came above all to bring peace (Luke ii. 14), the peace of sins forgiven. Earthly presents get broken and faded; heavenly gifts last for ever. Have you received them; and what have you given in exchange? You have nothing but a sin-stained heart to offer, and the life that He has given to you; but that is just what He wants (Ps. li. 17, 1 Cor. viii. 5, Rom. xii. 1). Shall He have it?

Christmas Fare.—Not only the toy-shops look bright at Christmas time, but the confectioners', the grocers', and the poulterers', and little folks look forward to the plum-puddings, mince-pies, ice-cakes, turkeys, and roast beef. We pity the poor children less fortunate than ourselves, and hope that even they have something for a Christmas dinner. Now in the midst of all these good provisions, please do not forget you have a soul that needs feeding too. Some of us perhaps belong to the Children's Scripture Union. Let us remember to enjoy our daily portion. Jesus has for us in his precious Word "a feast of fat things" (Isa. xxv. 6) free to all (Isa. lv. 1, 2). Our bodies, that are kept alive by the food we eat, will some time die; but if we feed on Jesus, "the Bread of Life," our souls will live for ever (John vi. 47 51).

Now, I wish you the best of blessings, and a happy Christmas in the Saviour's love. NETA.

"I Don't Know God"

(Concluded.)

WE were one day startled to find Katie's bed empty, and still more astonished to see her in the day-room, dressed, and on a half-reclining chair, with a doll on her lap, which she could not even handle.

The nurse, who was in the habit of explaining the imperfect words to me, was not there, and only a vacant look, and sounds which I could not understand, met my attempts to be understood. Then God gave me a thought from Himself, and I said,

"KATIE! YOU ARE A SINNER!"

The look on the poor girl's face was enough to show that her conscience had been reached, for with all the force she could command she stammered forth her reply, but still I could not catch the words. A second time the same words were poured forth, and then with a distinctness altogether new to me from her lips, the refusal was plain, and the tone likewise—

"I AIN'T—A SINNER!"

The friend who was with me, and who knew the girl better than I, also plainly caught the words, so I could confidently answer Katie, "God says that you are a sinner."

As the weak one listened to the line of a hymn—

"Twas for sinners Jesus died,

she seemed quietly to allow God to be true, and we left her, with that one thought—a sinner!

The next and last time I entered that sick ward, and sat down by Katie's bed, the first word she uttered as she looked at me was, "Dod," thus connecting my message with the blessed God. Telling her that Jesus was coming soon, I asked her—

"WHERE IS JESUS, KATIE?"

"Up ki!" was the quick response.

"And are you going up there with Him?"

"Es!" she replied gladly.

"He loved me, and gave Himself for me," rose in my heart, and slowly, word by word, dear Katie repeated this after me, till she knew the verse as much as could be expected of her. As I rose to go, and I lingered, thinking I might see her no more (as I was going away on the morrow), I once more repeated those beautiful words, but when I came to "Himself" she burst forth with the closing two, ere I could say them,—"For me." And with those faith-sounds on her lips, I said "Good-bye."

"I AM GOING TO GOD."

Such were the confident words, in broken accents, given by this helpless girl as the reason why she was "not afraid to die." The suffering inmates of the ward were greatly interested in Katie, and so was the nurse who watched her closing hours with thoughtful care.

Only some weeks before she had been ignorant of God, now she could say that she was going to Him. God had sent a messenger to tell this soul about Himself and his Son, and her astonishment had been great as she listened to the story of such wondrous love, and lamented that she did not "know God." Then, as the hour of death drew near, she needed no one to go over that sweet story again, for she had "known and believed the love that God hath to us."

It is with the desire that you may have this priceless gift that I tell you how simply even an ignorant, half-witted girl could receive this truth, without a doubt that it was intended for her.

So at sixteen this poor helpless girl passed from earth to heaven, and I expect to see Katie, not poor, deformed, and imbecile, as she was here, but all perfect and holy and bright in the glory of God.

There no stranger-God shall meet thee;

Stranger thou in courts above;

He who to his rest shall greet thee—

Greets thee with a well-known love.

Will you, my reader, be there to receive the Father's greeting, because cleansed by the precious blood? "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John i. 7.)

A Merry Christmas.

By MARK GUY PEARSE.

Thus a saint of old hath said,
 "For Thyself Thou hast us made,
 "For thine own.
 "Beats the heart all restlessly,
 "Till it rest, O God, in Thee,
 "Thee alone."

True indeed; and yet, forsooth,
 This is only half the truth,
 Not the whole.

Sons of God, and therefore brothers,
 We must find in serving others
 Rest of soul.

Thus the Lord Himself doth speak;

Twofold rest He bids us seek;
 He doth lift

To his shoulders, sore oppress,
 Our burden; and our rest
 Is his gift.

But remaineth yet a rest,
 Richer, fuller, and more blest;
 It is theirs

Who the yoke of service bear,
 Who the servant's lively wear,
 And the cares

Of the heavy-laden take
 On themselves, and for his sake;
 It is theirs.

Love to God is made a lie
 If it pass a brother by.

All in vain
 Clasp'd hands, and closed eyes,
 Blind to Lazarus who lies
 In his pain.

Lowly service wrought on earth
 Hath in heaven second birth.

"For," saith He,
 "Passing touch of kindness done
 To some needy little one,
 Is to Me."

Love that gives the life away
 Hath not Christmas for a day,
 But a year.

The right merry Christmas bliss
 Must be found alone in this—
 Others' cheer.

The Westminster Common Lodging-House Mission is a band of earnest workers who visit "women's lodging-houses" on Sunday afternoons, holding service in the kitchens, with the object of reclaiming young women and girls from lives of sin, and placing them into homes or restoring them to parents and friends. The work is richly blessed, and about 160 cases have been dealt with since the formation of the Mission in 1889. On Sunday evenings the "men's houses" are visited and services are held. The singing of Gospel songs by lady helpers, and the words of warning and hope to those who have sunk deep into sin and despair, seem to have a wondrous charm for the men. Both men and women are invited to the Mission Room, where they are dealt with and helped as far as practicable. We are greatly in need of funds to carry on this work, also gifts of clothing for men, women, and children will be of great value. These may be sent to the superintendent and treasurer, Mr. Gordon, 3, Prince's street, Westminster, S.W. W. PINCHES, Hon. Sec.

The Safety of the Church—"The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Men talk about the Church being "in danger." A more foolish cry was never raised. The Church is the most precious thing in the universe. It is "the Bride—the Lamb's wife." His love is towards it, and his omnipotent arm is ever around it. The Church on earth is as safe as the Church in heaven. Rev. Charles Garrett.

Working Men's Mission.

THIS interesting work which commenced nearly twenty years ago among the poor and destitute in the New Cut, South London, a district well known for its criminality and vice, is steadily plodding on. The precarious way in which the majority of the people get their living, increases the difficulty in dealing with them about eternal things. Men and women, hungry and on the verge of starvation, are very ready recipients of the Gospel, and, to "feed the hungry," is a necessity. Then comes the opportunity to tell them of the "Bread of Life."

Whilst on a visit recently we were deeply moved to sympathy in seeing such a crowd of miserable, ill-clad, hungry men, women, and children gathered to receive the soup and bread provided by the Mission. The superintendent, Mr. Thos. Young, says last year over 100,000 soup dinners were given to the hungry poor, and in each case it is well ascertained that they are needy.

The Town Hall of Woolwich was filled on Sunday night at a meeting to inaugurate the formation of the Woolwich United Temperance Council. Rev. John Wilson, president of the Council, occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Mr. C. Pinhorn, Mr. C. Parkinson, Mr. W. A. Pearce, and Mr. W. Ross.

Christmas Bells.

Joy! the Christmas bells are ringing,
 Hark! the happy angels sing,
 Tidings of great gladness bringing,
 To the shadowed earth they wing.

Joy! for unto all creation,
 Christ the Son of God is born!
 Hail! Desire of every nation,
 Hail, all hail! O festal morn.

Joy to Thee! O sweet babe closing
 Thy fringed lids on mother's breast!
 Infant Jesus soft reposing,
 To the virgin's heart was pressed.

Joy to thee! O fair child playing With thy glittering Christmas toys,
 Christ, aside His glory laying,
 Comes to share your Christmas joys.

Joy to you! whose favoured dwelling
 Rings with childhood's laughter gay:
 May the love that passeth telling
 Make it Christmas every day.

Joy to you! O sick, O weary;
 Joy to you! O worn, oppress;
 Joy to you! whose lot is dreary,
 Christ is born—your Joy, your Rest.

Joy, O joy to you who wander
 Lonely, who in sadness roam;
 Jesus born in Bethlehem yonder
 Comes to-day to be your Home.

Joy to you! in sin's dark prison,
 Christ has come to break your chains;
 In the East, Love's sun has risen,
 Lo! as King the Christ Child reigns.

Joy to all! O blessed story!
 Open are the joy-gates wide;
 Unto all, both young and hoary,
 Jesus bringeth Christmastide.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

With the joyous pealing of
 Christmas bells,
 With the raptured angel
 throng,
 We join once more in the glory-
 shout
 Of the earth's first Christmas song.

Let us come to Christ in the lowly place,
 Ourselves as an offering bring;
 And high on the throne of the ransomed soul
 Let us crown the King—the King!

By the light of Bethlehem's guiding star,
 Let us travel the narrow way,
 To the land of the never-setting
 sun,
 Where Christ is King to-day.

And still, while sorrow and sin surround,
 In the joy of his love abide;

For perhaps we shall wear the crown with Him
 Ere another Christmas tide.

A Return prepared for the Royal Commission shows that there are about 4450 clubs in the United Kingdom, an increase of 1900 since 1887.

Dr. Temple, Archbishop-designate of Canterbury, speaking at a meeting in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society at Canterbury last week, said that although, in view of his nomination to the Primacy, it would be incompatible with the duties which he had to render to the Church for him to retain the chairmanship of the C.E.T.S., as Archbishop of Canterbury he would become ex officio, with the Archbishop of York, a president of the Society, and he hoped in the future to be able to do even more effective work in the cause of temperance than he had hitherto done.

Admiral Henry Duncan Grant, C.B.

ON Sunday, November 8, ADMIRAL HENRY DUNCAN GRANT, C.B., passed peacefully away at his residence in Hampshire. Admiral Grant entered H.M. Navy at the age of twelve and a-half, and instead of passing his early years in a training ship, according to the present system, he was at once sent off to the River Plate and Pacific. It was six and a-half years before he again saw the shores of England. In 1854, after a short period of leave, he was, at the beginning of the Russian War, appointed to H.M.S. Royal George.

On the close of the Russian War he was appointed to H.M.S. Pearl for service on the Pacific and China station, but on the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny the Pearl was ordered to India, where a naval brigade was formed from among her ship's company, under the command of Captain, now Admiral Sir Edward Sotheby, K.C.B. Throughout the awful scenes of that terrible time, the privations and forced marches, Lieut. Grant had his Master always before him. With an absolute trust in God, he did his duty throughout that awful time, and the value of his services was recognised by his superior officers in despatches and gazettes.

After an absence of three and a-half years the Pearl returned to England, and Commander Grant went to Portsmouth and studied steam, taking a first-class certificate. In 1859 he married Agnes, daughter of Commander W. V. Lee, R.N., and remained on half-pay till May, 1861, when he was appointed to the command of the gunboat Steady, stationed in the N. America and W. Indies waters. In November, 1864, he was given the command of the sloop Rosario. After serving in South America till 1864, he returned to England, when he was promoted to the rank of captain at the age of thirty, and after an interval of six years was given the command of H.M. troopship Serapis, at which time he first came in contact with that great work and blessing that Miss Weston has so long been faithfully performing amongst our sailors. The work cannot be spoken of in terms of greater eulogy than we find in his journals. Captain Grant successively commanded the Triumph in the Channel Squadron, and the Aurora, Narcissus, and Hercules in the Clyde district as chief officer of the coastguard station of the West of Scotland. While on half-pay he held the post of naval aide-de-camp to the Queen, and was employed on Admiralty committees. He gained flag rank in 1881, was appointed superintendent of Devonport Dockyard in 1885, became vice-admiral in 1888, and admiral in 1892.

Throughout his career he took a deep interest in missionary effort in every part of the world whither the naval service or private business took him, an interest stirred primarily during his period of service in India. Later, when in command of the West of Scotland coastguard, he organised important temperance movements, and was for a long time associated with Miss Weston in her work among the sailors of the Royal Navy. During the period when his flag was hoisted as Admiral-Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, he founded the Y.M.C.A. in that town, and warmly supported Miss Weston in every plan for the welfare of the Navy. He was always ready with sympathy and assistance for schemes on behalf of seamen both of the Navy and mercantile marine. When in South America he became ardently interested in the South American Missionary Society, and when in Barbadoes founded a branch of the Y.M.C.A. During his residence in London his sympathies were enlisted on behalf of the mercantile marine, and he supported many societies having for object the elevation and assistance of that class. His interest was, however, not exclusively devoted to seamen, as is proved by his connection with the Railway Mission, many of the public servants on the different lines having found in him a warm and helpful friend.

His name is in the list of "Foundation" members of the Victoria Institute, founded "to investigate the most important questions of philosophy and science, but more especially those that bear upon the great truths revealed in Holy Scripture," and he took much interest in the proceedings.

(From Photograph by Mr. John Hawke, 8, George-street, Plymouth.)

Admiral Grant had for some time been in failing health. Last year he was ordered to winter abroad, and after a voyage of four months in the West Indies he returned, apparently greatly improved. During the summer he resumed his work, but the improvement was deceptive, and in the autumn grave symptoms again set in, though it was hoped even then that a trip to the Mediterranean would have the effect of restoring him to sound health. That hope was, however, not to be realised.

In a Japanese Town.—Nikko always reminds me of Paul's description of Athens, a place wholly given to idolatry. Temples are everywhere. There are three, two Shinto and one Buddhist, just opposite my window. One day, we had a festival in honour of the God of Health and the road right up to our open front windows was crowded. It was a capital chance to distribute tracts, and out of hundreds only one was found lying in the road afterwards. A fortnight later came the Feast of the Spirits, when for three days the dead are supposed to leave the place of their abode and revisit their tombs and former residences. No Christian church is yet planted there, though the children will come to our houses to sing and listen to teaching, but they are all afraid of the priests and also, I fear, the influence of the foreign tourists is not favourable to Christianity.

Anxiety in Madagascar.

IN a recent letter from Ambohimanga, Madagascar, Mrs. Peill says: "We have passed through trying times, but, through God's mercy, have been enabled to remain at our station. How many a time, in former days, have I blessed the memory of my dear mother for the pains she took to make us thoroughly acquainted with the Word of God. Now, my gratitude goes out to her for the pains she took that her children should learn French well, and speak it fluently. After twenty-five years her work has borne fruit in lives saved, captives delivered, and best of all, in souls brought to Christ through the use of that tongue which she so successfully laboured to unloose. Only to-day, by writing a letter in French to the commanding officer of our district, I had obtained the release of six women and two little children, prisoners taken by the French military from rebels who had previously carried them off."

"We are very thankful that we have been enabled to stay in our district during these troublous times, and to be a strength and comfort to our native friends, which means the whole of the well-disposed population of the district. Nevertheless, it has been most distressing to see village after village go over to the rebels, who are the upholders of heathenism against Christianity, to see the churches burnt and the native pastors and teachers murdered, or hunted so as only to escape with their lives. Out of forty-six churches under my husband's care, over thirty have been destroyed by the heathen insurgents, and it is most grievous to see the desolate and abandoned villages and blackened ruins of the neat little chapels that used to adorn them."

"There are five military posts now in the district, two of white soldiers and three of black. In both the posts of white soldiers I have distributed tracts and Gospels, and here in Ambohimanga I invite the men to come down on Sunday afternoon by ones and twos. If God should prepare the way, I hope to have a meeting for the men who can be got together in the town, in or near the barracks. Two Sundays ago I did have a little meeting of men of a post three miles off. They were very serious, and joined in singing pieces from the 'Cantiques Populaires,' which I had brought with me. Somehow, it looks much more formidable to attempt the same thing at Ambohimanga. The heathen insurgents seem as active as ever. They have lately burnt down the mission sanatorium at Ambatovy, about three hours to the east of us, where all the mission families have from time to time enjoyed needed rest and change of air. Three days ago they set fire to the stable on our newly-acquired premises close to the L.M.S. schoolhouse. Their object was, no doubt, to burn down the school itself, but through the efforts of the caretakers this was happily prevented."

"A large building belonging to the Jesuit Mission was burnt at the same time. Mr. Peake's leper settlement was three times attacked and robbed, and the last time the wicked men managed to get hold of poor David, the pastor and patriarch of the settlement. With a knife held to his throat they compelled him to give up all the money in his care, and then insisted on his forswearing his faith in Christ. This he would not do, and so they tortured him to death, cutting off his hands and feet, his ears, etc., and heaping rags upon him they set fire to him. His is one of several martyrdoms for the name of Christ in this land during the past few months."

"M. Kruger, one of the French missionaries, left some months ago for Basutoland. The other M. Lauga, has for some weeks been in the southern province of Betsileo, visiting and encouraging the churches of our Mission and those of the Norwegians. His intercourse with these latter is necessarily chiefly in English. We hear that his addresses have done much good. Our L.M.S. educational work requires thorough revising in a French sense. There ought to be one or more French Protestant teachers in our higher educational establishments, and we ought to put French in the place of English in our schools here."

Religious Liberty in Saxony.

FOR some time past we have been enjoying comparative peace from the many petty persecutions we have had to endure from the side of the Lutheran Church. Lately, however, there has been a conference of the pastors and church officials, and one day was given to discussion over the perplexing question of "sects," with special reference to the little companies of despised Baptists in Saxony. These were denounced in no gentle language from the lips of one of the leading pastors here, who remarked that he had done his best to get the Government to put a stop to our meetings, but so far without avail. In the future it must at all costs be done.

Shortly afterwards we received an official document ordering us to take down, within three days, the tablets which are hanging up outside our hall, announcing it as the meeting place of the "Baptized Believers," or we should be fined £1. This, of course, we did not do. Pastor Mascher (the leader of the work in Dresden) was summoned to the police-court at the end of that time, and, after a long examination, was forbidden to use the terms "Baptized Believers," "Baptist," "Friedens Capelle," or "Sermon," which was equal to telling us not to exist at all. Pastor Mascher was summoned twice in one week over this, and again a third time because we had advertised our meetings in some of the daily papers. This we were also forbidden to do.

It is not only in Dresden that we have to suffer for conscience' sake. The missionary in Planitz has also a sad tale to tell. In the small village of Cainsdorf, not far from his church, a Sunday-school was opened to which some 100 children came; this was at once forbidden under penalty of a fine of 50s. Four times the police came and sent the children home, and now the work in this village is entirely closed, and our friends have had to pay the fine. Again in Hardmansdorf, another village in the same neighbourhood, where there is no Gospel work of any kind, one of the members of the little church at Planitz, invited a few others to meet together in his house to read the Bible and pray. Only three came, but this was at once found out, and the poor man was summoned to the police court and fined 25s. for reading the Bible and praying, and 7s. more for allowing 45 pfennig (about 5½d.) to be gathered towards the mission funds.

On October 31 of this year these same friends were spending the evening together, and not daring to read the Bible, etc., were reading some of our Christian periodicals, when the police came in, and, seizing the papers, remarked, "So you are having another meeting." The people said, "No; you see we are only reading these papers." A woman present said, "We have to go many miles to hear the Word of God, and now we may not even read a Christian paper in our own homes." She was told to be quiet and go to the State church if she wished to hear the Word of God; at home they had no business to speak of such things. Two children belonging to the family were sleeping on the sofa; this was made an excuse to complain that even children were allowed to be present at these meetings, and the little company was at once scattered.

After hearing all this, and having our own experience to add to it, we feel that it is time to take a bolder stand than ever against such tyranny. Pastor Mascher, after being summoned for the third time, has utterly refused to concede to one of the commands given as to our mode of work in Dresden. He stated openly in the court that our work will go on in the future exactly as it has done in the past, and that no attention will be given to any summons that does not come from a higher court. This has all been taken down in writing, and, with his signature, sent to the "Roll Department for Worship." This seems to be the only way in which to obtain a fair hearing in which to plead our cause.

We feel that more than this must be done, so Pastor Mascher, in conjunction with many other Christians in Saxony, is drawing up an appeal for freedom, to be sent in to the Parliament meeting next spring. Will not our friends in much-favoured England join us in prayer that God may incline the hearts of the rulers to hear our request? The people of Saxony are more than ever willing to hear and accept the message of salvation, and our different halls are often crowded with people who are anxious and longing to hear the plain Gospel. Yet the attempt is made by those who, at any rate, profess Christ's name to hinder the work. Although "persecuted," we are "not in despair," for we can and will trust the Lord for a time when Saxony will be free for all to worship God according to their conscience.

The Home of Industry.

THE last workers' meeting for the year was held on Wednesday week, when friends were glad to welcome Mr. William Merry, who arrived that afternoon from Stratford, Ont., and to hear from him a brief account of God's work in Canada. Mr. Huntington Stone gave an address on "Light," while Mr. D. J. Mills and another brother spoke of work in China.

The Occasional Paper issued by Miss Macpherson is a stirring record of faithful, earnest, happy service, both in the East-end and among the children rescued and sent to Canada. Special praise is rendered that the year has closed free of debt. Interesting details are given of the two parties sent out this year, and their reception and settlement beyond the sea.

As to the widows' class:—"Several of the old members have been gathered home; they have gone up higher to await that auspicious morn, when together we shall meet our Lord, who has never failed or forsaken them in the struggle to keep a roof over their heads, when strength became feeble and friends were few. One of them passed away in perfect peace last winter, just before the New Year. Taken ill on Christmas Day, her widowed daughter sent for a doctor. The doctor asked if she had any pain, 'No pain,' was the reply. 'It's the Lord calling me home. It's nice to have Christmas, but better to be in the arms of the Lord.'" On New Year's Day these aged widows hope to have their annual gathering, when many hearts will doubtless be made to rejoice by the welcome gifts of warm woollens and other things which loving hands have prepared for them.

BIRD FAIR AND COLPORTAGE.

The Sunday morning work in Bird Fair is recognised as of the utmost importance. Winter as well as summer Miss Macpherson and her helpers may be found testifying among dog-fanciers and sporting men of all kinds. "Nor are these devoted workers left without encouragement and signs following. Earnest attention is paid as the preachers tell out the story of the cross, often accompanied by a thrilling personal testimony of how they had been reared in a drunkard's home, not far from the spot where they stood, but had been saved by God's grace. One such recently told in burning words how the Lord had met with him under the arch as he listened to one after another, and how he crept away to hide the tears which every effort was fruitless to repress. Then he described the wondrous change which God had wrought in him, and his now bright home and happy wife and children, his old gambling companions meanwhile whispering that it was all true—they had known him in former days. Strange, yet true, men will stand and listen to the Gospel songs for a couple of hours. Well do the workers know that their singing is not in vain, for the favourite choruses will be re-echoed during the week in many a dock or city warehouse, such as

This is my story, this is my song,
Praising my Saviour all the day long.

"Still more strange! The workers for Bird Fair never fail; whether to play the organs, sing, preach, or distribute tracts."

The colporteur and his Bible barrow have circulated during the year 817 Bibles and 2326 Testaments, besides large numbers of books and tracts. The personal testimony borne to many of the roughest and most reckless class has been wonderfully used of God.

The labours of the Nurse and other lady visitors among the sick poor have been constantly maintained, proving remarkably valuable among the crowded and suffering poor of the narrow streets and byways of Bethnal Green.

The service among young working women and young men is most encouraging. The visits of the ladies to the factories are now gladly welcomed, and have been the means of the conversion of not a few, now bearing brave testimony under difficult circumstances in the noisy and rough workrooms.

"The Bible Flower workers continue to carry to the sick in the hospitals and infirmaries the much-valued bouquets of sweet flowers, with the little Gospel text attached. The supply has never failed, from the time of the early spring blossoms—the daffodil and primrose, till the late autumn, with its brightly coloured chrysanthemum. Each in its turn has brought cheer to some sick and lonely one, while the way was thus opened to speak God's message to the heart. This work is important, because during a season of enforced quiet and cessation from work, serious thoughts are often awakened in the mind of those who have previously been careless as to their soul's welfare. Their first thought is that they must try and lead a better life should God spare them, and they tell us they will henceforth do the best they can. During the past year our hearts have rejoiced over special blessing in one workhouse among the infirm women, who are never able to get out, and to whom the visits of the ladies, week after week, have continually been a bright ray of sunshine in the monotony of their life."

Miss Macpherson's address is The Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

Soldiers in Egypt.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow space for a few statements about our work in Alexandria at the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute? Since the mission held by Rev. George Grubb and Colonel Oldham in 1895 we have been enabled to carry on the work with a deeper consciousness of the one great purpose of all Christian work, and with a more intense longing for the salvation of souls. Shortly afterwards a £1000 legacy was left to the Institute. After paying off the debt of £400 and expending £200 on necessary repairs to the building, etc., the trustees reserved the remainder of the money for the annual expenses connected with the building; house furniture, insurance, etc. Whilst thus relieved of these expenses, we have to depend upon annual subscriptions and donations for the daily needs of the work. This has been an exceptionally expensive year, and we need £400 so that all deficits may be made up at the beginning of the New Year. Subscriptions are received by Miss Sheppard, Leggatts, Potters Bar, Herts., and contributions of articles for sales by Mrs. Ranger, 17, Fenchurch-street, London.

The past summer, which has been one of the most trying in our experience on account of the excessive heat and of the visitation of cholera, has been also one of the most blessed, God having graciously visited us and given us a revival amongst the soldiers of the Gloucester Regiment (28th). A short time after their arrival here some droppings of the shower began; a few were brought to Christ last Christmas, whilst some testify to great blessing received at the three days' convention held here in March by Rev. Evan Hopkins, Rev. F. Paynter, and Rev. W. Houghton.

Soon after the convention, when the cholera was at its height, and the town was "out of bounds" for the soldiers, a fortnight's mission was conducted by friends of the North Africa Mission at our branch institute at the camp. At the closing meeting many testified to the saving and keeping power of Christ. The close of the mission was not the close of the work, for it was found necessary to continue the daily meetings; since that time, with some slight intermission, some have been continually coming to the Saviour.—Yours sincerely,

HANNAH S. LAWRENCE.

The Lord's Prayer.

WE have received several more letters on the subject of the Lord Prayer, concerning which a correspondent recently made inquiry, with special reference to the clause, "Forgive...as we forgive." Our correspondent's question seems, in the minds of most of our readers, to have raised the question of the general object and application of the Prayer, and some who have written to us have overlooked the definite point in the original inquiry.

Among those who have written on the Prayer as a whole is a "K." (Stamford Hill), who asks:—"Are we, because of the misuse of the words (in their being hastily repeated by unthinking lips) to ignore this most wonderful and comprehensive Prayer, given to us from the mouth of God Himself? I believe we shall never fathom the depths, nor be able to cease using it, anywhere on this side of heaven's gates. I have for several years used it myself at least twice every day, as the foundation and framework on which all my prayer is built. God Himself has laid this foundation, and each Christian can fill in the smaller details according to his needs, as the Spirit shall instruct.

includes everything in outline that any praying one can require. One special reason why I believe this prayer ought to be the guide, both in public and in private prayer, is, that it teaches us to approach God in his own appointed way and order. I would ask the young to notice that in the seven portions into which the prayer is divided, not until the fifth portion are we taught to ask for self. This order is so important if we are to pray aright; it must be God first, and self last. We are so apt to rush into God's presence with, 'Oh, please give me this,' or 'Prosper me in that.' No; stand back, God must be first. We should not dare to rush into the Queen's presence with our petition without first doing her reverence."

One of the objections to the use of the Prayer has taken the form that it is for present blessings, and therefore was for Jews and not believers in the dispensation of the Spirit. An esteemed correspondent, "A. T." (Lewes), holds, on the contrary, that the fact that it is for present blessings marks it for use at the present time. He adds:—"There is one petition that calls for more especial comment. I fear that many whom Jesus loves, looking for their Lord's return in power, miss some of that blessing which might be received in this present time—'May thy kingdom come.' Jesus Christ our Lord is truly God; 'God over all blessed for ever' (Romans ix. 5). Jesus Christ is truly man, son of Mary, 'one Mediator...the Man Christ Jesus' (1 Tim. ii. 5). As God, 'the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever;' as man, single-minded, a pattern of all single-minded service (Matt. vi. 22). The Kingdom of the future must therefore be in perfect unity with the Divine nature; not merely having a likeness, but absolutely one, both future and present. If Christ be the Prince of Peace then, He is the Prince of Peace now; and Paul affirms that to be so in the present, 'The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but it is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.' I believe that the peaceable spirit of this kingdom is one of the choicest blessings that God can give his children in this day of unrest, covetousness (the root of war: James iv. 1), and jealousy. The Kingdom of God will be nearer in all its exceeding beauty when the truth that Christ is the Prince of Peace is not a mere tenet of a sect, but becomes the common possession of all who love Him."

Mr. E. A. RAWLENCE (Newlands, Salisbury) writes:—"I am unable to follow those brethren in Christ who hold that this gem of prayer does not pertain to us. It seems to me that they regard it from a wrong standpoint, as it is not a prayer of the Kingdom, but a prayer for the coming of the Kingdom, in which every member of the Body of Christ has an important interest. To say that it is only applicable to Kingdom days is as illogical as to say that a hungry man must not pray for a dinner because it is not dinner-time. When the Kingdom days have arrived, it will not be necessary to pray for them; the time of prayer will have passed, and it will then be time to join with the multitude in the way shouting as the King rides on in majesty, 'Hosanna! Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of Jehovah.'

"Again, analyse every sentence of this Prayer, and is there one sentiment which every true child of God does not or ought not to breathe at the throne of grace? Is it then that, whilst we plead these petitions in our own imperfect language, we must not breathe them in the heaven-taught sentences inspired by the King Himself? Nay, nay, but when ye pray say 'Our Father.' It is not to be our only prayer, but it is to be the one which is to accompany all prayer, with the special object of keeping the coming and Kingdom of our rejected Lord in view; and alas! how this has been lost sight of all through the dark ages when the devil by cunning device translated it into a dead language 'Pater noster,' so that to the many it was unintelligible! In my humble opinion, it is essentially

THE PRAYER OF THE CHURCH.

The invocation is to 'Our Father,' which is the privilege of the Church; 'but ye have received the Spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba, Father' (Rom. viii. 15; see also Gal. iii. 26. iv. 6, and 1 John iii. 2).

"Lastly, as to the clause, 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors,' it must not be overlooked that this prayer is the prayer of the son who has already been accepted and adopted, and therefore this petition has nothing to do with our standing in Christ, but with our position as children. 'Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed' (Jas. v. 16); or, as our Lord explained in the previous chapter, 'Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remember that thy brother hath aught against thee: leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift' (Matt. v. 23-24). This 'gift to the altar,' which God graciously allows us to offer, is not presented at the brazen altar of atonement, but at the golden altar of incense, and He will not accept this gift whilst we have an unforgiven grudge against our brother, and so we shall 'suffer loss' (1 Cor. iii. 18, etc.)."

"R. T." (Brignall Rectory), referring to Mr. Trench's letter, says: In section I. he throws fresh light upon the meaning and force of the several petitions, and in section II. he shows the wonderful result of the symmetrical analysis of the prayer. To all this might be fitly added some remarks of Dr. Moulton in his "Literary Study of the Bible." He says: "The great majority of those who repeat the Lord's Prayer in public, fail to bring out the full thought that underlies it. This prayer is almost always rendered as a succession of isolated clauses which may be represented thus: 'Our Father which art in heaven. Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.' But the true significance of these words is only seen when they are arranged so as to make an envelope figure:—

'Our Father which art in heaven:
Hallowed be thy name,
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,
In earth as it is in heaven.'

"In the former version the words 'In earth as it is in heaven' are attached only as to the petition, 'Thy will be done.' But it belongs to the envelope structure that all the parallel clauses are to be connected with the common opening and close. The meaning thus becomes: 'Hallowed be thy name in earth as it is in heaven, thy kingdom come in earth as it is in heaven, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.' It is something more than literary beauty that is gained by the change."

AMONG OTHER POINTS

are the following:—From Dr. BRODIE (Eastbourne), "Any individual believer in Christ can use the Lord's Prayer, but not a mixed congregation of believers and unbelievers." From "T. W. C." (Rushbrook, co. Cork): "Our Lord's commentary on the clause 'Forgive us' etc., is the solution of all difficulty: 'If ye then being evil, know how to give... how much more will your heavenly Father give,' etc. The word 'as,' in the A.V. is incorrect, besides being inapplicable; 'for' is the right meaning of the Greek, as will be understood by a thoughtful reader. Divine forgiveness far surpasses the human."

The remark of several correspondents that the Prayer is not for the present dispensation because not in the name of Christ, is thus met by T. DOUGLAS (Oadby, Leicester): "Surely a prayer which Christ taught his disciples, must be a prayer in the name of Jesus. God is our Father only in Christ, and therefore, by fullest implication, the Prayer begins with his name. God forgives only for Jesus' sake. The first petition asks that God may have his rightful place in the hearts and lives of those who pray, and this is possible only through the work of Christ. 'He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father.' The second is for the Kingdom, of which Jesus is the King until He has subdued all enemies under his feet, when it becomes the Kingdom of the Father. The third is that God's will may be done on earth, and is possible only through the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit in men's hearts, the Spirit given as the outflow of the work of Christ."

"Each of these petitions seems all-embracing, like that one of old with which the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, were ended. The prayer for bread covers all things connected with our daily callings, with gifts from those who have to those who have not—covers all ways and means by which in God's providence our daily food, bodily and spiritual, comes to us. 'Forgive us as we forgive' is about the most heart-searching of all petitions. 'Lead us not into temptation,' unless thou givest deliverance from the evil of the temptation; 'with the temptation provide a way of escape.'

THE PRAYER IS FULL OF JESUS, and perfect as its Author is perfect; and surely we may adopt the words of old, and exclaim, that 'never man prayed (or taught prayer) like this Man!'

Several correspondents have written to emphasise the view outlined in a recent issue, that the Prayer belonged to the dispensation of the Law and the Prophets, as distinguished from the Gospel dispensation. After maintaining this position, Mr. A. F. HARRIS (Neuilly-sur-Seine, France) writes: "Why should not all who feel helped by the prayer continue to use it? On the other hand, let those who feel that this prayer applies to a past dispensation, as shown by the nature of its petitions, seek to cultivate the spirit of forgiveness and dependence upon God which it inculcates, without binding themselves to repeat it constantly."

"M." asks to what past dispensation the Prayer belonged. It is contained in the discourse in which the Christ opened his ministry, supplanting the eye-for-an-eye and tooth-for-a-tooth dispensation, by his "I say unto you that ye resist not evil." If a Christian after Pentecost cannot forgive and pray for forgiveness, and one before Pentecost could do so, would not that argue that the previous dispensation was superior to the later? which, of course, no Christian would admit.

Mr. J. G. ROBERTSON (Cannes) offers two suggestions. I. The realisation of the blessedness of being forgiven may depend—as a consequence—on our pardoning our debtors—without that forgiveness itself being conditional. He who cannot forgive will find it hard (whether he be saint or sinner) to believe in a forgiving God. II. Whilst we must always be "ready to pardon," the forgiveness which also forgets seems to follow repentance or regret. See Acts iii. 19, "Repent, that your sins may be blotted out"; and Luke xvii. 3, 4, "If he repent, forgive him."

We have received several other letters, but they do not contribute much beyond what has now been given. One friend, "T. T. W." (Bristol), says that the Prayer "embraces all the instruction contained in Matt. vi. 5-15, and all the promises in Matt. vii. 7-11; and whoever obeys the command 'Learn of Me' (Matt. xi. 29), by resolutely taking his place at Christ's footstool and acknowledging Him as his only teacher, shall be guided aright."

Mission Work in Johannesburg.

STRENUOUS efforts are being put forth by the licensed victuallers and those interested in the consumption of alcoholic liquors to obtain modifications, or suspension of the operation, of the new law regulating the sale of intoxicants. When we see the lads of fourteen, and men of the different tribes in the compounds we visit, shouting, swearing, fighting, or rolling about in stupid oblivion, we wish the law were to be enforced at once. God grant we may have an honest attempt to apply it when it comes into force in January, 1897.

The more we see of work among these natives, the more are we convinced of the value and necessity of establishing schools in which they may be taught. We are convinced that the most permanent and satisfactory work can only be done with the aid of the school and a local habitation amongst the people. Let any preacher take aside a dozen of his native audience at one of the open-air meetings in the compounds, and cross-examine them upon what he has been saying, and he will be surprised to find how very little they remember, and what crude ideas they have of the meaning and import even of that little. We are further convinced that a knowledge of the customs, habits, superstitions and modes of thought of the natives is essential to a proper presentation of the truths of the Gospel to their minds. Too often the wholesale denunciation of all their observances and ceremonies as stupid and childish and unreasonable begets a hostility and opposition which shut the ear and the mind to all argument and persuasion.

We have received our magic lantern, which attracts the wild Shangaan, and presents the truths of Christianity to his mind through the eye and engraves them on his memory much more effectively than preaching would, even if it were possible to get him to come and listen.

The materials for our school at the Nigel Gold Mining Company's compound have gone forward. The carpenters left to-day, and Brother Allister, and Joshua, a trusted and devoted native evangelist, follow. The Nigel Company employs about twelve hundred natives, and there are many hundreds more in the adjacent mines, whom we also hope in some measure to reach.

In the Wolhuter Mine the compound manager, Mr. Hare, gives us every facility for evangelisation. There are over two thousand natives employed at this mine, located in five suites of buildings, each suite surrounding an open square and all adjoining one another—Basutos, Matchopis, Shangaans, Inyambaans, Pondos and Zulus. In these squares we gather them round the harmonium on Sunday afternoons, and tell them the old, old story. On Sunday evening and Wednesday evening we hold a service in one of the rooms, an empty oil-drum for a pulpit and a candle held in the hand for a light. The presence and power of the Great Enlightener have been very manifestly felt in these little gatherings, whose audiences vary from thirty to seventy in number. We are praying for the opening of a door granting permission to put up a school in this compound.

Our brother, Van Aken, who has for twelve months been evangelising in Mashonaland, is on his way down, on foot, to obey an urgent entreaty from his mother in Holland to come home and see her before she dies. It has been a very difficult matter for him to decide as to what his duty was under the circumstances. His heart and soul are wrapped up in his work. During all the fighting he has never left his post, but his mother's entreaties could not be resisted. He walked all the way from Victoria to Pietersburg, and is now facing the two-hundred-mile walk from Pietersburg to Johannesburg.

Our hearts have been cheered by the discovery in the Salisbury Mine here of an official, Mr. Carr, who has become the guardian of the interests and rights of the natives in that mine, and who has commenced evangelistic and educational work amongst them. He is working in conjunction with us, though not in any way supported by us. He is an open-hearted broad-minded member of the Church of England, who would have delighted the heart of the noble and zealous Dr. Callaway, late Bishop of Kaffraria. May God raise up many more such whole-souled missionary Bishops, who love souls more than shibboleths, and recognise the priesthood of every believer in Jesus the Christ. Frequently we hear the lament from professing Christian natives:—"We had no church, no missionary to teach us, the temptations were so strong, and so we went back." Is not the principal reason of this to be found in the teaching, which leads the soul to depend upon the class-meeting, the church, the minister, the emotions, rather than to point it to an indwelling Saviour? Some American Notes.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

CONSIDERABLE interest has been manifested of late in certain circles regarding the future of the Sunday-school. Things are not altogether in satisfactory shape as respects Sabbath-school instruction in America. As relates to the lesson leaves used, for one thing, many criticisms of the International Lessons are heard in many quarters, and about as many criticisms of the Blakeslee (or graded) lessons where these have been introduced. The grounds of dissatisfaction with the latter may be inferred in part from the following incident:—The teacher of one of the classes in a Sunday-school connected with a prominent Presbyterian Church was approached before the lesson instruction one morning by an assistant of the superintendent, who said: "The lesson to-day is intended to illustrate a phase of the historic preparations for the Gospel. Therefore, all mention of the name of Christ must carefully be excluded from the lesson to-day!" The lady thus addressed replied with feeling: "My scholars may some of them be in eternity before next Sunday, and how can I forbear telling them about Christ as a Saviour?"

But while the Blakeslee scheme of graded papers, written examinations, etc., may be rather too complicated for general use, though its advocates claim great advantages for the system where it is faithfully carried out, the International Lessons on the other hand are so fragmentary in treatment, jumping from one part of the Bible to another, giving a complete view of nothing, and half or quarter views of so many things, that many are inclined to regard them as far from supplying the perfect lesson schemes. It is probable that the ideal scheme of the future may be a combination of the best features of these two schemes, with some new features added, which last will include some adequate plan for memorisation of Scripture, a matter which is sadly neglected by the majority of scholars at present. At the most it is only the short "Golden Text" which is committed to memory week by week, and few of our modern pupils, it is to be feared, could, if called upon to do so, repeat a whole chapter of the Bible—as many of their parents who went to Sunday-school a generation ago almost inevitably learned to do.

But a more radical question still is beginning to be raised with regard to the whole theory and practice of the Sunday-school itself. It is not urged that there be no school on Sunday, or that some sort of a Bible school be not held in connection with the services of the churches, as some effort of the kind all agree is necessary. But as symptomatic of a growing suspicion of the Sunday-school as practically administered, may be quoted the opinions of two leading Congregational pastors, one of New York and the other of Brooklyn. The former asserts that through the length and breadth of the land to-day the sole qualification for a Sunday-school teacher is a favourable answer to the question, Is the person willing to teach? and adds that he would really prefer to have his own children remain at home than go and be taught as they are taught; while the latter, who has been very active in Sabbath-school work for upwards of 50 years, declared to a brother minister recently with regard to the whole present system of Sabbath-school instruction: "We have come to the end of this thing!" These are extreme statements, but where there is so much smoke there is apt to be at least a little fire; and it can be pretended by no one that the present system of religious instruction of the young is an ideal one, either as to extent or content. And it is interesting to note in this connection that the Rev. Dr. Stinson, formerly pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York (Dr. Wm. Taylor's old church), but now pastor of the Manhattan Congregational Church, recently founded up town in the same city, has, with the concurrence of his people, resolved on a strange sort of experiment. The whole problem of the religious instruction of the young on the Sabbath has been handed over to the distinguished Dr. Hervey, head of the Teachers' Normal College in New York, one of the leading educators of the country, who has received carte blanche to go ahead and see what he can do in the way of bringing the best principles of modern secular education to bear on the problem of religious instruction on Biblical lines. This substitute for the "Sunday-school" as popularly understood, or this adaptation of it, will as it develops be watched with great interest by many workers, as a very interesting experiment in the field of sacred pedagogics.

The echoes of the recent Sesquicentennial celebration at Princeton, New Jersey, when the College of old Nassau Hall assumed the yet prouder title of "University," are yet in the land. Britain was well represented there by the distinguished Dr. Dowden, of Dublin, whose lectures on English literature were the event of the week preceding the sesquicentennial proper; while Prof. Thomason, of Cambridge, quite captured his audience when (on one of the great days of the celebration) he replied on behalf of the European Universities, in witty and wise vein, to the addresses of welcome which had just been delivered. President Cleveland's patriotic speech at the same celebration, which was pitched on a high moral plane, and was in effect a challenge to University culture to emerge from its scholastic seclusion and engage in the solution in righteous fashion of the great problems of the day, awakened the greatest enthusiasm. And now that President Cleveland's administration is so near its close, it is pleasant to remember him by some of these noteworthy utterances of his later official term, which have left a very generally favourable impression on the American public. The majority of our people—as your Right Hon. James Bryce (whom we also claim as ours in a measure) has in effect remarked—can be trusted in the long run to do the sensible thing, and any truly broad-minded utterance by our public men is sure of sympathetic reception by multitudes of our countrymen.

Princeton University (which is thought by its friends to be entering now upon a new era of prosperity) is already one of the most important educational institutions of the land. Many confuse Princeton Seminary, with its very staunchly conservative type of theology, with Princeton University. In reality, the two institutions have no connection, while situated in the same town, and although the latter constitutes quite a feeder to the former. But the University while not sectarian in any sense has no affinities with agnosticism, much less positive infidelity, and stands (as one of its professors has lately put it) for a "theistic metaphysic." That is its "traditional philosophical attitude." This phrase Pres. Patton (one of the keenest metaphysicians in the country, and, by the way, born under the British flag in the Bermudas) quoted approvingly in his noted anniversary discourse on "Religion and the University." Such Christian universities are a need in America. We cannot afford to give our educational apparatus and systems over into the hands of men who may know many truths but who have no knowledge of the truth there where it is always purest, deepest, tenderest, sweetest—"in Jesus." May the day be far distant when the education of England and America shall be godless, and culture know nothing of the Cross!

Pariah Girls' Home.

THE Girls' Home, Chingleput District, South India, for Pariah girls, commenced about eighteen months ago, in view of the misery of Parchy life. We began in a very small way, and had some out-houses put in order to receive our first batch of little ones. Since then our numbers have grown, and at this time of great scarcity our income will not meet our necessary expenditure. Provisions are now at double the ordinary rates, and when there are twenty hungry little mouths to feed it makes a great difference, whether rice and raggi may be purchased cheaply or not. Moreover, our numbers have now quite outgrown our accommodation, and we are compelled to build, unless we would turn away some of Christ's little ones. We cannot do this, so we would ask those who care for children to help us.

Letters to the Editor.

THE CAUSES OF CHURCH DECLINE.

DEAR SIR,—Referring in your last issue to the causes of decline in church membership, Mr. Moody asks if "modern criticism" has anything to do with it. The same question has been on my mind much of late. Whether it be "cause and effect" or a mere coincidence, the fact remains that concurrently with the introduction of the "critical" position into the pulpit, church decline has been more than ever in evidence. Some lay it to the charge of the provision of "amusements" by the church, which is so much in vogue.

Concessions in both these directions have been made by the church "for the sake of the young people," and especially the young men, whose minds are said to be exercised on "critical" matters. Yet the lament that "we cannot hold the young men" comes quite as loudly from these churches. Evidently concession has neither gained accession nor cured secession.

Apart from, or in addition to, these causes I believe that the poverty of result is largely traceable to the comparative absence of Bible instruction and exposition in the average sermon of to-day. A text is given out, the Bible is then closed, and is scarcely referred to again, if indeed at all. The sermon may be good enough, its teaching unimpeachable, but unless it is backed up from Scripture it has little weight. It was "from the Scriptures" that Apollos, though himself an eloquent preacher, "mightily convinced" his hearers.—Yours faithfully,
A CHURCH MEMBER.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

SIR,—After an absence of nearly fifteen years I have had the privilege of twice visiting my old friends of the Salvation Army at Cradley Heath, in the Black Country. How well I remember my first visit, now so long ago—the strangeness of the place, its ignorance, debauchery and vice. Yet dog-fighters, pigeon-flyers and drunkards yielded in scores to the simple Gospel message proclaimed.

But the question that arose then was, How long will it last? I can answer to-day. Some of the men then converted are now witnessing for Christ in South Africa, Australia, North and South America, and in not a few cities in England, while a considerable number of these old-time converts still follow the flag at Cradley. Some have gone triumphantly into the presence of the King.

Only a short time back a brave woman lay dead in her poverty-stricken home. She and her whole family had been brought to Christ through the Army many years ago, the whole household enslaved to chainmaking. To me it was pitiful and well-nigh heartbreaking to think of the old woman—well nigh done to death by the hardness of her toil and the miserable pittance she received—lying under the white sheet placed over the remains by kindly hands. Within a few yards of her death-chamber her girls were at work—work almost too heavy for men, trying to sing to the music of the hammer and anvil, "There is sweet rest in heaven." Were it not for the Salvation Army work in their midst, their life in Cradley would be almost unendurable. But God, in his infinite love and mercy, has used the Salvation Army to bring the glad tidings of the Gospel, with its hope, and comfort, and peace, to these poor overworked and ignorant souls.

On a recent Sunday I had the privilege of spending the whole day with them, and what a privilege it was to find these enthusiastic lovers of our Lord feverishly anxious to tramp ankle deep through black mud while cold rain was falling, but their spirits not damped, singing followed by prayer and testimony.

Jesus, the Name high over all,

I had a cup of tea with one of the soldiers during the afternoon, and he told me he began his life's work at the age of seven! This is no uncommon tale. It is a story of all work and no play. He said that scores of times since reaching young manhood he had sat down on the kerbstones and wept like rain because of the miseries of his lot. All this has been changed since his conversion. He is still poor, and still works like a slave at chain-making; but he told me, with a face beaming with joy, that he realised Christ's presence "all the dim day long."

The collections for the day were for the sick and wounded officers, and these poor people, out of their extreme poverty, contributed £5 at the evening service, truly for them a magnificent sum.

Will your readers have fellowship in prayer with these obscure and humble, but sincere lovers of our Lord? I am free to confess that a few hours in their company has done more to lift me heavenward than the attendance at many conferences during the past few years.—Yours truly,
JAMES B. WOOKEY.

A LIVERPOOL CHURCH.

DEAR SIR,—I have thought it would be encouraging to our Christian workers to hear more of what the Lord is doing in different places. After visiting a suburb of Liverpool I felt it only right to say of a Presbyterian Church there, "What hath God wrought?" Great efforts are made sometimes, and much precious time wasted in planning and carrying out schemes to entertain and secure young people and others; but in the church to which I allude the keynote of everything is prayer, downright earnest, united prayer. The pastor holds the spiritual well-being of his people as a sacred trust, and draws out their confidence in his high desires to lead them into the presence of the King.

The consequence is—a flourishing cause—direct work for souls, much missionary fervour, and many coming forward to offer themselves for foreign service. The Christian Endeavour is strong, and the young people are made to feel the grandest object in life is to be something for Christ. A stranger going through that district of Waterloo, after attending the lively religious meetings which are always held, remarked, "If some of our churches knew of the prosperity that attends such zeal and prayer, they would thank God and take courage." See that where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty in Christian intercourse, and definite work for eternity.

Missionaries tell how, when out in far distant lands, they remember the weekly prayer-meeting held on their behalf, and they are cheered and helped, and send up a prayer for the church at home. May God give to our churches more of like devotion, and help us to "consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works; so much the more as we see the day approaching."—Yours faithfully,

RAY.

Rev. John McNeill.

BY A CORRESPONDENT.

A United Mission has been held in Preston for two weeks, conducted by Rev. John McNeill under the auspices of a representative committee embracing all the Evangelical Churches. Much preparatory work was done to make the Mission known.

On Sunday, December 6, the Mission opened in the Theatre Royal, seated for 2000. Hundreds failed to gain admission in the evening. Had the Public Hall been available, at least 4000 might have heard the message of the Gospel, red hot from the lips and heart of this mighty preacher. But although the public-houses are open on Sunday, this splendid public hall cannot be had for the simple preaching of the Gospel. Nevertheless, the fame of the earnest preacher soon spread throughout the town and during the second week from 3000 to 3500 rolled into the great hall every night. It was a magnificent sight and most inspiring to an earnest preacher. Many came from surrounding towns and districts—Blackburn, Chorley, Leyland, Southport, Lytham, Lancaster, Broughton, Barton, Bretherton, etc. The preacher was well supported at every meeting by clergymen, ministers, and prominent citizens, including ex-mayors and town councillors.

As the mission progressed the impression steadily deepened; and at the last three meetings much earnestness could be seen stamped on hundreds of faces. During the last two nights a large number held up their hands in token of having closed with Christ. During the mission some striking incidents came to light, showing how impressions made at other missions were bearing fruit. A young man in Calcutta, after hearing Mr. McNeill there, wrote to his father, stating that if ever the preacher was within fifty miles of him to be sure and go to hear him. The father came all the way from Ormskirk to the meetings, and felt, like the Queen of Sheba, that "the half had not been told" him. Reports are coming in from every hand of much definite blessing being received.

On the next to the closing night, as the preacher discoursed so powerfully and persuasively from Rev. xii. 17, there was a great rending of hearts. The Spirit was in very deed saying "Come" to many longing, yearning, burdened hearts; and that night there was great joy in heaven.

Mr. McNeill's methods are worthy of note. The short "after-meeting," which was one with the first meeting, gave all present an opportunity of coming to a decision. In every way the mission was an unqualified success, and the churches will be greatly revived.

Caledonian Christian Club.

THE ninth annual meeting of this institution was held in Bloomsbury Hall, Major A. K. MURRAY in the chair. He expressed pleasure in helping this excellent work. He was acquainted with its working from the beginning, and greatly valued its utility as a safe home for fresh arrivals in London.

Mr. ROBERT MORTON, one of the executive, gave a statement as to the reasons for not holding the meeting in the Club House, 48, Tavistock-square. A statement issued by the committee explains the matter:—

The auspicious opening of our new premises on July 20 was full of promise and helpfulness. Since then the work has gone on with leaps and bounds. The pressure for room is greater than ever. In four months seventy-five young men became temporary residents at the club, passed into situations and secured safe lodgings in London. Fifty others were on arrival, directly guided to good lodgings and otherwise helped in their new surroundings. Whilst we were thus rejoicing in coming nearer the goal of our desire—self-supporting Scottish Home in London—a sore and most unexpected trial has overtaken us. Some of the residents in Tavistock-square objecting to the reception department, as a breach of the square leases, have taken determined action to prohibit our having an open door and temporary residence for fresh arrivals. While firmly persuaded that no breach of the lease, as interpreted to us by our lease-landlord and our own solicitor, has taken place, yet in preference to permitting a prosecution at law entailing heavy expense, we choose rather to move elsewhere. Immediately on the first movement of this £100 came to us from a most unexpected quarter. Had we from £4000 to £5000 we would build a house worthy of Scotland and capable of receiving one hundred residents at a time, ensuring a fair return for the investment after paying expenses. We purpose, however, on no account to incur further debt.

The secretary, Mr. A. ROBERTSON, read a résumé of the report. Two hundred and ten young men during the year were resident members of the club; besides these, over 200 immediately on arrival were directed to certified good lodgings, and of all these not a dozen had failed in securing situations. There are social evenings by various church choirs, the private inquiry department for help in the search for the "lost in London," reading and recreation rooms, opportunities for quiet study and education, help to outcast countrymen, above all a Scottish Home, with its watchful care and help, where the influence of the family altar predominates.

Dr. MONRO GIBSON moved the adoption of the report in a speech full of glowing wit and kindness, Rev. C. R. L. ENGSTRÖM seconded.

Mr. HOWARD WILLIAMS moved a resolution commending the club to the earnest consideration of parents, employers and friends of young men, because of its care and helpfulness to such at a most critical time in the history of their lives. He personally had not visited the Club; his interest and information came entirely from the hundreds of young Scotsmen seeking situations who annually pass through his firm. He was struck with the many testimonies they gave in favour of the real value to them of the Club. He felt strongly that it was an ideal effort, needing greatly to be developed all over London. Rev. Dr. NIGEL MACNEIL asked to which among all the Scottish Associations in London, parents in Scotland could send their sons or daughters with such confidence, that their temporal, social and spiritual interests would be cared for, as to the Caledonian Christian Club.

A second resolution dealt with the C.C. Club, providing a practical link between the churches in Scotland and those of London. Mr. HUGHMAN warmly declared that the missing link in the work of their churches and Y.M.C.A.'s was established in the C.C. Club.

Mr. ROBERT MORTON moved a closing resolution, expressing warm sympathy with Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, and unabated confidence in their successful endeavours to promote the best interests of those coming under their influence. Mr. H. L. MILLAR cordially seconded.

The Indian Famine.

THROUGHOUT a very large part of North and South India the monsoons have failed. At the time when sowing and planting should have begun, the tanks were all dried up, and, in consequence, the water so urgently needed for irrigation purposes was entirely lacking. The large majority of the people live from hand to mouth at the best of times, earning only what is barely sufficient to supply their daily needs. They are now reduced to the utmost extremity. The price of grain of every kind has gone up to three times (in some cases to four times) its ordinary value. Those who are fortunate enough to possess a little store refuse to sell it because they dread having to face months of famine. Consequently, even those who have money find it exceedingly difficult to purchase food.

Government relief works have been started on a large scale in various places, but necessarily the wage is very small, and only the able-bodied can take part in the work. The homes of numbers in the vast districts are so far from relief works that it is impossible to go to them. The aged, the infirm, the children can take no part in the labour. Consequently, vast numbers are already reduced to the sorest straits. They have no grain, nor have they the prospect of any until the time for the next harvest, a year hence. They have no money, and they are unable to share in the advantage of the works which have been commenced. Our missionaries find themselves besieged daily by large numbers of the very poor, and by women and children. In some districts the schools are entirely emptied because the children are employed in gathering any scraps of wood or leaves or roots for family use. Before long it is to be feared that scarcity will have deepened into very serious famine, and that the disease which is always so near at hand in India in time of famine will sweep off thousands of the starved and weakened people.

In addition to the native workers, our missionaries have to maintain their orphanages and boarding schools, and they cannot turn a deaf ear to the appeals of the native Christian community. There is a strong feeling in the Telugu Mission, where the Christian community is largest, numbering several thousands, and where the poverty of the people is extreme, that help should not be given merely in the form of doles, but that some kind of useful work should be commenced in each village, such as digging new wells, clearing and deepening old ones, and the erection of buildings required for school purposes and purposes of worship. It is even possible that some permanent industry of a simple kind might with profit be started at this time which would materially help the people to better their position in the future. The first requirement is money to start the work and to give the relief. We shall be glad to receive any sums which may be entrusted to us for this special famine fund, and shall arrange for them to reach India as soon as possible.—Yours, etc.,

R. WARDLAW THOMPSON,
Foreign Secretary

The London Cabmen's Mission.

THE present strike amongst certain classes of cabmen lends special interest to the report of this Mission, and certainly does not lighten the labours of the superintendent. The various services are well attended, while the Sunday-school and other agencies are full of interest.

The great work of the Mission is, however, going from rank to rank visiting the men and distributing tracts and books, and speaking personal words of Gospel warning. Much kindly and valuable work is also done in the homes of the sick and dying. God has blessed these personal efforts in a very marked degree. The temperance meetings have also been very successful. The coming year being the silver wedding of the work, a special effort is being made to raise a "debt fund" to clear off the debt, some £502, now resting on the Mission. The superintendent is Mr. John Dupee, 165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.

Request for Prayer.—For a United Evangelistic Mission in York, to be held by Rev. John McNeill, Feb. 7 to 19, 1897.—For J. J. Scroggie's mission at Colchester, commencing on December 27. (1166)

Personalia.

Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken will give Bible readings daily at 11.30 a.m. in St Peter's Church, Islington, from Jan. 4 to 18 (inclusive), Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

Rev. R. Henry Dyke.—A friendly circular informs us that this well-known missionary at Lessouto, South Africa, is engaged to be married to Mdle. Aline Mabilie, a daughter of the lamented French missionary in Basutoland.

Dr. Joseph Cook.—This distinguished invalid is somewhat better, though still far from well. His old passion for reading still burns within him, and the fact that he has read no less than 100 books since the first of last July is evident that his intellectual faculties are still keen.

Mr. A. Y. Liley, who is now at home for rest, hopes shortly to return to his work in North Africa. Some friends, failing to observe the difference in initial and in description, have mistaken the Mr. A. P. Liley (mentioned in our issue for Dec. 10 as having fallen asleep) for this well-known missionary.

Mr. M. H. Mody, of Bombay, known to many of our readers, and whose wife, an English lady, died in November of last year, is himself lying very ill, suffering from rheumatic fever, at the Foreign Mission Club, 149, Highbury New Park, N. Our readers are earnestly requested to remember him in prayer.

Mr. Francis Murphy has recently recovered from illness and was welcomed at a grand reunion in Pittsburg, Pa., when some 3500 friends were present at a celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the "Murphy Movement" in the town. Many reformed men gave testimony, and Mr. Murphy himself was very happy and effective in his utterances.

Pastor A. G. Brown, after laying down his responsibility at the East London Tabernacle, thinks of going to China with his daughter Nellie, who returns to her post (where her husband died) in February. Afterwards, Mr. Brown hopes to visit America, preaching his way from one end of the country to another—"but not," he says, "with any view to settlement."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. B. Angel has been carrying on a series of missions at various places in Guernsey, concluding with a week's mission at the Y.M.C.A.

Heywood Mission.—Mr. Thos. Payne has conducted a ten days' mission in this hall, and many have come forward for salvation, restoration, and power for service. Mr. Payne goes to Ashton-under-Lyne from here, and then to the Stratford Conference Hall, London.

W. H. C.

Swindon.—Mr. John Burnham has been with us for a ten days' mission, in which we gratefully acknowledge the good hand of our God upon us. At our praise and testimony meeting several stood up and bore witness to having passed from death unto life, whilst Christians thanked God for reviving grace. One young man, a leader of a band of roughs, is a special trophy of the Holy Spirit's power in saving to the uttermost.

W. BROWN.

Barry Dock Mission.—A three weeks' special mission has been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Havlock Frame, who, night by night, have addressed deeply interested congregations. The wise, homely addresses of Mr. Frame and the sweet singing of his wife have been greatly blessed of God. The conversions, though they have not been numerous, have been of a decided character, and one feels in these days, when there is so much surface work, thankful for the solid work of the Holy Spirit on the hearts of the people. They are now holding a fortnight's mission at our Brynmawr Branch Mission, and we would ask the prayers of your readers.

GERALD COULTAS.

Irish Notes.

A SERIES of missionary addresses has been delivered in the parishes of Dunaghy, Killeegan, and Newtown-Crommelin by Rev. H. C. Townsend, curate of Ballymena, who is going out to the mission field under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Townsend's addresses were very earnest, and were calculated to deepen the interest in missionary work amongst those who heard them.

Rev. G. A. Lefroy, head of the Cambridge Mission at Delhi, delivered an able address last week in Dublin on our responsibilities as a nation with regard to India. He regretted much that Christianity was often paraded in such a false garb before the Hindoo. Drunkenness and immorality were rampant in a population one-third of which represented the ordinary British soldier. The caste and Zenana systems were also great obstacles to the spread of Christianity.

Obituary.

DR. ZIEMANN.

MANY readers will recollect the important services rendered by Dr. H. Ziemann during the time of the Manchester Cotton Famine, and in later years in connection with evangelistic work on the continent. For some time past he has been laid aside from active work, and on December 10 he passed away at Margate.

MISS M. A. MAYOR.

The death is announced of Miss Mayor, the sister of Professor Mayor, of Cambridge, the lady who took such a deep interest in Count Campello's work of Church Reform in Italy. She devoted herself with the utmost devotion to the cause, and, though of very delicate constitution, was its greatest friend and mainstay. Miss Mayor's death will be deeply lamented by a large circle of friends in England who admired her gentle character, as well as by the Italian reformers, who owe so much to her energies.

BISHOP KNIGHT-BRUCE.

The late Bishop of Mashonaland died on the 16th inst., at Bovey Tracey Vicarage, Newton Abbot, at the early age of forty-three. He was one of the young clergy drawn to East London by Bishop Walsham How. He resigned a Liverpool incumbency to work as an East London curate. Like Bishop Tucker, he was still a curate when the offer of a bishopric reached him. As Bishop of Bloemfontein, and then, on that diocese being divided, of Mashonaland, he won the respect both of Europeans and the natives. During the troubles with Lobengula he was particularly active. Since his return home, in 1894, he was appointed vicar of Bovey Tracey.

Temperance Notes.

A SUCCESSFUL temperance mission has been held at Shirley, near Southampton.

According to Canon Barker, a million meetings are held in this country every year on behalf of temperance, half of them in connection with the Bands of Hope.

There are now 2000 temperance organisations in London, and district United Councils are being formed to enable them to offer more effective resistance to the drink traffic.

Large and enthusiastic meetings have been held at Clapton Park Chapel, Hackney, and at Ponders End, in connection with the twenty-first anniversary of the Hackney and East Middlesex Band of Hope Union.

A very successful bazaar in aid of the funds of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, held at St. Bride's Institute, was opened by the president, Lady Elizabeth Biddulph. A large number of stalls had been arranged, and were piled up with a great variety of ornamental and useful articles, which had come from different branches of the union all over the country. Prettily-dressed dolls and all kinds of toys, dainty fancy work, lace, embroidery, plain needlework, baby clothes, and knitted articles, together made a very attractive display.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission has been held. A well-attended afternoon meeting in the Lord Mayor's Parlour was presided over by the Lady Mayoress. The honorary secretary, Mrs. Gamble, submitted a résumé of the work of the Society during the past twenty-one years. The membership now numbers over 2000. From the first, personal total abstinence was a condition of membership. To rescue girls from prison taint and give them a chance in life, police-court missions in Manchester and Salford were established. Last year, instead of being sent to the police cells, 150 women and girls in Manchester were taken charge of by this agency and situations or homes found for them, while in Salford, 158 had been so cared for. The Lady Mayoress expressed her gratification at the encouraging statements contained in the report. She herself was in hearty sympathy with the object of the Association and had been a teetotaler most of her life. In the evening there was a large gathering in the Association Hall, when the chair was taken by Mrs. Hind Smith, founder of the Association. Addresses in earnest commendation of the Association's work were given by Mrs. Hind Smith, Mrs. H. J. Wilson, Alderman M'Dougall, and Mr. James Whyte.

Humiliation and Prayer.—A series of special meetings for waiting upon God will be held at Exeter Hall, Strand, from 1 to 2 o'clock each day during the last week of 1896. Revs. Evan Hopkins, H. W. Webb-Peploe, F. B. Meyer, Mr. Edward Millard, Mr. W. R. Lane, and others will speak.

Before we can again communicate with our readers a new year will have dawned. To each and all of them we sincerely wish that every happiness may be granted throughout its course. What it may have in store for us individually, for our nation, and for the world, none can foretell; except that in proportion as our lives are animated and permeated by the Spirit of the Holy God, will our true happiness abound. There is plenty of racial and national unrest all over the globe. If every believer who has entered into the rest of conscious reconciliation with God, and of oneness with his purpose of grace through Jesus Christ, will strive to lead others into the same land of promise, the sum total of the world's happiness at the close of 1897 will have been wonderfully enlarged.

A retrospect of the year that is closing is not likely, so far as public affairs are concerned, to fill anyone with exhilaration. The best thing that can be said about it is that Europe has been saved from the horrors of war. Whether peace was well gained at the expense of the desolations of "murder, rapine, and lust," which have been steadily depopulating Armenia, it would be difficult to say. It is certain, at least, that the year 1896 will be a black spot in the history of nations, proving as it has done that the exigencies of diplomacy can still override every high consideration and duty of humanity in the very centre of Christendom. In home affairs, the country has been singularly stagnant, and the year closes in the lull between two bursts of sectarian conflict over the education question. There has been no outstanding event in the religious world, and the Churches, however active in their efforts, seem to be for the most part in the shallows. The need of the hour is a great wind from the hills of God, to freshen and vitalise human life and faith.

How to prepare for this, and fit ourselves for its coming, is the problem for us all. That nothing can avail but such a gift from on high, is quite clear when we consider that there has never been an age of greater religious activity, with by no means commensurate results. Conversions are few, enthusiasm runs low; vice and indifference are on the increase in our great centres. Unquestionably the first thing needful is to realise our utter dependence on other than human organisations for bettering the world; and the end is to wait with humiliation at the Throne of Grace for the renewal of faith and power. The life of the churches and of individual believers must become less strenuous and more devotional. The machinery of religion must become simpler, and a freer course be given to the work of the Divine Spirit. Once this is heartily recognised, we shall not be long in receiving the blessing we crave so earnestly, but for which we seem to toil in vain.

The lapse of another year in our individual life is a solemn thought, and should lead us to quiet and honest searchings of heart. The stream of experience must leave its deposit of precious gold or of impurity behind; we can never be the same at the close of a year as we were at its beginning. Whether we are better or worse depends on the sensitiveness of the soul to Divine impressions, and its defensive power against evil. There is no quality of character more enviable than that by which we are enabled by spiritual instinct to appropriate the good of life and reject its evil. The photographic plate is sensitive only to light. The redeemed heart should take no impression except that which comes from above. Then every experience will add to the soul's riches, and prepare us for higher calls of service here, and for blessedness hereafter.

The prevalence of famine in India, is one of the most unwelcome legacies of the closing year. A writer in the Calcutta Englishman, states that thousands are dying daily, and that the arrangements made by the Indian Government to meet the emergency are inadequate. In these circumstances, the plea made by General Haig on p. 19, for generous private contributions, comes with special force and urgency. We would also emphasise his excellent and timely suggestion, that friends who are able to do so should be the bearers of their own gifts or those of others. Such an expression of interest on behalf of the suffering people of India would surely do much to commend to them the name and Gospel of Jesus Christ.

We are entering upon "Queen's Year," the year which witnesses the longest reign of any British monarch. Suggestions are not wanting as to how the auspicious event may be signalised. Rev. Charles Bullock, in a gracious letter, says:—

Never has there been a better opportunity of winning and deepening attachment to the throne among the young folk of our land. To further this end, what could be more helpful than to welcome "Queen's Year" with "a Royal service" in all our churches and chapels, to be held either on a Sunday or week day in January? A sketch of the Queen's reign, or of the Queen's early years, as a sermon or lecture, would deepen and strengthen the best feeling of loyalty in all.

To assist in such celebrations, Mr. Bullock has prepared a selection of hymns, a copy of which he will be glad to send to anyone who may be disposed to act on his suggestion.

Mr. Bullock's address is Coomrith, Eastbourne.

Many things will be done in commemoration of Her Majesty's long reign—some wise, some otherwise. Among the number we hope and believe that good religious memorials will be raised which will convey blessings to generations to come. We are not looking for any one great object towards which the enthusiasm and the gifts of religious men and women may flow. It will probably be far better that there should be many objects, and that they should be of a local character. A thousand springs of kindness, opened in dry and parched places, will do more good than a canal full of water taking its formal way through the land. Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., made a good suggestion of a secular kind:—"That there should be a commemoration of the brave deeds done during Her Majesty's reign." Let them be the deeds of peace.

With the object of the Early Closing Association all humane persons must be in deep accord; it is a shame that young women should have to stand behind a counter from seventy to eighty hours every week, and the sooner this state of things is altered the better. A law might be passed which would easily deal with large establishments, and if all establishments were large there would be no complications or obstructions. But the bulk of our retail trade is in the hands of thousands of "small men," who have to meet the circumstances of their poor customers. Here is the difficulty. There are numbers of persons who apparently cannot shop early, and any early closing hour would be a great deprivation both to them and their tradesmen. The Early Closing Association should say plainly what is their plan for this section of the community, or they will fail to carry the bulk of voters with them.

The public, however, have the matter in their own hands, and can, by shopping early, greatly mitigate the evil. They can also aid shop assistants to obtain better treatment than is often given to them. There is no need for these assistants to stand when there is nothing to do. If the present agitation does no more than mitigate the tortures of long standing, it will not be in vain. But it may also incidentally bring before the public other isolated evils which call for redress. The thoughtlessness and the heartlessness which mark too much of our treatment of men and women behind the counter must be changed into doing to them as we would have them do to us.

"The Work of the Church in London" (John Murray), lectures delivered by five bishops, is another of those books which are calculated to cause serious thought on London, which is the problem of the British Empire. The Bishop of Marlborough speaks of the vice which obtrudes itself in central London, and well he may; for a vestryman lately counted over nine hundred "strange women" pass one point in an hour. Slums are everywhere: in the west, in the north, and in the south, as well as in the east. No one need go far from home to work for the poorest of the poor, and for the wickedest of the wicked; indeed, some of the dreariest places are not at the East-end. Nothing can cope with the needs except earnest local effort. It is not a question for one of the churches alone, but for all the churches; together they are too few and too feeble. We are looking to the Free Church Council to do something to justify its existence. Mr. Cadbury's generous offer to defray one-third the cost of visiting every house in London ought to be taken up prayerfully and earnestly, and as soon as possible.

There is too much truth in the statement made by Canon Gore that the Church has often seemed to forget her Lord's method in dealing with the world, the method of the salt salting the world instead of allowing the world to destroy its saltiness. He points to great historic examples: the wholesale baptizing of the Frankish people in order to enrol them in the Church; the yielding in the Middle Ages to any immoral demand in order to hold the people in formal alliance with the Church; and the surrender of discipline in the Church of England for the same purpose. In each case the Church "sacrificed reality to numbers, or genuine discipleship to supposed political influence; and, as a result, in each case the salt lost its savour." Now, what was the cause of this self-destructing action? Was it not that the Church had put herself in the place of Christ? And whenever she does so, the same results will follow. Any Church that is true to Him will flourish; but the Church that supplants Him will perish.

There appear to be no manufacturing centres which are not the scenes of miserable illpaid work done by wretched men, women and children. The wool-combers of Bradford are an unhappy class; the average wage for the men all the year round being only fourteen shillings a week; but in factories where work is assured all the year round the average wage for men is eighteen shillings. This is night work; the day work is done by women at the rate of twopence half-penny an hour. In hundreds of families the husband works by night and the wife by day. As Pearson's Monthly, which publishes the facts, says: "No better device for the separation of the sexes could have been invented." To add to the sordid degradation of the scene the heat in the wool-combing rooms is at times so extreme that "perforce men, and women, too, return to the simplicities of tropical climates." Verily, civilisation, at its present stage of development, is sometimes a costly thing for the poor.

A letter from the Paris correspondent of The Daily News reveals the progress of a remarkable change which is passing over France. The dearth of living and the keenness of competition are compelling women to force their way into every kind of work that they can get. The army and the priesthood are hopelessly closed against them; but so great is the demand for men in the army that women are everywhere taking the places they vacate. It seems as if France would soon have an army of fighting men kept by an army of working women—a return to simple barbarism, where the men fight or lazy and the women keep them. The way of the Prince of Peace is infinitely better than that, even in a worldly point of view.

A society is being formed in London for the purpose of establishing better international relations with France. Its special aim will be to remove the misapprehensions that too often arise between the two nations as to each other's policy and proceedings. As a matter of fact, the present state of irritability that prevails among the nations of Europe is mainly due to misunderstandings, which are carefully disseminated by large portions of the continental press that are in the pay of professional politicians interested in the maintenance of the military system, which is the bane of the continent. Thus public opinion is poisoned at the fountain-head, and "a crusade of hate" is preached everywhere.

How far such a society can reach its aim is a difficult question. The significant thing is that there should be so much need of some institution of the kind. All who love peace and goodwill among men will heartily wish the movement success. Permanent peace can only come from goodwill—so much is certain.

General Türr, an old Garibaldian general, who joined the army in 1842, is now advocating the cause of peace, because he cannot contemplate war "without a shudder when it revives the most terrible memories of his career." He gave the strictest orders for his men to abstain from all cruelty and excess; nevertheless, the past is a terrible fact. He says it was the priests who exerted themselves to preach hatred and to provoke acts of savagery against the partisans of Italian unity. This aged general is only one of many who say that if only men and women could see war once they would never want to see it again.

There lies before us a printed copy of a sermon preached by one of the most popular ministers of the day from the text "The gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord," some parts of which are all that could be desired, but the omissions from which are of the most serious description. We can heartily endorse it when it says—

By grace are ye saved. It is not the tale of your good works that God accepts others; it is you yourselves. It is not your exceeding great merit that wins his regard. No, no.

This too is good as far as it goes:—

The Gospel tells cardinally, not of something the man must do, but of something done for man, of a gift offered by God to man.

But we look in vain for any statement of what was done, of how the bitter wages of sin—death—came to our Saviour; of how He carried the burden of our sins in his own body to the tree. We are only told that the death of our Lord is "the seal and symbol of the invisible passion and everlasting sacrifice of God." May this preacher come to see that the gift of God is "in Jesus Christ our Lord."

In Tyerman's Life of John Wesley there is a graphic account of a series of great earthquakes that took place in 1750, and of the panic that seized the people of London at the prophecy of a crazy soldier that another would soon take place which would usher in the Great Judgment. In the interval the city was clothed in sackcloth. Those who could do so left London for the country in an unreasoning desire to find safety there. The churches were filled on the expected night with excited crowds largely made up of the vilest classes, confessing their sins and seeking forgiveness. Women clothed themselves in what Horace Walpole called "earthquake gowns, that is, warm gowns in which to sit out of doors all night"! The whole city gave itself up to a wild luxury of terror. But when the morning dawned, and all was still quiet, it is instructive to read that those who had been most abject in their religious humiliation at once forgot their better mood, and plunged more madly than ever into their former dissoluteness. The religion that begins with superstitious fear is likely to end when the cause of the fear is removed. The only fear that cleanses and redeems is the fear of sin and its punishment, and that soon passes into the joy of service, till at last it is purged and lost in the abiding motive of filial love.

When Carey was going abroad he said to his brethren that he would go down into the pit if they would hold the ropes. The suggested division of labour was a fair one. Missionaries were regarded as the messengers of the churches in those days, and the churches rightly held themselves responsible for their maintenance and comfort. It did not seem to them to be right to allow a brother to go forth among uncivilised tribes at his own risk and charges. The men at home wanted a share in all that was done and suffered. And it is only as that spirit of sympathy and unity still prevails that the work of the Lord can succeed. The cords of love need to be strengthened and drawn tighter, so that the state of things at Hankow shall be near the heart of Bristol and every other town. Men who do not go abroad must be missionaries in heart, and just as they are so will the Gospel have free course.

It is not pleasant to think at this season of the year upon the cruelties which have probably been inflicted upon the dead animals and birds which are offered for sale on every hand. Colonel Coulson stated the other night that the War Office had ordered that soldiers should visit the slaughter-houses to see how animals were killed and cut up, and that a hundred men of the Scottish Borderers, after such a visit, desired to see their commanding officer, and made a unanimous protest against the needless barbarities which they had witnessed. Had a deputation of humanitarians complained their evidence would have been discounted as sentimental, but when a hundred soldiers from the ranks are shocked, it is clear that there is room for improvement.

A Confession.

DEAR SIR,—I have been asked before—and another request comes to-day—for permission to reprint the following "Confession." It is read and responded to by the congregation at Christ Church (Rev. F. B. Meyer); but it is, of course, applicable to any meeting of believers of any evangelical church—not a sectarian word in it. It illustrates the true catholic unity of all followers of Christ. I think it might be very acceptable to your readers, and for them to know they can reprint and circulate it. With the season's greetings, faithfully yours,

NEWMAN HALL.

WE confess that we are sinners, deserving the righteous punishment of God; but confiding in his mercy, revealed by Jesus Christ, who is "the propitiation for the sins of the whole world." By Him, the only way to the Father, we draw near, saying—"God be merciful to me a sinner." We would live as his adopted children, trusting, obeying, rejoicing in Him. We yield ourselves to the Son of God. We would be taught by Him as our Prophet; we rely on his sacrifice as our Priest; we would obey his commands as our King. For this we seek the aid of the Holy Spirit, the Giver and Preserver of the life of godliness in the soul; and we declare our sincere purpose to give heed to his counsels—not wilfully to grieve Him—but daily, through the year, to cherish his presence in our hearts.

Being not our own, but bought with a price, we present ourselves—spirit, soul and body—time, property, influence—a living sacrifice unto God. We will endeavour in private and public, in our households, in our business, in daily life, in all places, in all companies, to act as becometh the Gospel—to promote true religion in the hearts of others, to help the needy, comfort the sorrowful, and to diminish vice, ungodliness and misery in the world, "looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ." And knowing our own weakness, we implore the help of Him who has said, "My grace is sufficient for you."

Rev. J. D. Kilburn's System of Memory Training.

LANGUAGES MADE EASY.

OUR readers will do real service by urging their friends to study the course of lessons which will commence in our next issue. We would suggest that members of Y.M.C.A.'s and similar institutions should be encouraged to devote some time weekly to the study of each lesson; and leaders of Bible classes might render lasting benefit to the young people in whom they are interested by introducing to their notice this system of memory training.

Mr. Kilburn has devoted much time and thought to this subject; he has applied his principles to the various branches of study pursued by himself, particularly to the acquisition of languages; and he is most anxious to confer upon as many as possible the benefit which he and others have derived from his system. Many persons with whom the author has come into contact have testified to its usefulness in the acquisition of knowledge; and the following commendations are but a few from hundreds of notices which have been published and letters written after hearing the lessons orally delivered.

Further to impress our readers with the importance of this course of lessons, we would again remind them that there are which should be applied to every system of memory training. The quotations from the Press and from personal testimonies here given fully answer the following questions, and are sufficient to prove the immense advantage resulting from a careful consideration of the principles set forth by Mr. Kilburn:

What has the author himself been able to do by it?

Two, occupying a high position in society, testify that they have heard Mr. Kilburn repeat from memory 500 figures without difficulty and without mistake. Two others, occupying equally high positions and equally well-known, testify that they have seen these 500 figures divided into fifty lines, and that he could give each line from memory without mistake forward or backward. A number of journalists and teachers testify to having seen more than 1400 figures placed under 200 different heads and having known him give these, from memory, without mistake. These were not fanciful figures, but mathematical and astronomical calculations. — Berliner Post, 29th May, 1896.

2. Have others been able to use it?

As already stated, we have seen the testimonials as to the importance of this system, in the original, and we believe that the results must surpass those of every known system. Students, missionaries, pastors, doctors, officers, and others, say that through this system it was possible for them to remember the contents of a magazine, as also a series of scientific and historical facts, after hearing them once. — Berliner Post, May 29, 1896.

3. Is it fanciful and complex, or natural and philosophical?

The Westdeutsche Zeitung of June 13, in referring to the numbers of testimonies borne to this system and the striking results accomplished, says: "Those who give testimony lay special stress on the fact that the system is easy to learn, because it is founded on philosophical principles."

4. Is there likely to be more difficulty in learning it than benefit derived from using it?

An editor in Austria writes:—"The ease with which the lessons can be learnt is almost incredible."

—, M.D., London, writes:—"There is nothing cumbersome in his requirements, and his manner of imparting instruction is at once clear, forceful, and pleasant."

5. Is it injurious or helpful to the mind as a whole?

Several well-known persons in Germany write:—"The Rev. J. D. Kilburn's system of memory training is based on the soundest principles of mental philosophy. Some of the lessons are so simple that they can be learnt and used by a child."

The lessons will commence in our issue for next week. On application to our publishers, leaflets announcing the course, for enclosing in letters and for distribution otherwise, will be sent post free.

Another Year.

HOW rapidly the past year has flown. It has gone for ever, nor can it be made to return with resolutions that marked its commencement, not perhaps yet carried out, or promises not yet fulfilled. "We spend our years as a tale that is told," and we pass on in the pilgrimage of life, oft forgetting to "number our days," and to reflect on the fact that each day is bringing us nearer to our final home. Think for a moment what makes up a year—twelve months, fifty-two weeks, 365 days, twenty-four hours each day, and 1440 minutes in one day. What opportunities we have had of doing some good to others, and of reviewing our spiritual strength.

Christian friend, how is it with you? I suppose you, as well as others, have experienced sunshine and gloom, the summer's heat and the winter's frost. Possibly losses, afflictions, trials and burdens have oppressed you. In the morning the bright shining of the sun gave hope of a cloudless day, but the sun hid itself ere the day closed. Perhaps you have commenced the new year with gloomy apprehensions of the future, anticipating troubles that may never arise. This is too frequently the case with us, and while it brings sorrow to ourselves, it dishonours our Heavenly Father, who has promised, "As thy days thy strength shall be."

Let us review the past, count up (if we can) our mercies, weigh them with our troubles and perplexities, using just weights, and we shall be ashamed that an impatient or ungrateful thought should ever have had an entrance into our minds. When tempted to murmur, it would be well to contrast our lot with others, who are not only in distressed circumstances, but who are ignorant of the love of our gracious God and Father.

What shall we say in reference to our spiritual life? What has He done for us? He has opened our eyes, and has given the greatest of all gifts, Jesus; has led us to trust our soul's interests to Him, to rest all our hope upon his finished work, to rejoice in Him as our ever-living Advocate, and in some humble measure to tread in his steps, to listen to his voice, and daily to feed upon Him as "the bread of life." Before He ascended to his Father, did He not promise the Comforter?—and this wondrous proof of his love remains with his Church, quickening, guiding, controlling, comforting, and, by his powerful influence on the hearts of his children, opening to them the inspired volume, that they are led from the valley of gloom to Pisgah's heights, getting clearer views of the Promised Land. Not only has God done "great things for us, whereof we are glad," but He has in store greater blessings to bestow. Think of our Lord and Master's words, "I go to prepare a place for you"; "where I am there ye shall be also"; "I will come again and receive you unto Myself." Christ and the Father being one, we may be assured that whatever was promised by Christ when on this earth will be granted in answer to his own prayer, "that they (his disciples) may be with Me and behold my glory."

Fellow pilgrim and traveller, be not discouraged by the roughness of the path you have to tread, nor by the temptations that daily assail. Christ your Lord and King was

"tempted like as you are." Fierce indeed were Satan's darts, and the legions of hell were mighty foes, but He was victorious over all. We must not expect better treatment ourselves. He never deceived his disciples by telling them that their pathway here would be strewn with roses, but on the contrary, and in plain language, He said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," adding for their consolation, "in Me ye shall have peace." Our sin therefore is not in being tempted, but in listening, and yielding to the adversary. It may be that we think too little of the evil of sin, and rely too much on our own fancied strength, while we fail in our reliance upon the almighty arm of a faithful and unchangeable God. With an abiding conviction that we have to do with a personal living God, revealed "as a Father pitying his children," who is infinite in wisdom as well as great in power, we may confidently rest assured that in acquiescing in his will our own happiness will be secured, because "He hath done all things well." We shall be enabled to "endure as seeing Him who is invisible."

One other motive should stimulate us. We are placed in this world for a short period to be witnesses for God, and as all have some influence with others, let us see to it that our testimony is clear, that the world may observe that our life is governed by the principles we profess, and that our obedience to our Lord and King proceeds out of love to Him who has redeemed us with his precious blood. Men read us, and it may be that a consistent life will often have greater weight with the godless, who have disregarded all solemn appeals from the pulpit or elsewhere, than any other means.

May the New Year be one of growth, of progress, of blessing, of increase in all spiritual knowledge, a year of more close communion with our Heavenly Father, a year of sympathy with the distressed, the outcast, the fallen, the afflicted, and as we may meet some fellow pilgrims, let us encourage each other on the way, for "we are journeying to the place which the Lord our God hath promised."

P. TERRY.

The Old Year and the New.

The Old Year taketh down her tent
Beneath the midnight sky,
For many a stormy wind hath rent
The canvas stretched on high.
But lo, New Year, with silent tread
Her snow-white canopy doth spread.
Meet shelter for the heaven-bound traveller's head!

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Zululand.—Mr. W. Spencer Walton, visiting from Durban, says:—"My recent tour through Zululand was much blessed. We are wanting £50 for a tent wagon, which will not only save us the cost of constant transport, but enable our missionaries to take longer tours of itineration. At present they travel in a cart; I have just been in one for over five weeks, sleeping and living. We are hoping to occupy new out-stations soon, and reach remoter districts."

The Disastrous Floods in North China have upset Rev. J. Stonehouse's plan for settling at Tung An. "The harvest this year," he says, "has been most bountiful. Such large crops I have not hitherto seen. In August the unexpected happened. The Yung-ting-ho, or Hun River, burst its northern bank, and swept over a large tract of country, Tung-hsien becoming the centre of the flooded district. The entire harvest was swept away. Where the river has subsided there is left a deposit of five feet of mud. I realised this on my way last month (September) to Ku An, as I had considerable difficulty in finding various branches of the turbulent river; and when these were passed, I crossed over villages which formerly I went through. The mud had buried the houses up to the eaves. Numerous families were camped without cover on the tops of their cottages."

Time Past.

My hasting days fly on in full career.—Milton.

OUR word "Time" signifies a piece cut off from eternity for man's present use. Compare the Greek Temno, "I cut." Another precious portion of our share in the piece, another year, will soon be gone, carrying into eternity its story of possibilities fulfilled or unfulfilled. And, be it remembered, possibilities are and have been through this and all our years, for each of us, responsibilities—a solemn thought! All the "might-have-been" in personal achievement must be confronted sooner or later: at the Cross now, at the judgment-seat of Christ hereafter, or it may be at the great White Throne.

"Ask now of the days that are past," said Moses, seeking to arouse his people to more earnest appreciation of their privileges by comparison with other peoples and other times. And the inquiry well befits us in these latter days. The garnered fruits of the ages are ours. Precept and example, lessons taught by earthquake and fire, and by the still small voice, are all there in the past, writ with the finger of God, line upon line, for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Nearly 6000 volumes of the History of Mankind, black letter copy for the most part, but illuminated with brilliant initials here and there—on a now much higher plane than their forefathers, should these world-end students be, if the theory of Evolution held good here!

But, leaving the vista as a whole, let us take a sectional view, such as more nearly concerns ourselves. For of every human unit it stands true,—"God requireth that which is past."

"In time past," says St. Paul, "ye walked according to the course of this world" (Eph. ii. 2, 3). But are there not Christians—yes, even Christians, for whom these words are in the wrong tense? Alas, there has been no strong line of demarcation; if the soul is saved, as they believe, the "course" at any rate, remains unaltered, the tense is still a present one.

Is it because there has been no clear apprehension of the blessed fact of "the remission of sins that are past"? (Rom. iii. 25). "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." If. It has been said that the Christian should make a journey every day to three mountains: to Sinai, to see his sins; to Calvary, to behold the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin; to Sion, to view the Heavenly City, whither he is destined. And yet a simpler, surer rule of holy living was that given by the Master Himself—"Abide in Me." When the heart is satisfied in Him the world becomes ousted by the expulsive power of a new affection. Homer sings of the shield of Achilles, so exquisitely wrought that no weapon could pierce it; but the Christian who knows the secret of the life of faith has a shield even more finely wrought, and able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

The Bible is such a hopeful book; no discouragement there, how bleak soever the way may be. Looking back over the year, perhaps the heart fails, thinking of its unprofitableness—in time past unprofitable (Philemon 11). One lesson learnt from the racing years should surely be that of economising and utilising life to the uttermost. Well for us if we learn the lesson now at once, without further loss, and so come under the second clause of this verse—"but now profitable." Placing a phrase of the Old Testament beside one of the New, we have Meet for no work,

Meet for the Master's use.

And the choice of these is ours, for the Treasury of Heaven is open, the Holy Ghost is free. Among the wonders of modern ingenuity is the transformation of waste products into valuable substances. In a single instance, that of the waste of cotton-seed oil, which a few years ago was deemed worthless, a sum of no less than £14,000,000 is now realised annually. How many human lives might be reclaimed even to greater purpose, if brought into close touch with Christ! In God's economy of grace how He could utilise the frittered time, and unused talents, if all were but consecrated to Him!

Mournfully in the olden time Job cried, "My days are past," life's opportunities were fitting by. Perhaps he, too, had his vision of what life might be, a vision whose realisation was for ever receding from his grasp. We know what that is. But let us not lose heart. No life that is truly consecrated to God can fail.

Behind the web of tangled threads
One sits and weaves alone!
All wise to plan and purpose,
All mighty to fulfil;
Then wait till thou discernest all
The triumphs of his will.

Yes, we can well afford to trust God under any circumstances, for "the darkness is past, and the True Light now shineth" (1 John ii. 8). Let us look at our love-token once again, and faith will then ask fearlessly, "How shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"

But perhaps the warm sunshine of his love is rather a recollection to us than a present reality. Perhaps, like Job, we are sighing, "Oh that I were as in months past!" (Job xxix. 2). Yet this should never be. God's order is from strength to strength, grace upon grace, more and more, fresh manna every day. The sun is shining, it shall no more go down; but if the face is turned in the opposite direction, then the eyes see only the gloomy shadow of self. Let us turn round and raise our eyes, "The winter is past" (Cant. ii. 11), the winter of life when we were in a far country where the sun never shone; the winter of the world; for already glad tokens of spring are abroad, the cry goes forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

And his coming means all fragrance,
And all wealth of summer bloom,
And the music and the joyance
Of the land that knows no gloom.

One more thought—one of the saddest verses in the Bible—"the harvest is past... and we are not saved" (Jer. viii. 20). God forbid that this should ever be true of any reader of THE CHRISTIAN; but "take heed that ye be not deceived."

And now with regard to all failure in consecration or in service, surely "the time past of our life may suffice us." Enough of this intermittent abiding. Henceforth, in the continuity of faith, let us seek to apprehend that for which we have been apprehended, to be all that the cross of Christ was destined to make us. And then, as the years go by, they will but speed us on our upward flight into the inner reaches of God's infinite love and glory.

A. A. M.

Mission to Zulul.—The work carried on by Mr. Meek among Zulul goes on steadily. The native Evangelist "Wesley" is preaching and visiting among the raw heathen, and there is much to encourage spirituality. Great poverty and suffering are experienced through the failure of crops last year from locusts and want of rain. There is the more dreadful danger of cattle disease, which is rapidly spreading through South Africa.

Rome at Close Quarters.

NOT very long ago the Roman Catholic Bishop in Jamaica issued a pastoral letter charging the Protestant people of that island with "lax ideas of morality," and adding: "Our Catholic population is, we are glad to say, singularly free from reproach in this matter." Such statements as these betray a spirit of Pharisaism, which is not calculated to help the Bishop much, and naturally provoked at the time a loud protest from those directly affected. As one who has had an opportunity to study Romanism at close quarters, however, I think it would be well to make known some of the facts which have come under my observation during my sojourn in Costa Rica, and which so clearly reveal the immoral tendencies of the boastful Romish Church.

We have here, as you may know, a prosperous Baptist Mission (supported from Jamaica), which has planted churches in quite a number of places on the Atlantic side of the country. Some time since the Roman Catholic Bishop, alarmed at their success, set his mind on putting up rival churches in all those places. But how do you think he obtained the money? By holding raffles in several parishes, where bottles of cognac and of beer, and playing cards were the principal articles raffled; and this on the Lord's Day, too!

The Roman Catholic Bishop in Jamaica may, of course, say what he likes as to the virtues of his flock, but the criminal statistics of the whole world are terribly against his Church, and we who have lived in Romish lands have seen too much of the system he advocates to be easily imposed upon. Not long ago, on a Sunday (for Rome is not particular in keeping holy the Lord's Day), the priests of San José organised a concert in the Variety Theatre for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to help in building some church. And what music do you think they used? The most vulgar ever sung in Spanish music-halls and public-houses. I need not say that the audience were delighted with the proceedings. Not many weeks ago a public writer of this country, a Liberal, called attention to the fact that the festivals of the Romish Church are but so many opportunities offered to the people for the most flagrant debauchery. Anyone may easily verify his statement by a visit to this Republic, or, indeed, to any of the Central and South American Republics. I know that recently the Pope issued a sham Encyclical against bull-fights. But you may come here and you will see how in every town and village, when the parishes celebrate the anniversary of some saint or virgin, the chief entertainment is always the bull-fight, which must needs be held in front of the church, under the priest's nose so to speak, and duly advertised by the clerical papers as a part of the programme. Not many days ago a man was killed in Cartago in a bull-fight held in honour of the Virgin of Angels.

Ah, the morality of Rome! It is easier for its emissaries to talk of it in a Protestant country than it would be if they were in any of those countries where Romanism is the prevailing religion. Here, for instance, no one is surprised by hearing that Father So-and-So, though a celibate, has so many children by so many women. The practice is far too general for even his Bishop to be astonished at any such report. Priests think nothing of going out into the street smoking their cigars, or of entering a public-house, or of going to a club to join a gambling party, or of playing the usurer by lending money at 30 and 40 per cent. ! And somehow Sunday is the day when we see Romanism at its worst. On that day the railway, the clubs, the public-houses, the theatres, the women of ill-fame, do far better business than in the six preceding days put together. And the people think nothing of going to do their shopping and marketing after, or before, going to church. The priests themselves, their religious leaders, may be seen acting in that fashion.

Sunday Opening of Libraries.—The committee of the Ealing Public Library, having been urged to open that institution on Sundays, invited the residents to express their opinion on the matter. As the result of this action was unfavourable to the proposed change, the library will remain closed on Sundays.

"Till Morning Light."

By MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

IT was the last night of another year, and on the great Rock of Gibraltar.

"I am thinking of the old home far away, Gerald, where the dear ones are talking of us by the warm fireside," said the captain's wife.

"New Year's Eve and windows open; how different out here, yet how our hearts seem drawn together as the year closes. I wonder when we shall meet them again. It is good to think about them, Marian."

The room in which they sat overlooked the blue sea, which told of separation from dear ones and home. That afternoon they had ridden out over the Neutral Ground further than they intended, and only by haste got within the great gates ere the evening gun fired for sundown, and the officer with the ponderous keys locked the gate, and all within were shut from all without till sunrise. Shut in securely, the spirit, defying all limits, was turning homeward, and holding communion with the trusted ones and true.

"I'm coming, darling," she said, as a voice called "Mother," and, rising, she was quickly by her little girl's side to hear her evening prayer. With sweet contentment and childlike trust, Nena lisped out the words:

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me;
Bless thy little lamb to-night.
Through the darkness be Thou near me,
Keep me safe till morning light.

Often had the mother listened to that prayer, but that night's associations made her heart susceptible and tender, and the child's prayer echoed through her soul.

Captain Harris was faithful and kind, but not avowedly one with his wife in Christian discipleship.

For long the burden of her supplication had been for his full surrender, and if it might be so before the old year was closed, she thought the new year would open gladly, even if all others were so far away.

Not long before midnight they sat and talked of days that had fled, and of Charlie, their eldest and only boy, who died in England, of relatives in the colder lands, of some upon the sea.

"How uncertain and insecure everything around us seems to be, Gerald. As Nena said her simple prayer, part of it came with force as the very words for us to night.

Through the darkness be Thou near me,
Keep me safe till morning light."

"Ah, dark enough all has seemed of late to me, wife—our loss—our banishment out here; and our unsatisfactory prospects."

"Yes, but if we can carry that prayer to God, we may trust and wait, and never fear but that it must be brighter soon; night's darkness is only till morning light, the certain light of eternity," she said, fearing lest her words might offend.

"I was struck with old Carland's remarks yesterday. You don't know him. He was telling me he is English, born here on the Rock, of English parents, but has always lived within the gates of this fortress, and has never seen snow, or ice, or frost. I was interested in his talk, and on leaving him he said, gravely, 'Captain, let us make sure we are in the safer fortress of the Saviour's love, where the frosts of sin can never touch us; so that when the great sunrise of eternity is signalled, we may pass through the gates into the everlasting city.' I have recalled his saying as I heard the signal for locking the great gates to-night. It wasn't bad for a man like him, was it?"

"It was good for any man indeed to say, Gerald. We may be kept here years on duty, and the old friends may all be gone. 'Tis sad to cross the threshold of a new year in uncertainty. This is my greatest trouble." The look of pain on her face startled him. The hour was creeping on toward twelve, for they wished to see the year depart, and Nena slept peacefully. Outside a stillness reigned, and the grim Rock towered above them. Scarce a movement was on the ocean, that lapped about its base, and the soft air was like our English summer.

"Marian, with the old year your anxiety for me must end. This is not a sudden thought with me; even as we rushed to enter our city gates to-day the words rang in my ears, as I have heard you sing, 'Rock of ages, cleft for me, Let me hide myself in Thee,' and I thought of another Rock than this on which we live."

"Five minutes only," said the thankful wife, holding her hand to him: "shall we make sure, as Carland said?" Looking out on to the sea under the starlit sky, they stood together, and he said reverently:—

"'Tis done, the great transaction's done," and as the hour told another year had dawned, they knelt in humble, trustful prayer.

"Till morning light." Yes, He has been near those two all through the darkness that often crossed their way; and the morning light has found them on the eternal shore.

Little Prisoners of Pain.

THE discovery of a fresh and unwrought field of service in home missions might have been deemed unlikely, but, in the leadings of God, such a field has opened out within the last year or two before earnest workers in this great city. Here and there, in an isolated or concerted way, visitors among the poor had lighted upon and sought to help afflicted children; but no one suspected how numerous they were, and in how many poor homes they were to be found. Recent movements, however, led to a systematic investigation by the Ragged School Union in all corners of London, resulting, with those already known, in the discovery of 5000 helpless, pain-racked child-prisoners. Many of these can never stir from their dreary little rooms, where not a few are left day after day in solitude and silence, but others are able to get out at times, and in some cases to hobble to school. No general statement will cover the whole; there are endless varieties, all manners and degrees of incapacity and infirmity, from the helpless one who lies blind, deaf, paralysed, unable to move, smitten with pain, to the comparatively robust who gets about in limping fashion.

The call was evidently of God, and the claims of these afflicted ones were at once recognised; fresh plans to meet their need were devised. Local ragged school teachers threw themselves into the movement, while hosts of fresh workers were also enlisted. In some of the poorer districts where crippled children are most numerous, the operations are on a large scale, with special workers fully set apart to the service; in other districts voluntary workers have undertaken the task. Thus the East End—with 1,600 crippled children on the books—the North-East (Hackney to Bethnal Green), the S.W. and the S.E. districts have large Home Cripples' branches with special agents—the whole being under the superintendence of Miss Coles, an experienced and valuable worker among the poor. These reports on the needs of each case, and the books of the R.S.U. contain at this moment the names of 5,144 afflicted little ones, besides 1000 over age—that is, no longer children, but still helpless and afflicted.

Few know how often such may be found at their own door. For example, twenty-seven names were sent in from a West End district. A young Sunday-school teacher with some East End experience and resident in the locality, undertook to visit these twenty-seven and find if they were really poor home-cripples. The result has been the discovery that, close to her own door, in back lanes and mews, the deepest poverty exists and that many of the poor homes shelter pitifully-afflicted ones. Here are two cases from this pioneer's note book:—

"Sarah, three-and-a-half years old, is likely to suffer while life lasts. She can neither sit, stand, nor walk: crouching about in the oddest fashion. Moreover, she is blind. The parents are very poor. The father is an umbrella-mender with six children. What a hopeless life lies before such an infant!"

"Willie, aged ten, is nearly always in bed, suffering from spinal complaint. His pain at times is very intense. Besides, he is going blind. He cannot read and has no interest in life. The father is a labourer, and there are six children."

These are but illustrations of thousands. Besides visiting many for myself, I have before me notes of members of similarly touching cases, but on these I may not enlarge. Three from S.W. districts I will but outline: Four in one poor family are crippled hand and feet; a deserted wife has three children, two of them afflicted, one a girl of eight, paralysed leg and arm, besides an internal complaint; Fred, whose father is in an asylum, has spinal disease and fits; he was found with three others in rags, and nearly starving. But why multiply? Every page of the R.S.U. books contain similar pitiful facts.

What is being done for such? Everywhere the visitors are trying to supply that which will bring a little comfort in the particular case. Every endeavour is made by the R.S.U. to meet the special needs put before it. But, moreover, the crippled and weary one has now a friend coming to see him or her, and that alone is a wondrous cheer. This friend brings some cast-off toy, or card, or picture, or scrap-book. Where the child is fit, the kinder, garten teacher comes to teach reading or singing. And above all the Gospel message is brought to the child, who needs its comforts so sorely, but has never been able to go out to hear it, and wondrously has the story of love commended itself to many of these sorrow-stricken ones.

Then for those able to go out there are, at convenient centres, cripples classes, where they are taught not only reading, but mat-making and other light things their twisted fingers can manage. They have little treats of their own—flower shows, small affairs, but much to them; free teas, play hours, and whatever the workers feel will best meet with their case.

Again, a child coming home—incurable—from hospital, missed terribly in her poor home the blankets and warmth of the ward. This the visitor saw, and secured from the R.S.U. a bed and blankets for the poor sufferer. So always the present and particular need is met as far as funds will permit.

I have mentioned the "over-age" cases. Vividly before me rises one which has many sad features—only in this instance the afflicted home is illumined by the light of life, and thus the sufferers have learned to bear meekly, and in calm trust that their Father has a loving purpose in it all. The visitor, spite of the evident suffering and sorrow, is really strengthened by the wonderful grace vouchsafed. There are two sisters, aged respectively twenty and thirty-one: the elder paralysed, the younger suffering from constant and severe fits—oftentimes many in a day—which render her entirely helpless. The father is a labourer, the mother a hard-working, respectable, Christian woman, but with two sadly afflicted ones needing incessant attention and care, she is herself worn and weary.

Do not these simple facts, from a new stratum of Christian service, present a peculiar plea for willing helpfulness? The extensive Cripples' Department makes large demands on the already sorely-drained funds of the Ragged School Union, yet no one knowing the real state of things would bid them refrain from aiding, cheering, and evangelising these darkened lives. One would be thankful to see each afflicted child have a personal friend—some Christian lady or gentleman to take up the special case—and this might well be; but meanwhile the Ragged School Union is doing its utmost for all such, and in so doing it ought to be able to reckon on the liberal support of the Lord's people. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 3.

"GOD BRINGETH BACK THE CAPTIVITY OF HIS PEOPLE."—Psa. liii. 6.

IT is wonderful to notice the many ways in which God brings us back to Himself. We may have been carried into captivity by a troop of anxieties or a horde of worries, by temptations like the sons of Anak, by pride and other evils, as when David found that the Amalekites had carried off his belongings into captivity; and then God comes to the rescue. Sometimes by a drawing felt throughout the soul, sometimes by a little word dropped by another, sometimes by an incident from a biography. Either one of these acts upon us as the sunbeams on frost, there is a meeting and yielding, a desire to get alone, confession of waywardness and wandering, and earnest petitions for renewal of the blessed past. Thus God bringeth back the captivity of his people.

Are you a captive, pining in some distant bondage? It is not surprising that you hang your harp upon the willows, and weep as you remember Zion,—how you went with the throng, and even led them to the House of God, with the voice of joy and praise. And as you contrast the past and the present, it is well that your soul is cast down. But when the Lord brings again your captivity, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

Would it not be well to look out for your brother Lot if he has been carried off down the long Jordan Plain? Should you not arm and go to his rescue, as Abraham did? Perhaps the Lord would turn your captivity, if you sought to turn the captivity of others, and Melchizedek would meet you with the bread and wine.

"SAVE ME, O GOD, BY THY NAME."—"HE HATH DELIVERED ME OUT OF ALL TROUBLE."—Psa. liv. 1, 7.

There are only seven stanzas in this psalm. It is one of the briefer of David's compositions. Written when the Ziphites told of David's hiding-place and compelled him to shift his quarters, perhaps its brevity attests some hasty moment snatched from the hurry and bustle of the necessary flight. It is worthy of remark that, however hurried David might have been, and however great the responsibility resting upon him, he found time to turn to God for help. He had evidently learnt the secret of abiding in the Divine Presence.

It is said of one, "He was so accustomed to the Divine Presence that he received from it continual succour upon all occasions. It was his continual care to be always with God, and to do nothing, say nothing, which should endanger the perpetual intercourse." But obviously, this frame of mind depended on David's dedication of himself as a freewill offering to God. There must be no division of interests, if God is to be all. You must consider yourself as a stone before a carver, whereof he is to make a statue. Presenting yourself before Him that He may make his perfect image in you and do as He will with your life. You must realise that He has permitted this interruption of your peace, this intrusion of Ziphite hate. You must look beyond the hand that smites, to the Father who permits. Then the soul will rock itself to rest, and before you have been five minutes with God you will be able to say as David, "He hath delivered me."

"CAST THY BURDEN UPON THE LORD."—Psa. lv. 22.

We all know the story of the man wearily trudging along the road with the burden on his back, to whom a friend offered a lift in his cart. To the latter's surprise the wayfarer sat beside him with his burden still strapped to his shoulder. "Why do you not put your burden down?" quoth he. "Thank you," was the reply. "I am so obliged at your carrying me that I will not trouble you with my burden also." And so he hugged it still. How many a child of God trusts Him with his soul, but not with his load! Yet if God has undertaken the greater, surely He may be trusted with the less: If He has borne thy sins, He can surely carry thy sorrows.

Thy burden, as the margin suggests, is "that which He hath given thee." Whatever it be, the weight of a church, the pressure of a family, the burden of other souls, thy Father hath given it thee. Give its pressure back to Him, whilst thou retainest the salutary lesson of hourly patience and faith. God imposes burdens to see what we will do with them. We may carry them to our undoing, or we may cast them on Him for his blessed countenance.

"Oh, for the faith to cast our load,
E'en while we pray, upon our God,
Then rise with lightened cheer."

Notice, that if we cast our burden, we must believe He takes it. We must definitely leave it with Him, and count as a positive sin the temptation to reconsider it. When you cast your burden God will take it, and will do more. He will sustain you. He will catch up your burden and you, and bear you all the day long between his shoulders.

WEDNESDAY, January 6.

"THOU HAST DELIVERED MY SOUL FROM DEATH: WILT NOT THOU DELIVER MY FEET FROM FALLING?"—Psa. lvi. 13.

It has been a wonderful deliverance! Into our souls, dead in trespasses and sins, He has poured the power of an endless life. The very life of God Himself has become resident within us, through the grace of the one Man, Christ Jesus: We cannot be hurt by the second death. The blood and righteousness of Christ have satisfied the demands of a holy law. We have eaten of the flesh, and drunk of the blood of the Son of Man, and ours is the everlasting life. Death and the grave for ever behind us, for "he that believeth in Me," said Christ, "shall never die."

And will not God finish what He has begun? Has He given us life, and will He not give us all that is necessary for right and holy living? Does not the one necessarily involve the other, as the gift of the body involves the bestowment of food and clothing? Have we been saved by Christ's death? Shall we not also be saved by his life? Will it not be for the glory of God that we should walk worthy of the high calling? Trust Him, child of God, whatever the traps and pitfalls, whatever the slipperiness; believe that He is able to keep you from stumbling, and that his ability is only exceeded by his love. Let your Guide bind you by a strong rope to Himself as you start each morning in his company. And whatever the glacier may be, believe that at evening He will bring you safely to the Hospice.

THURSDAY, January 7.

"GOD PERFORMETH ALL THINGS FOR ME."—Psa. lvii. 2.

This is a wonderful expression. It is a marvelous thing to consider that God is literally willing to perform all things in us, and for us, if only we will let Him. The mischief is that most of us insist on performing all things in the energy of our own resolve, in the strength of our own power. We shut God out of our life: and whilst He is coming to our help, we have forced ourselves, and offered the sacrifice to our own hurt. That is why, like Saul, we lose the kingdom.

Before, therefore, God will perform all things for us, as He did for his servant, we must learn, like him, to wait in his presence that He may teach us our absolute poverty and helplessness, that He may assure us of our need of absolute and unceasing dependence, that He may open our eyes to see the well-spring which Hagar saw on the desert sand. The fixed heart, fixed only upon God, set upon waiting his time, receiving his help, and doing all things according to the inspiration and energy of his Spirit, is absolutely essential.

Does this seem impossible? God will do this also. He will work in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. He suggests the incoming of his grace that we may long for it. And if it depends upon the observance of certain conditions, these also will He give. My soul, wait thou on God, and let Him perform all things in and for thee.

FRIDAY, January 8.

"SO THAT MEN SHALL SAY, VERILY THERE IS A REWARD FOR THE RIGHTEOUS: VERILY THERE IS A GOD THAT JUDGETH IN THE EARTH."—Psa. lviii. 11.

This is one of the imprecatory psalms, and some are seriously disturbed with what seems an unforgiving spirit on the part of the psalmist. We must remember, however, that he was brought up in a severer school than ours. The cliffs of Sinai are sterner than the undulations of the mountain of Beatitudes. He knew more of the righteousness and less of the love of God than we do. The true key to the solution of the difficulty which these words suggest is in the words quoted above, which show his zeal for the character of Jehovah.

We must remember that the great conflict of his time was why the wicked were permitted to flourish. Their success seemed to suggest that God was indifferent to sin. The Book of Job is filled with controversy on the same theme: how can God be just, and allow the wicked to prosper and the righteous to suffer sore affliction. The psalmist, therefore, pleads that the wicked should be taken away with a whirlwind, that men might be compelled to admit that there was a God that judged. Let wicked men be put to shame and punished, then surely men will seek after righteousness because of the immunity it secures and the blessedness it offers.

SATURDAY, January 9.

"O MY STRENGTH, I WILL WAIT UPON THEE: FOR GOD IS MY HIGH TOWER."—"O MY STRENGTH, WILL I SING PRAISES UNTO THEE: FOR GOD IS MY HIGH TOWER."—Psa. lix. 9, 17.

In the R.V. this contrast comes out in exquisite beauty. First, the soul waits upon God, its strength, and then it breaks into praise.

Notice the circumstances in which this psalm was composed. Around the house lurk Saul's emissaries, gathering themselves together against him. At any moment they threaten to break in and murder him upon the psalmist's bed. Michal and he are reduced to their last straits, yet the hunted man finds opportunity to wait upon God. It is not that he asks for aught as a definite gift, but he waits on God Himself, still expectant, eager. There are times when we cannot tell God what He should do; we can only hush our soul, as a mother her babe, and wait patiently until He tells us what He has prepared.

Meditate on these three attributes. He is the God of your mercy, the Fountain from which pure mercy flows, and nothing but mercy; He is your High Tower, whom you may put between yourself and Saul's hate; He is your Strength, not that you receive strength from Him, but that you appropriate Him as your strength. Stay thus musing and resting, until in that very house, pent in and besieged, you shall break into song, singing of God's strength, singing aloud of his mercy in the morning.

New Things.

By GRACE WINTER.

A HAPPY New Year to you, boys and girls! It is always pleasant to have anything new, is it not? You like to have new clothes, new books, new toys, new games.

Perhaps these new things are not really better than the old ones, but they are fresh and untried, and so you like them better, at any rate for a time. The old toys have been broken, the old clothes soiled, the old games grown stale, and so you welcome the new ones.

The old year, too, has grown soiled, like the old dresses and toys. It has, perhaps, been dark with trouble, or stained with sin, and we welcome the New Year, hoping that it may be brighter and happier and purer than the last. In England we do not make much of New Year's gifts, we give our presents at Christmas; but in France much is made of them, in fact the day is called "Le Jour d'Etrennes"—the Day of Gifts! I expect you children would be all the better pleased if we adopted New Year's Day as the Day of Gifts as well as Christmas Day. We all like to receive presents, and to give them too, do we not? Now, on New Year's Day we all do receive a gift from God—the New Year itself. Every year which God gives us is a blank book, in which we may write the story of our life. Each day is a leaf in the new book. The words we say, and the deeds we do, are the things which are written in it.

When this New Year's Day dawns, and the New Year is spread out before you like a blank book, remember to be careful what you write. Do not let unkind words or sinful tempers make great ugly stains on your clean book. Let all your thoughts and words and deeds be pure and sweet and lovely. Then shall the book of the year be printed in golden letters, and you will not be ashamed for God and his angels to read it.

I daresay you remember often having a new copy-book at school. How careful you were over the first page—no blots, no smears, only careful imitation of the copy before you. So when a New Year comes we ought to make very good resolutions, and we keep the first day or the first week pure and clean.

But as time goes on, we grow careless, and think "Oh, the book is getting soiled, it does not so much matter now what I write in it. Now, don't grow careless this New Year. If there should come a blot, or stain of sin, ask God for Christ's sake to wash it out, and start afresh. Keep the book clean!

But there are other gifts which God is willing to give you beside the gift of the New Year. He will give you, if you ask Him, a new heart.

And if you have the new heart it will be much easier for you to keep the Book of the Year pure and clean.

A heart in every thought renewed,
And full of love divine;
Perfect, and right, and pure, and good,
A copy, Lord, of thine.

Then God promises also to those who love Him a new name. Many of you have pet names given by your fathers and mothers, or by your friends. Perhaps your very own special friend has a name for you which no one else uses or even knows of. Now I like to think that God has, as it were, a special pet name for each one of us. No one else knows what it is.

The Apostle John, in the Book of the Revelation, tells us that to those who fight against all that is wrong, and conquer it, God will give a white stone, "and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Let us try, all this year, to so overcome evil, that we may be worthy of God's new name.

Then there is another new thing which our Lord Jesus promised to all those who should believe on Him, and that is a new tongue. I think a good many of us need new tongues.

The Apostle James says that the tongue is a fire—a world of iniquity—that it is like a wild animal that cannot be tamed.

There are saucy tongues, cross tongues, sarcastic tongues, spiteful tongues; any boy or girl who possesses one of these, needs, I'm sure, a new tongue. When Jesus promised this to his disciples, He meant,

I think, not only that they should be able to speak other languages, but that they should also be able to speak winningly of Him, for in another place He says, "I will give thee a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist." We need to use our tongues in his service. How? By confessing Him to be our Saviour, and by pleading with others to come to Him.

But you may say, If my heart is new and my tongue is new, perhaps my feet and hands will go wrong; I want to be new altogether. And so you may be. Paul tells us, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." God has created him over afresh, he is born again. So, if we trust in Jesus Christ, God will make us all over afresh, so that we may serve and follow Him truly and well, and at the end of the year may show a Book of Life pure and clean, cleansed by the blood of the Saviour who died for us.

The "Suggestion" Prize

has been awarded to Mrs. L. J. Tritton, 36, Queen's Gate-gardens, S.W., to whom a set of "Scripture Biographies" has been sent. I have received many suggestions from other competitors, which will, I hope, enable me to make this page even more interesting in the coming year than it has been in 1896. Similar hints from parents and teachers will at all times be welcomed. Some of those received are not quite practicable for various reasons, but I am much obliged to the senders all the same.

Personal.

I have been very pleased with the quantities of toys, etc., which I have received for distribution among poor children, and am sure that they have been the source of much pleasure in many sad lives. I must also thank my "nephews and nieces" for their kind wishes and cards sent to myself. VIOLET ANNESLEY.—It is often an advantage, but it is best to do the necessary number carefully. State your age each week. FRANCES FIGG.—You put Rom. viii. v. 2, your sister v. 1. J. MATTHEWS.—One of the papers without name or address looks like yours. GERTRUDE SCOTT.—I will try and answer you next week. EDITH TYSON.—I am sorry you found the giants so difficult to find. DOROTHY STALKER.—The mistake in your name has been corrected. DOROTHY PATTEN.—Thank you for your kind letter. I am so glad to hear your good news. LEXIE JACK.—The box you sent will give great pleasure.

UNCLE TOM.

The Angels' Christmas Visit.

'Twas the Christmas season. The angels' eyes
Looked down on the wintry earth,
With love as of old when in starry skies,
They sang of a Saviour's birth.
'Tis the tide of Christmas, they softly said,
And the Christ King has bade us go
To the ransomed world, where his blood He shed,
For the children He lov'd so.
For just where ever the Master sent,
His beautiful heralds flew,
O'er high and lowly, alike they bent,
His wonderful fair earth through.
And thus alike, unto hut and hall,
They hastened good news to bring,
The same sweet message to one and all,
The will of the Lord their King.
On, on, they flew, through the city throng,
Till they came unto cots of pain,
Where suffering children through nights grown long,
And wearisome days had lain.
Till they came to one where a tiny hand
Was lifted that God might see,
And take her straight to his glory land,
On the shores of eternity.
Soft and tender the angel's kiss
On the brow of that waiting child,
As she bore her hence to the Home of bliss,
The City all undefiled.
For lo! unto them, as they passed along,
The pearly gates swung wide,
And the sweet child joined in the glad New Song
Of eternal Christmaside.

"An Open Bible in an Open Church."

THE subject more on my heart to-day than any other, and one that I cannot shake off, is the spiritual state of our churches throughout the whole country. When I learn that thousands of our churches reported not one member added on profession of faith last year, I am truly appalled. What is the matter with our churches? Do they not believe in conversion any more? Or do they not know what to do to bring it about? How long will it be before this world will be converted to Jesus Christ at the present rate? How many thousands of souls are going down into perdition every year while our churches are looking on? What will become of this country of ours, in the next ten years only, if Christians do not wake up? It is time that somebody said something, or did something, to startle us out of our awful indifference, and set us to praying and preaching and working to pull the brands out of the fire.

I do not want to take to reading lectures, but I cannot help thinking that the kind of preaching being given to-day in many places accounts for the lack of conversions. When God sent Jonah to Nineveh, He said, "Preach the preaching that I bid thee." And it was because he did not care to do it that he got shut up in the whale. Lots of preachers to-day are shut up in the same way, so far as any fruit of their work is concerned, and for the same reason. They do not preach what God bids them to preach. Nobody can expect souls to be converted under a ministry that gives a good part of its time to picking flaws in the Bible. We do not hear so much of rationalism and infidelity in these days as we do of what is called "Modern Criticism," but this seems to be doing the same deadly work as of old, only under a new name. When the masses of the people begin to think that these modern critics know more about how the Bible came to us than Jesus Christ did, we need not wonder if they begin to lose faith both in Him and in it.

And then, when the Bible is not criticised, it is put out of sight altogether in too many cases. I heard of a preacher the other day who took for his text some words like those of the Psalmist: "We are fearfully and wonderfully made," and he delivered an eloquent discourse on anatomy. But it did not save anybody, as far as heard from. There are lots of lectures just like this being given all the time as substitutes for the Gospel. Are we surprised that they are not followed by conversions? Then take Politics. How many ministers revelled in that theme during the last campaign! A minister has a right to his opinion, and a right to express it. And when a great crisis comes, he may be doing his duty to express it in his pulpit. But I heard of one pastor who preached on that theme every Sunday night, from the time he returned from vacation in September until election. An evangelist would have had a dry time in that church if he had gone there at the end of that course. I do not believe the people want this kind of thing as a rule. I hear from a good many sources that they wish their pastors would go back to the old Gospel.

I must not forget the Stereopticon when I am talking about things that drive out the Bible. The stereopticon gathers a crowd, but it gathers them in the dark, and too often leaves them there. I think, too, that Sunday-school concerts, and Endeavour meetings, and lots of other devices that creep in to rob the Church of the opportunity to preach the Gospel on Sabbath evenings, are often a great mistake. I know good is done by them sometimes, and that the Gospel can be preached in connection with them, but it has to steal in or get squeezed in, so to speak, and does not get the right of way as it should. I go in for keeping the Sunday night free in all our churches, especially our city churches, for the old-fashioned preaching of the Gospel. Men say the people will not come to hear it. But that depends. And even if they do not come to hear it in such numbers as when something else is advertised, those that do come will hear it, and that is more than can be said in the other case. Here is a minister who advertises a Prelude to his sermon every Sunday evening to get a crowd. He gave twenty-five minutes to his prelude and ten minutes to his sermon, and the crowd who came for the prelude went out in considerable numbers before he got to his sermon. People can see through these things, and where they have good sense they despise them. Let a preacher get full of his Bible, and full of the Holy Ghost, and full of wisdom to know how to invite people to come to hear him, and how to treat them when they do come, and he is not apt to be preaching to empty seats all the time.

There are a good many churches in our great centres of population that are closed altogether a good part of every week, and often also on Sunday night. Millions of dollars given by good Christian people to help along the cause of Christ are locked up in such churches. Their doors ought to be thrown open pretty nearly all the time for Bible instruction and evangelistic preaching. Where the regular pastors cannot do this extra work through want of time, others should be engaged to help them. Some of our wealthy churches have their second service on the Sabbath in the afternoon. Why not open them for a third service in the evening, and put a fresh man in to do the preaching? How much might this do to answer the question, How to reach the masses? What joy it might bring into Samaria. What a solution it would prove to many vexing problems in these days. How it would develop our Christian laymen and show to the unbelieving world one of the best arguments for Christianity that could be presented.

Let us begin to do this with the Week of Prayer, opening with the New Year. Let us lay our plans now to do it all over the country. God will bless our efforts. The Holy Ghost will come upon us because we have turned at the Divine reproof. And we shall realise the promise in Ezekiel, "I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing."

The Congo-Balolo Missionaries send home good news as to the health of the workers. A little daughter has gladdened the home of Mr. and Mrs. Randall. Late letters state that Mr. Hayes had recovered from a slight illness, and that the steamboat Pioneer was doing good service in giving him a change of scene to the main river.

Montserrat, West Indies.—A united committee of ministers write:—This beautiful little island has been visited by a terrible calamity. On the night of November 18 a storm-cloud burst on the south-west end of the island, and, continuing its course to the windward or eastern side, wrought havoc and desolation over two-thirds of Montserrat. With such wholesale destruction of life and property, misery and starvation will be the inevitable lot of hundreds unless immediate relief be afforded. Any-one acquainted with the present financial and commercial condition of these islands will recognise the impossibility of such distress being met by local effort. Montserrat has never been reduced to seek external aid, but under the present circumstances we appeal for aid to meet in some measure the impending distress consequent upon this appalling disaster, and we do not believe our appeal will be in vain.

H. TUCKER, Secretary.

Montserrat, West Indies.

Rev. John Duncan, D.D., ABERDEEN.

THE subject of this week's sketch is a native of Deveronside, in Aberdeenshire, a district that has given birth to many men eminent in church and literature. He was born on August 9, 1827, at Turriff, where his father, a working man, was also leader of the local Baptist Church. His mother, however, was a member of the Church of Scotland, and the son was baptized in that communion.

The days of his childhood were stirring ones in Scottish Church history, and after ten years' conflict, in which Aberdeenshire played no unimportant part, the Free Church began its separate career in 1843. The influences of a godly home and the Evangelical revival in the church, intimately connected, whether as cause or as effect, with the ecclesiastical controversies of the period, deeply affected the boy's mind and character. And he owed much to visits of "missionaries," as they were called—itinerant ministers through whose labours most of the Congregational churches in Scotland arose.

His school-days done, he was apprenticed to the ancient craft of a gardener at Duff House, Banff. To dress and to keep his garden was, however, not enough for John Duncan. He became a leader in a literary society, lecturer on temperance, and, in due time, an evangelist.

The fame of Mr. Duncan's native eloquence spread throughout the land, and in 1851 he was invited to become an agent of the Scottish Temperance League. His acceptance of this call involved his removal to Glasgow, from which, as a centre, he travelled over Scotland as an apostle of total abstinence. In this work he was engaged for seven years, finding time also to take lessons in classics in Glasgow. Indeed, he found time for other engagements, too; for in 1854, while resident at Govan, he married a Turriff maiden, with whom he had been associated in early days.

Having further proved his powers in this course of life for the space of seven years, he was, in 1858, invited to Aberdeen by Albion-street Congregational Church, then under the pastoral care of Dr. J. H. Wilson, afterwards secretary of the English Congregational Home Mission Society. Not content with the classic lore which he had imbibed at Glasgow, he entered himself as a student of mathematics, logic, and moral philosophy in Marischal College during the sessions 1858-59, and 1859-60, being the last years of the existence of that college as an independent university, before its incorporation with King's College as the University of Aberdeen.

Aberdeen as a city is singularly free from slums. But as pastor of Albion-street Church, Dr. Duncan's work lay in the poorest districts, where he built up a large and vigorous congregation. The chapel was twice enlarged, and the limits of the ground forbade any further extension. After twenty years the centre of Dr. Duncan's labours was changed to Trinity Church, in the Shiprow, a much larger building, situated five hundred yards to the south-west, and still in a needy locality. It was not a case of the removal of a whole congregation. A remnant was left. Albion-street Church remained, and remains to this day a sphere of Christian activity, not seldom revisited by its former minister.

Trinity Church is seated for 1000 and was built at a cost of £6000. It is in the Shiprow of Aberdeen, a narrow street shaped like a quadrant, an ancient way between the harbour and the town. The church commands a view of the docks, and of Kincardineshire across the Dee. It stands close by the site of Trinity Port, one of the forgotten city gates of olden days. To this house of prayer Dr. Duncan removed on Sunday, September 15, 1878, with five hundred members. The changes of eighteen years have removed many of these from Trinity Church, but yet the roll of membership to-day numbers more than nine hundred names. The church is a centre of Christian activity, and there is scarcely one evening of the seven in which the buildings are not occupied.

Dr. Duncan's Sunday evening service has for long been an outstanding feature of Trinity Church, and the address that forms a chief part of it is expressly adapted to attract those who are outside of all the churches. On a recent Sunday evening, when we were privileged to be among the worshippers, the Doctor's address comprised a series of reminis-cences of the early days of his pastoral work. The tragic and the joyful were mingled. We listened to the story of the untimely end of the drunkard, over whose body two sets of dissipated relatives had quarrelled, each having provided a grave; and of the convicts who, on returning from penal servitude, testified by life-long humble toil, not less than by good confessions confirmed on deathbeds, how great a transformation had been wrought in their characters. What influence, demanded the preacher, other than the lifting up of the Lamb of God in the Gospel story, has ever been found sufficient for so great a work?

Dr. Duncan, while thoroughly evangelical and evangelistic in his tendencies, gives a very special place in his ministry to Christianity in its social aspects. He has approved himself a hard-working pastor among his own flock, and not unmindful of the claims of his own communion, as is shown by his tenure for more than thirty years of the post of secretary to the Northern Association of Congregational Churches, and by his appointment to the highest honour in the gift of the denomination—the Chair of the Congregational Union of Scotland at the Dundee meeting in 1887. At the same time he enjoys the confidence of many in all the Churches. Three years ago the University of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of D.D.—an honour all the more distinguished, as the recipient had not taken the M.A. or B.D. degree in the ordinary course. A gathering of leading Aberdonians was held under the Lord Provost's presidency to arrange for a public recognition of his claims on the community, and we heard it said by one of the company that there was not another man for whom so many citizens of all classes would have met together. Between three and four hundred pounds were subscribed as a testimonial to Dr. Duncan and his wife, and presented at a subsequent meeting in the Town and County Hall, filled at a busy afternoon hour by many hundreds of spectators representing every class and interest in the City of Bon Accord.

One half of Dr. Duncan's work is outside of church life altogether. He has been for many years on the committee of the St. Nicholas Coal Fund, and since its formation twenty-six years ago he has been an active director of the Association for Improving the Conditions of the Poor, a labour bureau and Charity Organisation Society.

We have barely referred to Dr. Duncan's family life, but have mentioned that at the presentation in 1894 Mrs. Duncan's name was associated with that of her husband. Mrs. Duncan has been an active fellow-labourer, especially in the charitable phases of the work. On her especially has devolved the care of the sewing classes on Tuesdays and the Dorcas Society. She has used generous hospitality to evangelistic workers and visitors, and has constantly upheld the Doctor's hands. Dr. Duncan's only son, John Duncan, M.A., M.D., Shepherd Gold Medallist, is in practice at Bideford. His eldest daughter is wife of Rev. F. A. Russell, Congregational minister at York; the second daughter is married to Mr. John Bedford, Bombay; the youngest daughter is still under her parents' roof and a helper of their good work, particularly among young women and in the Sunday-school.

South Spanish Mission.

DEAR SIR,—During the year now almost closed there has been a quiet, steady work going on in connection with the Gibraltar and South Spanish Mission. Mr. Millar and Mr. Rodger, who were with us in October, have been the means of blessing to both saved and unsaved. Mr. Cambridge is much encouraged in his work among many thousands of merchant sailors.

In Algeiras, South Spain, Mr. Harris tells of blessing on our meetings, which have been well attended even in the hot season, and the children are being led to Christ through our day and Sunday school. Mr. Walton has during this year taken up the work in the town of Linea which for two years was carried on by the Wesleyan Church in Gibraltar. He writes, "The Christians have opened their houses for meetings on nights when there is no public meeting. These are well attended."

Many of the 7000 navvies who work at the government docks in Gibraltar lodge in Linea, attend the meetings, and we believe not a few are truly the Lord's. At gun-fire every working day they stream into the garrison, returning at evening gun-fire to their homes. To reach them the missionary will have to live among them. We have a hall for which we pay a heavy rent. A mission home will be required for the women, and children must be cared for. The population has so greatly increased that houses are dear and difficult to procure. Had we the means to build a hall and mission home, land could be got to build upon. In the meantime rent for hall and dwelling-house is needed, as well as tracts, books, house furnishings, etc. We would be very thankful for help for any of these. The debt upon all our Homes has been reduced to £280. For the yearly expenses about £1000 are required.—Yours in His service, ALICE TODD OSBORNE.

How to deal with Complainers.

MRS. WOOD was an ailing old woman living in a small village in one of the Eastern counties. Her husband worked on a farm, and though a very respectable man, had had no advantages in the way of education. She was rather superior to her neighbours, and did not care to have much to say to them; so she used to sit over the fire whilst the old man was at his work; her thoughts all about her poor suffering body, and when he came in for his meals it was anything but a pleasant face that greeted him. She was a good wife, keeping the cottage beautifully clean and attending carefully to all his wants; but her great fault was continually thinking and speaking of herself, and it needed a good deal of patience to listen to the same melancholy tale again and again.

"What pain I have in my back, to be sure! Last night I thought I should have died, I was that bad! You wouldn't believe what I suffered in my head"—and so on. It seemed to give her some kind of pleasure to talk in this strain; for she was one of those who are never so happy as when they are describing their miseries, and it is not always easy to know what to say to them. A lady who used to visit this poor woman, told her one day she was not nearly so ill as she made herself out to be, and a great deal of her ailment was fancy. But that did more harm than good. It made her indignant to be so misunderstood. She felt, and felt rightly, that if the lady was in her place, she would have talked very differently. The truth was, she knew little or nothing of bodily pain or suffering of any kind, and didn't know how to sympathise with poor Mrs. Wood. So her plan failed entirely.

But my wife took another course in dealing with her. Finding that patiently listening and speaking kind words did not get her out of the habit, which had become like second nature, a new idea came into her mind, and she determined to try it the next time she saw the poor complaining woman. So we called again and found her just as usual, her face as sour and gloomy as ever. After expressing sorrow for her, as she always did, my wife said, "I want you to dress me some dolls for our school treat." What a change those few words made in that dismal countenance! The dark shadow and scowl gave place to a pleasant smile (the first we had seen), and the idea of her dressing dolls quite amused her. "I never did such a thing in my life," she said; to which my wife replied, "Then it is time you began." So the matter was soon settled. Mrs. Wood promised to do her best, and the dolls were sent to the cottage. When we called again, it was disappointing to see her at the door with the old sour look, and to hear the familiar story of suffering and pain. But as soon as ever the dolls were mentioned, all was again changed; the sad face brightened, and the dolls were brought out and duly admired, to her great delight. It cheered her to think that she, in her old age, could take up a new kind of work and help to make the little girls in the parish happy, without in the least neglecting her daily duties.

It gave her a fresh view of life. Her mind had now something to dwell on besides her own daily burden, something for the good of others; and that was what she wanted. Of course, it did not really take away the pain, but it helped her to bear it better. When she was busy dressing the dolls and thinking how pleased the children would be with them, she was not troubled by her head or her back nearly so much as when her thoughts were all about herself; and she was happier than she had been for a long time.

As we go through life we all meet with sufferers of one kind or another, and we should try to help them in every way in our power. If we cannot take away their troubles we may give them something to think about: and when the hands are employed in useful work, and the thoughts are turned from their own sorrows, they will be less likely to repine at their lot. Best of all, let us remember the glorious end which our Heavenly Father has in view in all his dealings with us. Aches and pains, and trials of every kind, hard as they are to bear, are intended to make us more earnest in his service, and to fit us for the Home above. The more we believe this the less we shall complain of what is laid upon us, and the more brightness we shall, with God's blessing, shed upon the path of our fellow-sufferers.

The Nestorians in Peril.

SIR,—The Nestorian Mission and Committee for Deacon Abraham's Orphanages in Oroomiah, Persia, have received a communication from Rev. W. Shedd, of Oroomiah. He and Dr. Cochran are the heads of the American Presbyterian Mission to the Nestorians scattered over the plains of Oroomiah and in the Kurdistan Mountain. They tell their own story, which, in short, seems to forebode the certain doom of the whole of the Christians in that region, but more especially the certain destruction of the so-called independent tribes of Nestorians inhabiting the higher mountain regions of Assyria above the banks of the Zab and Habor. These tribes have for centuries defied the power of Turkey to subdue them, but with the help of the savage and fanatical Kurds they are now surrounded with a cordon of enemies, whose policy, aided by the failure of their crops, is to starve them out, and thus entirely destroy them, by preventing their caravans from either leaving the country to procure food, or preventing those which have left from returning. Thousands of these Nestorian Christians have broken through the cordon, robbed of everything they possess worth taking by the Kurds, and are pouring over the plains of Oroomiah utterly destitute, hungry and naked, their very clothes being torn off their backs, and they are left to face ice and snow, and all the horrors of winter, starving, without food and shelter.

Deacon Abraham writes in agony. The mission-homes and orphanages are besieged. The orphans in the Homes are fasting to help the destitute crowding in, and there is no money left. He is selling the village of Mount Seir, the property of the Orphanages, to pay debts incurred. A great catastrophe is evidently impending unless immediate help can be given. A small sum has been telegraphed to the Deacon, but it is utterly inadequate. Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, is treasurer of the Mission.—Your obedient servant,

HENRY HOLME, Chairman.

EXTRACT FROM REV. W. SHEDD'S APPEAL.

Within six months, from 5000 to 10,000 Christian subjects of Turkey have crossed the border into Persia, in the district of Oroomiah, of every age and sex. They are naked, penniless, and hungry. Each day bands of 50, 100, and 300 cross the borders, and each band tells of others who will follow. Each day brings the winter's cold nearer, and reduces the stock of provisions in the hands of their fellow Christians here. The suffering is daily becoming more acute. The sights that meet our eyes are pitiful in the extreme. Our doors are thronged with hungry, ragged, starving people, whose condition defies description. Little children almost naked in the cold wintry air appeal irresistibly to our sympathies. The Christian villages are crowded with these refugees begging bread. They come from the settlements of the Marbishi Valley, Gawar, Ishtazin, Jilu, Diz, and from the regions of the Upper Zab, Boslikala, and Tieri. The majority are Nestorians, but among them are several hundreds of Armenians.

The total Christian population of this region is not less than 20,000, two-thirds of whom are practically homeless, and the remainder in imminent danger of being driven from their villages. Another year like the last must entirely depopulate the whole of these regions of Christians. Hence the absolute necessity of immediate relief being given in food, clothing, and helpful direction.

The Nestorian population in Turkey has two divisions. One nucleus is formed by the independent tribes of Tieri, Tichoma, Baz, and Jilu, numbering about 30,000 souls, living in the most rugged valleys of Kurdistan (ancient Adiabene). Outside these almost inaccessible mountains lies the other nucleus of about 30,000 Nestorians, with a few Armenians scattered amongst them in the smaller valleys and plains, stretching into the Vilayat of Van. In the same region, and surrounding the whole, live a vastly large number of the Kurdish tribes. Kurdish robbery has been allowed a free hand, and on the scattered communities there have been constant Kurdish raids, and oppressive taxation, without protection, which has ruined the country. Village after village has been depopulated. Twenty years ago the Christians of Gawar were famed for their wealth in fields and cattle. To-day their headmen were beggars. Not a single word or act of rebellion, not even an over-zealous revolutionary, can be urged as an excuse for this fearful oppression.

Cold and famine are now forcing the Christians to leave their homes. Many have fled by night, over unfrequented roads, to avoid the frontier guards stationed there to force them back to certain death by starvation. Even their flight has become a source of profit to the Kurds, who, for a consideration, engage to conduct them across the border, and, then, on parting, rob them of everything worth taking, sending them on their way naked, cold, and hungry. Yet with all this thousands are escaping, in spite of the wild mountain tracks, covered with snow, difficult to find, and difficult to keep. In spite of the cruelty they are subjected to, and the winter cold, with scanty food, sleeping in the open, or in sheepfolds, they reach us with nothing but the few rags that are left to them.

These people have escaped from Turkish rule with their lives. The Christians here will share with them their own scanty store of food. They will shelter them till sheds and stables will hold no more. The Persian Government receive them without prejudice—but do not aid them. They cannot be clothed or warmed without outside aid. Many must suffer from lack of food and shelter. If the number of refugees continues to increase—only the setting in of still severer weather, closing all roads, can prevent this—it is hard to see how they can live at all. Some of our villages on the plains of Oroomiah have already a refugee population equal to half and two-thirds of their own number. We must have an organised plan of help, and cannot afford to wait. A small sum on hand has enabled us to begin, and the work must not stop. We believe that finding work is the best aid we can give in the present distress, and suggest the following plan:

- (1) Helping men to pass on to Russia where work can be had. Twelve shillings will enable a man to reach Russia. This will help men who have small families or none.
- (2) Aid to men who have large or very dependent families by work on public improvements here. They can earn eightpence a day.
- (3) Aid to women, and in a less extent to men, by work in wool.
- (4) Aid to special cases by grants of food or clothing.
- (5) By supporting children, especially orphans in the schools. Two pounds will clothe and support one child for the winter, and twice that sum for a year.

The Wild Olive Graft Mission.—We recently described the work of this mission, especially the farm buildings near Shoeburyness, which have been secured with a small part of the land attached as a convalescent home for Jews and Jewesses. It is intended to cultivate garden produce, etc., in order to furnish work to the men, and so enable the convalescents—all of them very poor—whilst improving their health, to contribute to their own support. Help is greatly needed to furnish the Home and provide the necessary stock of implements, poultry, etc. Mr. Colin Young would be thankful to be enabled also to secure a larger portion of the land which constituted the farm. Mr. Young's address is 4, Vine-street, Minorics, E.

The Famine in India.

DEAR SIR,—The subscribers to the fund for Famine Relief in the Koi country will be glad to learn that in a letter dated November 28, Mr. Cain acknowledges the receipt of a first instalment of £100 sent by telegraph. After expressing his warm thanks, Mr. Cain adds: "Distress is creeping on all around us. There have been some slight showers in some parts of the Talug, and the millet in the villages close to the Godavery may yield a half crop, but in the Koi villages all is gone. Providentially the early rain crop was quite an average one. The severe distress will begin in a few weeks. At present many have some grain, and they are digging roots everywhere."

It is quite plain that famine, or at least severe distress, mitigated only by the exertions of the Government and of private individuals, has commenced on an immense scale in Northern and Central India. Very many millions of people are involved in the calamity. The Government is putting forth all its strength to bring food, and the means of purchasing it, within the reach of the people, and is pledged to spare no expenditure or effort to save life. But the task is prodigious. The official estimate in November was that in the North-West Provinces alone a failure of crops in a greater or less degree had taken place in an area with a population of 40,000,000 of people—equal to that of the whole United Kingdom. Then there are parts of the Punjab, Central India, Bombay, and Northern Madras, similarly affected besides.

A certain amount of private money has been subscribed. But at a time like this, when so many millions of our fellow subjects in India are involved in such dire distress, England ought not to rest content with simply sending out money. Personal service, to whatever extent it may be possible, is called for. Vast as the Government organisation is, how is it possible for it to reach the homes of such multitudes, and deal the bread to the women, the children, the sick and the weakly, who cannot go to the Relief Works? Here is the opportunity for Christian England. Let us not give the bread at the end of a pole, but with loving hands and sympathising hearts let those of us who can go ourselves, and show the natives of India that we are not a mere nation of shopkeepers, who can give a million of money, as in the last famine, without an effort; but of Christians who will willingly cross the globe to minister to the starving and the dying.

I cannot speak for the Government, but I believe it would gladly avail itself of a large amount of such gratuitous agency—certainly the missionaries would, in the distressed tracts. Christian men and perhaps women, too, who have means of their own, should go, or send a substitute. They could put up with the missionaries, and so live at a very cheap rate. The great steamship companies are usually very liberal in cases of this kind, and would very likely give return tickets for the cost of a single ticket. The language need be no difficulty; interpreters can do all that would be necessary, and there are plenty of them. The work would extend over a few months only, and part of that time in a very pleasant climate. All needful information can be got from the secretaries of the different missionary societies. If only a few persons are in a position to respond to this appeal, let them go without delay.—Yours obediently,

F. T. HAIG, Major-General.

South Nutfield, Surrey.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a letter from Mrs. Lukey, missionary, Bombay, in which she writes:—"The plague is on the increase. People are dying all over the city. Special trains are being run for people to leave for their village homes. Mohammedans parade the streets the whole night with torches calling upon God to stay the disease, so also the Hindoos."

Mrs. Fuller, of the India Alliance Mission, writes, Dec. 12:—"I got in last night from a week's hard travelling in the famine district (Berar and Khandesh). We have taken in eighty children. They have to be fitted up with clothes, bedding, and everything. Grain is so dear, and extra food is required. Will you ask prayer for us? We need it in so many ways." Who will help to feed this large family?—Yours truly,

G. W. OLDHAM, Lt.-Col.

Jews in Jerusalem.

A SPECIAL meeting under the auspices of the Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews was recently held at the Queen's Gate Hall, South Kensington, for the purpose of advocating the claims of the organisation upon English Christians. There was a large and influential attendance. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who in opening the proceedings, described the operations of the society in the Holy Land as presenting features of the greatest possible interest. The poverty existing amongst the Jews who in recent years flocked in such numbers to Jerusalem is appalling, and the sufferings through which they have to pass almost incredible. The claims that they have upon the sympathy and aid of all Christians can never be called in question. Nothing will more effectually convince them that the heart of the Christian world goes forth to them in real sympathy irrespective of creed than the noble and practical efforts of such a Society as this to carry relief to them in their dire necessity.

Mr. R. SCOTT-MONCRIEFF gave a lengthy and interesting description of the Society's work. Much has been done to improve the condition of the Jewish population of Jerusalem, but in spite of all their efforts the task which still remains is a formidable one. There has been an astonishing increase in the population of the Holy City within recent years, the inhabitants within the walls numbering, according to Turkish official returns, 60,000, whilst the number outside is equally great.

Mrs. E. A. FINN, secretary, gave a detailed account of the manner in which the Society endeavours to find employment for the starving Jews of Jerusalem. In spite of the miserable conditions under which these poor people live and the fact that they find it almost impossible to obtain a livelihood by the labour of their hands, yet many of them, when tested, prove to be really skilled workmen. The squalor and misery amidst which they live is heartrending to witness, and the scarcity of water constitutes one of their greatest wants. The Society has rendered excellent service in remedying the latter evil by having large cisterns cut out of the solid rock. This has proved beneficial in the extreme, and has earned for them the gratitude of the poor people. They employ the Jews in making rock-hewn cisterns for water, soap-making (from olive oil), glue-making, stone-dressing, quarrying, field and garden work.

The Dying Year.

HOARY with age, so weary its tread,

Tolling the bell, while many a tear

Falls on the page—the book has been read.

Solemn the knell o'er the dying Old Year.

Sinking the sun adown in the West,

Closing the day—the night draweth near.

Oh, it has run—the race leads to rest.

Passing away the weary Old Year.

O'er the horizon the well-freighted ship

(Yesterday new) will soon disappear,

Followed by sighs, the vessel will "dip,"

Pass from our view this fading Old Year.

Some of its "freight" 'tis ours to regret;

Words unadvis'd, unfit for God's ear;

Sometimes a "weight" which, like "sin," would
"beset."

Time, left unprized, through this vanishing year!

"Faithful and just," is God "to forgive,"

Cleanseth the Blood—be still, ev'ry fear!

Christ, be our trust, to Him let us live

Till, o'er the flood, dawneth Heav'n's New Year!

Mercy, thus far, has marked all the past;

Safe o'er life's main our course He will steer;

Cross we "the bar"—the Haven at last—

Sing in refrain through an endless New Year!

Education in Kentucky.

ONE of the many interesting institutions of the State of Kentucky is the National Medical College at Louisville, which exists for the important purpose of promoting the study of medicine by men of the coloured race. It is a fact much to be deplored that local prejudices should, to such a large degree, bar coloured men from medical colleges and other educational privileges. The consequences of this action are very pitiful.

To meet these unfortunate conditions, the legislature of the State of Kentucky granted a charter in 1888 for the establishment of a regular Medical College for coloured men. In the winter of 1888, the school was opened in a rented building with six professional instructors. During the autumn of 1889, the trustees purchased a suitable building for a little over £1000, and local physicians, who were interested in the condition of the coloured race, and in the education of its worthy young men, assisted the faculty to educate the students up to the high standard required by the Board of Health, the department having control of medical diplomas.

In 1895, the Board, by legislative enactment, required every medical school to have hospital privileges, so as better to give instruction to their students. By the regulations of the authorities of Louisville, no coloured medical instructor was admitted with their students to the city hospitals, while all others (whites) were; hence it becomes not only an indispensable but an imperative necessity to open a hospital in connection with the college.

The trustees accordingly bought a building, reckoning upon the help of friends at home and abroad. The prejudices which close medical and other institutions against coloured students of course close the door of hope for financial help accruing to the undertaking in Kentucky. Friends of the Negro in the Northern States have rendered praiseworthy assistance, and among those who have shown interest in the Old World are some members of the Society of Friends in Great Britain. So Dr. H. Fitzbutler and Mr. E. J. Braithwaite have arrived in London as representatives of the Louisville National Medical College and Hospital, seeking for occasions to explain their work and influence funds in support. Communications for these friends may be addressed: 44, Torrington-square, N.W.

Work Among the Santhals.

THE Indian Home Mission to the Santhals is under the charge of Messrs. Boerresen and Skrefsrud. There are in all at the sixteen stations of the Mission six European missionaries, three Santhal pastors, 113 travelling elders, fifteen Catechists, one native doctor with two assistants, and a dispenser with two assistants.

Mrs. Boerresen, assisted by twenty deaconesses, conducts the girls' school, in which there were at the close of the year 189 pupils. Many of these passed the Government examination with credit, one girl gaining a scholarship of three rupees per month for two years. The boys' school has 157 pupils, nine teachers, and two monitors, and the efficiency of the teaching and the intelligence of the boys is proved by the successes at the Government examinations.

During the past two years the Books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, and Kings, and all the Psalms have been translated into the Santhal language, and are now awaiting final revision before being sent to press, and this work will be continued until the whole Bible is translated.

In addition to the work carried on in Santhalistan, a colony of Santhals has been started in Assam under Mr. Bunkholdt's superintendence, and now there are one Santhal pastor, seven village elders, twelve deaconesses, six schoolmasters, two schoolmistresses, and one native doctor with one assistant.

During the past year a goodly number of Santhals have received the Lord Jesus and been baptized, making the total number of baptized heathen now alive over 9700.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on a fortnight's special services to be conducted in Brewett-street Mission Hall, Cathays, Bristol, January 10 to 24, by Mr. James Shields.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

THE special meetings in New York by the evangelists have now closed, and the work is being continued by others. The meetings were well sustained to the last, and were accompanied by many tokens of spiritual awakening, not only among Christian professors but among the unsaved. The Gospel meetings in Carnegie Hall have been overcrowded, and it was necessary to have separate services for men and women.

Mr. Sankey's song has been as strong an element of attraction and blessing as ever. On one occasion it was stated that he had received a letter requesting him to sing, "Prodigal Child, Come Home." The writer said he had heard Mr. Sankey sing it twenty-one years ago, and the strains of it had vibrated again and again in his heart while travelling in the mountains of Mexico, the plains of Kansas, and the groves of Florida. Mr. Moody remarked, on reading the letter, that there must be power in a song that would follow a man for twenty-one years. Mr. Sankey sang with all his accustomed pathos.

On the last afternoon in Cooper Union, Mr. Moody preached on the Call of Moses, and closed the sermon with an account of his own call to Gospel work thirty-six years ago. The audience were deeply affected as he told in simple language how the Lord had laid it on his heart to give up business and engage in this work. He had been used to lead many out of darkness into light, and no throne could tempt him from his life-work. He pleaded with all, whatever their station in life, to engage in Christian work.

On Dec. 16 the two evangelists held a service for the prisoners in Sing Sing prison. The meeting was held in the Protestant chapel, but dozens of Roman Catholics applied for permission to be present. Fully nine hundred convicts attended. Mr. Sankey sang "Saved by Grace," and the audience joined him in the chorus, afterwards singing it by themselves. Mr. Sankey also sang, "The Ninety and Nine." At the close of an earnest discourse by Mr. Moody many hands were held up to show the desire for a changed life.

After the meetings in New York, Mr. Moody was to visit Philadelphia for a day to help in the work there. He begins a campaign in Boston in January; and both the evangelists have agreed to conduct a mission in Cincinnati in March.

A Christmas Service for Jews.

ONE of the most impressive Christmas services, writes a correspondent, was a humble meeting which took place on Christmas Eve at 33, Finsbury-square, well known, doubtless, to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN as the headquarters of the Barbican Mission to the Jews. It afforded a striking indication of that changing attitude, and increasing spirit of inquiry, amongst the Jewish people in regard to Christianity, of which we hear on all sides. As Prediger C. T. Lipshytz said to me on Thursday night after the service, "Twenty years ago it would have been regarded as impossible to get sixty or seventy Jews—not converts, be it remembered, but inquirers—sufficiently interested in the old, old story to meet together in celebration of the birth of Him whom their fathers rejected."

They were all men (as it is not according to Jewish custom for the sexes to worship in common), and not only did they meet in no hostile spirit, but they joined heartily, if inharmoniously, in the singing of English "Sacred Songs and Solos," and listened with respectful attention to the reading of passages from both Old and New Testaments, and followed gravely, and a little eagerly, too, the unfolding of the story of the Saviour, told by Mr. Lipshytz with passionate earnestness in his fluent Hebrew-German. Except the hymns the whole service was in Hebrew-German, with which the continental Jews who find a refuge in this country seem to have a common acquaintance.

Though my knowledge of the language is most limited, the nearly two hours' service was without a trace of weariness for me, so deeply interesting were both congregation and minister. The faces of the former were a study during the three-quarters of an hour of his unflagging eloquence. He raised some of the familiar Jewish objections in order to crush them with convincing argument, and one who endeavoured to anticipate his answers and cross swords with him was speedily put to rout. Free discussion is allowed at the Bible-classes, which are regularly held in connection with the Mission, but not at meetings of this character.

Having regard to the unfamiliarity of the congregation with Christian worship, it is wisely arranged that hymns which appeal even to the indifferent and hostile shall have a lion's share of the service, as also that the men shall be suffered to remain seated during the whole of the proceedings; but the respectful interest and close attention of the congregation were as marked as though every form and ceremony had been observed.

Mr. Nix and the Polytechnic.

OUR readers know that Mr. Josiah Nix, after two years' work in connection with the Regent-street "Poly.," is about to undertake general evangelistic work, under the auspices of the Wesleyan Church. For this line of service he is eminently fitted, and we anticipate for him a blessed and fruitful period of labour as a thorough-going and fully-consecrated herald of the grand old Gospel.

The friends at the Polytechnic with whom he has been associated, from Mr. Quintin Hogg downwards, are heartily sorry at his leaving, and would gladly have retained him. They had a good-bye meeting last week, and the proceedings proved that Mr. Nix has not only done splendid work there, but gained for himself many true friends. It must have been quite embarrassing to him to sit and listen to the repeated and strong expressions of esteem and gratitude, uttered by those representing different branches of the many-sided work sustained by this great institution. Most touching of all were the personal acknowledgments of so many of the speakers for the priceless help they had received from Mr. Nix in their own spiritual life, and in that of those dear to them, as well as for his practical sympathy with them in times of trial. It was the same in all the departments represented—the open air work, the temperance effort, the "holiday by proxy" movement, the work among young women, the Norway summer trips, the theatre lantern services, etc.

Mr. Hogg, the head of the "Poly.," presided at the meeting, in the genial and brotherly way which enables one to understand his remarkable influence among young men. It was good to hear him emphasise the overwhelming importance that he and his fellow-workers attach to the spiritual work of the institution. He declared that if it were in danger of being shoved aside by entertainments, or even by educational advantages, he would seek work elsewhere. In view of Mr. Nix's regretted departure, he sought to impress on the young fellows the truth that God is willing to use in his service any who are ready to be used; and it now rested with them to see to it that the Christian work of the "Poly." did not suffer through the leaving of any particular worker. The same feelings (with warm tributes to the great service which Mr. Nix had rendered) were given utterance to by Mr. J. E. K. Studd and Mr. Hoare.

In the name of the Poly. "boys," Mr. Hogg presented to Mr. Nix a beautifully illuminated and framed address as a tangible token of love and goodwill. In a brief speech of response, Mr. Nix expressed his gratitude that the Poly. authorities had given him the opportunity of showing, through the lantern services at the Princess's Theatre, what could be done by the power of wise adaptation in reaching the unevangelised masses. He is strongly impressed with the conviction that this element of adaptation in Gospel work has great possibilities in it, in gaining the ear and compassing the conversion of multitudes who cannot be persuaded to go to ordinary church or chapel services. All who wish well to their country will pray that in his fresh and wider sphere of Christian work, Mr. Nix may have full scope for his undoubted evangelistic gifts and his quenchless energy.

Field Lane Refuges.—Christmas has been a very joyous time for some 800 destitute poor, who were supplied with a substantial hot dinner. Extensive and complete preparations had been made for the day's festivities, and the several rooms were both tastefully and seasonably decorated. A short religious service was held. The poor families in the immediate neighbourhood of the institution were in no way forgotten, some 670 having received provisions for a good dinner. 700 of the children attending the various classes in connection with the Field-lane Ragged Schools are to be provided with a dinner during the early part of the New Year. The expenses of these dinners have been defrayed by contributions given expressly for that purpose.

The New Year's Gifts.

LADEN with gifts the Old Year came,
And though its hours have flown,
The gifts are in our keeping still,
For evermore our own.
Sweet memories of sunny days
Are ours on looking back,
And blessings from a Father's hand
Mark out the Old Year's track.

Laden with gifts the New Year comes,
And as we forward go,
The gifts that it may bring to us
We do not ask to know;
But we would seek the child-like faith
That keeps the heart at rest,
Content to leave the choice to One
Who ever gives the best.

For some a special gift of joy
May crown the coming year,
Some heart's desire fulfilled at last,
Some happiness brought near.
Yet, after all, the greatest gifts
May come in lowly guise,
And blessing from a Father's hand
Round every pathway lies.

The love and sympathy we meet,
The friendship on the way,
The happy home, with every need
Supplied from day to day.
The call that any hour may bring
For loving ministry;
All these and many other things
Our New Year's gifts may be.

And if to some of us should come
The touch of sorrow's hand,
That, too, may prove a precious gift,
Though hard to understand.
For should the year bring grief or pain,
'Twill meet us but to bless,
If afterward the chastening yields
The fruit of righteousness.

Then let us trace a Father's hand
In all the New Year brings,
Not only in the greater gifts
But in the little things;
Not only when the days are bright,
But when the shadows fall,
And we shall find, whatever comes,
God's love is in it all.

Christmas Festivities.

THE joyous Christmas season has been signalled as usual by many endeavours to give some bodily cheer and spiritual help to those in poverty and those deprived of the social enjoyments of family reunion. All classes of needy and lonely ones seem to have been cared and catered for—sick sojourners in our hospitals, the inmates of workhouses, the released prisoners, the seamen on land, the orphans, and the great body of the poor.

We cannot enter into the details of any of these festivities, but we may specify some of the localities. The Salvation Army were well to the front with gatherings at Argyle-square, King's Cross, in connection with the Prison Gate Brigade and Police Court Mission, as also among the inmates of the various "elevators." The St. Giles' Mission gave Christmas cheer to discharged prisoners at the central premises in Brooke-street, Holborn, when the wives and families of prisoners were not forgotten. There were festive seasons for the poor at Field-lane, the Church Army Homes, and many other centres of relief work. The Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff, was, as in former years, the scene of an interesting assembly of seamen of different nationalities, another gathering being held on Boxing Day.

This movement is also in full working in the large provincial towns. In the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, some 3000 poor people were royally entertained by the City Mission there. Five thousand "hot-pots" were distributed among the Liverpool poor, provided by the charitable public of the town. This charity is said to furnish free dinners for some 40,000 of the Liverpool poor. Over 3000 poor in Glasgow were regaled with an ample supply of good things in the City Hall at the expense of the merchants of the city. On all or most of these occasions, those assembled had words of brotherly goodwill and Christian exhortation addressed to them, besides the bodily refreshment.

Letters to the Editor.

"CHURCH DECLINE."

DEAR SIR,—The letters from Mr. Moody, and your articles on "Church-going in Glasgow," in the last two numbers of the CHRISTIAN give a view of the state of the churches, which state is confirmed by the last official returns of the great Nonconformist bodies. According to these, the increase per cent. of membership in 1895 was less than the increase of the population. We have no figures by which we can test the increase of church attendance as a whole, but that most probably is on a parallel scale; if otherwise, it shows a state of apathy in the church-going masses, which may be worse than a want of increase, it being a repetition of Laodicean apathy, of which our Lord said, "I would thou wert cold or hot."

That a hostile "Higher Criticism," the teachings of which have tainted so many of our preachers, has much to do with the present state of things I have no doubt whatever; but next to that, and perhaps, as far as the people are concerned, even more so, the introduction of worldly amusements and entertainments as part of the work of the Church is, in my opinion, the great factor. These things are in direct antagonism to the Word of God, which exhorts us not to be "conformed to the world," whereas their tendency is only toward that. Readings from, and essays on, the drama, have led many persons, both young and old, to visit those schools of immorality, the theatres; while many of those who are too old and staid to attend them, yet have a word to say in their favour. I have known deacons and their families who attend those places, and their doing so has been used as an excuse by some of the young people for doing likewise.

Then, lectures on novelists, and readings from and essays and criticisms on works of fiction, have encouraged a taste for that class of reading, which is truly alarming. Your correspondent, "A Church Member," speaks of the infrequency of references to modern Scripture in the modern sermon. I have heard some preachers whose sermons would seem to show that they have a better acquaintance with novels than with Scripture, from their frequent references to the former. This rage for fiction sucks at the vitals of spiritual life, vitiates the mind, and renders it unwilling to study anything that is not sensational—or incapable of doing so.

Let those who have charge of churches in which these things are carried on ask themselves, How it is that public lectures on such worldly subjects, even when payment is demanded for them, are so much better attended than the prayer-meeting or week-evening public service? It is admitted even by those who speak in favour of amusements, that the more spiritual a man becomes, the less he cares for them. Should the Church support and favour that which is admittedly a sign of a low state of grace? During the last twelve months I have been gathering information about the views and practices on this question of those who are specially used of the Lord for the conversion of souls, and without a single exception they condemn and will have nothing to do with them. Is this a mere coincidence? May we not rather take it that the want of marked success in this particular, even by popular ministers who encourage these things, is simply a matter of cause and effect?

I have dealt with only two features of amusements in churches, but the same principle applies to all. I will close with the words of a well-known pastor, who, speaking on this subject, remarks: "It will be no wonder if the Holy Ghost, grieved and insulted, withdraws his presence; for 'what concord hath Christ with Belial, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?'" WHAT WAS SOLOMON'S PORCH?

SIR,—Perhaps in the holiday season you can find room for an archaeological note, which may interest, if not general readers of the New Testament, at least those whose reading or travels may have taken them to Jerusalem. I refer to the structure called in the New Testament "Solomon's porch," once mentioned in the narrative of our Lord's ministry, and twice in St. Luke's account of the earliest days of the Christian revelation.

The Authorised Version of John x. 28 tells us that "Jesus walked in Solomon's porch." In Acts iii. 11, the historian records that "as the lame man," just cured at its Beautiful Gate, "held Peter and John, all the people ran together" to the scene of the miracle, in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering. And in Acts v. 12, he adds that all the numerous new converts to the Gospel "were with one accord in Solomon's porch," and "continued daily with one accord in the temple."

The word porch, as now generally understood, hinders the right conception, by English readers, of the locality where those marvellous events occurred which are related in his earlier chapters by St. Luke—a mistake which has, I submit, carried with it a general serious misconception as to the locality of the miraculous outpouring of THE HOLY SPIRIT on the Day of Pentecost.

The term porch is now never used in English except to designate some more or less stately entrance to a public or notable building. The Greek word stoa, of which in the text of the old and new English versions of the New Testament the translation is uniformly porch, does not stand for a gateway at all, but for a roofed colonnade, pavilion, or cloister—a long-pillared portico, open on one side to the view, and shading pedestrians from the sun on the southern side. Such was the shady stoa in Athens, where Zeno taught, whose disciples were thence called Stoics.

This, too, is the proper signification of the word in the New Testament, as is hinted in the margin of the Revision by the substituted reading of portico in one of the places in the Acts where it occurs. There is no doubt that the phrase, translated Solomon's porch in the English Authorised Version, is intended to describe, not any gateway, but that wonderful structure which, in different degrees of splendour, was probably common to the three temples of Solomon, Zerubbabel, and Herod, and which ran along the whole breadth of the temple-area on the sun-smitten southern side. The lofty and long outer wall of this stoa, or lofty-pillared gallery, protected the people from the heat and blaze of the semi-tropical southern sun—its supporting rows of white marble columns still leaving ample breadth for sitting or promenading multitudes, while its open northern side looked down closely upon the Temple square, with its solemn, sacrificial ceremonial. Its open front and sides afforded a splendid prospect, to the north, the east, and the west of the Mount of Olives, and of the Holy City, with its sister height of Zion, and of the thickly-inhabited valleys below. There were flights of steps at each end of this imposing edifice, descending to the lower city. Josephus says it was a hundred feet broad, and two hundred and twenty feet long—the roof supported by three rows of columns. A grand viaduct united it, as at the eastern end, to Mount Zion.

Such was "Solomon's portico" in Christ's time—so called to replace a similar more ancient structure destroyed by the Babylonians 600 years before—and we cannot wonder that it holds a prominent position in the New Testament pictures of the ministry both of Christ and his apostles.

This vast and lofty colonnade seems to have been plentifully furnished with seats—sometimes occupied by doctors of the law, as when, in his childhood, Jesus was found by his parents sitting there in the Temple—his "Father's House"—"both listening to them and asking them questions." In after years it was beneath the same long, shady promenade that Jesus so often walked and disputed with the scribes, and where once He had overturned the tables of the money-changers, who had converted the sacred site into a "den of thieves" by their petty robberies in exchange.

These brief notes on the locality will enable us to comprehend more fully the importance of St. Luke's topographical statement that the disciples of Jesus, after his ascension to heaven from "a mountain in Galilee," returned to Jerusalem for the feast of Pentecost, and there, "for ten days" continued with one accord in the Temple at the morning and evening hours of prayer awaiting the promised coming of the Comforter. It was in Solomon's portico that they daily assembled, south of the Temple, and there seems to be no reasonable doubt that that was the scene of the promised descent of THE COMFORTER. All-devout Jews would at the third hour of the day of Pentecost be present to assist at the great morning sacrifice and to commemorate the giving of the law at Mount Sinai.

In Solomon's portico, therefore, we may conclude, I think, with confidence, that the marvellous event occurred of the descent of the Holy Spirit in tongues of flame, and of the consequent outburst of joyful voices, in all the chief languages of mankind, proclaiming pardon and eternal life to men through the death and resurrection of the ascended Messiah. We can but faintly imagine the scene—when, at the great festival in the Temple courts, crowded by Jewish worshippers "from every nation under heaven," who were thrilled by the sudden crash of voices, from the southern colonnade, of men proclaiming in every principal language of earth the message of eternal life through the death and resurrection of Jesus the Son of David—while tongues of fire burned on their heads, and heaven's own energy exalted their voices, reducing to silence the Levitical songs.

As for the popular notion that the outpouring of the Holy Spirit occurred in the "large upper room" which had been hired by the Apostles as the last place of meeting with their Lord, it seems to deserve no serious consideration. How could crowds of wondering worshippers have reached that small and temporary resting-place, or have found space to behold the miracle? The third hour of the day, nine o'clock a.m., was the hour of prayer in the Temple, when the Apostolic body, with all other devout Israelites, would be found in the Temple for the morning sacrifice at that hour of prayer. "They continued daily in the temple," and doubtless the Promised Comforter met them in their "Father's house," to abide with them for ever?

By adopting this interpretation of the Gospel narrative, we are not only relieved from many overwhelming difficulties which attend the notion that the miraculous scene of Pentecost occurred in the upper room of the Last Supper, but the Divine inauguration of the Gospel-Dispensation is transferred to a site consecrated by the most sacred supernatural recollections of a thousand years. It was a renewed consecration of the Temple—as the centre of the world-wide revelation of Immortal Life in Christ Jesus our Lord. It was an effectual blow and rebuke on the whole corrupt and traditional Judaism which held possession of the chief Fortress of Truth in a world of errors. It was at once a foremost opportunity of repentance and salvation given to the Jewish priesthood as the leaders of the people, and the most public attestation to the heavenly claims of Him whom they had crucified as a false Messiah. It was a revelation of truth and grace in the very centre of the religious world, and a fulfilment of all the types of truth comprised in the Levitical ceremonial,—and mightily assists our acceptance of the statement of the evangelist that "a great company of the priests became obedient to the faith."

Finally, it confirms the persuasion that that sacred site, so long "trodden under foot by the Gentiles," will again in the latter days become, in some higher form, the spiritual centre of the world, which, after ages of resistance and incredulity, will accept the Christian message, and enable Jew and Gentile together to worship the Father in spirit and in truth.

"UNDERSTANDEST THOU?"

DEAR SIR,—It is considered that a brief statement of the Gospel in simple words, to be circulated with the Bible, or portions thereof, in home and foreign languages would be very useful.

Of course the circulation of the Scriptures without note or comment is very desirable, and the reading of the Word itself is often sufficient to "lead the reader to the knowledge of the Saviour. But does not the history of Philip, in Acts viii. 27-33, press on us the importance of the well instructed colporteur or teacher? When the Ethiopian treasurer was reading in the Book of Isaiah, Philip asked him, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" He replied, "How can I, unless some man should guide me." Whereupon Philip taught him, and the Holy Spirit applied the Word. But such are not always at hand to point out important matters.

I have written a short tract entitled, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" to be issued in various languages, and circulated with the Scriptures, just to direct the reader to the passages speaking of the Saviour and the great salvation. I lay this matter before the Lord's people, and shall be happy to hear from any to whom the project commends itself.—Yours, etc.,

Y.M.C.A.

EFFORTS are on foot to form an Association at Buluwayo.

An Association is in course of formation at Staple Hill, Bristol.

New Associations have been successfully launched at Alton, Hants, and Pontypridd, South Wales, and the work at Henley-on-Thames has been resuscitated.

Mr. R. C. Thurley, who has been secretary of the Nottingham Association for the past five years, has been appointed to the superintendence of the Mission work at Rothbury Hall, East Greenwich.

An afternoon conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union, was held at Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. on December 16, a large number of delegates being present. The conference was of a particularly bright and interesting nature.

In connection with the reorganisation of the work at St. Helens, a week's mission, conducted by Mr. Frank L. Smith, of New York, has terminated. Not a few young men have been quickened into newness of life, and it has been decided to carry on evangelistic meetings every Sunday evening and a weekly afternoon Bible reading.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Paris Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160 rue Montmartre, took place on Tuesday, Dec. 8, at 23, rue Royale. Mr. H. Austin Lee, C.B., of the British Embassy, presided, and warmly sympathised with the work being done. Rev. H. Bramley Hart, Dr. J. D. Paxton, J. McLulich, and others also supported the claims of the Association.

A new department of work has been inaugurated at North Liverpool as a practical result of a course of addresses given recently by the secretary, Mr. Fisher, who has expressed his willingness to train any young men desirous of occupying any portion of their leisure time in Christian work. Twenty-four requests were made in the course of a few days, and a "workers' training class has been begun.

The Johannesburg Association had 180 members in October, 1895. Now there are nearly 500. The Association committee has recently decided to acquire the whole of the premises which have been occupied in part by the Association up to the present time; henceforth it will, therefore, have a house of its own in a splendid position in the centre of the town. The religious work is making progress.

At Berlin a fund is in operation to give succour, in case of sickness or death, in connection with the Young Men's Christian Associations. It guarantees to members substantial assistance in case of sickness, and to their friends in the event of their decease. During the first five years of its existence 2258 cases of sickness were registered, with a total of 28,435 days, and seventeen deaths. A total sum of about £3,265 was paid for all these cases.

The Harmondsworth branch, which was one of the first village associations formed in this country, has passed through varied and trying experiences, but seems now to have outlived and overcome its difficulties. Mr. W. R. Jones, the honorary secretary, reports large accessions to the weekly meetings for Bible study, and a vigorous and growing interest in foreign missions. A women's Bible-class has also recently been started in the village, which promises to develop into an auxiliary of the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. W. G. Sprigg, general secretary of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A., writes a most inspiring report of his work. He says, "We have had an encouraging year in every way. The membership has been brought up to over 750 effective. Every department is flourishing. God has indeed answered prayer. In the course of the next three or four months we expect to make a start with a new building, adjoining our present premises. There will be provision made for a new reading-room and parlour, and bedrooms for about twenty boarders."

Mr. J. Hughes, general secretary of the Lyons Association, writes, under date December 19, that, in spite of great difficulties surrounding the work, the gross membership of last year has been doubled. Two members have been called to the ministry, and one to the foreign mission field in the twelve months; the attendance at the Bible class has been doubled, and a young men's restaurant has been launched, with a view to keeping youths from the oftentimes harmful conversations of the ordinary "pensions."

Intelligence is to hand from Brisbane that the debt on the Association there has been materially reduced, and that much blessing has attended the work of the past year. Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Bailey, late of Cork Y.M.C.A., who are en route to India, have held very successful meetings, under Association auspices, at Auckland, Sydney, and other colonial centres. Lady Victoria Buxton has laid the foundation stone of a new building for the boys' work of the Adelaide Association. The Newcastle (N.S.W.) Y.M.C.A. summer picnic was taken part in by a thousand persons. Mr. Henry Varley has concluded a mission in connection with the Geelong Association.

A public meeting, composed principally of Association members and missionaries, was held in Bombay to welcome Mr. Frank Anderson to his work among students in the Presidency. The principal of the Wilson College, Rev. Dr. Mackichan, occupied the chair, and gave Mr. Anderson an earnest "God speed" in his difficult task. "In Bombay," Mr. Anderson writes, "there are fully 2000 native student young men, probably less than ten of whom are Christians; there are also thousands more in the two upper classes of the High Schools who are included under the term 'student.'"

Mr. Christian Philids, late general secretary at Berlin, who has recently been appointed associate secretary of the Central International Committee at Geneva, has concluded a tour of visitation to the Russian and Finnish Associations. He was much encouraged by his journey, and writes: "In Russia, by reason of the existing laws and other circumstances, missionary activity can naturally only be exhibited on a very limited scale. Prayer is at present about the only means within our reach of helping our brethren there. In Finland, on the contrary, the movement has plenty of freedom. Our work has a brilliant future in that country, which is almost entirely Protestant. Scarcely eight years old, the work has recently spread from Helsinki, so that at present there are more than thirty Associations. Among the 200 members of the Helsinki Association at this time there are ninety students."

Mr. Henry Conder, the well-known and much-esteemed President of the Bombay Association, has completed a fourteen months' furlough in this country, after a twenty-seven years' residence in India, and left England for Bombay on December 17. During the time he has been in this country he has made the London (Central) Association, at Exeter Hall, his headquarters, and has rendered valuable and constant service to the work in its different departments while his hour, given at the mid-day meetings, the Sunday Young Men's Bible-class, in the youths' department, which he was partly instrumental in forming, and the great amount of personal work he found a delight in doing, in season and out of season, had come to be very much appreciated, and causes a sense of loss now that he has gone. He will be followed by the heartfelt prayers of many to whom his visit to this country has been made a means of blessing.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE PREPARATION HOME.

A NEED having long been felt of some place where a practical knowledge could be obtained of Y.W.C.A. methods and work, and where those wishing to take up posts could be trained and tested, a Preparation Home was opened in October last at 14, Finsbury-square, where for many years the City Branch of Y.W.C.A. had been carried on.

In the mornings lectures are being given on various courses of Bible study, and also on the history, objects, constitution, and departments of the Y.W.C.A. Time is allowed for private study, and abundant opportunities are afforded to those resident in the Home of becoming practically acquainted with the work that is going on in different parts of London by assisting in various places and visiting institutes, factories, evening clubs, and helping in different ways in the Finsbury Institute.

It is hoped that many who think of taking up work in the Y.W.C.A., whether as secretaries or otherwise, will avail themselves of the advantages, either as resident or non-resident students. The prospectus and programme of forthcoming lectures can be obtained from Miss Duff, 14, Finsbury-square.

BRIEF NOTES.

At the Dorset branch the Rev. S. Filleul gave an interesting account of his visit to Japan.

A sale of work has been held at York towards clearing off a debt of £200 remaining on the Home.

Under the auspices of the Kilbirnie branch a sale of work in aid of the Southern Morocco Mission realised £80.

Miss Morley gave an earnest address on the work of the Y.W.C.A. at a meeting held at Tunbridge Wells in connection with the local branch.

The annual tea meeting of the members of the Blackburn Association was held in James-street Chapel School. A large number were present. Miss Thompson, a missionary, lately returned from India gave two addresses.

The annual meeting of the Brixton branch was held on November 27, when Miss Ardill, District Referee, gave an interesting and helpful address. Some local friends also spoke encouragingly and appreciatively of the work of the Y.W.C.A. A special mission is to be conducted by Miss Hull at the new premises, 194, Stockwell-road, from January 9 to 17. Will friends everywhere join in prayer for very abundant blessing?

Scottish Notes.

Dr. HUGH MACMILLAN, of Greenock, has been chosen as next Moderator of the Free Church Assembly.

Rev. D. E. Omond, assistant minister of the Free North Church, Stirling, has accepted the call to the church in Perth of which the late Rev. John Symon was pastor.

Rev. John McNeill preached on Sunday week at Kilmalcolm, where he has now a permanent residence. His Manchester campaign begins on Sunday, January 10.

Under the auspices of the Ayr United Y.M.C.A. and the British Women's Temperance and Prayer Union, a subscription has been made in Ayr for the Armenians, realizing the sum of £110 17s. 6d.

The Fellowship meeting in connection with the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association has been relinquished, its conductor for the past fourteen years, Mr. W. A. Campbell, having felt led to retire from that effort.

The mission conducted by Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins in Edinburgh, has been maintained with considerable interest. The meetings held at Stockbridge were very fruitful in conversions, considering the size of the audiences. On Sunday evening in the Free Assembly Hall, Major Whittle preached powerfully to a large company on God's unspeakable gift. The people were deeply impressed and a considerable number rose for prayer. The meetings in the Assembly Hall will close on Wednesday this week. Next Sunday, the evangelists begin a two-weeks' mission in Leith.

An Armenian Lad.

"Two months ago I heard of a child in Constantinople whose life was in constant danger; twice the Turkish soldiers had sought to kill him. His brother who was in Paris told me that he could neither eat nor sleep for thinking that the child might have already perished. He added:—'I have lost all I had in Constantinople, and have not the means of sending for the rest of my family.' However, a month later, an Armenian priest who had managed to escape brought the boy with him to Paris. On seeing the child for the first time a strange feeling took possession of me (a feeling I had not experienced since the day I gave myself to God); as I took him tenderly in my arms.

"Since then, each time I prayed the child's future was before me. Why should not I take him? But as a Salvationist, without home or family—and then, the responsibility! Me, it is quite impossible! Still the command seemed to come clearly, 'Take him, the Lord will provide!' So I obeyed, and since then I have had a clear assurance that the child will be saved to serve the Master. I take the child with joy, putting the responsibility in the hands of Him who directed me to take him; he is set apart for God's service."

I trust, dear sir, that some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN may feel led to help our friend in his noble effort to train this child for God. I should be glad to receive subscriptions for him in order to help to pay the expense of education and pension in a pastor's family, where our friend intends sending him.

[The above is sent to us by M^{de}. Quehen, of the McAll Mission, Paris, who will receive any help our readers may send to her at 4, Route Idalie, Vincennes, Seine, for the lad's education and pension in a Christian pastor's family. She speaks of him as a bright, intelligent little fellow, who shows deep gratitude for every little kindness.]

Prayer for the New Year.—DEAR SIR,—As hon. sec. for the world wide circle of prayer, might I suggest to your readers to join specially on the first day of the coming year, in companies of twos and threes or more, in earnest believing prayer for the fuller outpouring of the Holy Spirit at home and abroad?—Yours in Christ, JOHN O. WEST.

St. Matthew's Vicarage, Birmingham.

A Native Christian.—"I have just buried a native brother," writes Dr. Muirhead, from Shanghai, "who has been with me as a student and fellow-worker for over twenty years. He has all along given me evidence of his Christian life and character. His illness was for about three weeks, and developed into typhoid. Miss Halley paid most assiduous attention to the case. I saw him nearly every day, and so long as he remained conscious he showed his deep interest in prayer, and in what I said to him. While lamenting his death, I am pleased to say that the native Christian whom I baptized not long after my return is doing excellent work as a preacher and a scholar. He seems to have been specially provided by the Master as a fellow-labourer, and I am most thankful for him."
